13. Q to K sq	Q to her 3rd	33. K to Kt 2nd	Q to K Kt 6th (ch)
14. Q B to K B 4th	Q to her B 3rd	34. K to R 2nd	K to Kt sq (c)
15. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q B to K Kt 5th	35. Kt to B 7th (ch)	K to Kt sq
16. B takes B	Kt takes B	36. Kt to B 7th (double ch)	K to Kt sq
17. Q to K R 4th	Kt to K R 3rd	37. Kt to R 6th (double ch)	K to R sq
18. Kt to K B 3rd	Kt to K B 4th
19. Q takes doubled P	Q Kt to Q 2nd	38. Q to K Kt 8th (ch)	R takes Q
20. K R to K Kt sq	Q Kt to K B 3rd	39. Kt to B 7th—Mate

(a) This peculiar castling, now seldom played, although second only in beautiful and artful variegation, is called by "Cunningham Gambit," from the many hours practised with extraordinary success by Mr. Cunningham, the historian. In his day one of the first players in Europe.
(b) Better than leaving his Kt to be taken, by capturing the other
(c) He dared not check with the Queen, on account of the threatening to interpose his Rook, and thus check by discovery.

A very pretty version of the celebrated mate known as "Philidor's Legacy," but which in truth, is as old as Damiano, 1520, in whose work it may be found.

CHESS IN GERMANY.

The following Game was recently played at Berlin, between Mr. Von H. der Lasa and Mr. Hanstein

WHITE (Von der L.)	BLACK (Mr. H.)	WHITE (Von der L.)	BLACK (Mr. H.)
1. K P two	Q B P two	19. K to Q sq	K R to his sq
2. Q P two	P takes P	20. B to Q 6th	K B to his sq
3. K B to Q B 4th	K P two	21. Castles on Q side	K takes K P
4. K B P two	Q Kt to B 3rd	22. B takes Q P	K takes B
5. K Kt to B 3rd	K B to K 2nd	23. Kt to Q 6th (c)	K R to K 4th
6. P takes K P	Kt takes P	24. Kt takes B (c)	Q R takes B
7. Kt takes Kt	Q to her R 4th (ch)	25. Q to her 4th	Q to Q Kt 3rd (c)
8. Q B P one	Q takes Kt	26. R takes Q P	K to K 7th (ch)
9. Q takes Q P	K to K B 2nd (a)	27. Q to her 5th	P takes Q P
10. Q B to K 3rd	K Kt to K 2nd	28. K R to K sq	K to K 7th (h)
11. Q Kt to Q 2nd	Kt to Q B 3rd	29. Q Kt P one	P takes Q P
12. Q Kt takes Q (ch)	K takes Q	30. Q R P one	K R takes K R P
13. Q B to his 5th (b)	K B to K 2nd	31. K R to K 7th	K R to Q 7th
14. Q B to Q 4th	Kt takes K B	32. K R to B 7th (ch)	Q to Q B 7th
15. Kt takes K	Castles	33. K R to B 7th (ch)	K to his sq
16. B to K 5th (c)	Q Kt P two	34. Q R to K 7th	K to Q sq
17. Kt to Q 6th	K B P one (d)	34. Q R to Q 7th (ch)	K to K sq
		(e)

(a) In this position, perhaps, his best move.
(b) To prevent the adversary castling.
(c) Had he taken with the White Knight, Black would have won.
(d) Had he taken the White Knight, Black would have won.
(e) Black's game is yet obscure and difficult.

(a) The Pawn is regained, but the taking is drawn. Sarratt's gambit.
(b) From this point the play is deserving particular attention.
(c) Stronger, apparently, than taking the P at once.
(d) White depends on his Queen and Pawns, his adversary having but one to push on, and that one being actually a defence to White's King
(e) White is obliged to take the Queen, as the only resource R to B 8th, and exchange the Rooks, because of the three united Pawns of his adversary.

LIVELY GAME BETWEEN MR. HARRWITZ AND AN AMATEUR, MR. HARRWITZ GIVING KING'S KNIGHT

(Removed K to from the Board.)

BLACK. (Mr. H.)	WHITE. (Mr.——.)	BLACK. (Mr. H.)	WHITE. (Mr. ——.)
1. Q P two	Q P two	20. K B P one (c)	Q Kt to K 5th
2. Q B P two	K P one	21. B takes Kt	Kt takes B
3. Q Kt to B 3rd	K B to Q Kt 5th	22. Q to K B 5th	K P to one
4. K P one	Q B to Q Kt 5th	23. Q to K Kt 5th	Q to R sq
5. K B P one	Castles	24. K to R sq	Q R to K sq
6. Q to Q Kt 3rd	B takes Kt (ch)	25. K P one	Q takes P
7. P takes B	Q B P one	26. R takes P	K R to K Kt 3rd
8. Q R P two	Q R P two	27. Q to K R 4th	Q R to K B sq
9. Q B to Q R 3rd	R to K sq	28. Q R P two	Q to Q B 2nd
10. Q Kt to Q sq	Q to Q B 2nd	29. K R to his 5th	K R to Kt 2nd
11. K Kt to K 2nd	K P one	30. Q Kt to K B 3rd	Q to Q sq
12. Castles	K P takes P	31. Q to K 3rd	Q to Q 2nd
13. B P takes P	P takes P (a)	32. Q to Q R 7th	Q to Q R 7th
14. B takes P	Q B to K 3rd	33. K R P one	Q to Q Kt 7th (ch)
15. K P one	B takes K B	34. K to Kt 2nd	Q to Q Kt 7th (ch)
16. Q takes B	K Kt to R 3rd	35. K to Kt sq	R takes P (ch)
17. K P one (b)	K Kt to Q 4th	36. Q takes B	Q R to K Kt sq
18. Q to Q Kt 3rd	Q to Q R 3rd	37. R takes P (ch)	K takes R
19. Q to Q sq	K R to K 3rd	38. R mates (e)

(a) This is a accident, because it at once assigns the a weak Bishop into active play
(b) Pr ... essential Pawns threaten to become troublesome on long
(c) Perfectly. White will find it difficult now to stop the stealthy march of these pawns
(d) Well played, to avoid retreating his forces.
(e) A very pretty and instructive ending

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—Very limited supplies of English wheat have been received this week, and for what were, consequently, the majority of samples to-day was trifling. Still however, the demand was by no means active, and the trade showed, somewhat, a dull at almost Monday's quotations. In foreign wheat at fair amount of business was transacted, at fully prior currencies. Free or two cargoes were taken for the French market. All fine very little barley was on offer the trade ruled dull, at barely late rates. In malt—the supply of which was small—next to nothing was doing at late figures. Oats, peas, and beans were a shade inquiry, at previous quotations. Indian corn was firm, but not dear.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 3720 quarters; barley, 1180; malt, 1600; oats, 810. Irish: Wheat, ——; barley, ——; malt, ——; oats, 2600. Foreign: Wheat, ——, barley, 630; malt, ——; oats, 1500. Flour, 1260 sacks, 1426 barrels.

English Wheat, Essex and Kent, red 78s to 78s; ... white, 75s to 85s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red 70s to 74s; ditto white 72s to 80s; rye, 48s to 50s; grinding barley, 32s to 33s; distilling, 37s to 39s; malting ditto, 36s to 38s; Lincoln and Yorkshire ditto, 34s to 36s; ... 74s to 76s; Kingston ans. Ware, 72s to 80s; Chevalier, 32s to 36s. Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s to 23s; potato ditto, 23s to 25s; Irish and Cork, black, —s to —s; ditto white, 24s to 26s; Scotch beans, new, 41s to 45s; ditto old, 34s to 38s; grey peas, 31s to 33s; maple, 32s to 34s; white, 34s to 36s; pollers, 36s to 40s; per quarter. Town-made flour, 66s to 68s; Suffolk, 52s to 56s; Stockton and Yorkshire 48s to 51s, per 280 lbs. Foreign—Free barley, 27s to 27s; ditto white, 29s to 29s per quarter. Flour, American sts. to —s; ditto, free, 34s to 36s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—There is rather more demand for clover seed, at full prices; but canary is very dull, and may be purchased on somewhat easier terms. Linseed and cakes are quite as dear.

LINSEED, English, sowing, 57s to 61s; Baltic, crushing, 55s to 58s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 52s to 54s. Hempseed, 38s to 43s per quarter. Cakes, English, 12s to 13s per cwt. Brown Rapeseed, 227 to 228 per last of ten quarters. Foreign, £13 13s to £13 15s. Coriander, 18s to 22s per cwt. Canary, 57s to 58s per quarter. English timothy, new, —s to —s; old, —s to —s; foreign, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 8d for the 4lb loaf, and 3d to 3½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 7 ... 74d; barley, 3s 10½d; oats, 2s 3½d; rye, 5s 8d; beans, 5s 11d; peas, 5s 1d.

Provisions.—Irish butter is in good request, at an improvement in value of fully 1s per cwt. Foreign is in fair demand, at 2s per cwt. Cork, 90s to 92s. Carlow, 90s to 92s. Waterford, 88s to 90s. Limerick, 88s to 90s. Foreign is in fair demand, at 90s to 100s for all sort qualities and 78s to 86s for the middling. English butter, the supply of which is large, is in a dull state, at a decline of 2s per cwt. The best Dorset is quoted at 98s to 102s per cwt; and fresh, 16s to 18s per dozen lbs. Bacon is in fair demand, at full prices. Prime coral Waterford, 62s to 66s, and heavy, 60s to 62s. Prime fine of late sales. Dutch cheese is in ... and ... at 48s to 50s per cwt. Lard is in fair demand, at 56s to 58s per cwt.

Hops.—Most kinds are in steady request, at last week's prices.

Hops.(Friday.)—Although only a very moderate business is doing in any kind of hops, last week's prices are pretty generally supported. The supply of parcelings on offer is seasonably good, but the market is bare of other qualities. Sussex pockets £4 to £4 to £6 8s; Weald of Kent ditto, £4 4s to £4 10s; Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 10s to £6 10s per cwt

Coals (Friday).—Pudlo, West Hartley, 16s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 19s 6d; West Hartley, 16s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 19s 6d; West Hartley, 16s 6d; Tanfield Moor, 19s 6d;

COMMISSIONS OF LIEUTENANCY GRANTED BY THE LORDS-LIEUTENANT.

Pembrokeshire: C. B. Shaw, Esq., to be Deputy-Lieutenant.

Yorkshire: W. B. Ferrand, Esq., to be Deputy-Lieutenant.

Lincolnshire: North Lincoln Militia: H. Bennage, Esq., to be Captain. G. T. W. Sibthorp, Esq., to be Lieutenant; J. P. R. Dobson, W. B. Shephard, and W. J. Graburn, to be Ensigns.

Royal South Lincoln Militia: J. B. Thilwall, Esq., to be Captain; J. B. Lonsdale, E. H. Pool, and H. H. Tennant, to be Lieutenants. W. S. Clark, to be Ensign.

Warwickshire Militia: W. J. Lucy, Esq., M. H. Ferrers Esq., and H. Arnold, Esq., to be Captains.

ADMIRALTY, FEBRUARY 16.

Corps of Royal Marines: E. J. R. Connolly, and R. R. Hoope, to be 2nd Lieutenants.

BANKRUPTCY.

J. BUCHANAN and H. FOX, late of Cabourn, East Indies, merchants. J. HITCHCRAFT, Chemist, &c. J. S. NEWMAN, late of Lodgate-street, tailor. G. G. SANDERS, of St. Martin's-le-Grand, Bishop's Place, Brompton, gentleman. W. REEP, Colchester, carpenter. H. HAMLIN, Blenheim-street, Oxford-street, tailor. A. DANIELS, A. Grande, Essex, Brompton, merchant. J. MACKAY, late of Lincoln's-inn, solicitor. J. JONES, New York, American, formerly of Birkenhead, Chester, ... or W. HARRIS, ... and ... ornamental manufacturer, ... D. DAVIES, ... Merthyr Tydvil, ... merchant. ... JANLEY, Exeter, milliner. E. COOK, Dursley, Gloucestershire, ... tailor.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

J. B. GLANSFORD, Glasgow, all ... broker. J. CRAWFORD, Glasgow, ... wine and ale dealer.

BIRTHS.

At Windsor, Viscountess Jocelyn, of ... Hon. Mrs. Leigh, of Lyme Park, Cheshire, ... Bishop of Lincoln, ... Mary Ann, ... Mrs. Charles Bunbury, of ... Lady Mary Jocelyn, ... Mrs. Edmund Godwin, ... Mrs. Edmund Godwin, in the 83rd year of his age. ... Mrs. Edmund Godwin, in the 83rd year of his age. ... Mrs. Edmund Godwin, in the 83rd year of his age.

THE FOUNDING OF A HARBOUR OF REFUGE AT ALDERNEY.

HARBOUR OF REFUGE IN ALDERNEY.

On Friday, the 12th inst., the founding of a Harbour of Refuge upon the shores of the isle of Alderney, was commenced with imposing ceremony. The Alderney authorities invited many of their Guernsey friends to participate in the joy of an event so memorable in the annals of their little island; in the morning a large party left Guernsey in the Arrachie steamer; and, shortly after one o'clock, the vessel entered the Swinge, giving notice of her approach by the discharge of two or three rounds from a small piece of cannon, the band playing in fine style. A glance along this side of the island indicated that something extraordinary was about to be proceeded with by the inhabitants. Passing Grosnez-point, might be seen several flags hoisted on a staff; and, in an opposite direction, about 400 yards distant, similar emblems of rejoicing waved over the Boullonnaise, a rock in the midst of the sea. At twenty minutes before two, the Arrachie cast anchor in the roadstead; her passengers disembarking with as much haste as possible, in order to be spectators of the ceremony. The first object that caught the eye on nearing the shore, was the union-jack flying on the pier-heads; the shipping in the harbour, and a vessel in the roadstead, being similarly decorated. A large concourse of persons in holiday attire had by this time assembled on the pier, to witness the landing of the passengers, whom they greeted with many a right-hearty welcome. The houses in the vicinity of the harbour displayed as many flags as were procurable; and in the town of St. Anne, were similar tokens of rejoicing.

The Royal Militia Artillery, under the command of Captain Samuel Robillard, mustered on the Butes, at two o'clock; and the Infantry, under Major Barbenson (the Queen's Procureur), were drawn up in the square opposite the house of John Guadion, Esq., Judge of Alderney. The children belonging to the schools, under their respective teachers, were also assembled in the square. The Court, at this time, had met at the Judge's residence.

At about half-past two, orders were given to move; when Lieutenant Robillard, R.N., followed by a standard-bearer, headed the procession the amateur band taking the lead, accompanied by the band of the Island the whole proceeding through Braye-road, and, turning off to the left, took their position on the height which overlooks Grosnez-point. The Inhabitants flanked the Militia, which gave the assemblage a very interesting appearance.

At a few minutes before three o'clock, the members of the Court, and other of the civil authorities, accompanied by Colonel De Havilland, and preceded by the Judge, arrived on Grosnez point—the place appointed for performing the ceremony. The foundation stone—a large block of granite, quarried from an adjacent hill was deposited on a truck, at the extreme point of the rock, ready to be thrown into the sea. Mr. Dickson, engineer, and Mr. Bisset, superintendent of the works, having signified that everything was ready, the Rev. George Guille, minister of the church at Alderney, offered an impressive prayer to God for a blessing on the undertaking. Mr. Gandion then briefly addressed the spectators, and concluded with a hope that the port would prove a haven of refuge to the ships of all nations that might require it

The under part of the truck was now raised, and the stone fell to the bottom of the cliff, receiving in its descent the loud, hearty, and repeated cheers of the assembled populace. The booming of artillery, and the rolling of musketry, testified that the ceremony had terminated. Before the procession quitted the spot, three cheers were given for Colonel de Havilland, for his kindness in coming to the Island to assist at the interesting fête.

In the evening, several gentlemen of the island dined together at Baber's Hotel, on the Butes, to celebrate the event, at the expense of the Court. We have not room for a report of the after-dinner proceedings Among other toasts, the health of General Napier, the Lieutenant-Governor, was drunk with great applause: and Colonel de Havilland, in proposing the health of Mr. Dixon, the Clerk of the Works, stated that the harbour would afford a safe shelter for vessels which would not come to Guernsey at present; but he hoped that Guernsey would soon have its turn, and he should be glad to see the works there under the same management as those of Alderney

At nine o'clock, the company retired on the Butes, where there was a considerable assemblage of persons, to witness an exhibition of fireworks, which had been procured from London, by private subscription. The exhibition lasted upwards of an hour. Among the pyrotechnic devices was one bearing the inscription, "MAY THE HARBOUR PROSPER," which had a most beautiful effect.

The feasting was not confined to the members of the Court and their friends, inasmuch as a goodly number of farmers met together the same evening, and partook of an excellent dinner.

Whilst the above proceedings were going on at the upper part of the town, provision was made by the contractors for the entertainment of the workmen at Braye. A large store had been fitted up for the reception of about 150 persons, who were regaled with roast beef, &c. The crew of the Arrachie, on the invitation given, were also present, and joined in the festivities

After the fire-works, a ball was also given, at which the élite of the island was present. Colonel De Havilland and the amiable Mrs. Weeks had the honour of opening the ball

On the works, at Alderney, a number of men have for some time been engaged in clearing the ground on the west side of Braye Bay, quarrying stone, and laying down tramways for conveying it to the breakwater about to be formed for sheltering the bay, from the western point over Boullonnaise rock—a length of about 400 yards. The stones, shapeless blocks, will be thrown in from trucks. Messrs. Walker and Burgess are the engineers, and Messrs. Jackson and Bean, the contractors

Our illustration of this event is from a spirited sketch by Mr. Paul J. Naftel; and the accompanying details of the proceedings have been abridged from a long-licenced report in The Comet (Guernsey) journal

MANCHESTER AND LEEDS RAILWAY PLATE.

MANCHESTER AND LEEDS RAILWAY PLATE

The Directors of the Manchester and Leeds Railway Company, some time since, resolved to present their highly-respected Chairman, Mr Houldsworth, some fitting testimonial of their sense of his valuable services in that capacity. They, accordingly, decided on a service of plate, and to Messrs. Hunt and Roskell was confided the manufacture They have produced a very classic and superb service, weighing upwards of three thousand ounces.

The principal piece (which we have engraved) is of an ornamental character. It consists of a triangular base, around which are figures of Sir Robert Peel, Watt, and Mr. George Stephenson: the whole is surmounted by a figure representing Science On one of the panels is a representation, in relief, of Summit Tunnel, one of the principal works on the line of railway. It is a very exquisite piece of workmanship, and has been modelled under the superintendence of Mr. Baily, the Royal Academician. There are, also, some very elaborate Vases in the service

THE LATE MR. GEORGE ROBINS.

In the honourable attainment of pre-eminence in any walk of life evinces superior merit and ability, surely, the subject of this brief notice, Mr. George Robins, the celebrated auctioneer, who died at Brighton on the 8th inst., deserves especial commendation; for, in the arduous occupation to which he so long devoted his energies, he stood, confessedly, in the foremost rank.

Mr Robins began to wield the hammer before he had attained the age of nineteen; for, whilst attending a large sale in Yorkshire, he was unexpectedly called upon to act for his father, who, from indisposition, was unable to officiate. From that time to the present, during a period of fifty years, he enjoyed the uninterrupted good opinion of the public perhaps no man ever boasted of a more extraordinary catalogue of business, the most extensive estates in the kingdom as well as in all parts of the globe, having passed through his hands. The wonderful skill and tact with which every advantage connected with the property he had to describe was seized upon and turned to profit, in his glowing descriptions and his ready wit and repartee in the rostrum, are well known. His announcements were unlike those of any of his contemporaries; they were highly-coloured, graphic, and often clever, and that they were his own productions there is ample reason to believe. Overwrought as they were, he has been heard to say in no instance was ever a purchase repudiated on the ground of mis-description; whilst in many cases bargains to a heavy amount have been made by persons who had never seen or heard of the estate when they entered the auction room, but were overcome by his persuasive eloquence

THE LATE MR. GEORGE ROBINS.

Mr. Robins was a truly charitable man; and utterly eschewed politics. Many years ago, when at Margate, he assisted the funds of the Sea-Bathing Infirmary, by holding a plate for contributions outside the church gate, when he, with several other gentlemen, was taken into custody as a rogue and vagabond, for begging, and was afterwards compelled to attend the Dover Sessions, where no evidence was offered against him. He subsequently instituted an action against the magistrates of Margate at the Maidstone Assizes, he obtained damages; and to this day a tablet in the walls of the Institution at Margate records his victory and the increase to the funds for the Infirmary. Owing to his determined hostility, in conjunction with the late Mr Calcraft, to the sub-committee of Drury-lane Theatre, in the years 1817 and 1818, and their exposition of mal-government, a new system was introduced, by which this splendid theatre was nearly relieved from a load of debt; and, at a later period, his exertions were mainly instrumental in resuscitating the fortunes of Covent Garden Theatre.

Perhaps no man in his station was more courted by his superiors, by whom his manly, straightforward conduct was appreciated, his advice often sought; and amongst the men of his day he was always welcome. The description of a dinner given by him to Lord Byron is recorded by Moore; when Lord Kinnaird and his brother, Sheridan, Colman, John Kemble, and other eminent men were present

In his private life he was strictly a domestic man, always ready to do good and to succour the distressed He has left a widow and seven young children, which his exertions have enabled him to provide for in an ample manner

His advocacy of the claims of comedians and their families to public sympathy was very successful: for Emery's widow and children he thus secured a competency: and Mrs. Bland, and many others were greatly indebted to him for his exertions in their behalf

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, February 20, 1847.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 252.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1847. [Sixpence.

THE BUDGET.

POLICY being built upon Finance, the annual statement of the national ways and means is always one of the most interesting events of the session. There is always a great anxiety to know how the great account stands, and to learn the extent of our burdens in bad seasons, of the remissions of them in good ones. There is no arguing with the rules of arithmetic; and for one night the voice of party is silenced, while the spirit of Cocker reigns supreme; coldly bringing everything to the balance of profit and loss, and laying bare the springs that move armies and fleets with as little respect as if a State were indeed a mere material machine, moved, regulated, and checked by the weight of gold. Everybody looks for the opening of the Budget with more or less of anxiety: to the great bulk of the nation it is almost the only test of Ministerial ability. On Monday night this deposit of financial hopes and fears was opened by the Chancellor of the Whig Government, after a series of years in which the same duty has been discharged by the Government of Sir Robert Peel, to which events have rendered the name of Conservative inapplicable.

The occasion suggests some of those odious things—comparisons; and it also induces several reflections, one of which is this—that there is undoubtedly such a thing as luck. How else could it be that the Whigs invariably appear before the world as such unfortunate financiers? Do we not remember those hapless Budgets of former years, that fell from surplus to deficiency, with such constant alacrity in sinking, and grew worse and worse till the whole party was wrecked in the storm raised against their Corn and Sugar Duties, by which they proposed to increase Revenue by reducing taxation? Years have passed away, and their financial heresy has become the established faith of the Exchequer; yet their old bad luck pursues them; the ugly family feature of former Whig Budgets re-appears in their present one; increase of expenditure over income, difficulty, calamity, debt, borrowing, anticipation of revenue—all the old familiar things are here again; and the first champions of the modern commercial system are quite unable to act upon their old principles. The Whigs, we repeat, are unlucky men; they governed during their last term of office through a series of bad seasons (Mr. Baring's statement to that effect on Monday was the very pathos of official reminiscence), and the mass of accumulated difficulties sunk them altogether in 1841. Sir Robert Peel threw all debts, loans, and shifts overboard, and at once dipped his hand into every man's pocket where there was a chance of finding a coin, and, of course, deficiency became surplus; then he reduced taxes and duties to an extent that no Whig ever dared dream of; and fortune favouring the bold, there was prosperity in the land, and an easy life of it in Downing-street. Mr. Goulburn's complacency was a pleasure to behold on the annual audits from 1843 to 1846; always something in hand, always something to remit; there was the Chinese ransom money, too, coming in every year with an exemplary punctuality that makes us wish the Celestials owed us such another; the Whigs had nothing but the expense and annoyance of the war that produced it. In 1846, a shade crossed the mirror of the future; it deepened; Peel saw its terrible import, stated it, and was laughed at—as the Duke of Brunswick was, when he called the dancers at the Ball to listen to the "opening roar" of the French cannon at Waterloo. But the Premier was right; he prepared for the crisis by proposing the greatest change in his whole career; broke up his party, triumphed, and fell. And the Whigs came in—with their usual luck, being plunged into the very centre of a complication of disasters and difficulties. Winds, Seasons, Harvests, Wars, and Potato Blights, combine to harass them; we are certain that, as soon as ever these clouds pass away, and we have a gleam of sunshine, it will fall through the windows of St. Stephen's upon the Treasury benches, with Sir Robert Peel sitting thereon as Premier, and Mr. Goulburn at his side, about to open another Budget, with more remissions of taxes, more removals of Excise Duties, and restrictions on Manufacture; with a surplus past and prospective, and a total exemption from the visitation of that Whig fatality—Debt!

We repeat it; as financiers, the Whigs are always unlucky. It is not want of knowledge, for they pointed the way in the path of Commercial Reform; but it was their opponents carried their theories into practice, with all the zeal of new converts. It is not want of will, for gladly would they secure the popularity that always attends the reduction of public burdens. It is want of opportunity: the time and its needs will not allow them to do what they wish; they are actually compelled to do the very reverse, and come down to Parliament to ask its sanction to the incurring a debt of eight millions sterling!

We do not for a moment dispute the necessity of this course; all things considered it is the effort we can the easiest make; but still it is singular that the destiny of the party now in power should be always to deal with debt and difficulty. The run of luck seems always to be against them: fortune is fickle, but, as far as they are concerned, misfortune is not; it sticks to them with most disagreeable pertinacity. Thus we are not at all surprised to see all that is bright in the present Budget—namely, the excess of the actual revenue in the past year over the estimates—ingeniously claimed by Mr. Goulburn as the result of the Conservative policy of Free Trade. The late Ministry point back to remissions made, fetters relaxed, and increased revenue as the consequence; the present Government sits by, admitting the brilliant fact, but acknowledging that it cannot do the same; that it must forego all progress, remain stationary as regards any improvements, and do only the most disagreeable thing that can be forced on a man or a State—coin upon the market as a borrower. It may be said, if the Conservatives were in office they would be obliged to do the same thing; but they are not in office, and that is precisely their good luck; they avoid all the discredit that, whether deserved or not, is sure to attach to men in difficulties and embarrassments. The mass of mankind never analyse causes; they judge only by broad striking results, which in the financial policy of the two Parties are these—that the Conservatives change systems, and abolish duties, and remove restrictions, and secure a surplus revenue, almost covering and placing out of sight that enormous impost which gave them the base of their operations; while the Whigs, with the same tax in command, cannot abolish a single tax, cannot reduce one duty, dare not relax a single restriction, whether of the Customs or Excise; and require, besides, a loan of eight millions for the current year. So much is plain and patent to all eyes, that they have to deal with a famine will be less apt to put upon, and the fact itself bears out our assertion that the Whigs are "unlucky men." They have prepared the way for the carrying of many great questions, and have forced on extensive changes of policy, but they have as often reaped more for the fame and profit of others than themselves. The Conservatives carried the Catholic claims, the Conservatives began the course of commercial relaxations, and the Conservatives abolished the Corn-Laws: with all these things the name of Peel will go down in history as the active instrument of the progress: when credit, fame, and popularity are to be got, then be sure that Peel and his party are in power; when difficulty, danger, and discredit are all that office brings with it, the Government falls, as if by a fatal necessity, into the hands of the Whigs! The contrast is visible everywhere: Peel's Budgets were, each year, a species of triumph; whole trades released from the yoke of the Excise—a policy begun with success, carried out with the same success steadily increasing: these were their features. Then the eulogy that was wont to rise from every part of the House, the golden opinions that were gathered from all sorts of people! Contrast it with the dissatisfaction and murmurs of Monday night! What a difference! Free Traders disappointed at the full stop put to their progress; Economists alarmed by the continual increase in expenditure; Trading Interests vexed that their complaints are not attended to; Reformers of Taxation in despair for their projects of reduction rendered impossible by the demands on the Exchequer; Protectionists cavilling, and inclined to exult—all are dissatisfied, and all express the feeling in a tone that reminds us of former years, when the unfortunate Budgets of the Whigs excited the very same comments. Is there not a fate or destiny in all this, that mocks the Ministry with the reputation of Reformers and men of progress, and yet nails them down with difficulties, till they are more stationary than the men whose avowed policy is to preserve the existing state of things, and who are actually the greatest of modifiers? A doom is said to hang over certain houses and families; there must be also an official destiny, which no Whig Chancellor of the Exchequer can shun; and it is perpetually to produce a Budget the opening of which exhibits—first, difficulty; next, denial of relief of taxation; and, lastly, a necessity of increasing the National Debt. All three peculiarities are to be found in the finance statement of 1847. The Tea Duties, the Window Tax, the Leather Tax, the Malt Tax, and the Sugar Duties, are all to wait for the advent of Peel and better times; till they come round again, he will leave the Whigs at peace, to get as unpopular as their unlucky stars will have them.

FUNERAL OF HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.—THE PROCESSION IN THE NAVE OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY.—(SEE PAGE 137.)

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The whole art of existence in Paris consists in mixing sadness and business things the most grave, with forms the most empty. [illegible] to create a manner for [illegible] and amusement in all circumstances and at all hours. Imagine, then, the treat for Paris gobemouches afforded by the recent fraisos, occasioned by the misdirection of an invitation to Lady Normanby's ball. It was more than renewing the battles of Ambassadors in the middle ages, when the representatives of rival powers fought for precedence at a conclave or a court ceremony—it was a prospect of a war between two great nations for the sake of a card; with this difference, that newspapers and publicity mutually at once the scandal with hundredfold power throughout the whole universe. The Peers, the Deputies, all the [illegible] were [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Chess Player."—You can have two or more Queens of your own on the board at once.

"C. E. R." Clifton.—The positions shall be examined. In reply to your second query—Yes. You may have a plurality of Queens or Rooks, and other pieces, on the board at the same time.

"W. J. A. M." It shall be looked at shortly.

"An Old Chess Player."—We will again examine the position.

"S. G."—If you will send another copy of your Problem, the solution in three moves shall be given. The former was destroyed when found faulty.

"E. S. T."—The solution you require we have given before. The leading moves are as follows:—1. Q to K 7th (ch); K to R 3rd—(if he moves the King back, mate is given sooner.) 2. Q to R 4th (ch); K to K 3rd. 3. Q to her 4th (ch); K to R 3rd. 4. Q to K B 4th (ch); K to Kt 2nd. Q to K 5th (ch); K to R 3rd. 6 R to K 8th (ch): P takes R. 7. Q mates at K B 6th.

"A. L." Eckham.—Many thanks: they shall have due attention.

"Jasena."—You must retract your moves, and play your King out of check.

"J. B." is thanked, and will add to our obligations by making his contributions in accordance with those as general use. In those received, the board is unmarked, and the White men drawn in Black ink—a practice which is sure to lead to vast error, and has already given a great deal of trouble.

"P. G. W."—When, for the trifling subscription of 5s. 4d. per quarter, you can have the Numbers of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle" weekly on your breakfast table, it is something too much to require us to copy the Problems therein, and send them by post to your residence.

"Andrea." The "Chess Palladium" was published in New York. Two Numbers only have reached England. Mr. Stanley's "Chess Magazine" is still going on, but the second and third Numbers have not arrived.

"D. P. W." Mr. Bryan's Pamphlet on the Great Match between England and France may be got of Hastings, in Carey-street, Lincoln's Inn.

"A. W." Islington.—Yes.

"Euripedes." The Indian Problem on the wrapper of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle" is quite correct, and its study will repay you.

"Henry P."—"Stalemate" is a drawn game. You can Castle but once in each game.

"H. S. H." —The old Problem is familiar to us, but we forget the author. We may, perhaps, give our readers the benefit of it in a next week, and the solution will then follow. Are you quite sure the position sent us is correctly transcribed?

"J. D. W." —The Economic Chess-board of Messrs. De la Rue, an extremely ingenious contrivance for enabling you to play Games or study Chess Problems while travelling, may be ordered of any bookseller.

"Juvenile." The Berlin Chess Magazine may be got of Messrs. Williams and Norgate, the Foreign Booksellers, of Queen's garden.

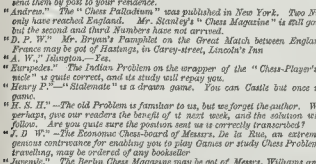
Solutions by "Sopracuta," "M. P. Miles," "G. A. H.," "W. H. C.," "N. D.," "C. F.," "P. C. O.," "Brixtonian," "B. S. C.," "Pho," and "Bridgnorth," are correct. Those by "N. V. B." "Stratus," "J. B. L." "Styk," "B. T. Jr." "A. Y. Z.," "A. H. W." "N. G. M.," "E. G. D.," and "One Who has Not Tried Before," are wrong.

PROBLEM, NO. 162.

By MR. KUIPER.

White playing first can mate in four moves.

BLACK.



WHITE

GAME BETWEEN MR. HARRWITZ AND MR. MEDLEY.—THE FORMER GIVING THE ODDS OF PAWN AND TWO MOVES.

(Remove Black's K B P from the board.)

WHITE (Mr. M.).	BLACK (Mr. H.).	WHITE (Mr. M.).	BLACK (Mr. H.)
1. K P two		14. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to K B 2nd
Q P two	K P one	15. Q to K R 4th	Q B to Kt 2nd
2. K B to Q 3rd	Q B P two	16. Q R to K sq	Q B to K sq
3. P takes P	Q (ch)	17. Q Kt to K 2nd	Q to Q 2nd
4. Q Kt to B 3rd	P takes P	18. Q Kt to K Kt sq	Q Kt P one
5. K Kt to B 3rd	K Kt to K 2nd	19. Q Kt to K R 3rd	K R P one
6. Castles	Q Kt to B 3rd	20. K B P one	K P takes P
7. K to R sq	Castles	21. P takes P	Kt takes P
8. Q to K 2nd	Q R P one	22. B takes Kt	Q takes B
9. Q B to Q 2nd	Q to Q B 2nd	23. Q B takes P	R takes R
10. K Kt to K B 4th	Q P one	24. R takes R	Kt takes B
11. B P two	Q Kt P two	25. Q takes Kt	B takes Kt
12. Q to K R 5th	K Kt P one	26. Kt to Kt 5th
13. Q to K R 6th	Q Kt to Q sq	Black check-mates in six or eight moves.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

(HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.)

No. 121.—By Mr. Mc G——y.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his 5th sq	K at Q B 4th	R at K R 4th	Ps at K 5th and Q B 6th
Q at her R 7th	R at Q B 4th	B at K Kt 8th
	P at Q B 2nd

White to play, and mate in two moves.

No. 122.—End of a Game between two Members of the Hull Chess Club.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his R sq	K at his B 2nd	Kt at K B sq	Kts at K B 6th and Q B 4th
Q at K R 5th	R at K 7th	Ps at K R 2nd, K Kt 3rd, and Q B 4th	K 5th
R at Q B 6th	R at Q sq		Ps at K Kt 5th, K B 4th, and Q B 4th

Black, Mr. S. B., having to play, gave mate in six moves.

No. 123 By W. H. M., of Yeovil.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his R 4th	K at Q B 2nd	Kt at K 3rd	Kt at K B sq
Q at her R 3rd	Q at her 3rd	Ps at K 7th and K B 4th
Q R at his sq	Rs at Q B sq and Q 4th		Ps at K Kt 2nd, Q B 2nd, and K 4th
B at K Kt sq and K 5th	B 7th
	B at K sq		K R 4th

White playing first, mates in five moves.

CHALLENGE TO THE CHESS AMATEURS OF ENGLAND FOR ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ASIDE.

We have received a communication from Mr. Stanley, the best chess player in the United States, expressive of his readiness to play a match of twenty-one games, in New York, for the above amount of stake on each side, with any amateur in England, except Mr. Staunton, and to allow the sum of 250 dollars to be deducted for travelling expenses from the joint stake, "win or lose," by any gentleman who may be disposed to accept his cartel, and pay a visit to America. All communications on the subject to be addressed to the editor of the Chess Player's Chronicle, King William-street, Strand, who is empowered to adjust the terms, and settle all necessary preliminaries for the playing the match this spring.

We shall be delighted to hear that Mr Stanley's challenge is accepted, but we apprehend the terms are not sufficiently inviting. To give himself a chance of a competitor, he should guarantee the full expenses of travelling. There are at least half a dozen amateurs here who would rejoice at an opportunity of visiting such a match with Mr. Stanley in England, but who have little stomach for a journey of 8,000 miles, especially upon a doubtful errand, and at half their own expense

THE NEW COMET.—The comet is rapidly increasing in brightness, and will continue to do so until its disappearance, about the end of the second week in March. Notwithstanding the moonlight, it has on some evenings been distinctly seen through an ordinary night glass.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Friewalden, in Austria, of the 8th, states that the celebrated hydropathist, Priessnitz, had just received a stroke of apoplexy, and that his life was in great danger.

It appears by accounts from Lucerne of the 12th inst., that two men previously charged with the murder of M. Leu had been put upon their trial. Judgment was given on the 12th—of death against M. Achermann, 18 years solitary confinement against Rosa Felix, hard labour for life against A. Muller. Corragioni and three others were acquitted. M. Bechler was condemned to death for taking part in the movement of the Free Corps

We hear from Constantinople that Reschid Pacha, Seraskier of Bonmelia, died at Monastir during the last week of January.

LAST Saturday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Lieutenant-General Sir Willoughby Cotton, G.C.B., was sworn in Commander-in Chief of the Company's forces, and Second Member of Council on the Bombay Establishment. Sir Willoughby Cotton afterwards dined with the Directors at the London Tavern.

A man, condemned to death by the Court of Assizes of the Ardèche (France), has petitioned the Minister of Justice to permit him to undergo his punishment by inhaling ether, death by such means, he understands, being without pain.

The Turkish Government have it in contemplation to publish a Turkish grammar and dictionary, and have given the necessary instructions to that effect to the Board of Education.

The Journal des Débats announces the death at Nancy of one of the veterans of the French army, Jean Louis Turpin, native of Bordeaux, who enlisted as a volunteer at the age of 18 years, made his first campaign under Louis XV., and continued his military career under Louis XVI., the Republic, and the Empire, until the year 1804, the period when he was placed on the half-pay list, after 34 years of actions services. This veteran captain was uncle to the celebrated Admiral Turpin.

An extraordinary shot was last week made on the Hampshire coast by Colonel Hawker with one barrel of his 200lb. gun, and a 12-ounce patent cartridge. At this one shot, 178 rabbits and a plover, amounting in number of about three dozen more birds that escaped in the scramble of collecting the killed and wounded.

An arrangement is about to be made relating to the Colonial mails, calculated greatly to facilitate correspondence with the Colonies. Postage stamps are almost ready to be issued by which prepayment may be effected on letters to any places out of England which are covered by the shilling postage. These will, of course, be available for all our colonies without exception, for the territories of the East India Company, and our Mediterranean dependencies.

The New York papers announce the arrival of the Earl of Elgin, Governor-General of the Canadas, at Montreal, which event took place on the 29th of January, Butcher's meat has become so dear at Schaffhausen, in Switzerland, that permission has been granted by the authorities to expose for sale the flesh of horses, asses, and mules.

Letters from Rome of the 11th inst. mention that a grand banquet was given on the preceding day to Mr. Cobden, by the Chamber of Commerce of that capital. The Marquis Potenziani, the President, and the Marquis Dragonetti severally addressed Mr. Cobden, whose reply was received with enthusiastic applause. The Carnival was very gay, owing to the great influx of foreigners

The treaty of Commerce and Navigation between Naples and the Zollverein, was finally concluded at the close of last month,

A Vienna letter, published by the Breslau Gazette of the 15th, mentions a rumour that the negotiations between the Courts of St. Petersburgh and Vienna, which were broken off as regarded a project of marriage for the Archduke Stephen and the Grand Duchess Olga, are about to be resumed, with the substitution of the Grand Duchess Catherine for the former.

A meeting has been held at Norwich to take the necessary steps for the formation of a Chamber of Commerce in that city

The opening of the railway from Amiens to Abbeville, which had been announced for the 1st of March, will not take place till the 15th.

The supplement to Tuesday night's Gazette contains a treasury warrant repealing the postage of one halfpenny fixed by the warrant of Dec. 16, on British newspapers sent to Prussia and Hamburg, the Netherlands, or Belgium, and announcing that newspapers may be sent to Prussia free of British postage. Pamphlets not exceeding half an ounce in weight are to be charged sixpence.

The Journal des Débats announces, that the King of Bavaria is about to publish a fourth volume of poems.

During the week ending the 21st inst., the number of persons passing between England and France at the under-named places was—Boulogne, 751; Calais, 252: total 1003.

The Arbroath Guide mentions a curious circumstance. A tumour in a cow was opened by a veterinary surgeon at Forfar, and a dinner fork complete, except a part of one prong, was taken out.

A commission has been appointed at Amsterdam to collect subscriptions for the relief of the distress in Ireland.

LAST week a Missionary, in the possession of Mr. John Kerr, Dundee, died at the age of 97 years. The aged favourite had been 24 years in Mr. Kerr's possession.

Letters from Rome mention the intention of the Pontiff to give a Municipal Constitution to that city. Preparations were also making to introduce gas-lighting.

The Cologne Gazette denies that the Prussian Cabinet has given its adhesion to the protest of Lord Palmerston against the marriage of the Duke de Montpensier, but admits that the King of Prussia and his Ministers are highly dissatisfied at the event.

Last Thursday week the iron bridge erected over the Waterford and Limerick Railway, on the Roxborough-road, at the terminus in Limerick, was opened in the presence of a number of gentry of the town and its neighbourhood

The herald's officers, within the month, have found the head of all the Nevilles—the lineal descendant of the proud Earl of Warwick, who made Kings at pleasure—a journeyman boot-closer at Northampton.

By our latest intelligence from Buenos Ayres we are informed that the Paraguayan ruler, Signor Lopez, had not only issued a decree suspending hostilities against the Confederation, but had actually disbanded his army.

The St. Petersburgh letters of the 6th inst. say that the Empress of Russia has again suffered a relapse, and it will probably be necessary for her to seek a southern climate. It is supposed that she will in the present instance go to the south of Russia. The health of the Consort of the heir apparent is also such as to require change of climate as soon as she is sufficiently recovered, and the season admits of her removal to Darmstadt

We regret to announce the indisposition of Mr. Baron Platt. The learned Judge underwent an operation on Tuesday by Mr. Travers

Advices from Monte Video render it certain that Messrs. Graham and Hood had failed in their object of mediation between Buenos Ayres and Paraguay. Although it is said Lopez had suspended hostilities, he was still determined on severing Paraguay from the national union.

During the seventeen days ending on Tuesday, the borough Coroner of Liverpool held no fewer than fifty-one inquests. There were as many as thirteen in one day

The German papers notice with some indications of uneasiness the activity which appears to reign at this moment in the Prussian War Department, as well as the movement of Russian troops towards the Prussian Polish frontier.

The Augsburgh Gazette publishes the following letter from St. Petersburgh, Feb. 6:—"A letter has been received from Ejuchia, a commercial town in Russian China, which, in alluding to accounts from Canton, says,—'We are approaching towards a very interesting epoch. In 10 years hence the state of affairs in eastern Asia will considerably change There is a sentiment of liberty developing itself in China which is bringing about with rapid strides the ruin of the existing form of Government.'"

We find the following in a letter from Ancona, of the 8th:—"The last courier from Greece brought letters which state that a misunderstanding had occurred between M Mussurus, Ambassador of the Ottoman Porte, and M. Coletti, President of the Council. It is thought that M. Mussurus will be replaced by another Ambassador."

During the last week a number of the power-loom factory employers of Glasgow and suburbs put their workmen upon short time, some of them working only during daylight. Manufacturing business generally in Glasgow is in a more depressed state than it has been for several years previous.

On Tuesday, a person very respectably dressed, but who refused to give his name, was committed by the magistrates at Rochester on his own confession with having set fire to a corn-stack, near Strood, on Sunday night. He went to the police station the same night, and said he had set the stack on fire, but without assigning any motive. He is unknown in the neighbourhood, and his manner indicated that his mind is unsound, but that he is a person who has moved in a respectable sphere in life.

A police is about to be formed at Portsmouth, for the apprehension of deserters from her Majesty's ships. The constables are to be selected from the Marine division, and are to be stationed at different piers, railroad stations, and in other public places

The Directors of the Poor of St. Pancras have decided, like those of Marylebone, to oppose the Regent's-canal Railway. At a meeting of the Directors on Wednesday it was resolved that a petition be prepared in opposition to the bill

With a view of partially enabling the labourers on his Bucks estates to meet the sufferings occasioned by the present high price of provisions, Lord Howe has ordered a load of faggots (valued at 12s a load) to be given to every head of a labouring family employed by his tenants. His Lordship has, at the same time, expressed a hope that his tenants will advance the wages of their labourers, the high prices of agricultural produce enabling them to do so.

COUNTRY NEWS.

ANTI-MALT-TAX MEETING AT PETERBOROUGH.—An Anti-Malt-tax meeting took place on Wednesday at Peterborough, when a letter was read from Earl Fitzwilliam, in which that nobleman says:—"You are of course aware that so large a revenue as is derived from the duty on malt, cannot be given up without a equivalent to replace it. My opinion is, that this equivalent ought be found in an increase of the Property-tax, as distinguished from the Income-tax, to the latter of which I have the most insuperable objection." Resolutions deprecatory of the Malt-tax, were adopted

INDICATIONS OF SPRING.—On Monday the thrush was heard in the neighbourhood of Gosforth, (Cumberland), "warbling his wood notes wild." This is the first feathered melodist that has been heard this season.

REPRESENTATION OF MANCHESTER.—Our letters from Manchester advise us to believe that the Earl of Lincoln declines to accede to the request to contest the representation of that town

FIRE AND LOSS OF THREE LIVES IN WALES.—Early on Wednesday morning last week), a fire broke out on the premises of the Queen's Head Inn, Newtown, Montgomeryshire, and although every exertion was used to stop the progress of the flames, nearly the whole of the premises, together with the furniture, were consumed. Mr. Peplow, landlord of the inn, the ostler, and Mr. Ferry, maltster, of Clinton, near Bishop's Castle, who was staying there for the night, were all burnt to death

ROBBERY OF JEWELS AT BRIGHTON.—On Friday evening (last week), the house of Mr Alderman Wilson, No. 3, Eastern-terrace, Brighton, was entered and robbed of jewels to the amount of £300. The robbery was first discovered by the lady's maid, who, on ascending the staircase, heard the wardrobe door in her mistress's room creak On going into the room she saw no one, and on looking into the wardrobe, she perceived that the shelf on which the jewels were usually kept was empty. She instantly communicated this to her mistress, and Alderman Wilson sent for some men from a neighbouring mews, who stationed themselves round the house, and while they were there, two men, who had a box with them, and no doubt were the thieves, walked out of No. 2, passed through the mews without question, and got clear off

THE POTATO DISEASE IN WALES.—The loss caused by the ravages of the potato disease, within the counties of Anglesey and Carnarvon, is estimated at 10s in the pound upon the annual rental of the land, as assessed to the poor rates. The rental of the land so assessed, according to the latest Parliamentary returns, was, Anglesey, £164,637, and Carnarvonshire, £126,587. In forming this estimate, the calculation was based upon the assumption that only three-fifths of the crop had been destroyed. Even supposing, which is certainly not the case, one-fourth of the crop to have been in a sound state, the actual loss within [illegible] which, at 8s. a quarter, would [illegible]

AN INQUEST.—On Tuesday week, an inquiry was gone into before William Carter, Esq., at the Greyhound Inn, Carshalton, respecting the deaths of Charles Cooper, aged 45, Alice Cooper, aged 43, and Charles Cooper, aged 6 years, who lost their lives under the most frightful circumstances. It appeared from the evidence that the deceased persons resided in a house built against a chalk-pit, and formerly used as a stable, the roof being level with the adjoining fields. On Wednesday (last week) the earth gave way, forcing the brick wall in on the unfortunate occupants. At the back of the premises was formerly a warren for rabbits, which most likely was much undermined by them. The Jury returned the following verdict:—"That the deceased persons were accidentally suffocated by the falling of a quantity of earth, which forced in the end of a certain dwelling house, which fell upon them as they lay in bed asleep."

TEN PERSONS DROWNED IN AN OMNIBUS.—An accident, of a peculiar and fatal kind, occured last Tuesday week, at Bideford, Devonshire. Bowden's omnibus, which plies between Bideford and Torrington, and is designated the Safety, drew up opposite the quay, and at six o'clock started for the latter town. This vehicle was full of passengers, eleven persons being inside, and one on the roof. It had not gone many yards before one of the horses became restive, and after making two or three plunges the pole and splinter broke asunder from the carriage, which instantly went down the declivity of the quay, and with the whole of its passengers was precipitated over into the river. Ten of the passengers were drowned. The inquest on the bodies took place on Wednesday. Their names were given out as follows:—Mrs. Fanny Friendship, aged 40 (left five children); Ann Norman (a widow), aged 65; Mrs Elizabeth Friendship, aged 35 (left six children); Mary Ann Friendship (daughter of the last deceased), aged 11; Mrs. Ann Page, aged 49; Mr. John Chapple, aged 60 (brother of the gentleman who escaped); John Pu[illegible], aged 30; Miss Elizabeth Griffey, aged 60; and two other women, names unknown. The evidence went to prove that the melancholy affair arose from [illegible] accident, for although the driver was charged with being drunk, and incapable of taking charge of his horses, the whole proved unfounded. The Jury returned the subjoined verdict: "Accidental death, and the Jury strongly recommended an indictment being laid against the authorities of the town for allowing the quay-side to remain in the dangerous state it was."

ANOTHER ISLAND RAILWAY TRAVELLER.—On Sunday, an incident occurred on the South Eastern Railway, very similar to that which took place a week or two ago, on the North Western Railway. A person of respectable appearance, named Scott, booked himself at the Folkestone station by a third-class train for London. During the progress of the train, his manner attracted the observation of some of his fellow-passengers, but it was not until their arrival at the Godstone-road station that anything of a serious character occurred. On reaching this place, however, Mr. Scott exhibited an extraordinary degree of excitement, and, calling aloud for assistance, declared that his fellow-passengers were attempting to stab him with their knives. The guard endeavoured to appease him, but he insisted on getting out of the carriage. Under the impression that if the train were once in motion the unfortunate man would remain quiescent, the guard gave the signal to the driver to proceed. He had scarcely done so when Mr. Scott burst open the carriage-door, and, jumping on to the platform, bounded over the hedge into an adjoining field, across which he ran at full speed The guard, observing all that had occurred, immediately stopped the train, and, giving chase, came up with the fugitive in a few minutes Partly by persuasion and part by force, he induced him to return, and, having placed him in a second-class carriage, under the care of a porter and two of the passengers, who kindly offered to undertake the charge of the duty, the train again proceeded. After the train was in motion, Mr. Scott's excitement increased, and, notwithstanding the utmost precautions, he contrived to force his head and shoulders through the window of the carriage, smashing the glass and frame to pieces, and being with great difficulty prevented from precipitating himself out of the carriage. On arriving at London-bridge, he was consigned to the care of the police, who conveyed him to Southwark police-court. Mr. Pulleford attended on the part of the company, and, by desire of Mr. Macgregor, the chairman of the board, on the magistrate undertaking to see that the unfortunate man was restored to the care of his friends, expressed the desire of the directors to take no further proceeding in the matter It has been ascertained that Mr. Scott is a student for the Catholic priesthood, and that he was on his way from a collegiate institution at Calais to Liverpool, where his friends resided.

HER MAJESTY'S FRIGATE "FISGARD" STRUCK BY LIGHTNING OFF THE NISQUALLY RIVER, IN THE OREGON.

On the 27th of September last, about six, P.M., whilst lying moored off the Nisqually River, distant sheet lightning was observed approaching the ship, and about seven, P.M., a violent thunder-storm arose, accompanied by heavy rain; at 8.30 a short burst of lightning fell on the main-mast, accompanied by a terrific crash of thunder, which is said to have stunned every one in the ship.

A letter from one of the Lieutenants says:—"We had been exercising the great guns, to the no small delight and amusement of the Indians, and were almost deafened by the repeated discharges of the cannon. It struck us all, how futile had been our efforts to make a noise, when Nature opened upon us the awful fire of her dreadful artillery."

The electrical discharge struck the vane spindle, consisting of a copper pointed rod, of about two feet in length, and half an inch in diameter. It fused the end of it, and blackened the remaining part down one-third of the way down; then seized the lightning conductor fixed on the mast, and continued through the ship into the sea. The electric matter passed clearly off, without any damage—not a rope yarn was hurt, nor did the ship experience the slightest inconvenience

On examining the conductor, no marks were observed on the royal or topgallant-mast, except at the lower part, where it was covered by the cap, where the copper was blackened and the nails slightly fused. On the main-top-mast there was no mark whatever; and, on examining the main-mast, the joints of the conductor were started from the mast in two places, near the deck, and the plates of copper separated in another place. On reaching the lower deck, the discharge is said to have taken the branches under the beams leading to the bands on the ship's sides; these were started at the ends in contact with the copper bolts leading to the sea, and the copper sheet covering the joint bulged upwards by the expansive force of the shock.

A boatswain's mate was nearly blinded by the intense vividness of the light, and a man was thrown down on the deck by the violent concussion of the ship. A midshipman on the main deck felt himself thrust aside from the same cause, but without falling.

It is officially reported by the Captain and officers, that the conductor saved the ship from most serious damage; and that, without it, the mast would certainly have been shivered in pieces.

Many persons saw the lightning strike all agree in the fact of the mast being apparently wrapped in a blaze of electric fire, exhibiting the appearance shown in the annexed Engraving, from a beautiful drawing by Mr. R. M. Condy

It has been usual to speak of this appearance as lightning running down the conductor; from the extreme rapidity, however, with which electricity traverses [illegible], as clearly shown by Wheatstone's experiments, at the rate of 576,000 miles in a second of time, it would be quite impossible to trace by the eye any effect. The phenomenon in question is, therefore, to be attributed to the electrified glow excited in the particles of flame contiguous to the course of the [illegible], and which continues for a small portion of time to emit light after the great body of the electric matter has passed off by the conductor. Being coincident with the instant of the lightning falling on the conductor, it has been mistaken for the presence of the passing charge.

This transient luminous appearance is of a perfectly harmless character, and may be classed with those phosphorescent appearances attendant on an Aurora, and other electrical effects of a somewhat similar description, such as the lights which often settle on the ropes and masts of ships as described by Pliny and other philosophers of ancient times. Thus, persons during electrical storms have appeared to be enveloped in weak flames, without being in any degree conscious of it. A very remarkable instance of such appearances was observed by Ross and Sabine in one of the Arctic expeditions. In the Greenland seas, during a dark cloudy night, they observed on the surface of the water a luminous glow, directly in the ship's course. It appeared to occupy a space of four or five hundred yards, and had considerable elevation. The vessel sailed out of a pitchy darkness directly into this luminous mass: all at once, masts, yards, sails, became covered with light in succession as the vessel advanced, until, having sailed completely through it, everything again became involved in profound obscurity.—"Annuire for 1838," p. 373.

GREAT FIRE AT PERA.

Considering the great number of shipswhich have been damaged or destroyed by lightning, and which in our merchant service still continue to be damaged or destroyed, it is not without considerable interest we witness and record such results as those described in her Majesty's frigate Fisgard. The Drawing has been made upon the authority of official and other documents, so that no question can possibly arise as to its authenticity. The frigate was fitted at Plymouth, previously to her sailing from England, with Mr. Snow Harris's Conductors, now universally applied to her Majesty's ships. Mr. Harris, in his published papers, states that if a ship, together with the masts, &c., were one continuous mass of metal, then no damage by lightning could ensue; that what we call lightning, is the result of the electrical agency finding its way by main force through resisting matter, such as the air; that, in seizing upon comparatively non-resisting bodies, such as the metals, this form of lightning vanishes, and the explosive action approximates to the state of a quiescent current traversing a metal.—He proposes, therefore, to bring ships as nearly as possible into the same electrical condition they would have, supposing the whole a mass of metal. To this effect, all the masts are furnished with capacious conductors of copper plate, united in a peculiar way, and reaching from the vane spindle to the keel, being connected with branch conductors leading under the beams to the ship's sides; the detached metallic masses used in the construction of the hull are tied into one general system of conduction together with these conductors, and the whole freely connected with the sea by numerous metallic bolts passing through the ship to the copper expanded over the bottom. It is asserted by Mr. Harris that, at the instant of lightning striking on the mast aloft, the explosive action will vanish, and, by means of the conductors, be dispersed upon the water without intermediate damage, which appears to have been the case in the Fisgard, and in several other cases of lightning falling with violence on her Majesty's ships.

The usual form of lightning conductors for ships has been that of a small chain or wire rope attached to the rigging, applied upon less general views in science than those resorted to by Mr. Harris; and which, being of a temporary character, of small capacity, and liable to damage and derangement, he contends is not adequate to meet all the conditions in which the general fabric, in all its casualties, may become placed.

Whatever objection may be entertained in opposition to those views, certain it is that, since the general employment of Mr. Harris's system in the Royal Navy, no instance of damage by lightning has occurred; whilst, in former periods, it existed to a ruinous extent, and still continues to exist in the Merchant Navy, notwithstanding that, in both cases, the ships were said to be supplied with lightning conductors.

The following is an extract of a letter from a responsible officer of the Fisgard:—

"On the 27th of September last, when laying moored off the Nisqually River, a violent thunder-storm came on about six, P.M., accompanied with heavy rain and approaching lightning. As I was speaking to one of the men about the connecting pieces of the lightning conductor, the electric fluid burst immediately over our heads, striking the main-mast, passing down the conductor within three yards of my body; the seaman, almost touching me, was temporarily blinded by the vivid light, and thrown down. The electric fluid passed clearly off to the sea, with an explosion beyond all description: it almost stunned every one on board. Thanks to Mr. Snow Harris's Conductors, with which every mast is fitted, not the slightest damage was sustained."

GREAT FIRE AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Pera, the great commercial suburb of Constantinople, has just been devastated by one of those calamitous events which are, perhaps, more frequent in Turkey than in any other part of the world. The first intelligence was received on the 19th inst.; and a very graphic description of the conflagration has been received from the Constantinople Correspondent of the Daily News, dated Jan. 28, the leading details of which are as follow:—

"At seven o'clock on the afternoon of the 26th inst., a fire suddenly broke out in a house adjoining the residence of the attachés of the British Embassy. No one who has not witnessed a scene of the kind in this part of the world, can have any conception of its terrible effects. At the first cry of 'Fire,' the whole population of the city is in motion. The panic is not confined to the house where the accident first occurs, or to those in its immediate neighbourhood, but extends through the whole district. Everywhere preparations are made for flight; in the streets adjacent, within the space of an hour every house is deserted. For here the fire does not smoulder long, or struggle slowly with walls of stone and brick; but it rushes along bearing and roaring like a mighty torrent. In ten minutes after the alarm had been given, four houses were in flames. The English attachés, who inhabited twelve of them, could do nothing more than secure their own escape. Every particle of their property was destroyed. At eleven o'clock, four hours after the fire was first discovered, no less than ninety houses were in ashes. The scene at times was terrific beyond description. Pera looked like the gigantic crater of a volcano, where nothing was seen but rolling waves of flame. The air for a quarter of a mile round was filled with blazing pieces of wood, which falling in showers upon the tchardacks, or wooden terraces on the tops of the houses, in many instances, set them on fire. Thus the conflagration did not proceed regularly from house to house, but burst out in several different places at once; so that often those engaged in trying to extinguish the fire, or to save some portion of their property, were in danger of being hemmed in by the flames. At times the scene in the streets was something like that of a town taken by assault.

"The fire-engines are here borne on men's shoulders, for it would be impossible to drag them with horses through the steep and narrow streets of Pera. They are always accompanied by a dense mass of firemen armed with hatchets and long poles with hooks at the end. As they rush along thus armed, and bearing the engine between them, numberless are the accidents they occasion; all fly wildly before them to save themselves from fractured limbs, and, as it often occurs, from loss of life.

"The British Embassy is a total wreck. All the furniture has been destroyed, and the house itself would have been consumed were it not built of solid stone, with fire-proof doors and shutters. It caught fire several times, but, owing to the exertions of those on the spot, the flames were quickly extinguished. All the houses round about were burned, and one could see the flames licking the Iron shutters, and hear them rolling up with a noise like that of a rushing wind against the stout stone walls. The wood-work of the windows was destroyed; the iron shutters and doors were red hot. In some places within the house the temperature was like that of a furnace. All the important papers were saved. At a little before midnight, the fire began to abate, and in half-an-hour was completely got under. This, however, was not effected till after several houses had been pulled down; nearly a hundred, and some of these the largest and best in Pera, have been destroyed The amount of property lost cannot be ascertained, but it is supposed to be enormous It was easy to judge of the esteem entertained for Mr. and Mrs. Wellesley, not only by the British residents here, but by the corps diplomatique, by the anxiety which was shown to render assistance when it was known that the Embassy was in danger of being burned. The crews of the French, Austrian, and Russian men-of-war were present, and were almost constantly occupied in the interior of the building in throwing water upon the walls and windows. Too much praise cannot be given to Count Sturmer, the Austrian Internuncio, for the assistance which he rendered on the occasion. He had come with only one attendant from his own palace, which was a considerable distance, through all the dangers which we have described above, to the British Embassy, where he arrived, one of the first after the alarm had been given. With his own hands he assisted in saving the more precious effects of the British Minister and of Mrs. Wellesley, and by his voice and presence encouraged those present to exert themselves in extinguishing the flames. Mr. and Mrs. Wellesley are at present staying at the Austrian palace, and some of the English attachés are also enjoying the splendid hospitalities of the Count and Countess de Sturmer. The Italian theatre is burned down: it is said to be the intention of the Government to have another built upon a more extensive scale."

Our Artist is enabled to represent, with picturesque accuracy, the precise locality of the fire, and the environs, by the courtesy of Mr. Robert Burford, who has, for this purpose, lent one of the Sketches from which has been painted his beautiful Panorama of Constantinople, at Leicester-square.

H. M. FRIGATE "FISGARD" STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—DRAWN BY MR. N. M. CONDY.

NEWSPAPER

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

WYE COLLEGE AND GRAMMAR-SCHOOL, KENT.

About three miles north-east of Ashford, under the chalk hills, lies the healthy little town of Wye, noted for the longevity of its inhabitants, as the parish registers fully attest; wherein the ages of 70, 80, and even 90 are by no means rare. Here was, before the Reformation, a College, originally founded in 1431, by Cardinal Kempe. The buildings, forming a quadrangle round an open court, have long been used for the purposes of an endowed school, which holds a high station in the county, as an establishment for sound learning. The celebrated naturalist and historian, Dr. Plot, received his early education here.

WYE COLLEGE AND GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

Wye, and the vale of the Stour, in which it is situated, have many interesting historical associations connected with them. It lies (by Railway communication) within ten minutes of Ashford, twenty minutes of Canterbury, thirty minutes of Whitstable, forty minutes of Folkestone, a little more than an hour of Maidstone, and about three hours of "the Great Metropolis."

FINE ARTS.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

We have this week engraved Mr. F. Stone's only contribution to the collection, namely, the "Approaching Footstep:" of the painter's characteristics we spoke in our Journal of November last.

Our other illustration is Mr. Pickersgill's admirably painted "Scene from Shakespeare's 'Henry IV.'—Lady Mortimer, Mortimer, Lady Percy, Hotspur, Glendower, and Worcester."

Glendower. lay you down
And rest your gentle head upon her lap
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you.
Hotspur. Come Kate, quick, quick, that I may lay my head in thy lap.
Lady Percy. Lie still, ye thief, and hear the Lady sing in Welsh. Act III. sc. 1.

MUSIC.

WALLACE'S "MATILDA OF HUNGARY."

The second opera, by the composer of "Maritana," so long and anxiously anticipated, was produced on Monday night, with decided success, and has been repeated every evening. On the opening representation it occupied four hours, but has since been curtailed materially in the dialogue and a little in the music: the excision of the former was undoubtedly necessary, but the latter, as regards the first and second acts, would advantageously bear additional cuts, and then "Matilda" might be heard with unalloyed gratification. Almost the first question that suggests itself is whether the new production be equal to the "Maritana." It is, however, scarcely fair to institute this comparison. Mr. Wallace's first opera was essentially a comic or buffa opera—his present work belongs to the grand opera seria. Whilst we admit that, as a musician, his fame must be increased by "Matilda of Hungary," the third act of which is as fine as anything can be in the way of fertile imagination and elaborate treatment, still, on the whole, there is a greater charm and more completeness about the "Maritana." We must not the less take into mensely. Let us first give a notion, to prove our assertion, of the dramatic incidents.

[redacted]

The action passes in Bohemia, and not in Hungary, as the title would infer. The plot is based on the historical fact of the election of George Podebrad to the Bohemian Throne, by the Estates, in 1458. At the drawing up of the curtain the peasantry await the result of a battle between the partisans of the Queen of Bohemia and the Bohemian nobles, who are in revolt against her authority since Ladislaus the First, her husband, had disappeared in a fight with the Ottomans. It is Mathias, an innkeeper who narrates the story, in a conversation with his friend, Geo Podebrad, a hunter of the mountains, who has been educated in a Moravian convent. It appears that the latter had saved the life of an unknown lady. The entrance of the Queen with her Prime Minister, Count Magnus, who makes a proposition to marry her, which she indignantly rejects, is the next incident. Then the Count accidentally sees George Podebrad, and, struck by his remarkable likeness to the missing Ladislaus, proposes, in order to have a mere tool on the throne, to pass the serf off for the Monarch. Podebrad, on recognising in the lady the unknown whom he has saved, and with whom he is deeply enamoured, assents to the deception, with the view of protecting the Queen, and the first act concludes with the march of Podiebrad to Prague.

In the second act the Serf King makes his triumphant entrance into the Bohemian capital, but, as it may be guessed, although the likeness deceives the aristocracy and the mobocracy, represented by an enormous array of supernumeraries, the Queen is not taken in. She, however, does not denounce the impostor, as she identifies the bold hunter who had saved her life. The Serf King is not so pliant as Magnus had hoped, for, on the modest proposition of the latter that Podebrad should sign away the command of the troops, the control of the finances, and the throne in perspective for the Minister, the Monarch indignantly tears the decrees to atoms. If well acted this scene would be great, but with Borrani and Harrison it became a mere burlesque. Revolt breaks out in the capital, and Podebrad, as the Queen faints with terror, hastens to quell it, and so the second act ends.

In the third act, George Podebrad, after three months of rule, has restored peace in the distracted country, but is about to be assassinated. Mathias, the agent for the deed, is brought in a prisoner, and the latter is astonished to find in the Monarch, whose life he was induced to attempt, his old friend Podebrad. Mathias denounces Count Magnus as the instigator, and the latter is led off a prisoner. Podebrad then, in an interview with the Queen, offers to withdraw for ever from Bohemia, to explain the deception he had been a party to, but her Majesty gives her judgment by ordering Count Magnus to the scaffold, and thus apostrophises the Royal George:—

> As for that slave, who on the Throne
> Usurped a place he hoped to make his own,
> Insolent serf! down on thy bended knee,
> And learn how acts like these can punished be!
> To him the saviour of my Crown, the chief
> Whose fearless valour gave my realm relief—
> Worthy of him and me—a prize I bring,
> Base dastard! rise up! BOHEMIA'S KING!!!

THE APPROACHING FOOTSTEP.—PAINTED BY F. STONE.

This satisfactory dénouement enables the prima donna to step forward and warble an ecstatic bravura. If this drama were acted by artists of power, the situations would tell; but with singers, the ground became dangerous, and there was more than one slip, the effect of which was more comical than serious—Borrani's exit, for instance, and tragic strides, amused the audience excessively. Miss Romer spoke her words with intelligence; her costumes were rich, varied, and beautiful; and, in the Royal robes, in the assembled Diet, in the last scene, she looked very well. The mounting of this opera must have cost an immense outlay. In each act is a grand pictorial effect; the first is the bivouac by moonlight, in the valley of Thabor, with the mountains and the peaks covered with snow; the watch-fires lighted, and the troops distributed in parties, with sentinels on the heights. The second is a gorgeous procession of the King into Prague, over the great bridge; and the last is the assembled Diet, to hear the Royal speech. All the details of these magnificent tableaux have been carefully attended to, and put on the stage with an evident disregard of expense. As a spectacle alone, everybody would see the opera; but the musical beauties are also of the highest order, as we propose to show.

The overture is too long and full of breaks, although beautifully scored; the subjects of the tenor air "Adieu, Fair Land!" and the finale of the first act, are Alpine themes, being skilfully interwoven. In the opera, as it stood at first, there were thirty pieces, five or six of which have been since taken out. The introduction and chorus "May Heaven Protect the Queen," is a nice bit of harmony. Mr. Weiss's song, in the minor, in six-eight time, "The Prophet his Standard was Rearing," is not very original; but the piquant effect of the chorus, in the major, secured for it an encore. The cavatina of Mr. Harrison, in five flats, three-four time, "It was a form," was encored; it is well instrumented. The long scena, "She comes in all her loveliness," in four flats, three-four time, with a cabaletta, in common time, "The crown, the sceptre, and the sway," ought to be unsparingly curtailed; Mr. Borrani began it well, but his intonation soon became painfully sharp. The duo, "What shall my bright and spotless crown," sung by Miss Romer and Mr. Borrani, was very uninteresting. The chorus and solo for Miss Romer, "Before our Queen we kneel," is effective. In the subsequent duo between Harrison and Borrani, "It is my Queen," the subject of a march is skilfully worked up in the introduction, but the jig tune in the ensemble is not worthy of the situation. The encore for the next ballad will, no doubt, be a standing one; it is sung by Mr. Harrison, "Adieu! fair land," common time, and is exquisitely scored, the harp effects being beautiful. The finale of the first act, "The soldier silently doth stand," is in every point of view admirable. It is led off by a few notes from the horn; the stringed instruments follow pizzicato with the wood band, and anon is heard the motif of "Adieu, fair land!" Then the soldiers come in, in a crisp chorus, and the entire masses break out in the appeal to arms. After the recognition of Podebrad for the Ladislaus, the strain becomes more heroic, and, in a martial and exciting cry of "On to Prague," this splendid finale winds up.

The second act opens with a scena, in three four time, in the Italian form, "At length in absence mourn'd," sung by Miss Romer, with a cabaletta, "Fly hence, each idle fear." A violin accompaniment to this scena is played with skill by Mr. Hughes, the leader of the band. A chorus of people, in three-eight time, "This happy day we celebrate," has a drinking song, "Pledge with cup in hand," sung by Mr. Weiss (Mathias), but it has no particular merit. After a chorus, in five flats, "Long live the King," a well-constructed canon, "The moment comes," but in the very next moment, a monstrous absurdity is committed. The supposed Ladislaus falls at the feet of the Queen of Bohemia; Poiebrad says—

> In joy and transport, prostrate at thy knee!

Count Magnus (aside), delighted that the Queen, as he imagines, has mistaken the Pretender for Ladislaus, her former husband, exclaims—

> My aim accomplish'd e'en my hopes beyond,
> Her blind mistake has made a regal bond.

Here, of course, is a most exciting incident, on which the future plot, as Lord Castlereagh would have said, hinges. But what does Podebrad? He takes the Queen by the hand, and walks her to the footlights, and, whilst hundreds are on the stage, to witness the interview between the Queen and her restored husband, he begins a barcarole! in two verses, in six-eight time—

> Like waves, which o'er the ocean
> In their foamy triumph ride,
> Though lash'd to such emotion,
> Into gentleness subside, &c

This total disregard of dramatic propriety, in order to drag in a publisher's barcarole is ruinous to art, and we are astonished that the composer and author should lend themselves to such exigencies

The gem of the opera is next in rotation—one of the most simple and yet the most lovely of ballads, "Come is that calmness," in three-four time. It was enthusiastically encored. Harrison sang it well, and it told with double effect because it was in its right place. After a chorus of trebles, Miss Romer has a pleasing air, "They who would still be happy;" followed by an unmeaning duo with Mr. Harrison, "This deep affront I did not need.

In the finale of the second act there is a clever quintet.

The third act is replete with beauties of the highest order. It opens with an accompanied recitative by Lidie (Miss Isaacs), with some happy melodic phrases, leading to a graceful ballad, "A lowly youth, the mountain child," in threefour time, one that is safe to be popular. Its repetition was unanimously demanded. After a chorus, "Oh! welcome with shouts," Miss Romer has an exquisite ballad, "In that devotion," in E flat, in common time. It was sung with touching feeling, and encored. A magnificent trio ensues between Harrison, Borrani, and Weiss, "To see my King from care"—Mozartian in form; it is instrumented with infinite skill and vigour. After this brilliant trio, there is a duo, in E flat, between Miss Romer and Harrison, of surpassing loveliness. The orchestration of this duo would alone place Mr. Wallace's name in the first rank of living musicians. It was also capitally sung, and Harrison, in ajbt of cantabile, "Oh, worshipped woman," sang so well, that it is a pity he is not always heard in piano passages. The concerted finale is full of powerful writing, and the Handelian fugue chorus, "For those who thus presume," and brilliant violin passages in the Queen's speech to the Diet, displayed con summate musicianship. Miss Romer's executive faculties were overtaxed in the finale, but she dashes through all difficulties and divisions with a daring defiance of precision, relying on the powers of a superb organ to carry her through triumphantly with an English audience.

Mr. Wallace has unquestionably achieved a great triumph; for an opera in which there are at least four ballads, a finale, a duo and trio, that may be regarded as gems, can no ordinary production. The chief defects will be found in the first and second acts, in which there is the most elaborate orchestration, but without that sparkling quality so essential to make it tell. He has an extraordinary flow of ideas and fertility of invention; but what he chiefly requires is dramatic tact and experience, without which boldness and variety in orchestral treatment cannot be turned to account. It is astonishing how his poetical imagination advances in the third act; it is no longer the same work; his harmo-nies become picturesque and animated; his melodies sweet and flowing, and his orchestral working brilliant, new, and effective in the highest degree. Whatever severity of criticism may be exercised in the analysis of Mr. Wallace's "Matilda of Hungary," it will be impossible not to come to the conclusion that he is a composer of eminence, of whom this country has, or any other nation would have, ample reason to be proud.

SCENE FROM SHAKSPEARE'S HENRY IV.—LADY MORTIMER, MORTIMER, LADY PERCY, HOTSPUR, GLENDOWER, AND WORCESTER.—PAINTED BY F. R. PICKERSGILL.

Since the above article was in type, we attended the fourth representation, on Thursday evening, when Miss Rainforth appeared for the first time in Matilda of Hungary. It has been prudently resolved, not to interrupt the run of the opera, that Miss Romer and Miss Rainforth shall appear on alternate evenings, when the former has recovered from her indisposition. Miss Rainforth's performance is dignified and impressive, and, if her singing has not the power of her predecessor in the Royal part, it is superior in respect to artistical finish and precision. She was encored in the beautiful ballad "In that devotion," which she gave with feeling and delicacy, and in the bravura finale, "One gentle heart," her divi-sions in which were very neatly executed. Mr. Harrison improves in the singing, and was encored in the gem, "Gone is that calmness." The house was fully attended, and the last act of the opera went off with great animation.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

Mr. W. Sterndale Bennett's Performance of Classical Pianoforte Music.—On Tuesday evening this eminent composer and pianist commenced at the Hanover-square Rooms, his pianoforte performances for the season. He played of his own composition the romance of "Genevieve," a sparkling Scherzo in E Minor, and a Rondo Mazurka, Op. 26. He also executed Mendelssohn's Sixth Book of Songs, without words, and was encored in the rattling Presto. With Mr. C. Potter, Mozart's Duo in F Minor, for four hands on one pianoforte, was brilliantly given. Handel's Air with twelve variations and Mendelssohn's Scherzo from the "Clavicum Suite de Piece," proved Mr. Bennett's efficiency in another branch of the pianoforte school. With Mr. Dando, J. S. Bach's Sonata in E Major, for piano and violin, was executed with infinite precision. The scheme opened with Mozart's Trio in E Flat for piano, tenor, and clarionet, exquisitely executed by Messrs. Bennett, Dando, and Williams. Between the instrumental pieces, Miss Dolby gave Bennett's graceful melody, "Gentle Zephyr," and Mendelssohn's song, written for the four vocalists' album, with such charm as to be encored in both. Mr. W. Dorrell accompanied the vocal selection. The next performance will be on March 8.

Madame Dulcken's Soirée Musicales. The third and last soirée was given on Wednesday evening, at the residence of the peanists, in Harley-street. Mozart's Quintuor in D, for Messrs. Hill, Watkins, Lucas, Dando, and Morley Pinsheon and Mendelssohn, were played by Madame Dulcken, Messrs. Willy, Hill, Weslake, Lucas, Goodban, Howell, M. Sainton, &c. The vocalists were Miss Lockey, Mrs. Weiss, Signor Marras, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Weiss. The Conductors were Benedict and C. Horsley.

A Concert took place on Saturday, at the residence of M. Coulon, in Great Marlborough-street, for the purpose of introducing his daughter, Mdlle. Coulon, to a select audience, as a pianiste; and one of no ordinary talents. In the first part, she performed a duet with the eminent violin player, M. Sainton, in a manner that at once showed the hearers were not listening to the mechanical proficiency of a mere child; and in a trio of Mendelssohn's—in which M. Rousselot took the violoncello part—she called forth their warmest approbation. Finally, she played a fantasia, by Prudent, from "Lucia di Lammermoor," which was loudly encored, notwithstanding the lateness of the hour. Altogether, the brightest anticipations were formed of this young lady's future musical career. All the pianistes, Mesdames Dulcken, Pinsheon, Mrs. Toulmin, Mr. Marshall, Mr. Brizzi, Mdme Coulon, and one of her pupils, Miss C. Hallen—a young lady who sang two difficult airs with remarkable correctness and facility of execution gave their services gratuitously. The whole Concert was exceedingly interesting, and went off with the greatest possible éclat.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

On Monday, Mr. Dando's third Quartet Concert was given at Crosby Hall, and Mr. J. B. Smith's Concert at the National Hall, Holborn. On Tuesday, the Melodists' Club had their Meeting at Freemasons' Hall. On Monday next, Mr. Mangold's Concert of Classical Instrumental Music will be given, at the Hanover-square Rooms. On Tuesday, the third Concert of Classical Instrumental Music, at Doctors' Commons. Mr. Genge's fifth Annual Concert will be given the same evening, at Crosby Hall. On Wednesday, Mr. Lindsay Sloper's soirée of Classical Pianoforte Music. On Thursday, Mr. Lucas's second Musical Evening; and a selection of Anthems and Cathedral Music at Exeter Hall, by the Sacred Harmonic Society. On Friday, will be the sixth of the Sacred Concerts at Crosby Hall, and the third Meeting of the Amateur Musical Society

On Thursday night Mr. Lucas, the composer and violoncello player, commenced, at his residence, in Bessex-street, his annual series of Musical Evenings for classical instrumental music. He is aided by M. Sainton and Henry Blagrove, violins, and Mr. Hill, tenor.

The Venetian Journals of late dates, describe the extraordinary success of Miss Hayes, an English prima donna, and of Signora Alboni, the celebrated Contralto from Milan and Vienna. The latter has played in "Concrenola," &c., with immense success. Up to the 11th inst., Meyerbeer's "Camp of Silesia," for Jenny Lind, had not been produced in Vienna. The valuable musical library of the late Mr. Alsager, has been purchased by Mr. Ella, for the Earl of Falmouth.

Mrs. Butler. This eminent actress will make her first appearance on the London stage, after her Manchester triumphs, at the Princess' Theatre, Mr. Madox Lavine engaged her for a limited number of nights.

The Late Mr. Kearns.—The Duke of Cambridge has kindly consented to patronize the Concert, on the 17th of March, at the Hanover-square Rooms. His royal Highness was one of the first to whom the scheme originated to be enrolled in the list of patrons, and forwarded a subscription. The vocalists who have promised their aid, include the names of Mdme. Caradori, Mdme. F. Lablache, Mdme. Albertazzi, Mdme. Macfarren, Miss Hawes, Miss Dolby, the Misses Williams, Miss Lockey, Miss Steele, Miss Lincoln, Miss Flower, Mrs. Toulmin, Messrs. Allen, Travers, Harrison, Manvers, Hobbs, Lockey, Hr. St. Machin, Phillips, J. A. Novello, Hasting, and Signor F. Lablache. Mr. Willy, celebrated Quartet for four violins, will be executed by Sainton, Blagrove, Willy and Patey; and Corelli's Trio, by Lindley, Lucas and Howell. Beethoven's Symphony in D, and Weber's "Oberon" overture, will be conducted by Costa. A great vocal and instrumental treat may be anticipated from the above array of talent; and, to crown the whole, Bach's Concerto, for three pianofortes, will be played by Mrs. Anderson, Mr. Benedict, and Sternbale Bennett.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

The appearance of Gardoni at this theatre, on the opening night, which we noticed last week, brilliantly successful as was his début, conveyed but an inadequate idea of this artist's resources. Now that we have heard him twice again, we can plainly perceive that, on that occasion timidity had crippled the young tenor's resources. He then gave us no idea of the impassioned feeling, and the dramatic power of which he was capable, while his fine voice had not nearly the fulness or the force of which he has since shown it to be possessed. He is truly a delightful singer; the total absence of all effort in his performance, the delicate taste, and the true musical feeling with which he is endowed the purity of his style, undisfigured by meretricious ornament—all these qualities strike the listener mightily with renewed force. He never disappoints his auditors; his voice always reproduces the tone it gives true, always clear, always sweet; while its tones modulate to every change of feeling; now soft and tender, now pathetic and impassioned, now indignantly energetic. His range of notes is extensive, and in all parts of it he sings with equal power; but above serious and conscientious modern school of art which never suffers a fioriture to interfere with the dramatic purpose of the music, and which allows none of the clap-traps by which so many artists have been able to extort applause, even in their purpose was to conceal defects. This unornamented style lays a heavy burden on the singer as well as the composer; for, in both cases, deficiencies and faults, if there are any, are exposed without the power to hide them. The office of the critic becomes easy. It is not as a singer alone, however, that Gardoni's genius is remarkable. He is equally excellent as an actor; and, in this latter respect, the "Favorita" is well calculated to display his powers to advantage. The character of Fernando, the young and ardent novice, unused to the deceits of the world, gifted withal with a noble spirit, and with all the indignation of a young and good mind at treachery and wickedness—of character seems to have been written expressly for Gardoni. In look, in manner, in every point, from beginning to end, he sustains the illusion. In the finale of the second act, when he discovers his misfortune, his astonishment, his grief, and, finally, his indignant burst of anger and contempt at the faithless King and his guilty bride, are electrifying

In the commencement of the fine duet of the last act, when he reproaches Leonora with her perfidy, his fine notes come forth with a force and passing power that we have not before heard in any individual effect. We shall be glad to hear Gardoni in another part, because we think the music of the "Favorita," in general, is hardly worthy of him, and it can scarcely afford a test of his grave and simple style of singing. His force lies in its libretto, in which the number of incidents and the rapidity of action keep the attention of the spectator constantly on the alert, and the dramatic situations—of which there are several—give scope for the tragical powers of the artists engaged in it. Besides this, there are some charming morceaux, of which we may mention the "Spirto del ciel," the "Fernando, ah! Fernando," and the Cavatina of Balfour, which, however, owes a great deal to the admirable manner in which it is executed.

The whole of the last act is highly effective. The chorus of monks behind the scenes, which has all the calm correctness and simple dignity of religious chant, at times interrupted and contrasted by the thrilling notes of Sanchioli, with all the wild vehemence of earthly passion, is extremely impressive. Of the last duet we have already spoken, and must repeat our admiration of the perfume of Sanchioli's acting and singing in this act, and, in fact, throughout the whole opera. In spite of all this, however, the music of "La Favorita" will not bear comparison with Donizetti's best operas, and, in our opinion, bears marks of being the production of an overworked brain

One of the great faults of the music of this opera is, that, when the composer has once hold of a good musical phrase, he dwells upon it until it has lost all its charm, and the wearied ear longs for a change. He constantly harps upon the same notes in a manner that is tiresome to the auditor, and must be most fatiguing for the singer, besides depriving him of the power of exhibiting the resources of his voice or of his musical taste.

On Tuesday we had to regret the absence of Superchi, whose part, that of the King, was taken at short notice by Signor Belart, who, under the circumstances, acquitted himself of his difficult task very creditably. Bouché, the new bass, gains much on our good opinion. His voice is exceedingly full and powerful, and he is a most energetic actor. Time and space are wanting to us to dilate upon the admirable and really surprising drilling of the chorusses and orchestra, which work together excellently

The pretty ballet of "Corsita" maintains its first success, and the young débutantes, Rosati and Marie Taglioni, daily improving in confidence and aplomb, daily obtain a greater portion of applause

An assemblage unprecedented in number and rank, even in the annals of this great and fashionable rendezvous of the beau monde, took place on Thursday for the benefit of the distressed Scotch and Irish. The charitable and truly noble effort of the fair committee of ladies of whom the Marchionesses of Ailesbury and Clanricarde, Countesses of Cheverill and Wicklow, and Viscountess Palmerston, were the leaders, needed Such a scene no Theatre or Kingdom in the universe could offer as was presented when the curtain rose for the singing of the National Anthem all adding to this tribute of charity We subjoin, with a list of the principal personages present, a copy of the lyrical ode composed for the occasion, and set to music by Fugni.

Her Majesty the Queen, and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Queen Adelaide, the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Gloucester, Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, Duchess of Inverness, Duchess of Sutherland, Duchess of Hamilton, Marchioness of Lansdowne, Marchioness of Ailesbury, Marchioness of Clanricarde, Marchioness of Londonderry, Countess of Jersey, Countess of Granville, Countess of Blessington, Earl of Munster, Viscountess Granville, Lord Saye and Sele, Lady Charlotte Egerton, Lady Fitzroy Kelly, Lady Anne Duff, Lady Monck, his Excellency Prince Callimaki, his Excellency Baron de Brunnow, Conde Montemolin, Their Excellencies Count Dietrichstein, Baron de Hügel, Baron de Bunsi, Baron Rehausen; Lady Charlotte Guest, Lady Anne Beckett, Sir Ralph Howard, Sir George Armitage, Hubert de Burgh, Esq., W. A. Mackinnon, Esq., M P, Brereton Trelawny, Esq., John Sanford, Esq., R. W. Packe, Esq., Mrs. Matheson, Mrs. Wiscombe, The Chisholm, Lady Fitzroy Somerset, Mrs. Hotchkiss, Marquis Napoleon, Lord Eglinton, Lady E. Bruce, Sir A. Macdonald, Lady Cadogan, Count Reventlow, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Lady Howden, Lady Montefiore, Baron Brunow, Lord Harry Vane, Mrs. Reid, Baroness Rothschild, Marquis Sligo, Hon. G. Bancroft, Count St. Aubaire, Lord Foley, Earl of Lonsdale, Count Koudriaffsky, C. Barry Baldwin, Duchess of Leinster, Mrs. Marjoribanks, Lady Monson, Lady Flint, Lady Clay, Baron de Cetto, Lord J. Stewart, Countess of Granville, Countess of Minto, Marquis of Lisboa, Visconte de la Bellmaye, Baron Pasquier, Major Buckley, Sir John Lubbock, Mrs. Onslow, Baroness French, Captain Hildmay, Captain Vyse, Sir Augustus Foster, Lord Dudley Coutts Stuart, Prince Callimaki, Prince Castelcicala, Esc. Ralli, General Upton, Sir Henry Webb, Captain Munday, Sir A. L. Hay, Earl of Clare, Lord Goodrick, Lord Bandon, Sir J. H. Lowther, Earl of Belfast, Sir J. Shawe, Lord Carzon, Lord Brooke, Lieut.-Col. Bowen.

RECITATIVE.

From earliest age to this our mournful time
Hast thou, O Music, roamed from clime to clime, Raising, smiling, and bedecking still
Thou whisperest heavenly thoughts midst earthly ill

AIR.

Spirit who the heart soothest, | Tell the radiant World around Thee,
Bid the streams of bounty flow! | Humour transports all around Thee!
Summon all thy cheering numbers | Never sought the poor man vainly
In the cause of human woe! | England—of the open hand.

CHORUS.

Hark! The Muse is moving | "Give unto the Poor"—she crieth—
O'er the charmed ground! | "Give unto the sad!" she beseecheth—
Every note, divine, resistless— | High and low! young and old
Murmurs in its golden round. | Give in tears, in food, in gold!
| All who love the Muses' Voice,
| Give and bid a land rejoice.

It should be added that, for the above benevolent purpose, Mr Lumley not only lent the house itself, but undertook to defray, at his own cost, whatever expenditure the representation might involve.

LYCEUM.

The Lyceum has produced a new burlesque; and, singular to say, not from the hitherto exhaustless stores of the Countess d'Anois. We are sorry for, and glad of, this. Sorry, because we [illegible] glad, because [illegible] childhood, and believing in the [illegible] connection with the elves of pale logs, and dorrsseements: and glad, because a new vein is opened, which may lead to scores of new subjects, equally ingenious if not equally reverenced. The new piece of "The Enchanted Forest," however, played for the first time at the Lyceum, on Monday evening, and written by Mr. Oxenford, is not a burlesque in the burlesque. It is a playful story of enchantment very gracefully treated, in which, if we miss the hard ludicrous bits of the "Open Sesame," and "Valentine and Orson" school of extravaganzas, we have a neat little story, and unexceptionable illustration of the action of the legend to the purposes of the play, to keep the audience amused throughout its representation. From the stores of the German author, Musæus, Mr. Dance has taken the Proverbs of the three Sisters; and on this story has founded a very entertaining extravaganza. We have only one fault to find with it: it is that it does not embrace the whole of the clever burlesque corps of the Lyceum We miss the usual actor of pathetic, and on occasion broken up old Romeos. We do not find Miss Farebrother, with her glittering dresses and lounging cool nonchalance; and we have not quaint Mr. Turner as some inferior potentate, to be browbeaten and bullied by the actor in chief, as an imp, to go all sorts of possible things. But we have Mr. and Mrs. Keeley, Mr. Wigan and Mr. Meadows, together with Misses Villars, Daly, and Bromley to act; and Misses Laidlaw and Frampton to dance, the latter of whom, in a year or two, is somewhat altered from the tiny child who danced through the garlands in the infantile Pas des Fleurs, of "Cinderella." Nearly all these ladies and gentlemen have a fair share of lively dialogue to deliver, which they make the most of, and, with the effective dancing, smart costumes, and beautiful scenery, the curtain comes down mightily amidst loud applause. The scenery, indeed, by Messrs. Phillips and Hamilton, deserves separate praise. It is all good: but the third scene—"The Garden of Pleasure," is quite a triumph. It is one of the most clever designs we ever saw on any stage. The perspective, and representation of boundless distance, is marvellous. The last two pieces of "The Wayman," and "£500 Reward," are enjoying a merry existence, which promises also to be a prolonged one.

OLYMPIC.

Mr. George Wild, who was for three or four years lessee of this theatre before it endeavoured to take to legitimacy, has returned to its boards, having, as the bill interm us, been compelled to postpone his provincial engagements, owing to the unfortunate loss of the wardrobe on board the Sirius steamer, which our readers may remember was wrecked a month ago. He re-appeared on Monday evening in Mr. Leman Rede's drama of "Our Village," and was very warmly received by his former admirers. A lady, Miss Fanny Williams, stated in the theatre to be Mrs. Wild, made her début before a London audience on the same evening; and was perfectly successful. She will prove a very useful addition to the company. Having come off from the wreck of the Sirius with Mdlle Lebart formerly played at this theatre. A "dancing duet," by the lady and gentleman, was vociferously encored. Mrs. R. Gordon, a lady of whom we have once or twice had occasion to speak in favourable terms, played also in the drama. The house was well attended, but not crowded.

FRENCH PLAYS

Will first made his first appearance this season on Monday, in the drama of "Paul le Rouge," of which we had occasion to speak favourably last year, and was heartily welcomed by the numerous audience. We, however, the drama of "La Duchesse de la Nuit" was played, in which we were introduced to an [illegible] new to this country, Mademoiselle Farguel, who, by her finished and delicate acting, at once established herself as a favourite. Her pure tones are rather pasté, but we perceive that some novelties are announced, in which the celebrated Alcide Tousez will appear, in conjunction with Monsieur Lafont and Mademoiselle Farguell. Such a combination cannot fail to attract good house-

The new [illegible] produced at the ADELPHI is Mr. Buckstone's, which he called "The Flowers of the Forest." [illegible] Messrs. Wright, O Smith, and Paul Bedford, Madame Celeste, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, and Miss Woolgar. The representation has, we believe, been delayed by the severe indisposition of the last named actress. She is, however, recovering.

THE WEATHER.

The temperature during the first five days of the week has been unusually high, with cloudy and gloomy weather: and of the last two days has been rather low, with fine and clear weather. On Thursday, Feb. 18, the wind blew strongly from the S.W.; and about five, A.M., the wind began with great strength, amounting to a gale. The temperature during the day rose to 50°, and the average temperature of the whole day was as high as 51°, being higher than any day since 1846, Nov. 29. On Friday, the average temperature was 41°, being 10° less than on the preceding day. On Saturday, the average temperature was 47.3°. On Sunday, it was 46.6°. Monday was an excessively gloomy day, the air being saturated with moisture all day long, and so much so as to prevent any influence of the sun being felt during the day, and also to prevent any loss of heat from the earth at night; the reading of the thermometer between midnight and midnight only varying 1.8°, in about five, A.M., the wind began with great strength, amounting to a gale. The temperature during the day rose to 50°, and the average temperature of the whole day was as high as 51°, being higher than any day since 1846, Nov. 29. On Friday, the average temperature was 41°, being 10° less than on the preceding day. On Saturday, the average temperature was 47.3°. On Sunday, it was 46.6°. Monday was an excessively gloomy day, the air being saturated with moisture all day long,

ILLUSTRATED EDITION.—COMPLETE.

THE NEW TESTAMENT

OF OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST:

ACCORDING TO THE AUTHORISED VERSION

With upwards of SIXTY ILLUSTRATIONS by KENNY MEADOWS, assisted by other Eminent Artists: and NOTES HISTORICAL and DESCRIPTIVE: with a Large Copperplate MAP of the HOLY LAND.

London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. Sold by all Booksellers.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ONLY!

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1847.

EXCEPT the Financial Statement, there has not been much Parliamentary business of importance. The Irish measures progress rapidly; the discussions are chiefly remarkable for the severity with which the Irish Landlords are spoken of by all parties. Why the people have sunk into their present condition is the question asked on every side, as earnestly as if famine and destitution were novelties in Ireland. They have been held up to the eyes of England by writers and travellers for the last fifty years; the present calamity itself has been distinctly predicted; yet nothing was done. All our activity has been wasted on party and religious quarrels, during which the people sank deeper and deeper into misery. In the middle of the last century, Chesterfield, with his cold worldly spirit, that knew neither zeal nor sincerity, saw deeper into the real evil, than the honest enthusiasts who gathered round him, with the old cries of persecution towards their Catholic fellow-citizens. "You have more to fear," said he, "from poverty than the Pope." He was right; the Pope is powerless; he is weak, even in his own dominions; but poverty has continued from generation to generation, from the time of that polished Earl; in our own day, it has deepened into actual destitution, and, at this hour, famine is destroying our fellow-men by thousands, and draining England of its wealth by millions. We now think of doing what we ought to have done long ago, and begin to enquire into the actual state of Ireland, for the first time, with a real sense of how close an interest we have in its welfare; it was most truly said by Mr. Hume, that we must either raise Ireland up to our level, or Ireland will drag England down to hers.

The Irish Landlords protest against the obloquy to which they are exposed; and with some justice. The English Legislature must share the blame. It made the Irish Proprietors its favourites—gave them unusual powers, spoiled them by pampering and "protecting" them, and now that the country is endangered, Parliament must take some of the censure also. As long as misery was silent and died without putting the Exchequer to expence, Ireland was left to struggle on as it could: it is the cost that now rouses us. Relying too much on their influence in the Legislature the Landlords have run the race of human existence too close: by driving the peasantry down to diet on potatoes they have left nothing—that could bind them—between them and the frowns of the Exchequer; still worse to bear are the execrations of those by whom that Exchequer is filled. The spirit now rising in England, which is beginning to exhibit itself in public meetings, will be fatal to the supremacy of the Landlords in Ireland: a Poor-Law will as surely attach a portion of their incomes as to-morrow's sun will rise.

Mr. Thomas Duncombe has this week renewed his statements of the cruelty with which convicts have been treated on board the hulks at Woolwich. He is positive on the subject, and pledges himself to prove all his charges. As he is rarely misled in such matters, and has generally established his case on former occasions, perhaps it would have been as well if the Home Secretary had granted him a Committee of Inquiry. If he succeeded, the officials concerned would have deserved punishment; if he failed, the discredit of taking up a bad cause, and becoming a mere "grievance monger," would have recoiled upon himself with damaging effect. We have often been surprised at the haste with which all Home Secretaries place themselves between Government employés and inquiry, since it has so often turned out that the chivalry of the defence was very ill deserved.

The bill for repealing the obsolete and disused statutes affecting Roman Catholics was carried, on Wednesday, by the very slender majority of three. The debate did not exhibit any novelty. Mr Watson, Mr. Macaulay, and Sir Robert Inglis, all repeated the speeches they have made on former occasions.

The proceedings of the Cambridge election of its Chancellor, and the "great night" at Her Majesty's Theatre, for the benefit of the Irish Distress, both combined on Thursday to lighten the business of Parliament; a few returns moved for and granted, and some unimportant bills discussed, made up the whole of it. The only feature of the evening was a notice from Mr. Plumptre of a motion for an address to the Crown, praying for the appointment of a Day of General Fast and Humiliation for the Famine in Ireland. Very various are the modes of meeting the same calamity: nearly all the men in Parliament addressed were preparing to "feast" their ears with music, and form part of a spectacle that is anything but one of humiliation; and all on account of the same visitation the Famine!

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

THE CHANCELLORSHIP OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

His Royal Highness Prince Albert has declined to accede to the requisition from certain members of the Senate, praying that his Royal Highness would allow himself to be put in nomination for the office of Chancellor, vacant by the decease of the Duke of Northumberland. The following is the answer addressed by his Royal Highness to the deputation, who were the bearers of the requisition:—

The expressions of the wish upon the part of so numerous and influential a portion of the Senate of the University of Cambridge [illegible] so many eminent [illegible] a few myself to be proposed for election [illegible] ciety, cannot be otherwise than highly [illegible] feelings. Did it not appear from the proceedings entered into by others [illegible] not there does not exist that degree of unanimity which alone would leave me at liberty to consent to be put in nomination, I should have felt both the greatest pleasure and pride in according to the desire expressed in this address, and so personally connecting myself with your ancient and renowned seat of learning.

Buckingham Palace, February 20.

Notwithstanding the decision of Prince Albert, certain members of the Senate determined to put His Royal Highness in nomination, in opposition to the Earl of Powis. The consequence was that a poll was taken, which commenced on Thursday.

We are indebted to the Secretary of the Eastern Counties Railway for the following report of the close of the poll on Thursday, received by electric telegraph, at 5 o'clock, P.M.

Prince Albert	618
Earl Powis	501
Majority for Prince Albert	—17
FIVE O'CLOCK. The numbers, at five o'clock yesterday (Friday), were:—
Prince Albert	828
Earl Powis	763
Majority for Prince Albert	—65

The poll was then closed till eight o'clock, when the polling was resumed till nine

THE POLL AT NINE O'CLOCK

At the close of the poll at nine o'clock last night, the numbers were

Prince Albert	871
Earl Powis	789
Majority for Prince Albert	86

This account of the numbers was received by the electric telegraph.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT.—The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the Destitute Persons Relief (Ireland) Bill. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Minto, and Lord Campbell.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Lord STANLEY rose to inquire what course her Majesty's Government intends to pursue with respect to the public business of the session. He thought it very desirable that some bills might be originated in their Lordships' House; for instance, such a measure as that relating to the sanatory condition of the people. He trusted the noble Marquis would state whether it was the intention of the Government to introduce any, and what measures before Easter, and also whether it was likely that any important business would be sent up from the other House before that period

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said, that more business had been done since the commencement of the present session, than in the corresponding period of any other session. Five important bills had been already passed, whereas during the same period last year only one was passed. The Irish measures which had been deferred in the other House, would be proceeded with on the 8th of March, and no unnecessary delay would take place in pressing them forward. He might remind their Lordships that notice had been given that a bill to enable persons to sell their estates, for the purpose of discharging their incumbrances, would shortly be laid on the table. It was also intended, at an early period, to introduce measures relating to the penal law, and the improvement of prisons, and the reformation of offenders.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

NEW MEMBER.—Mr. MONAHAN (Solicitor-General for Ireland) took the oaths and his seat for the town of Galway

DRAINAGE.—Sir G. GREY gave notice that on Monday next he should move for leave to bring in a bill relating to drainage in England and Wales.

ENLISTMENT.—Mr. F. MAULE gave notice that on Monday next he should bring in a bill regulating and limiting enlistment in the army. (Hear, hear.)

Some conversation then took place as to the measures to be proceeded with by the Government, in the course of which, Lord J. RUSSELL said he hoped, in the course of that evening to lay on the table a bill for the better administration of the Poor Law in Ireland, and he should proceed with the other Irish bills in the order in which they stood on the paper.

FIRES AND LOSS OF LIVES.—On Thursday morning, a fire, by which one life was lost, occurred at No. 19, Fox and Knot-court, Snow-hill. The fire was eventually extinguished, but not until a female child was burned as black as a coal. She was taken to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, where she lingered till four in the afternoon, when death terminated her sufferings. About half-past three o'clock on Thursday afternoon, a fire broke out at No. 19, Holliday-yard, Creed-lane, Ludgate-hill, which was also attended with loss of life. As soon as the fire was extinguished, the firemen beheld a most distressing scene. Upon the floor-ing where the flames had evidently burned most fiercely, was lying the body of a female child, about five years old, the daughter of Mr. Robson, most frightfully burned. An assistant of Mr. Baker, surgeon, of Wardrobe-place, attended, and pronounced life extinct. The child, it appears, had been left alone whilst the mother was out at work.

BURKING HORSES.—At the Essex adjourned quarter sessions at the Shire Hall, Chelmsford, on Thursday, Edward Bentley, known as a knackerman in the county, was indicted for killing, by means of suffocation, a gelding, the property of Mr. Thomas Stock, a respectable farmer, living at East Hanningfield, a small village a few miles from Chelmsford. Since the prisoner's commitment it has been satisfactorily ascertained that he has been carrying on the atrocious system for a considerable time. He was in the habit of buying dead horses for the London market, and in no less than twenty-four instances has he been known to be the first to call and eventually buy dead cattle, which up to their death had been in a fine and healthy condition. Many of them were of a valuable description; and the mode he adopted to destroy them was to choke up the nostrils with hay-bands, and firmly tie up their jaws with ropes. The poor things would fall to the ground from exhaustion, and, on their expiring, he would remove the hay and rope, and then call upon the owner to buy them. The Jury found the prisoner Guilty, and the Court sentenced him to transportation for fifteen years.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

A mysterious transaction has taken place with regard to the Epoque. On one day it ceased to appear, the paper having been sold for £2000 to M. Emile Girardin, of the Presse, with which paper the Epoque was said to have been amalgamated. That sale, however, it is said, was not sanctioned by the general body of proprietors of the Epoque, who resuscitated the journal the day after it had been suppressed. The affair is about to come before the tribunals, when some curious disclosures are expected

SWITZERLAND

A letter from Zurich, Feb. 21, contains the following: "On the 15th inst., some merchants of Tesino having purchased all the corn in the market at Varese, on the frontier of Austria and Sardinia, the people became discontented, and began to hoot and assault the Swiss merchants. They sought refuge in a house, where they remained for some time; but when they again made their appearance, in order to take possession of their purchases, the tumult recommenced, and a fearful scene ensued. Stones were thrown, and similar scenes took place at Gabirate and Sarone. Tranquility was at length restored by the interference of the armed force, and several arrests were made. Two day-labourers, a body of peasants, to the number of 2000, entered the corn magazines at Sexto Calendo, and forced the owners to sell them corn at their own price. They were afterwards dispersed by the gendarmerie, and had two of their number killed, and several wounded. According to the last accounts from Milan, the exportation of grain was strictly prohibited."

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

THE COMMERCIAL LAW OF FRANCE.

A CASE was tried in the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH, on Tuesday, which involved two important questions connected with the commercial law of France. It was that of Bordier v. Barnett and others, and was an action on a bill of exchange, under the following circumstances:—Messrs. Barnett and Co. held the bill, which was for a small amount, and endorsed it to Mr. Bordier, the plaintiff, who transmitted it to Boyer and Co., at Paris, and they again endorsed it to M. Gilbère, at Calais. A great number of endorsements having been made on the bill, a copy of it was annexed to it, and the two, according to the custom with foreign bills, were treated as one instrument. The bill became due on the 26th of February, 1844, and, being presented, was dishonoured. The defendants, however, did not receive notice of dishonour till the 26th of March following. They now refused payment upon two grounds—first, that the notice of dishonour had not been made within reasonable time; secondly, that the protest was a nullity, not having set forth correctly the endorsements on the bill. The questions in dispute being entirely dependent on the state of the French law, were submitted to the Jury as matters of fact.

The Jury, without retiring to consult, returned a verdict for the defendants on both the points raised before them.

VERDICT OF MANSLAUGHTER AGAINST A MEDICAL MAN.

A long inquiry has taken place at the Wheat Sheaf, Camden Town, before Mr. Wakley, and a jury into the circumstances attending the death of a Miss Sarah Colyer, aged 22, which was alleged to have been caused by the effects of bitter almond water prescribed by Dr. Cronin. Evidence was given to show that the prescription for the mixture ordered comprised no strong a dose of prussic acid. Dr. Cronin, in his defence, said he had the highest authorities for using the bitter almond water in his prescription; and in support of his statement referred to Dr. Christian's work on poisons, Dr. Thompson's "New Edinburgh Pharmacopœia," Professor Brande, and the "London Pharmaceutical Journal." He declared if physicians were to be bound by the "British Pharmacopœia," and nothing else, no improvement could ever take place in the science of medicine. The Coroner told the Jury that if they believed the deceased had died from the effects of the medicine, and that it had been prescribed without due and proper care, it would be their duty to find a verdict of Manslaughter against Mr. Cronin. The Jury returned that verdict, and Dr. Cronin was committed for trial.

PRIVILEGES OF THE LORD MAYOR'S COURT.—An important decision was given by the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH, on Thursday, in regard to the powers of the Lord Mayor's Court. The case was that of "The Queen v. the Lord Mayor of London." It was a mandamus, calling on the Lord Mayor of London to show cause why Mr. Ashurst, a solicitor and attorney of the superior Courts of Westminster, should not be admitted to practise in the Lord Mayor's Court. The Court on carefully looking over the Act, was of opinion that the Lord Mayor's Court was an inferior Court, and came under the operation of the Act, and if no rell was duly filed, the Court should be provided with one. The Court was, therefore, of opinion that no sufficient answer had been made to the mandamus, and the peremptory must, therefore, be for the Crown RECOVERY OF DEPOSITS.—In the Court of EXCHEQUER, on Thursday, a case was tried, Clark v. Chaplin, to recover £100 paid as a deposit on twenty shares in the London and Westminster Water Company, a scheme which had been abandoned. The Jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff, for the full amount.

THE DORKING MUSICAL INSTITUTION gave a Vocal and Instrumental Concert, in the Assembly Room of the Red Lion Inn, on Tuesday evening. The company was very numerous, and the performances of the Dorking amateurs very successful. At the close of the evening, Lady Elizabeth Wathen, with her characteristic liberality, (her Ladyship not being able to attend the Concert,) sent a handsome present to the Institution

TO MAKE A SLOW COUNTRY SUPPER.—Take, of best bloater, a Congou, half a pound; Adam's water, a pint; fresh butter, half a pound; mixed biscuits, six penny worth; a plate of buns; one bottle of Marsala, diluted with water, to the number of the guests; one dish of sandwiches; two tiles, a lantern, and a pair of patties; five queer head-dresses; and fourteen dreary people. Simmer gently, in a small room, badly lighted, and garnish with an old piano, out of tune. Man in the Moon, No. III.

THE PRESS AND THE POOR-LAW COMMISSIONERS.—The Select Committee, appointed to inquire into the existing Law of Settlement, and the operation of the Poor Re-moval Act, met on Tuesday, but they have resolved to keep their proceedings secret. The reporter of the Times states that he was not allowed to be present, and our contemporary seems to be of opinion that the motive for the exclusion of the press is to prevent the disclosure of awkward "sayings and doings" of the Poor Law Commissioners.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO OSBORNE HOUSE.—Wednesday next, the 3rd of March, is the day at present fixed for her Majesty's visit to Osborne House. It is under-stood that her Majesty and the Court will remain at Osborne House until the 21st or 22nd of March, and then return to Buckingham Palace, preparatory to the Drawing-room announced to be held on Thursday, the 25th March. The juvenile members of the Royal Family will remain at Osborne House during the absence of their Royal parents in London, it being her Majesty's present intention to return to Osborne House in a day or two after the Drawing-room, and remain there until Easter, when the Court will remove to Windsor Castle for the holidays.

The Queen held a Levee (the second this season) on Wednesday afternoon, at St. James's Palace. The Levee was numerously attended, and the principal knights of the several Orders of Knighthood wore the collars of their respective Orders.

BIRTHDAY OF THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE.—The 73rd anniversary of the birth of His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge was celebrated on Wednesday at Windsor, by the ringing of the bells of St. George's Chapel and the parish church, and the firing of a Royal salute from the Corporation ordnance. A Royal salute was also fired from the Belvedere battery, near Virginia Water

THE DUKE OF DEVONSHIRE.—The Duke of Devonshire has returned to Rome from Naples, and was to leave the former city at the close of this week for Nice. It is expected that the noble Duke will return from the Continent soon after Easter.

IRELAND.

THE PROGRESS OF FAMINE AND FEVER

The following is an extract from a letter of Mr. Richard Notter, a magistrate of the county of Cork, dated Rock Island, Crookhaven, Feb 17. This gentleman lives in the parish of Kilkoe, Crookhaven forms the extreme south-western point of Ireland. It lies nine miles beyond Cape Clear, and comprises within its bounds the Mizenhead, the far famed 'Nettium of Ptolemy.' It is 12 miles in length, by four in breadth, 26 miles from its market town (Skibbereen), and contains a population of over 7,000 persons, whose entire support has hitherto been the potato. Judge, then, of the misery and distress of an entire population suddenly left dependent on foreign food for support. The Government have granted works, but the small rate of wages which the people have been able to earn, although it has, in many instances, supported life, has not allowed them to procure a sufficiency of food, and their strength is now so exhausted, that they are daily becoming a prey to fever, dysentery, and other diseases, and are dropping like the blasted leaves of an October tree. Fever is sweeping away whole families. Entire families are lying crowded together, in their wretched hovels, stretched on a sop of straw, without any covering whatsoever: the dead and the dying lo together; their neighbours will not go near them; all they can be induced to do is to leave a jug of drink at the door of the cabin, and one of the wretched inmates will crawl to take it in; but the instances in which even this is given are scarcely worth naming, for besides the rector of the parish, the curate, the Roman Catholic clergymen, the Dispensary physician, and the Chief Officer of Coast Guard's, there are only five persons to afford the smallest relief to so vast a multitude

In addition to the ordinary details of destitution in Cork, Kerry, Galway, and Mayo, published in the Irish provincial papers, there are accounts from the county of Wexford which represent the famine as making rapid progress in that locality.

Mr. John Corcoran, of Ross, a Poor-Law Guardian, while passing Stone Pound, Wexford, in the execution of his duty, found that three members of a family were dead—the husband, wife, and the mother of the husband, all of whom, he stated, died from destitution. The names are Larkin, and living within half a mile of the Stone Pound

The Cork Examiner contains the following extract of a letter from the Rev. Mr. Mulcahy, of Castlehaven

"To give you some idea, and it is a very faint one, of the sacrifice of human life that has taken place in the district of Castlehaven and Myross, I state with confidence and sorrow that in one fishing hamlet, called Carrigillihi, out of a population of 472 individuals who were alive on the 1st of January, 1847, not less than 87 have been since carried off by starvation. This is a fact I am ready to attest on the solemnity of my oath, before any tribunal in the realm."

The same paper makes the following horrifying statement:—"The graveyards of the country are choked up, and the Queen's highways are dotted with mounds of clay, and the fields full of sepulchral grass, while dozens of bodies are flung in the rags they wore when alive, as dead soldiers are, after a battle."

The Dublin Evening Post contains the following affecting statement from the Rev. J. O'Sullivan, dated Kenmare, Feb. 17th":—

"I am just come in from an unfortunate woman, whose dead child lay beside her for the last two days, three others merely gasping, and, horrible to relate, while in the act of administering the last sacrament to her, a famished cat got up on the bed, and was about to knaw the carcase of the poor infant. The unfortunate husband and another famishing child were drowned in tears on their knees.

"My curate, just come in, tells me he attended a man whose wife died of hunger, and who had, on one side of him lay a girl dead two days, on the other, a child dead since the morning, and he is, by this time, gathered unto them himself.

"A gentleman assured me that he saw pass him, during the last half-hour, two cars, with four coffins on one, and three on the other. Another came to me a few minutes since, to try and make up the price of the coffin for a poor creature who has unburied for the last four days.

"Such a wholesale destruction of human beings was never heard of."

The Rev. R. Traill, D.D., rector and vicar of Schull, in a letter dated "Schull Rectory, Feb. 15th," says—

"At Ardfanard a child is dying and a corpse. Yesterday there were interred in this division of this parish alone, thirty-seven bodies, and we know of seven now lying dead. My parish is verily an Aceldama, a field of death, if not a field of blood. Hunger and disease are doing their fearful work."

Dr. Donovan, the physician to the Skibbereen Dispensary, gives a frightful account of the scenes he witnessed. He says: "Death scenes are now so common, and attract so little attention, that the one I am about to describe would scarcely merit notice, if it were not for the singular feature which it exhibited, in the anxious desire which the patient evinced to have the moment of dissolution arrive. Twenty-two strangers who came into Skibbereen to beg, had taken up their abode in a house in Bridge Town; illness broke out amongst them, and I was sent for to see five who were sick of fever. The appearance of this lazaretto, when a bit of hog deal was lighted, to show me the patients, baffles description. Four bare walls and an old straw roof constituted the habitation, and there was not in it a single pound of straw for bedding; a shower of liquid soot was falling from the thatch, and a fetid fog was rising from the filthy wet floor, contaminated the only clothing of the inmates. I prescribed for my patients, and was about to leave them, when my attention was attracted by a group at the opposite end of the house, who were zealously engaged about an old woman and child that were lying on the ground. 'Doctor,' said one of the party, 'my child is dead, and my mother is going; won't you give her a drink?' 'Oh, thank God, I won't want your drink long,' replied the dying woman, 'for it will soon be all over with me,' and then addressing me, said 'will I live until morning?' I assured her that before an hour she would be transferred to another and I hoped a better world; this assurance seemed to give her the greatest satisfaction, and she exclaimed, 'Well I will be soon out of want and hunger, but won't you get me and the little girl put in the abbey?' I promised to do so, but in the hurry of business forgot my promise, and was somewhat forcibly reminded of my neglect, when, on entering the house some days after, with an artist from the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, I found the bodies in the same spot, and in the same position, for two or five days before I saw them, I suppose. I then renewed my pledge, but the appendages of a coffin was dispensed with. This very day, the 10th of February, I saw three corpses in this same abode of wretchedness, in the rags that when living they were alive enamoured their covering both by day and night for the last six months; and they were this moment removed by a man who has contracted for burying the dead without coffins, at the rate of a shilling a head, and whose cart goes round every morning to collect the bodies."

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—HEALTH OF MR. O'CONNELL.—At the Repeal Association, on Monday, Mr. Steele introduced the subject of Mr. O'Connell's health, and, probably speaking with good authority, said: "Mr. O'Connell was in right good health—true, he was not as young as his son Daniel—nor as strong now, in his 72d year, as he was twenty years ago—but he was as well and as strong as could be expected at his time of life. He then spoke of the Galway election, which he designated as an insult to Ireland, and most inauspicious to the cause of nationality. The Whig Solicitor General had been returned by a majority of four only—a majority obtained by the most disgusting bribery and corruption ever perpetrated." (Hear, hear.) The death of Mr. O'Connell has been reported several times, within the last few weeks, both in London and Dublin. The rumour was received with so much credit in Limerick, that the Limerick Examiner appeared the other day in mourning, and gave a memoir of the hon. and learned gentleman. On the other hand, Mr. F. V. Fitzpatrick has written a letter dated Dublin, Feb. 18, in which he states that Mr. O'Connell's physicians have had several consultations, and that Mr. O'Connell himself has "misgivings" as to the state of his health.

THE ELECTION FOR GALWAY.—The Solicitor-General, Mr. Monahan, was returned by a majority of four. The numbers at the close of the poll were—Monahan, 110; O'Flaherty, 106. The election did not terminate without a riot. The [illegible] began rung in token of rejoicing, the mob collected about the sacred edifice, and demolished all the windows at the west side, and did some damage to the doors. On Sunday morning week, a man of the name of James Donahue, who resides near Moate (county Cavan), rose from his bed while his wife slept, and with a razor nearly severed her head from her body. He is supposed to be insane. He has been committed to gaol. An industrious man, named [illegible]ng, who resided near Belturbet, went to the fair of Ballyconnell to sell a cow, on the 13th inst., and having been observed to return without it, it was supposed he had sold it and had the price by him. He was attacked by three persons armed with stone hammers, used on the public roads. They demanded his money, and on his refusing they beat him with the hammers about the head till they supposed he was dead. The poor man died soon afterwards. The three murderers have been identified by the wife of the deceased, and fully committed for trial. Their names are Philip, Patrick, and Owen Reil[illegible].

FOREIGN CORN PORTS.

ODESSA.—(FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.)

ODESSA.

This flourishing sea-port of Southern Russia lies on the north-west coast of the Black Sea, between the rivers Dneister and Bug. It is, altogether, a modern town: the foundations having been laid so lately as 1792, by order of the Empress Catherine, after the peace of Jassy. It was intended to serve as an entrêpot for the commerce of the Russian dominions on the Black Sea, and has, in a great measure, answered the expectations of its founders. It was declared a free port, in 1817, and the inhabitants exempted from taxation for thirty years; since which period its increase has been extremely rapid. The site is, on the whole, well chosen. There is no river, but it has a fine bay, with sufficient depth of water, almost to the very shore, for the largest men-of-war.

The town is regularly built in the form of an oblong parallelogram, on a declivity sloping towards the sea. The surrounding country is an extensive and fertile plain. The harbour, which is formed by two large moles, and can contain 200 ships, is defended by strong works. The town is well built, mostly of stone; the streets are broad and straight: there are many fine public buildings, as the Russian cathedral, the Protestant church, the admiralty, hospital, custom-house, exchange, theatre, &c.; and there is a fine public garden in the middle of the town.

Among the articles of export from Odessa, corn, especially wheat, occupies, as is generally known, a very high rank; but tallow is, likewise, an important article. The wheat of the Ukraine is exported to Turkey, Italy, France, Spain, and England. Mr. Macculloch, in his valuable "Commercial Dictionary," observes in his details as to the trade of Odessa in 1842, that "the prices of wheat in this place are affected much more by a demand from England than by one from other countries; for the English agent goes into the market with orders in hand which are to be hastily executed, more regard being had to time than to price, in consequence of the fluctuating duty in England. Whereas, those engaged in the regular trade for the Mediterranean, purchase a leisure, and have even supplied the English purchasers from their own stores, securing to themselves an immediate profit."

A letter from Odessa, of the 29th ult., states:—"The trade of Odessa was never more flourishing than in 1846. In the course of that year, 1441 vessels entered our harbour, and 1512 sailed from it. The exports amounted to 22,763,055 effective roubles (91,052,220f.), and the imports to 7,745,047 effective roubles (30,508,462f.), forming, together, a total of 30,508,462 roubles, and showing an increase, as compared with the amount of the preceding year, of 4,318,360 roubles. The imports of 1846 consisted of 5,840,803 effective roubles (25,363,208f.), in merchandise, and 1,904,605 roubles (7,618,420f.) in specie. The wheat exported last year exceeded 2,000,000 tzetwers, representing a value of 15,000,000 of effective roubles (60,000,000f.), the largest quantity of grain ever exported from Odessa in one year. There were still lying at Odessa, on the 1st instant, 725,000 tzetwers of wheat (1,515,250 hectolitres), and 95,000 tzetwers of other grain (198,350 hectolitres), besides 30,000 tzetwers of flax seed."

DANZIG.

DANZIG

Is, next to Petersburg, the most important commercial city in the north of Europe. It lies on the left bank of the western arm of the Vistula, about three miles above its influx into the Baltic. It is a fortress of the first class, and the principal port of Prussia. It was anciently a leading member of the Hanseatic League, and a free city; it is still a place of great commerce, especially in wheat, brought down the Vistula, from Poland, and other corn-producing countries, and shipped from hence to all parts of Europe. Indeed, the exports of wheat are greater than from any other port in the world. The granaries, of enormous dimensions, capable of holding 500,000 quarters of corn, are situated on an island called Speicher Insel. To avoid the risk of fire, no one lives upon it, and lights are never admitted.

The timber trade is also very considerable. There are four sorts of wheat distinguished here; viz., white, high-mixed, mixed, and red, according as the white or red predominates. The quality of Danzig wheat is, for the most part, excellent; for, though small in the berry, and not so heavy as many other sorts, it is remarkably thin-skinned, and yields the finest flour. The white Polish wheat exported from here is the best in the Baltic. The wheat is conveyed by two modes—covered boats, and in open flats: some of the latter are 75 feet long, and 20 broad, with a depth of 2½ feet: they usually contain from 180 to 200 quarters of wheat; they draw from 10 to 12 inches of water, yet they frequently get aground in descending the river.

The town abounds in picturesque old buildings. The finest edifice is the cathedral, built in the 14th century. The Long Market abounds in fine ancient architecture, the most striking of which is the Exchange.

By means of gigantic sluice-gates, the country round three sides can be laid under water, and thus defended from an hostile attack. There are, besides, several strong external forts.

The port of Danzig is Neufahrwasser, at the mouth of the western arm of the Vistula. It is defended by a fort, has a light-house, and an extensive pier at the entrance of the channel.

FUNERAL OF HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.

THE CEREMONIAL AT THE VAULT IN ST. NICHOLAS CHAPEL, WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

VERY phase of death is veiled in impressive solemnity; and the sage has held that its pomp is more terrible than death itself. The passing of a man of high rank and wealth, from the assumed full enjoyment of them to the narrow home of the tomb, never fails to impress the popular mind with its pageantry; and, though we live in times when state ceremonies are generally shorn of their splendour, the public funeral of a great man continues, to this day, to be regarded as a spectacle of interesting solemnity. This feeling has just been strikingly exemplified in the interment of Hugh, Duke of Northumberland, of whom it may be said, that "goodness sanctified his greatness, and greatness supported his goodness." The removal of the body from Alnwick Castle, through a populous district, to Gateshead, was attended with invariable demonstration of respect to the memory of the late Duke: townspeople, tenantry, and house hold, joined in the tribute; the ceremony of corporate form, and the simplicity of village sorrow all attested that his grace was deservedly dear to all classes. In the metropolis, the ties were more remote, and the attractiveness of the spectacle may have been, in part, the effect of death opening the gate of fame. Its principal stages we shall now proceed to detail to the reader.

THE LYING IN STATE.

The remains were conveyed from Gateshead, direct by railway, to London; the train arrived at the Euston-square station early on Saturday morning; and the body was thence removed to Northumberland House.

It had been previously arranged that the ceremony of lying in state should be a private one. The great state dining-room was fitted up for this purpose: the lower portion of the walls, and the whole of the flooring were covered with black cloth; and the former bore a magnificent escutcheon of the armorial shields of Brabant, Lorraine, and Northumberland. In the centre of the room, within an ebony railing, upon trestles, was placed the coffin, nearly covered with a pall, and surmounted by the ducal coronet, and plumes of black ostrich-feathers. Around the coffin were placed eight large altar candles; and the room was otherwise lighted by twenty lamps. The scene had all the stately solemnity of the chamber of death.

But comparatively few persons—the members of the family of the deceased nobleman, and a few private friends—were admitted to this ceremony during Monday.

THE PROCESSION FROM NORTHUMBERLAND HOUSE TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

The hour appointed for the procession to leave was twelve o'clock, but, long before that hour, crowds of persons assembled about Northumberland House, in Trafalgar-square, to witness the pageant; and the principal shops in the neighbourhood were closed.

The noblemen and gentlemen invited to take part in the mournful ceremonial began to arrive at Northumberland House shortly after eleven o'clock.

The hearse and eight mourning coaches, each drawn by six horses, entered the court-yard shortly before eleven o'clock.

At twelve o'clock, the coffin, containing the body, was removed from the State dining-room, and placed in the hearse.

At twenty minutes past twelve, the procession moved in the following order:—

Two Conductors on Horseback.
The High Constable of Westminster.
The Beadles of St. Martin's.
Mr. Jarvis, the Undertaker, on Horseback.

Mute. Mute.
Four Cloakmen. Four Cloakmen.
Eight Horsemen on Horseback, in black cloaks, two and two.
Page. State Lid of Feathers. Page.
Mr. Roberson, of Alnwick.
Herald Painter.
Mute. Mute.
Page. The Ducal Coronet, on a Crimson Velvet Cushion, Page. carried by a Page on Horseback, the Horses caparisoned, and bearing Escutcheons of the Duke's arms
Six Pages. HEARSE. Six Pages.
Carriage and Six,
Containing the Rev. Sir Henry Dukinfield, Bart., Vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields; the Rev. Mr Gifford, Curate; the Rev. Charles Charlton, Minister of Alnwick New Church.
Carriage and Six,
Containing his Grace the Duke of Northumberland, Chief Mourner; his Grace the Duke of Athol; the Right Honourable Lord Louvaine
Carriage and Six,
Containing the Honourable Hugh Percy, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Honourable Admiral Josceline Percy, the Hon. Admiral Wm. Percy, the Hon. Charles Bertie Percy.
Carriage and Six,
Containing the Honourable Captain Henry Maxwell Percy, the Rev. Henry Percy, Lord James Murray
Carriage and Six,
Containing Earl Powis the Honourable Robert Henry Clive, Mr. Mortimer Drummond.
Carriage and Six,
Containing Sir Walter Riddell, Bart., Mr. Hodgson, Q.C., Mr. Blackburn, Mr. Williams.
Carriage and Six,
Containing Mr. Boyle, Mr. Kemp, Mr. Rhoades, Mr. Parsons
Carriage and Six, containing Mourners.

Each coach was attended by four pages.

The eighth mourning coach was succeeded by the carriage of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, the servants wearing their full state liveries, with crape hatbands, &c.

The carriage of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge came next; and was, in turn, succeeded by

The carriage of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester.

Then followed in succession the carriages of the subjoined noblemen and gentlemen:—

The Archbishop of Canterbury, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Sutherland, the Marquis of Northampton, the Marquis Cholmondeley, the Marchioness (Dowager) of Downshire, the Earl of Ilchester, the Earl of Fingall, the Earl of Beverley, the Earl of Arundel and Surrey, the Earl Grey, the Earl of Brownlow, the Countess of Norbury, the Earl of Ripon, the Earl of Falmouth, the Viscount Palmerston, the Viscount Bayne, His Excellency the Belgian Minister, His Excellency the Prussian Minister, Lord Louvaine, Lord James Stuart, Lady Agnes Butler, Lady Elizabeth Fulk, Hon. Robert Clive, Hon Sidney Herbert, Hon. Mrs Sanderson, the Bishop of London, Sir Robert Peel, Sir Walter James, Sir Willoughby Gordon, Sir Augustus Foster, Rev Sir Henry Dukinfield, Mr. Bavon Platt, Mr Alderman Thompson, Major Weymouth, Dr Freeman, Rev J Gifford, Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Hoare, Miss Hoare, Mr. E. Hodgson, Q.C., Mr. Drummond, Mr. T. Hunt

The procession, as will be readily conceived, extended a very great distance; and the hearse had arrived at the western door of the Abbey before the last carriages had fallen into rank at Northumberland House.

THE PROCESSION IN THE ABBEY.

By the courtesy of the Dean of Westminster, a great number of persons were admitted, by tickets, by the northern door of the Abbey, to the nave, and by the opposite door to Poet's Corner, and were thus enabled to witness the ceremonial of the procession. In the nave, the spectators were kept within the side aisles, by a cord extended from the several clusters of columns; and Poet's Corner was inclosed by iron railing; thus leaving the centre of the nave clear for the procession of the mourners, and also leaving clear that part of the southern aisle and transept which lies between the choir and the chapel of St. Nicholas, beneath which chapel the vault of the family of the Percys is situated. The number of persons assembled within the Abbey church was very great; and there were several spectators in the "nunneries," or open galleries above the arches of the nave. The entire arrangements were admirably carried out by Mr. Owen, the High Constable of Westminster.

The Dean, the Rev. Dr. Buckland, the Rev. Mr. Milman, and other prebendaries and minor canons of the Abbey, the choristers, and the various functionaries, assembled at the western end of the nave. At one o'clock, the gates were opened, and the mourners, with those who formed the procession, having alighted from their carriages, entered the church, and the procession advanced up the nave in the following order

The High Constable of Westminster
The Beadle of the Sanctuary
Mr. Jarvis, the Undertaker
Conductors and Attendants.
Six a Lid of Feathers.
Twelve Choristers—two and two.
Sixteen Lay Vicars—two and two.
Four Minor Canons two and two
Two Ushers.

Sixteen Queen's Scholars, four and four. Sixteen Queen's Scholars four and four.
The Head Master of Westminster School.
The Second Master
Cancel Verger
The Canons in residence:—
Rev. J Frere. Rev. Dr. Wordsworth.
Rev. J. Jennings. Rev. E. Repton.
Dean's Verger.
Alms Men The Dean of Westminster. Alms Men
The Coronet and Cushion.
THE BODY,
Covered with a Black Velvet Pall, Ornamented with Escutcheons of his Grace's Arms, and Borne by Twelve Pages.
The Clergymen of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields and of Alnwick followed immediately after the Body.

Immediately after the coffin came the present Duke as chief mourner, the other mourners being his Grace the Duke of Athol, Lord Louvaine, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Hon. Josceline Percy, Admiral the Hon. W. Percy, the Hon. C. B Percy, the Hon. W. M. Percy, the Rev. H. Percy, Lord J. Murray, the Earl of Powis, the Hon. R. H. Clive, Mr. Mortimer Drummond, Sir William Riddell, Messrs. Hodgson, Blackburne, Williams, Boyle, and Kemp; the Rev. Sir H. Duk[illegible] field, Vicar of St. Martin's; the Rev. J. G. Giffard, Curate of St. Martin's, the parish in which Northumberland-house is situated; the Rev. C. Charlton, Minister of Alnwick; Mr. Wentworth, Controller of the Household to the deceased nobleman, and Mr. Mitchell, his valet and confidential servant.

The appearance of the procession was exceedingly impressive; but not until it had advanced half way up the nave was it seen with full effect; then, the cross lights revered all distinct, and the spectacle was complete. The sentences of the burial service, "I am the resurrection and the life," were sung by the whole of the choir, led by Mr. Hobbs; Mr. Turle presiding at the organ. The music, the composition of Dr Crotch, was well executed. On reaching the eastern end of the nave, the procession filed off to the right hand, passing along that portion of the southern aisle which leads to the chapel of St. Nicholas; and here those who were privileged to enter within the gates to the east of Poet's Corner, fell into rank and followed, together with the whole of the clergy of the cathedral present, and the whole of the numerous choir, &c.

THE INTERMENT.

The Procession then advanced along the south aisle of the Choir, through the south transept, and past Poets' Corner, the spectators in the aisle and a good view of the pageant. Its progress then lay past the chapels of St. Benedict and St Edmund, through the Ambulatory, to St. Nicholas' Chapel, at the south-east angle of the church, just previous to its junction with the Chapel of Henry VII.

The Chapel of St. Nicholas is a small hexagonal inclosure, divided from the Ambulatory by an open stone screen, of Gothic design; the entrance is by a small door. The coffin, being taken into the Chapel, was lowered into a broked vault, beneath the flooring or pavement; the mourners followed, and took their places, the Duke of Northumberland being seated in a chair, at the end of the opening of the vault. Meanwhile, the Dean ascended a reading-desk or pulpit, of carved oak, placed on the left of the doorway, dividing the Chapel screen; and the Very Reverend gentleman proceeded to read, with a very clear voice and impressive emphasis, the psalms appointed for the occasion.

The scene within the Chapel, and in the Ambulatory, at this time was very impressive: as the flood of light through the large and lofty windows, showed the mourners grouped around the vault—the Dean in the pulpit, and the crowd of followers, in processional order; whilst, in fine chiaro scuro through an arch of florid Gothic might be seen the steps and richly dight m[illegible]s of Henry the Seventh's Chapel. Here, by the way, were the members of the establishment of the deceased nobleman. In the opposite direction, the long drawn aisle, with its many window in the extreme distance, was an effect of artistic beauty; and, looking between the canopied tombs which flank the chapel of Edward the Confessor, some exquisite blendings of light and shade might be witnessed.

The sublime chapter from the Epistle to the Corinthians—"Now is Christ risen," &c., was read with great feeling by the Rev. Mr. Milman, from a point near the Chapel of St. Benedict. The anthem by Handel, "His body is interred in peace," performed by the organist and the choir. The remainde of the service was performed by the Dean, after which the "Dead March in Saul," closed the whole of the mournful duties of the occasion, and the mourners retired, passing on their return along the nave and entering their carriages at the western door.

The other persons who formed the procession were then admitted from the Am[illegible] into the Chapel, and viewed the coffin in the vault, which is to the left of [illegible]way, not far from the large altar-tomb erected to the father and mother [illegible] is a noble marble monument, designed by Adam, the architect, to the memory of Elizabeth, Duchess of Northumberland, who died in 1776. The sculpture is by [illegible]

The Chapel also contains monuments in memory of the following personages: Philippa, Duchess of York, 1455; Baron Garsey, 1470; Sir Humphrey Stanley, 1503; Duchess of Somerset, 1587; Lady Cecil, 1591; Lady Cafford, 1679; Nicholas Bagenall, 1688; Countess of Beverley, 1812; Marchioness of Winchester: [illegible] heart in an urn; Lady Ross, the Westmoreland family; and, near the doorway is interred (the last remarked) Sir Henry Spelman, the an iquary.

The whole of the arrangements were well designed and carried out. There was no confusion, although a vast concourse of persons were assembled both at the entrances and within the church.

The funeral was conducted by Mr. Jarvis, of the firm of Jarvis and Son, of [illegible] Mr. Jarvis's father officiated at the interment of the first Duke, in 1786.

REMOVAL OF THE REMAINS FROM ALNWICK CASTLE.

(Abridged from the Newcastle Journal.)

The entire arrangements were intrusted to Mr. Thomas Robertson, the Duke's cabinet-maker, at Alnwick; and they were on a scale of splendour suitable to the exalted rank of the illustrious deceased. The body was enclosed within a mahogany shell of exquisite workmanship and French polish; the inside lined with pure white silk, padded and fringed with rich silk-fringe and lace of the same colour, and the shroud of the same rich material. The shell was enclosed in a leaden coffin, and both placed in the outer coffin of oak, covered with rich crimson Genoa silk velvet, and emblazoned with the Duke's armorial bearings, in gold. At the sides and ends of the outer coffin, which was divided into compartments by rows of nails, were eight massive silver handles, each gar[illegible]ded by a ducal coronet, and on the top were the ducal coronet, with the [illegible] and badge of the Garter, and other heraldic achievements. The weight of the coffin and body was about eleven hundred-weight. The arms and supporters of the deceased were engraved on the plate, which bears the following inscription:—

The Most High, Puissant, and Most Noble Pr[illegible] Earl of Northumberland, Earl and Baron Percy, Baron [illegible] Warkworth, and Bamont, Lord Lieutenant [illegible] County of Northumberland, and of the Town and County of [illegible]wn of Newcastle-upon-Tyne and Vice-Admiral of the same; one of the Lords of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, and Governor of the Charterhouse. Knight of the Garter, and Knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter. Born 30th April, 1785; died 11th February, 1847.

The conducting of the body from Alnwick Castle to Northumberland House was under the entire charge of Mr. Kemp, the Duke's Master of the Horse, assisted by Mr Thomas Pretyman, as undertaker. As a mark of respect to the lamented deceased, the principal places of business of the chief tradesmen in Alnwick were partially closed on the melancholy event of his death becoming known, and the respectable dwelling-houses were closed till after the funeral concluded had left the town. There was no public state ceremony at the Castle, and the family circle was limited to the Dowager Duchess, the present Duke and Duchess of Northumberland, and the Bishop of Carlisle. At an early hour on Friday morning, the flag on the principal tower of the Castle was hoisted half mast high, and shortly afterwards the chief inhabitants of the town, and his prince's tradesmen and tenantry, assembled at the Castle, to escort the solemn procession through the streets of Alnwick. Precisely as the Castle clock tolled the appointed hour, the gates were silently opened, and the mournful procession left the Castle-yard.

There were upwards of three hundred of his Grace's tenantry on foot, and about six hundred mounted; and the entire procession extended from the Bondgate Tower to the northern extremity of the suburb of Alnwick, upwards of three-quarters of a mile. The shops were all closed; the bells of the churches and of the Town Hall tolled at intervals. The streets of Alnwick were also [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] namely, from August last till about the conclusion of the next harvest. (Hear, hear.) I think that, under these circumstances, the Committee will not be surprised that the Government resist the demand of the noble Lord opposite (Lord G. Bentinck) for £16,000,000 (hear, hear); and I do not believe that, even if that sum had been advanced, it would have been possible to save a single sixpence of the £10,000,000 obliged to be expended by the Government." (Hear, hear.) After further asserting the sums which the Government was forced to expend for Ireland, the hon. gentleman announced that he could only provide for the expenditure by means [illegible] upon his mind, and induced him to borrow all the money [illegible] that the wiser and more prudent course is at once to borrow the whole of the required money. (Hear, hear.) In doing so, I do not make a permanent addition to the public debt to the whole amount of the money borrowed, because a considerable proportion of it is ultimately to be repaid by the Irish proprietors. (Hear, hear.) With respect to the expenditure on the Public Works, one-half is charged on the property of Ireland, repayable in ten years; and these payments, as they come in, will of course extinguish an equal portion of debt; and the remainder left, being half the whole amount, or £4,000,000 or £5,000,000 is, after all, not a large sum, considering the object for which it will have been advanced, viz., the relief of our suffering fellow-subjects." He next made the important statement that he did not intend to propose additional taxation, at least for this year, the present being an unfortunate time for such a step. The uncertainty in regard to the harvest was another reason. Next session the subject of additional taxation would be forced upon Parliament. In the course of the next session it will become indispensably necessary to deal with the question of the Income Tax. If additional [illegible] were increased in the present year, that tax, at any rate, is one of the sources to which one would naturally look; and, therefore, it would be exceedingly unwise, by dealing with the matter at all this year, to pre-judge the course which Parliament—a new Parliament, perhaps might think it expedient to take on this question. For all these reasons I have thought that, on the whole, it will be the course most prudent for me to attempt to increase taxation at the present year, but, leaving the whole question open for the next year, to provide, in this year, for the interest of the loan which I intend to raise, out of the ordinary revenue of the country. I stated the ordinary revenue of the country for 1847-48, at £52,065,000, and the ordinary expenditure at £51,975,000, leaving a surplus of £480,000. Now, assuming that I borrow £8,000,000, what will the annual interest amount to? Of course, it will be obvious to every one that, at 3 per cent., it would be £240,000; at 3½ per cent., £280,000; and at 4 per cent., £320,000. I entertain no doubt of being able to borrow the required sum at [illegible] per cent.; [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

COLOSSAL GLASS CANDELABRUM FOR IBRAHIM PACHA.

COLOSSAL GLASS CANDELABRUM FOR IBRAHIM PACHA.

One of the most interesting results of the visit of his Highness Ibrahim Pacha to Great Britain, must have been the many splendid specimens of British industrial art which the Royal visitor was enabled to witness. To be fêted by our nobility and great public bodies may have been a very pleasant thing in its turn; but the inspection of our workshops gave the Pacha a much better idea of the vast resources by which this country has attained its present high position among nations.

One of the Pacha's tours of inspection was to Birmingham, where his Highness, while at the factory of Messrs. F. and C. Osler, commissioned those gentlemen to design and manufacture a pair of colossal Candelabra; and, accordingly, Messrs. Osler have produced a truly gorgeous work, in every respect fit, as intended, to correspond with the magnificence of an oriental palace. The material is cut glass; in effect, a vast shaft and base of crystal. One of the pair of candelabra has been exhibited at Messrs. Osler's establishment in Oxford-street. It consists of a lofty column, supporting a glass leaf dish, from which two rows of branches or arms rise, sixteen in number in the lower, and eight in the upper; each provided with a vase shade, and decorated with a prismatic star. This dish is also ornamented with six pendants, each two feet in length. The total height of the candelabrum is seventeen feet, and it weighs upwards of 2066lbs. The column itself is composed of three cylinders, of cut-glass prisms. The lower cylinder is nearly three feet in length, and weighed 1291bs. previous to the process of grinding, &c. The ornamental glass base, which rests on the hexagonal metal plinth is thirty-four inches in diameter, and weighs 155lbs. Such are the colossal dimensions, in which equal ingenuity has been displayed in preserving proportional strength and beauty in the tapering column, and taste in the ornamental accompaniments with which its base and capital are graced.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert has honoured Mr. Osler with a visit to inspect the Candelabrum, which the Prince much admired. The Conde de Montemolin, the Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Northampton, Lord Ashburton, and Sir Robert Peel, have also examined this very beautiful specimen of taste and skill, and have expressed themselves highly delighted with its surpassing splendour.

LÆLIA SUPERBIENS: GORGEOUS LÆLIA.

This truly magnificent plant is now in flower at the Gardens of the Horticultural Society, at Chiswick. It was received by the Society's collector, Mr. Hartweg, who found it growing on oaks, in Guatemala, in 1841; and it has never before flowered in England.

The specimen at Chiswick has nine flower-heads, the largest of which has thirteen flowers; others, ten or twelve on each: and the length of the flower-stem is between six and seven feet. The plant measures more than four feet across; it grows entirely in the air, having no soil of any kind. The petals and sepals are rose-coloured; the colour of the lip is an intensely deep rose, enlivened by rich yellow streaks along the disc and base, where are placed five large somewhat serrated plates.

LÆLIA SUPERBIENS IN FLOWER, AT THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S GARDENS, AT CHISWICK.

The Lælia Superbiens was discovered by Mr. Skinner, in the cooler districts of Guatemala; and it is figured and described in Mr. Bateman's splendid work on the Orchidaceæ of Mexico and Guatemala. Mr. Skinner first found the Lælia in the village of Sumpango, planted by the Indians in front of their doors. Subsequently, Mr. Skinner found it at about twenty leagues due north of the city of Guatemala, in immense quantities. Some of the plants had bulbs twenty-two inches high, with flower-stems four yards in length. It is called by the Comalapa Indians, "Red Flower;" but the Indians who speak Spanish call it "the Wand of Lord San Joseph."

At Chantla, where Mr. Hartweg found this plant, the usual range of the thermometer is but from 55 to 60 degrees. Fortunately for our botanical readers, this Lælia remains for a long time in flower.

STATE SWORD PRESENTED TO GENERAL KALERGI.

SUPERB SWORD PRESENTED TO GENERAL KALERGI.

In November last, the Greek community resident in London entertained General Kalergi right sumptuously at the London Tavern, in honour of his exertions in the cause of the Greek Constitution. (See an Engraving and description of the fête, in No. 239 of the Illustrated London News.) At this festival, it was intended to have presented the General with a magnificent sword; but, from some delay on the part of those intrusted with the design, the testimonial could not be completed in time, and a drawing only of the sword was exhibited to the company. The work has now been perfected by Mr. B. Smith, of Duke-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields; and the splendid testimonial has been presented to General Kalergi, who, we understand, will leave England on Wednesday next. As we have already illustrated the Fest va', we now complete our graphic record by engraving the Testimonial itself, which is a very superb specimen of British art, and is highly creditable to the taste and skill of Mr. Smith's establishment.

The sword and sheath are of exquisite workmanship, and are admirable in point of design, the arabesque decorations being well arranged; the several ornaments flow well into each other, and thereby produce a most harmonious whole; indeed, reminding one of the best works of Cellini. The pommel of the sword is a helmeted head of Minerva; the crest of the helmet being studded with sapphires, rubies, and emeralds; and its visor enamelled blue, and set with diamonds. At the shoulders of the bust, an elegantly flowing scroll ornament blends it with the grip of the sword, which is likewise set with sapphires, rubies, and emeralds. At the cross bar, or guard of the hilt, on one side, is a star of six points, enamelled, set round with diamonds, and having larger diamonds in its corners; on this star is inscribed "3 September, 1843;" and on the reverse is the national medallion. The cross of the hilt is excellently arranged in unison with the ornaments of the grip, and at its ends are a large sapphire and ruby, respectively; smaller jewels adding their colours also to its general beauty. The chain to the hilt is composed of small chains, having in their centre an enamelled star, and large diamonds above and below.

On one side of the scabbard, on an escutcheon of varied outline, enamelled blue, is inscribed in gold Greek characters, "To General Kalergi, the Greeks in London, 9th Nov., 1846:" and on the other side, the words, "Religion, Country, Constitution." Beneath the escutcheon, the decorations of the scabbard are set with sapphires, rubies, and emeralds; and the floral designs are exquisitely arranged and carried out. The chapue is a boldly sculptured dragon, its tail twisted round the scabbard.

The blade of the sword is most elaborately damasked, and inscribed with various devices. On one side is represented St. George overcoming the Dragon; the medallion of the star bearing "3 September, 1843," and "By this vanquish the Enemies of the Constitution." The other side of the blade bears a representation of the Virgin and Child, with tapers on each side of them; and the national medallion, a Greek cross, having on its arms, "To the Heroic Champion of the Country;" and along the blade, "Fight for the Faith and the Country."

The sword belt is decorated with lions' heads, exquisitely sculptured; and the gold tassels to the sword-knot have the national medallion, and the medallion of the star, with their inscriptions elaborately embroidered on them.

The sword has been presented to the General by the Committee, Messrs. Londles, Praughiadi, Geraïpulo, Baïli, Mavrojani, Schilizzi, and Spartali.

Will of the late Viscount Canterbury.—It was only on the 16th inst. that probate of the will of the late Right Hon. Charles Viscount Canterbury passed the seal of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, and was granted to his second son, the Hon. John H. T. Manners Sutton, one of the executors. His Lordship directed, that on the demise of the Viscountess, who survived him only four months, the sum of £20,000, the dividends of which constituted her jointure, should be divided into four parts, his eldest daughter taking first therefrom £1,000, appropriating to his two sons one-fourth each, and the remainder to his youngest daughter. His Lordship also appointed that the sum of £7,500, settled upon him for his life on his first marriage, should be equally divided amongst his two sons and eldest daughter, the issue of that marriage. All other property not specifically given was to be divided into four equal parts between the Viscountess, the two sons, and youngest daughter.

ANCIENT VASE, DISCOVERED IN LINCOLNSHIRE.

THIS Vase was lately discovered in widening the river, near the ruins of Barling's Abbey, situated about six miles eastward of Lincoln. It is of grey pottery, nine inches high, glazed externally and internally, and has a small handle on one side. From the similarity of the floriated cross, and other ornaments upon it, to those upon Anglo-Saxon coins, and to the enrichments of churches of the same date, as well as from the grotesque face upon the neck, this Vase may probably be referred to the Anglo-Saxon period. It is now in the possession of a gentleman in that neighbourhood.

ANCIENT VASE FOUND NEAR LINCOLN.

OPENING OF THE THEATRE HISTORIQUE.

Most of our readers are aware that the privilege of erecting this theatre was obtained by M. Alexandre Dumas, through the Duke de Montpensier, a stanch friend of that distinguished and most prolific writer. A company was formed to build the theatre, and by them the ancient Hotel Foulon, and land whereon it stood, were purchased for £24,000 sterling. For a long time expectation has been on tip-toe in Paris concerning the new theatre, and the most marvellous stories have been circulated concerning the arrangements, fittings, and decorations; almost sufficient, indeed, to ensure disappointment when opened.

The site proved an awkward one, especially as the architect had to provide for the accommodation of two widely different audiences—that of the Boulevard ("that dramatic Acropolis so picturesquely called the Boulevard of Crime"), and that of the most brilliant society of Paris, expected to be patrons of the establishment. What was desired, therefore, was a building so arranged, that the élite of Parisian society might find in it every provision for their comfort without in any way trenching upon that of the ordinary public of the theatres of the Boulevard. To obtain this, the directors associated with M. de Dreux—who had obtained the chief prize for architecture in the Academy of Beaux-Arts, and had been sent to Rome by that body—M. Séchan, an eminent painter of architectural scenery; and committed into their hands the entire direction of the works.

Provision for the inferior audience mentioned appears to have been made by two large amphitheatres, or, as we should term them, galleries, extending behind the second and third tiers of boxes.

The form of the house is that of an ellipse, and differs from most modern theatres in having the transverse axis, like Palladio's theatre at Vicenza, parallel with the scene, that is so far as relates to the principal part of the audience. The longest diameter, from the back of the boxes to the back of the boxes, is about 65 feet; the shorter, to the front of the stage, is 53 feet. The opening of the stage is 36 feet.

It will be observed a large proportion of the audience are brought very close to the stage. The arrangement here adopted has the effect of reducing in appearance the size of the house; but those who have been into it, assert there is no place in it, whether it be in front or at the sides, in the boxes or the amphitheatre, where the whole scene is not distinctly visible.

The front of the boxes is white, with continued garlands of fruit, flowers, and foliage, painted on it. The front of what we should call the dress-circle is a balustrade. The proscenium and curtain are very elegant.

The number of persons the house is said to contain is 2000. Instead of one central chandelier, which would have interfered with the view from the galleries, constructed as they are, there are two, one on each side, by which means inconvenience is avoided.

The frontage on the Boulevard is very small, not more than 26 feet, and gave little opportunity for display. The arrangement of this front is not unlike that of the Adelphi Theatre, although the details are widely different. The caritides on the ground story represent Tragedy and Comedy; the upper groups, supported on brackets, represent, on the right hand, Hamlet and Ophelia, and on the other side the Cid and Chimène. The whole of the sculpture is the work of M. Klagmann, and is said to be well executed.

The total cost of the building and fittings is stated at £32,000.

The theatre was opened on Sunday last, with "La Reine Margot," a drama in five acts, and fifteen tableaux, by MM. Alexandre Dumas and Auguste Maquet. The performance commenced at six o'clock, and did not terminate until three o'clock on Monday morning!—a sitting of nine hours! A crowd of more than ten thousand persons assembled outside the theatre. His Royal Highness the Duke de Montpensier arrived at half-past six, and the performance commenced immediately.

The theatre, we should add, has been variously named:—First, "Montpensier," then "Dumas;" but, it will henceforth be dignified with the distinction of "Historique."

M. ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

THE "quarrels of authors" have furnished the materials of an interesting volume; and the feud which exists between the race who write and the tribe who publish and sell seems to be an undying one. But no quarrel, feud, dispute, or lawsuit, between an author and a publisher ever assumed such a colossal shape, was ever half so intricate, as the procès which M. Alexandre Dumas has just had to sustain with half the newspaper-proprietors of Paris. Five capitalists contending for the exclusive possession of a romance-writer, and the romancer proclaiming himself to all and giving himself to none, is an incident unparalleled in the records of the Press. The seven cities that claimed to be the birth-place of Homer were nothing to it; for the poet was dead, and, with true worldly selfishness, those who starved him sought to derive honour from his fame. But Dumas lives, and feasts, and travels, and hunts lions, and sails in frigates, and builds theatres, and is a guest at the nuptials of Princes, and rides Arabian horses with gorgeous trappings, and fares sumptuously every day, and turns a court of law into a stage, whereon to exhibit stranger effects than ever your common player could dream of. From the contention of his claimants he draws gold in showers, and is, in every worldly attribute, a much more successful man than Homer. True, this same lawsuit has gone against him: your lawyers everywhere are too matter-of-fact to comprehend men of genius; they are for ever tying the wings of the fiery Pegasus. But this check will be nothing; we have full confidence in the powers of Alexandre Dumas to surmount this or any other difficulty. He will rise from his fall stronger than ever. And we speak it seriously; the intellectual energy of Dumas is wonderful; we rate him as one of the most extraordinary men of modern times.

Just as his lawsuit has closed, and his Théâtre Historique is about to open, and the world is bearing a great deal of both, a brief sketch of his career may not be uninteresting.

The father of Alexandre Dumas was the son of a negress of St. Domingo and a Frenchman; he has therefore African blood in his veins, which may account for that tinge of extravagance which sometimes gives so strange a colouring to his works. Having entered the army, his father rose to the rank of General, and had always the reputation of a brave and skilful officer, having served with distinction in the wars of the Revolution, in the armies of the Alps, Egypt, and elsewhere. But, less lucky than many of his comrades, he did not get rich; on his contrary, when he died he left his family in extreme poverty, some regulation of the War Office barring the widow of General Dumas to a pension. Alexandre was born on the 24th June, 1803, at Villers Cotterets, and was very young when the family was thus reduced. His education was of the poorest kind; when, scarcely emerged from boyhood, he was thrown on his own resources for support. In France, Paris is the world; into that world Dumas entered, young, friendless, and with fifty francs to begin with. Let those who are born to wealth, education, and a career mapped out for them, in which it is almost impossible to fail, reflect on all that the above few facts involve.

Few of his father's friends troubled themselves about the lad; one alone befriended him—General Foy. Finding that Dumas wrote a beautiful hand he recommended him to the post of supernumerary clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Duke of Orleans, the present King; his slender salary of £80 was then a fortune to him who afterwards conceived, and, in no slight degree, realised, that gorgeous dream of exhaustless wealth—Monte Christo. For three years Dumas lived the life of an office very different, be it remarked, from official life. He worked two hours a day, and employed his nights in study, thus repairing the defective education of his early years. His first plunge into authorship was made after seeing the performance of our Charles Kemble in Hamlet, in Paris, the impulse was given, and, on the 1st of February, 1829, his first drama, "Henri III.," was played and succeeded. After this came a whole series of plays—"Charles VII," "Christine," "Antony," "Richard Arlington," "Therese," "Angela"—they were all successful! His claim to the authorship of the "Tour de Nesle" is disputed; but it is conceded that he furnished a great part of it. His first romances were "Isabeau de Bavere," "Les Souvenirs d'Antony," "Gabriel Lambert," then came his "Impressions de Voyage," very amusing reading, but, as travels, monstrous fictions, as we can testify from personal knowledge of localities Dumas has invested with the sublimest horrors and perils, but which are really very common-place indeed, and most ignobly safe to pass through: with the greatest efforts we could not extract a danger or an accident out of them.

M. ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

Dumas is fond of travelling; he once proposed to form a company to share the expense of a voyage on the Mediterranean, on a large scale; but the plan only served as matter of endless jokes in the journals. We now enter on his later history. The popularity of the Roman feuilleton seduced him from the theatre, and his "Monte Christo" was immensely popular; he divided the public with Sue and the "Juif Errant." This popularity, which in France is wealth, was the cirgo mali, the cause of his present embarrassments. The temptations that were held out to him by every journal to write for them, were irresistible; at last he bound himself to the task of writing five romances at once, day by day, for as many papers! And this, while he was under all kinds of prior engagements, which have made the recent proceedings exceedingly intricate. But as there is a limit to human strength, even in Dumas, he failed to produce his copy, his daily "tale of tricks;" finding it impossible to fulfil all his engagements, he determined to be at least impartial in breaking them, so he kept none of them, but set off for Spain with the Duc de Montpensier, and from thence passed into Africa, and recreated himself with lion hunting and patronising the Bey of Tunis. The affliction of the journalists may be conceived, and it resulted at last in an action at law, which brought the novelist before the civil tribunal, for breach of engagement.

"The hearing of the process commenced on the 22nd of January, when M. Lacan and M. Langlais, advocates of M. Véron, gérant of the Constitutionnel, and of M. de Girardin, gérant of the Presse, exposed the case of their clients. From their statements, it appeared that, in March 1845, M. Véron and M. de Girardin conceived the idea that it would be advantageous to their journals to secure the exclusive services of M. Alexandre Dumas, and thereby prevent him from enriching other newspapers with his productions. M. Dumas having complied with their views, treaties were drawn up between the respective parties. These treaties, dated March 28 and 30, 1845, set forth that Alexandre Dumas bound himself not to write, during the ensuing five years, more than eighteen volumes of romances per annum, of which nine were for the Presse, and nine for the Constitutionnel. M. Véron and M. de Girardin, on their part, bound themselves to pay the price M. Dumas thought fit to put upon his own works, which was, that each volume, forming about 22 feuilletons, and consisting of 6000 lines (bits of lines being counted as whole lines), should be paid 3500 francs, which made 63,000 francs per annum for the eighteen volumes, or 315,000 francs for the five years. But, as M. Dumas, at the time of signing the treaties, was under other engagements, it was stipulated that he should be at liberty to fulfil them."

These engagements were specified; they were merely to complete eight distinct works. When they were done, Dumas was to belong to the Constitutionnel, and the Presse alone. But Dumas alter ætum—

"Their mortification was extreme to find that in the month of August, 1845, the Siècle announced the publication of a novel, called 'Les Trois Mousquetaires, by the great romancer; that in September a newspaper called Le Soleil (now defunct), advertised the "Edmond de Manilon," from his pen; that in the same month, the Esprit Public advertised a work called 'Andrea del Sarto,' of which he was the author; that on the 29th September the Siècle published a tale called the 'Annonce,' and advertised a work in four volumes, called 'Fabien,' both by him; that the Patrie announced the publication of a romance in two volumes, also by him; and that the Mode advertised a work called 'Elizabeth,' of which he was the reputed parent. All this being in flagrant violation to the treaties that bound him to the Presse and the Constitutionnel."

OPENING OF THE THEATRE HISTORIQUE, AT PARIS.

The engagement was afterwards partially fulfilled by the contribution of four volumes of the "Mémoires d'un Médecin," to the Presse, but it came to a stop at that point. Money had, of course, been advanced by both journals. Altogether, what with engagements, present, past, and future, the disputes of the journals with each other and the booksellers, and both booksellers and journalists with Dumas, the affair was a most intricate piece of business, and worthy of insertion in any new series of the Causes Célèbres, or the Curiosities of Literature. The [illegible] on the 23d of January, M. Dumas defended himself, with all his talent not disproving the proverb describing the sort of clients men have when they are their own lawyers. His defence was beside the point; there were the engagements, and there was the breach of them; no sallies about genius, honour, the friendship of a Prince, or anything else, could get over the hard fact. He made an extraordinary scene, but entirely failed to prove a case, as appears by this decision. It is the same for both journals, but we take the Presse. "It fixes at eight volumes and one-fifth, the quantity of manuscript due from Alexandre Dumas up to the said 11th December, 1845, and accords him a period of eight months and a half, commencing from 1st March next, to clear off that arrear; orders, in consequence, that, within six weeks from the said 1st March next, Alexandre Dumas shall be obliged to remit to Emile de Girardin the manuscript of the first of the volumes of which the Tribunal declares him debtor, that is to say, the continuation of the 'Mémoires d'un Médecin,' and that he shall remit the other volumes from month to month, beginning 15th April next, unless he shall have entirely cleared off the arrear; and in case he shall neglect to make the deliveries within the time aforesaid, condemns him to pay to the said Emile de Girardin the sum of one hundred francs for each day's delay during three months; orders that, in case of non-payment of the said damages, Dumas shall be liable to arrest, when the amount shall have exceeded 3,000 francs; says that there is no ground for deciding relative to the volumes to be furnished from 11th December, 1846, to 1st April, 1847: but orders only that the treaty shall be executed in its form and tenor, except, however, as regards the term of the debt, which is prorogued from 1st April, 1847, to the 1st of July following, the period of the commencement being changed; condemns Alexandre Dumas to pay to Emile de Girardin 3000f. as damages for the delay in the execution of the treaty, with liability to arrest in case of non-payment, but only in six months from this day; condemns Dumas to the expenses of this demand contained in the conclusions of the 11th of December, 1846, including the registration of the present decree taxed by the process; and orders that the cost and signification of the present judgment shall be borne by Dumas."

While the cause was pending, as misfortunes never come alone, Dumas's country mansion at St. Germain en Laye, "consisting of a plantation, a building ornamented with turrets, and a pavilion surrounded with water called the Ile de Monte Christo," was seized for a debt of 2,000 francs, which Dumas had not contracted, it being a "bill" transaction for a friend! The "Ile de Monte Christo" seized for debt! Alas, for the difference between romance and reality. But Dumas has finished his new theatre, and will, no doubt, clear off his engagements with his usual rapidity; whether a novel produced "on compulsion," will be as good as a free offering, is a question for the publishers to settle. And the fully occupied in supplying the exigencies of the dramatic world, and satisfying the offended majesty of the law, we bid him farewell.

The prefixed Portrait is from a Drawing, engraved as a frontispiece to M. Dumas's "Marguerite de Valois," translated in Bogue's "European Library."

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

SIR WILLOUGHBY LAKE, K.C.B.

Admiral Sir Willoughby Lake, who died on the 18th instant, was a distinguished officer of the British navy for nearly sixty years. The gallant Admiral was the second son of Sir James Hunter Lake, Bart., and he entered the service at an early age. He rose through the various grades to the rank of Admiral, being so appointed the 23rd November, 1841. Sir Willoughby was Captain of the Magnificent in Sir Home Popham's squadron, on the north coast of Spain, in 1812; and, during the Peninsular War, commanded a division of seamen and marines, which were landed to co-operate with the guerillas. In some of the skirmishes which ensued, he was twice wounded. In 1812, his able and effective conduct received honourable mention in the Gazette. In 1824, during Lord Melville's administration at the Admiralty, he was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the North American station, and remained in that important capacity until 1834. Sir Willoughby Lake married, in 1793, the daughter of Vice-Admiral John M'Bride. In addition to his half-pay Sir Willoughby had a pension of £300 a year. His death occurred at Blackheath, in his seventy-fifth year.

SHARON TURNER.

This eminent historian was born in London, on the 24th September, 1768. His parents were both natives of Yorkshire, the father having left York at an early age, and settled in the metropolis, where he afterwards married. Sharon, the eldest son of the marriage, received his education in the metropolis, and had intended going to the bar, but was prevented by an impediment in his speech, from which he was afterwards partially recovered. He was, however, a member of the Inner Temple, and, as a solicitor, had a highly-respectable practice. His literary renown commenced in 1799, by the publication of his Anglo-Saxon History, the successive volumes of which appeared between that date and 1805. His other great work, "The Middle Ages," was published between 1814 and 1824. Among his principal productions also were the Sacred History of the World; a Modern History of England; and various poems and essays. He was the first who brought to notice King Alfred's Translations into Saxon of Boethius, in which, comparing it with the original Latin, he found that in parts the King had introduced thoughts and reflections of his own. He likewise brought forward to public notice the then unknown Saxon poem of Beowulf. He was mainly instrumental in carrying through the Copyright Bill, of 1814, and he published a pamphlet on the subject. Mr. Turner had, for many years, suffered from continued ill health: indeed, it was only by the strictest care and abstinence that he preserved his existence so long: he died on the 13th instant, at his residence, Red-Lion-square, in the 79th year of his age: his remains are interred in the cemetery at Norwood.

THE REV J. T. HEWLETT.

This gentleman was a writer of a pleasant vein; his most known productions were "Peter Priggins" and "College Life;" his last work was "Lancet Castle," a tale of the Great Rebellion. Had, however, it to relate that the life of Mr. Hewlett adds another to the too many instances already recorded of the miseries attending an author's career. The death of poor Hewlett occurred amid the most fearful want and woe. At the time an execution was in his house, and a family of nine children surrounded the bed of the penniless and dying man. He was buried at the expense of a Mason Lodge. A subscription has since been opened for the now orphan family, which has at the head of the list the names of the Queen Dowager, the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of Llandaff; this Journal earnestly joins its voice in such a call upon the public. There is, perhaps, no case which more claims the salvation of charity, than that of the young children of a literary man left destitute and helpless by the sudden loss of their father.

WILLIAM COLLINS, R.A.

For a memoir of this exquisite painter, who died on the 17th instant, the reader is referred to No. 168 of the ILLUSTRATED NEWS; suffice it here to say that his death is a national loss. The landscapes of Collins, so thoroughly English, have, as pictures of our rural scenes, scarcely ever been surpassed: the verdant sunny fields, the green and richly shaded lanes, and the quiet calm of the peasantry, stand forth in vivid and beautiful truth upon the canvass of this amiable and admirable artist. During the course of his career, Collins visited Italy, but Italy did not change him; he was an English painter to the last, and he has left a name to be inscribed with those of Wilson and Gainsborough upon the same tablet of fame.

THOMAS SKINNER SURR

The death of this respected gentleman took place on the 15th inst., at Hammersmith, at the advanced age of 77. Mr. Surr was the nephew of Alderman Skinner, who founded at Christ's Hospital, and was, many years since, principal of the Deputy Office in the Bank of England. He married, in early life, Miss [illegible], sister of Sir Richard Phillips. As a novelist, Mr. Surr acquired considerable literary reputation before the appearance of the school of fiction of romance: his most popular work was "A Winter in London," published in 1806, and in which the idiosyncrasy of the heroine was so vividly portrayed as to be instantly identified by the public with the character of a celebrated leader of high fashion; a success far beyond the author's intentions. His other novels were entitled "Consequences;" "Splendid Misery;" "The Magic of Wealth;" and "Russell: or, Our Way in Town." One of Mr. Surr's earliest productions was "Christ's Hospital," a poem, quarto, 1787. He was a generous man, and of a disposition loving to indulge in kindly offices.

SIR JOHN HENRY COTTERELL, BART.

This youthful Baronet, who died, a few days since, at Eton, had enjoyed the title just two years, having succeeded his grandfather, the late Sir John Geers Cotterell, in January, 1845. He was born 20th August, 1830, the elder son of John Henry Cotterell, Esq., by Pyne-Jesse, his wife, eldest daughter of Major-General the Hon. Henry Otway Trevor, brother of Lord Dacre. The original name of the family was Brookes, but it was changed for that of Cotterell, by John Brookes, Esq., of Broadway, county of Worcester, in accordance with the testamentary injunction of his maternal uncle, Thomas Cotterell, Esq. The fine estate of Garnons was acquired by the marriage of Sir John Brookes Cotterell, High Sheriff of Herefordshire, in 1761, with Anne, only daughter and heir of John Geers, Esq. Of this alliance the son and heir was the late Sir John Geers Cotterell, Colonel in the Army, who commanded the Herefordshire Militia from 1796 to 1808, and represented that county in Parliament from 1804 to 1831. He died, as we have already mentioned, in 1845, when the Baronetcy (a title conferred on him for his public services) devolved on his grandson, Sir John Henry Cotterell, the young gentleman whose decease we record. He is succeeded by his brother, now Sir Geers Henry Cotterell, Bart.

The Late Mr. Charles Hooton. In the accounts of the death of this gentleman, it is erroneously stated that he was unmarried; whereas, Mr. Hooton married in 1837; his widow and one child survive him; the latter born in New Orleans

ADVERTISEMENTS.

Her Majesty's Theatre.—Grand Extra Night on Monday next, March 15th, by Special Permission of Her Majesty, when the Performances will commence with the Ballet Divertissement, in which Mdlle. Carlotta Grisi, Mdlle. Fanny Cerrito, Mdlle. Rosati, Mdlle. Castelan, Feggioni, Soare, Nasoto, and Mdlle. Guy Stephan, Signori Franchini, Saporiti, Desplaces, Gardoni, and Gardoni.

The Entertainments in the BALLET DEPARTMENT will comprise the talents of Mdlles. Cerrito, Rosati, Petit Stephan, Blasioni, Honard, Cassan, &c. &c.; MM. Paul Taglioni, Louis D'Or, and Mdlle. Marie Taglioni, with the whole of the Ballet Department

Astley's Royal Amphitheatre.—Open every Evening with its Unequalled Equestrian and Dramatic Entertainments. The Royal Fox Hunt; or, Life's Course of Man and Beast, Scenes of the Circle Brilliant Feats of Horsemanship, &c. &c. Under the Patronage of the Nobility and Gentry, and Royal Family.—In addition to other Attractive Novelties, Mr. BATTY has formed an arrangement for Twenty Nights only with the celebrated Equestrian, Mr. PABLO FANQUE, for his First Appearance in London, with his Highly-trained Steeds, in their Extraordinary Exercises and Feats of Horsemanship, astonishment has ever yet been attempted in any Arena, than some animal the Horse. Mr. PABLO FANQUE, with his Wonderful Steeds, will appear on MONDAY, March 8th. Box-office open from Eleven till Four. Acting and Stage Manager Mr W D Broadfoot

Ethiopian Serenaders.—The inimitable Entertainment given by the celebrated Ethiopian Serenaders, Pell, Harrington, White, Sharwood, and Germon, at the St. James's Theatre, will be repeated every TUESDAY THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Evenings. Doors open at Eight o'Clock, and the WEEKLY MORNING ENTERTAINMENT, which continues to increase in attraction, will take place every MONDAY MORNING during Lent, instead of Wednesday, as hitherto, commencing each day at Half-past Two o'Clock. Places and Tickets may be secured at Mr. MITCHELL'S Library, 33, Old Bond-street; and at the Box-office

Sacred Concerts.—Crosby Hall, Bishopsgate-street. The SIXTH and LAST CONCERT of the SEASON will take place on FRIDAY EVENING, March 26th, when the following Artists will perform:—Miss Dolby, Mrs. Bishop, Mrs. Shakespeare, Miss Poole, Miss Rainforth, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Lawler, Mr. Bodda, Mr. Benson, Mr. Hobbs, Mr. Bennett

Ready on the 15th of March, the Fourth Edition, with Additions, both in Letter-press and Illustrations,

THE ANATOMIST'S VADE-MECUM, a System of Human Anatomy. Fcp. 8vo., cloth, 12s. 6d. By ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., Lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology at the Middlesex Hospital Medical School.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, 8vo., cloth, 8s. 6d.,

ON INDIGESTION and certain BILIOUS DISORDERS connected with it. To which are added, Short Notes on Diet. By G. C. CHILD, M.D., Physician to the Westminster General Dispensary.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, in 8vo., with Plates, price 12s. 6d., accurately coloured 28s.,

ON DISEASES OF THE SKIN. By ERASMUS WILSON, F.R.S., Lecturer on Anatomy and Physiology at the Middlesex Hospital Medical School.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, 8vo., cloth, 12s.,

CHEMISTRY of the FOUR SEASONS—Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter. By THOMAS GRIFFITHS, Professor of Chemistry in the Medical College of St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

"The Volume illustrates, in a simple, popular, and amusing manner, the chemical physiology of plants, and communicates the more important facts of agricultural chemistry in an agreeable manner. The laws and properties of those wonderful and all-pervading agents—heat, light, electricity, galvanism, and magnetism, are appropriately discussed, and their influence on vegetation noticed."—British and Foreign Medical Review.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

Just published, post 8vo., cloth, 5s.,

FRUITS AND FARINACEA THE PROPER FOOD OF MAN; being an Attempt to Prove from History, Anatomy, Physiology, and Chemistry, that the original, natural, and best Diet of Man, is derived from the Vegetable Kingdom. By JOHN SMITH.

"Few persons will read from end to end, as we have done, without receiving impressions that must tend to frequent reflection. We recommend the volume before us as equally curious and useful."—Athenæum.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.

DR. GULLY ON THE WATER CURE.
Just published, 8vo., cloth 7s.,

THE WATER CURE IN CHRONIC DISEASE; an Exposition of the Causes, Progress, and Terminations of various Chronic Diseases of the Digestive Organs, Lungs, Nerves, Limbs and Skin and of their Treatment by Water and the Associated Means.

Just published, 8vo., cloth, 12s.,

TREATISE ON DIET AND REGIMEN. Fourth Edition, much enlarged and [illegible]

Price only 8d., thirty-fifth edition,

ODELL'S SYSTEM OF SHORT-HAND, by which the nature of talking down Sermons, Lectures, Trials, Speeches, &c., may be acquired in a few hours.

DR. MADDOCK on CONSUMPTION, Asthma, Bronchitis, Chronic Cough, and Affections of the Heart—their prevention and remedy.—This interesting work has the character of disinterested integrity in every page. The remedy so suggested may be tried with the greatest ease, safety, and benefit."—Sun Journal. SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row; BALLIERE, 219, Regent-street, and through any town or country Bookseller. Third Edition, price 5s. 6d., with cases and plates.

BEARD'S COLOURED PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS, at 34, PARLIAMENT-STREET, WESTMINSTER;
AND AT [illegible]
"A great improvement has been effected by the patentee."—The Times.

PHOTOGRAPHIC MINIATURES [illegible]
No. 6, [illegible]

[illegible] of an elaborate Mechanism, with the infallible accuracy of expression only attainable by the Photographic process. Licensed by the Patentee.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY. Established Jan. 1, 1819. Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 7th and [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

LONDON and WESTMINSTER BANK.—NOTICE is hereby given, that [illegible] ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of [illegible]
[illegible] of Sowell Walker, Esq., who has been nominated by the Board of Directors in the room of Patrick Robertson, Esq., and Henry Stewart, Esq., M.P. deceased; and to receive the Report of Messrs. Thomas Arkwright, Esq., and David Solomons, Esq., and Sidney Bonanquet, Esq., who go out by rotation, but offer themselves for re-election. The same to make choice of two auditors for the ensuing year, and to elect two additional Directors; to proceed to such election, and for other purposes.
By order of the Directors, Mr. Thomas Arkwright, Mr. David Solomons, Mr. Sidney Bonanquet, Esq., have proposed themselves as such Directors, and have given the necessary notice.
By order of the Board, JAMES WILLIAM GILBART, General Manager.
London, January 23, 1847.
The Transfer Books will be closed from the 15th of February until the 13th of March, to prepare for the dividend.

CONTINENTAL CATTLE STEAM SHIP CONVEYANCE COMPANY.—Registered Provisionally under the Joint Stock Companies Act, 7 and 8 Victoria, cap. [illegible]
Capital, £50,000, in 10 000 Shares of £5 each.
[illegible]
other produce from the Continent, for which purpose it is proposed to build a sufficient number of large well-ventilated vessels, especially constructed for the [illegible] carriage of cattle, and fitted with the screw propeller. The Company is formed by gentlemen interested in promoting the importation of cattle and provisions, who, on account of the great want of proper vessels for that purpose, and the highly remunerative nature of the trade, confidently expect it as a safe and desirable investment. Prospectuses, Form of Application for Shares, and every information, can be obtained of THOMAS MELLARDY, Esq., at the temporary Offices of the Company, No. 16, Mark-lane; and of Messrs. CATTARNS and FRY, Solicitors to the Company, 65, Mark-lane, London.

READ THE WHOLE.
THE LITERARIAN OFFICE, 128, STRAND,
Is established for the purpose of enabling the Public to obtain read-access to the most [illegible] ual kind of Literary Assistance on Every Subject as a Moderate Cost.
The Proprietors, who have made arrangements with Gentlemen of the highest attainments in their respective departments, propose to carry out the object of the Institution on a liberal scale.

THE LEARNED OF ALL PROFESSIONS will find in the LITERARIAN an efficient coadjutor in the Preparation of their Works for the Press, or Verbal Delivery. Under this head may be included the Composition of Lectures, Leading Articles, Pamphlets, Speeches, and Reviews of Books.

TO FOREIGNERS
[illegible] Public out are Orders. By applying at the LITERARIAN [illegible]

TO TRADESMEN AND ADVERTISERS GENERALLY
the Proprietors offer the option of as many modes for promptly procuring, on reasonable terms, Circulars, Hand-bills, and Advertisements worded in a correct and imposing manner.

SERVANTS OF BOTH SEXES, and of every degree, will also reap an advantage by calling at the LITERARIAN OFFICE, where their letters, whether on account of Communications with Friends, Applications for Situations, or relating to any other matter, will be attended to in the most manner and at the lowest possible charge.
Finally, the attention of ALL CLASSES is earnestly directed to the sum of the prompt [illegible] is a Writer needed Letter wanted? Apply at the LITERARIAN is a Secretary or Advertising required? Apply [illegible] is a Speech, a Pamphlet, or a Volume wished [illegible]
In a Speech, a Pamphlet, or a Volume wished [illegible]
Let the LITERARIAN be Consulted in any and every subject connected with Letters and Literature, and the best aid can be had without delay, and at a reasonable expense. Attendance from Ten till Seven Daily.
LITERARIAN OFFICE, 128, STRAND.

WHITE PEPPER, 1½d. per oz.; 2s. per lb.—NEWSOM and SON, Tea Dealers, High-street, Borough, beg to recommend this article to public notice, being from its superior strength and purity, more economical for all purposes than black. In consequence of the large quantities lately imported they are selling it at 1½d. per oz.; and as one ounce is equal to two, or three of black pepper which is so called from the large proportion of dark husks of which it chiefly consists, it is evidently both the best and cheapest for every purpose for which pepper is used.—High-street, Borough.

BED FEATHERS PURIFIED BY STEAM WITH PATENT MACHINERY, whereby they are rendered perfectly sweet and free from dust.

Mixed	.. ..	1s. 9d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose .. 2s 0d. per lb.
Grey Goose ..	.. ..	1s. 4d.	Best Irish White Ditto .. 2s. 6d.
Foreign ditto	.. ..	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto .. .. 3s. 0d.

HEAL and SONS' List of Bedding, containing full particulars of weights, sizes, and prices, sent free by post on application to their Factory, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road

SEALING-WAX FOR ALL CLIMATES.—LEOPOLD AMELANG (late Dowell and Amelang) begs to invite the attention of Merchants, Wholesale Dealers, his numerous Friends, and the Public generally, that he still continues to manufacture every description of Sealing-wax and Wafers upon the principles of the late firm.
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Continuance of those favours he has so liberally experienced.
Observe, 24, Red Lion-street, Clerkenwell.

WINDOW BLINDS.—TYLOR and PACE, General Window-Blind Manufacturers, 3, Queen-street, three doors from Cheapside.

Venetian Blinds per square foot	.. ..	..	5s. 8d.
Holland Roller Blinds	.. ..	..	0 8
Rod and Spring ditto	.. ..	..	0 8
Un on Roller Blinds	.. ..	..	0 4
Perforated Zinc Blinds, in mahogany frames	..	..	1 6
Ditto Wire ditto	ditto	..	1 10
Durable Blinds of Striped Cloth	.. ..	..	1 9

Transparent Blinds, each, 18s., 18s., 24s., 28s., 42s., and upwards.
Detailed lists of prices forwarded on application, post free.

FOUR FIRES FOR ONE PENNY!!! by EDWARDS'S PATENT FIREWOOD. It lights instantly, and saves money, time, and trouble. In 3d. by all respectable oilmen and grocers. Families in the country supplied with 500, delivered to the carrier, on receipt of a post-office order for 10s., payable to Thomas Stevenson, No. 18, Wharf-road, City-road.

SECOND-HAND SILVER.—The Seller or Purchaser may refer [illegible] to T. COX SAVORY & Co., Silversmiths, 47, Cornhill, from Grosvenor-street, [illegible]

SHEFFIELD PLATE FOR THE DINNER TABLE. The Cake-tongs of Prince, with Drawings of Silver-plated Dish Covers, Tea-urns, Candlesticks, and every other requisites for the Dining Table, is Published, and may be had GRATIS, on application, or sent Postage Free to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies.
T. COX SAVORY and CO., 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

SILVER SPOONS and FORKS, 7s. per ounce.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, [illegible] to the Bank, respectfully inform their customers that they have recently finished a few new dies, which, in accordance with the present improved taste, and that they are sold at reduced prices [illegible] in those customary in the trade:

Uxbridge Pattern.		Thistle Pattern.
Strong Silver Tea-spoons	£10 18 0	Strong Silver Tea-spoons	£13 6 0
Ditto Sugar Basin	6 14 0	Ditto Sugar Basin	7 11 0
Ditto Cream-jug	4 10 6	Ditto Cream Ewer	5 9 0
Ditto Coffee-pot	14 10 0	Ditto Coffee-pot	16 17 0
Complete		Complete	£42 12 0

A variety of upwards of 50 Silver Tea and Coffee services may be seen in the Show Rooms, [illegible] with the weights and prices affixed. Also a variety of [illegible] to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, India, or the Colonies. Drawings of silver plate exported [illegible] 6d. per cent.

ORNAMENTAL CLOCKS [illegible] from Paris, an [illegible] NEW CLOCKS, to strike the hours and a few of great merit [illegible] designs are Pastoral and Historical, and in [illegible] each case, and upwards.
T. COX SAVORY and CO., No. 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street), London.

JEWS 24 is SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at [illegible]
[illegible]
On receipt of a Post-office Order payable to John Jones for £4 8s., one will be sent free. Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by Mr. [illegible]

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase these first-rate instruments is at T. TOLKIEN'S, manufacturer, 98, King William-street, London Bridge. H. T., having completed his extensive alterations, begs his friends to view his splendid stock of PIANOS, which is not to be equalled by any maker, and at almost half the price charged by them. If T.'s much-admired pianos, cash price £25, Old Instruments taken in exchange. TOLKIEN, 98, King William-street, London Bridge.

TO PURCHASERS of PIANOFORTES in town, country, or for extreme climates.—Mr. TIERNEY offers to purchasers his opinion and mechanical [illegible] on a Piano of such quality as will render the selection of permanent utility, with [illegible] interest in the opinion of a practical workman, of upwards of twenty-two [illegible]

TORTOISESHELL COMBS.—PROUT, BRUSH and COMB [illegible]

BAKER'S PHEASANTRY, Beaufort-street, King's-road, Chelsea.—By Special Appointment to Her Majesty and H. R. H. Prince Albert. Gold, Silver, White, Pied and Common & Ornamental Pheasants. A Chosen Selection of the late Sir John Sebright Bart's Breeding. A few Seasonable Poultry for Sale. Peafowl, Turkeys, [illegible] and at No. 3, [illegible]

JOHN HARVEY and CO. [illegible] have just received [illegible] of Alsace for 40 years. Their Stock of Shooting, Table Linen, Huckabacks, and Household Linen are all of the best description.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. [illegible] of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street. Sole Inventress of [illegible] the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons understood by every person of the commonest knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most Finished Style, and in the Shortest Possible Time. The same is now taught in [illegible] Establishments exclusively for the Instruction of Ladies. Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms. Paper Models.

TABLE ACCIDENTS [illegible] quested to the NORTH [illegible] CO.'S and S Cord Sewing [illegible] Loaded Companions and [illegible] and fitted [illegible] Nutting Boxes [illegible] Shape Cases, Card Cases, Note and [illegible] beautiful Inkstand, and an infinity of [illegible] to be equally [illegible] and Wholesale only [illegible] Agent in London, Mr. W. Wright, [illegible] and of J. and L. Barbour, Belfast, [illegible] Co., Norwich.

EVERYTHING for the TOILET, at MECHI'S MANUFACTORY, 4, LEADENHALL-STREET.—Superior Hair, Nail, Tooth, Shaving, and [illegible] Brushes C. [illegible] Shaving Soap, various Nail [illegible]

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This elegant preparation, an original formula of the late Dr Gowland, for all the purposes of beautifying the skin, continues to maintain a repute commensurate with its specific properties of [illegible] speedily eradicating every description of [illegible] pleasing by a concentral action upon the skin, as perfectly innocuous as it is agreeable and effectual. [illegible] Sold by [illegible] in White Letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is Genuine.—Prices, 3s. 6d., 5s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s. 6d. and 21s. per Bottle; no other prices.—Offices & Sales Room, 1 Wellington-street, [illegible]

THE FLOWING RINGLETS.—The care of the Hair in [illegible] Children is, by inexperience, confined to mere cleanliness, and in this regard, [illegible] so much injury as that the supposition that neglect in this particular can [illegible] duty. The seeds of strength are in reason to be laid in the nursery, and the [illegible] of the fine flowing ringlets, or bald heads, of after years, are essentially [illegible] OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA, long celebrated for its peculiar and invigorating [illegible] in promoting and restoring the growth of hair, is peculiarly fitted for application [illegible] tender years of infancy and childhood; and no nursery where personal advantages are held in any estimation, should be without it. Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 10s. per Bottle; no other prices.—Offices & Sales, 1 Wellington-street, [illegible]

[illegible] GLOBAL SPECTACLES.—Dr. J. WELLBELOVED NEXT the Great Sale of INDIA, CHINESE, FRENCH, and BRITISH Cutlery, Swiss, Sheffield, Birmingham, Scissors, Sattin Tures, Velvets, Merinoes, Cashmeres, Delaines, Fancy Goods, Cutlery, Linen Handkerchiefs, Shawls, Gloves, Cambric Handkerchiefs, Linen, Stockings, Braces, &c., wholesale, retail, and for exportation. To those Ladies who have not visited the Sale for the last [illegible] it is necessary to state that the progress of Temple Smith's new System of Business renders it imperative that Extensive Alterations and Additions be immediately made to the premises. To prevent the inconvenience to Goods by the operations of demolishing and rebuilding, he is compelled to submit to the sacrifices from of a "Selling Off." The reducing upon fresh new goods, the whole of which have been manufactured within a very few months. Commencing on Monday, and continuing for a fortnight only, at No. 1, Temple-street, Whitefriars, Fleet-street, London.

GREAT SALE OF TABLE LINEN, SHEETING, IRISH LINENS, &c.
Very Superior Irish Linen, 1s. 6d. per yard.
Strong Linen Sheets at 7s. 9d. per pair.
Real Barnsley ditto, without seam, 11s. 6d. ditto.
Fine Holland ditto, ditto, 27s. 6d. ditto.
Linen Huckaback, 8d., 9d., and 10d. per yard.
Fine Damask Table Cloths, 9s. 6d. each.
Larger sizes proportionally cheap.
Damask Table Napkins, 3s. 9d. per dozen.
Fine Irish Cambric Handkerchiefs, from 9s. to 12s. ditto.
Excellent Linen ditto, 3s. 11d. ditto.
Linen Glass Cloth, 4½d. per yard.
Nursery diapers, commencing at 5s. 11d. per piece.
Magnificent Drawing-Curtains, 4s. 11d. for 19 yards.
KING and SHEATH can confidently recommend the above sale to the notice of Families requiring first-rate Linens at about one-third less than the usual Prices.
N.B. Parcels forwarded to any part of the Kingdom.
Parcels above 25 Carriage Free.
[illegible]

DEUTOCHLORIC HATS. JOHNS [illegible] HATTER, [illegible]
[illegible] wards up from the Crown of the Hat, giving free exit to heat and perspiration, and of a [illegible] proved separation, forming a series of small channels in the back part of the leather lining, by which air is admitted [illegible] to the part requiring the following advantages:—the preservation of the amount of air admitted into the crown of the hat, by the opening and closing of the valves as the pleasure of the wearer—the impossibility of an accumulation of heated air and perspiration—its permeability to press around the head—extreme lightness, durability, and, lastly, those acknowledged comforts to all who suffer from headache, or who are in the habit of taking violent exercise.—Job, Son, and Co., 119, Regent-street, London.

TEAS at WHOLESALE PRICES, 2, BUCKLERSBURY CHEAPSIDE.

Good Useful Breakfast Tea	.. ..	..	3s. 0d. to 3s. 4d.
Fine Do. Pekoe Flavoured	.. ..	..	3s. 8d. .. 4s. 0d.
Rich Rose Souchong	.. ..	..	4s. 4d. .. 5s. 0d.
Good Useful Green	.. ..	..	3s. 4d. .. 3s. 8d.
Fine Imperial Gunpowder	.. ..	..	.. 4s. 4d.
Rare fine Young Hyson	.. ..	..	.. 5s. 0d.
Finest Gunpowder	.. ..	..	.. 5s. 8d.

Six pounds of the above delivered free of carriage to any part of England.
MARSHALL and CO., Wholesale Tea Dealers, 2, Bucklersbury, Cheapside.

W. A. SCRIPPS and SON, GENERAL NEWSPAPER [illegible]
[illegible]
LONDON NEWS, and all other London, Provincial, and Foreign Newspapers, with most punctual attention. Advertisements received for Insertion in the 15, South Molton-street, Bond-street.—London, Jan. 14th

WOOD ENGRAVING.—Messrs. G. and E. DALZIEL have [illegible]

CURRALL and SON, importers of COGNAC BRANDY of [illegible]

PURE ST. JULIEN CLARET, 28s. per Dozen; Pints, 18s.; Imported direct by HEDGES and BUTLER, Wine Merchants, &c., 155, Regent-street, can be confidently recommended. Also, some superior Gordon's Golden Sherry, 36s. per [illegible]

TONIC ALE.—This splendid description of Bottled Beer is now in perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar antimalic qualities, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in quart and pint bottles, secured by Bate's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, Stores, No. 1, John's mews, Bedford-row

CHESS.—RULES for PLAYING the GAME of DOUBLE CHESS, for FOUR PLAYERS on ONE BOARD, upon the German Principle, as played at the Palaces, and patronised by most of the Nobility, &c.—THOMAS SHERWIN, Manufacturer, 87, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, publisher of "The New Guide to Chess" by the Author of "Chess Made Easy." Price 1s. 6d.—Splendid Chessmen in Wood, Bone, and Ivory, at remarkably low prices. Box-wood and Cocoa Men in boxes, from 3s. Pickard Boxes ditto, equal to Staunton's, from 5s. 6d. Ivory Men equally low. Clubs and schools supplied at wholesale prices. Elaborately gilt Backgammon Tables, in Morocco and other leathers, adapted for the Drawing-room, or as elegant presents.

LEA and PERRINS' highly-esteemed WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE, for Fish, Roast Meat, Steaks, Chops, Gravies, Game, and Soup, may be obtained universally from the most respectable dealers, every bottle bearing the names of LEA and PERRINS upon the wrapper and label, without which it cannot be genuine.—Sold wholesale, retail, and for exportation, by the Proprietors, Lea and Perrins, 6, Vere-street, Oxford-street; Barclay and Sons, 95, Broad-street, Worcester; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Messrs. Crosse and Blackwell, London; and generally by the principal Dealers in Sauces

HARRIS BROTHERS' MARKING INK, used for marking Linen Silk Muslin &c. This Ink is of a Perfect Black [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

PARIS FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

During the season of Lent, there is naturally some check to galeties, and especially this year, when, the reports of distress constantly reaching our ears, casts a gloom over society in general; and such a feeling has always unfortunately an extensive and baneful influence on trade. Fashion, consequently, is shorn of half her splendours and attractions. The evening parties of Lady Palmerston, and the performances at the Opera, are the réunions which give the greater degree of activity to the Magazins de Modes, and the inventive powers of the fair leaders of fashion. During the past week especially, many have been the preparations for that charitable performance at the Opera House, at which Royalty presided, and all the great of the land made it a point to be present. Every fair habitué of the Opera knows that there the head-dress is the most important portion of the toilette; various, therefore, have been the preparations of this kind, and some species of ornament for the head has been deemed almost indispensable. Wreaths of flowers, or bunches falling on the neck, were the most universally selected, for young ladies, while, for married ladies, petits bords, in velvet and feathers, and little caps in lace or blonde, were very universal. To describe the evening dresses for this season, we must have recourse to those which are preparing for the coming season, and we will select those which promise to obtain most favour.

Tulle and crêpe will still play the most conspicuous part in ball dresses, both these materials being so peculiarly fitted for dancing by their lightness and transparency; but they will no more be worn simply as before, but elaborately trimmed with flowers, embroidery, or ornaments of gold and silver. The leaves of the flowers are in general surrounded with gold, and we may here observe that in most of the wreaths numbers of small sparkling stones are intermixed. Three skirts will be most generally worn, over a slip of taffetas d'Italie. The bodice is made with a very long point, the sleeves covered with tulle and forming bouillons on the arm, and looped up with bows of satin ribbon.

White crape dresses will also be worn with three flounces scolloped; one of the favourite colours will be sea-green, which produces a charming effect by candle light.

Young ladies, in the approaching season, will still wear dresses of tarlatane or organdie, with a thousand different styles of trimming, amongst which, however, flounces, wide tucks, and broad hems predominate. Some dresses of crape and crape lisse have the flounces embroidered with a light galloon of gold or silver. Other dresses are covered with bouillones of tulle, which give an aërial and fragile look to the dress, which resembles a cloud of gauze.

The more antique, the damask, the figured satins, and velvets, are much in favour for evening dresses. The grave magnificence of these dresses harmonizes admirably with diamonds, which are employed in profusion over the front of the bodice. The corsages à la Medicis are worn with long points. The skirts are open at the two sides with bows and agrafes in jewels, in the intervals between which are puffings of tulle.

For morning bonnets the low and closed form, with rounded corners, are still worn. The inside must be ornamented with bouillons of tulle. A feather placed very flat on the bonnet is frequently its only ornament. Now the season is advancing, bonnets of lilac grey or moire satin, wadded and lined with pink or blue, with bows of black velvet next the face, are extremely elegant.

In other respects there is nothing worthy of remark in the morning costume, which remains the same. The tight plain bodies, tight sleeves, with a small white under cuff are still alone worn.

Our Illustration represents two elegant costumes. One consists of a lace head-dress; robe of taffety, d'Italie rose, trimmed with ribbon.

The second costume is a robe of damas Rose, of deep blue, with black satin flowers, and trimmed in front with lace flowers. The corsage is hollowed out so as to show the chemisette.

More costumes are essentially of that Parisian style, which distinguishes the designs of Madame Frederick, of Albemarle-street; the London Correspondent of that beautiful journal, Les Modes Parisiennes.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The sports of the field are on the wane: the chase of the stag and ox will endure for another month; and, during March, steeple-chasing will abound; beyond these, and one or two epicene race-meetings, the catalogue for the next six weeks is a limited one. But, for the sportsman by flood and field—for him who cultivates rural pastimes afloat as well as ashore—the anniversary of St. David is the herald of pleasant hopes. Angling, indeed—the fox-hunting of the gentle art—does not yet invite him to throw for such prizes as "the monarch of the tide," or the speckled trout, that most graceful and agile spirit of our waters; but there's stirring work cut out for the bold fisher, who, nothing daunted by the keen and biting breeze of the young spring morning, takes his stand by lake or river, armed for a passage of skill with that piscatory gladiator, the pike. According to Lord Byron no angler can be a good man: perhaps the poet meant that for a posy of boudoir philosophy; natural philosophy leads to a very different deduction. Your jack is a gentleman that deserves no quarter, for he neither gives quarter nor grants quarters to any of his fellows, and, only we have said the pretty things we have of trouts, as a finny family, we would tell how they eat each other, so they do; and how a friend of ours, a famous angler of St. Boswell's, "from the stomach of trouts of about a pound weight, on two occasions, cut six small trouts, averaging five inches long." Friends these might have been, or, still more shocking, their especial offspring. Yes! it is philanthropy to fish.

Thus premising, and seeing that we are on the eve of the festival of St. David, and that thousands of our courteous readers are in circumstances to take advantage of our hints, we will treat, for the nonce, of trolling, and spinning, and such like contrivances for captivating the jack or pike. Our friends cannot begin too soon: let them be "be up and at them," before the foe can have filled their bellies after the frost. This fish is proverbial for the power of its appetite. Lord Byron thus classes it among the emphatic feeders. Alluding to Don Juan, subsequent to his shipwreck, he says—

> He fell upon whale's'or was offered—like
> A priest, a shark, an alderman, or pike.

As few people fancy trouble merely for its own sake, it will be no small recommendation to pike fishing just now that it is of far more easy achievement at this season than any other. There is no need to set about it as if you were going to a Royal Society conversazione. Of course your tackle is good: all the equipage of sporting is excellent in these days. According to local circumstances will be your order of battle. If you are about to take fish where weeds abound especially, you will find your account to troll with the gorge. The best gorge hook is a small double one, with very sharp barbs, inclining slightly inwards. Let this hook be fastened by a small brass ring to about a foot of gimp. Then—having cut off the tail, and all the fins, except the upper one, of your bait—a live or dead gorge bait—hook on the loop of the gimp to the baiting needle, and insert it at the mouth of the bait, bringing it out at the middle of the fork of the tail. The lead and shank of the hook will thus be hid in the mouth and belly of the bait and only the barbs and points visible. Tie the tail to the gimp with thread. After casting, let the bait sink to the bottom: then draw it to the top of the water and the single fin will set it spinning merrily. When your bait is seized, give out your line liberally, and let your fish gorge before you strike: then he is as fast and firm as you need wish. Use a hardy trolling rod, with large strong rings, and reel of oak cord: no swivel is necessary. You will find pike take best in the morning and evening. . . . . As to the nice points of practice in the art, they are not to be touched by any but the professor—and scarce by him—for we find Ronalds, Younger, and Hofland, great authorities—differing toto Cœlo even upon its first principles. It may be worth while, however, to state that, with all his voracity, the pike is a shy fish, and easily scared—for a time. For this reason, do not abandon a likely spot altogether, because you have no luck at first. Return to it in an hour or so, and the fish your first appearance sent to the bottom is affright, will most probably reward your perseverance. Never troll from a boat, if you can compass it in any other way: far better wade. Snap-fishing, angling with the fly, trimmering, and other fashions of pike fishing prevail later in the year, but, for March, the gorge troll is the true agent of this sport.

TATTERSALL'S.

Monday.—We have nothing fresh to speak of in the proceedings at the Corner. Everything continues dull in the extreme, nor can we discover, in the quotation appended to this brief introduction, a single fluctuation of any consequence. It will be quite enough, therefore, if we give the closing prices:—

LIVERPOOL STEEPLE CHASE.

8 to 1 agst Brunette (t)	15 to 1 agst Red Lancer (t)	15 to 1 agst Culverthorpe (t)
15 to 1 —— Avoca (t)	15 to 1 —— St. Leger	15 to 1 —— Mathew (t)

NEWMARKET HANDICAP.

15 to 1 agst Lyncæus (t)	25 to 1 agst Devil-me-care (t)
15 to 1 agst Sheraton (t)	METROPOLITAN HANDICAP. 25 to 1 agst Pink Bonnet (t)	30 to 1 agst Agnes

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKE

6 to 1 agst Congreham | 300 to 30 agst Old Port and Golightly (t)

CHESTER CUP.

27 to 1 agst Mendicant	40 to 1 agst The Flitch	50 to 1 agst Crim. Con.
25 to 1 —— Antler	50 to 1 —— Intrepid (t)	50 to 1 —— Cawcrush
25 to 1 —— Camera Obscura	50 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes	66 to 1 —— Newscourt (t)
33 to 1 —— Mickey Free	50 to 1 —— Reclaim (t)	66 to 1 —— Golden Bee (t)

DERBY.

7 to 1 agst Van Tromp (t)	33 to 1 agst Red Hart	66 to 1 agst Christopher (t)
10 to 1 —— Epirote (t)	33 to 1 —— Wanota	66 to 1 —— Limestone (t)
12 to 1 —— Planet (t)	40 to 1 —— The Liberator (t)	66 to 1 —— Black Dwarf (t)
20 to 1 —— Gemini	50 to 1 —— Old Port (t)	66 to 1 —— Clarendon (t)
25 to 1 —— Congreham	50 to 1 —— Bingham (t)	66 to 1 —— Will o' the Wisp (t)
33 to 1 —— Horn of Chase (t)

2000 to 100 agst Van Tromp, Reclaim, and Liberator winning the Derby, and Nerissa and Inheritable the Oaks.

OAKS.

6 to 1 agst Farmer's Daughter	8 to 1 agst Clementina	20 to 1 —— Nerissa (t)
	15 to 1 —— Maud (t)

Thursday.—The almost unprecedented flatness of business renders any introductory remarks unnecessary.

LIVERPOOL STEEPLE CHASE.

11 to 2 agst Brunette (t)	10 to 1 agst St. Leger (t)	14 to 1 agst Culverthorpe (t)
3 to 1 —— The Roarer (t)	13 to 1 —— Mathew (t)	15 to 1 —— Pioneer (t)
	20 to 1 agst St. Ruth (t)

NEWMARKET HANDICAP.

9 to 1 agst Footsteel	16 to 1 agst Vanish (t)
15 to 1 —— Lyncæus (t)	20 to 1 —— Discontent (t)

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE HANDICAP.

500 even between Ten and the Field

CHESTER CUP.

20 to 1 agst Mendicant	30 to 1 agst Punch (t)	40 to 1 agst Duke of Richmond
25 to 1 —— Antler		50 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes

DERBY

20 to 1 agst Gemini (t)	33 to 1 agst Wanota	60 to 1 agst Montpensier
33 to 1 —— Horn of Chase (t)	50 to 1 —— Christopher (t)	66 to 1 —— Black Dwarf (t)

200 to 10 agst Kent's lot winning the 2000 Guineas Stake, Derby, and Oaks.

OAKS.

15 to 1 agst Slander (t)

COURSING.—ASHDOWN PARK CLUB MEETING.—Tuesday.

The Cup.—Mr. King's Willing Bee beat Mr. Lawrence's The Libel; Mr. Etwall's Etonian beat Mr. Parkinson's Syringe; Mr. Parkinson's Sedilia beat Mr. Gordon's Camlet; Mr. Gordon's Cockfighter beat Mr. W. Etwall's Wanton; Mr. Goddard's Bracelet beat Mr. King's Wasp; Mr. Etwall's Enford Lass beat Mr. Brookes's Nunc aut Nunquam; Mr. Parkinson's Stockton beat Mr. King's Warrior; Mr. Lawrence's Lightning ran a bye.

The Craven Stakes.—Mr. Parkinson's Sarah Bate beat Mr. Lawrence's Lucy Neal; Mr. Etwall's Eaglet beat Mr. Goddard's Woodpecker.

THE WESTMINSTER IMPROVEMENTS.

At length these oft-projected improvements are commenced. All the houses to be taken in the new street are marked with the letters W. I., at least two feet in length, and in some parts poles are placed to show the direction that will be taken. The Government grant for the purpose is now to be made available, as well as the allocation of a portion of the rates of St. Margaret's and St. John's for a limited period. The line is altered from that first suggested, as the house at the south corner of Tothill-street is the first house to be taken down. The new street will there commence; one of the great objects intended by removing those sinks of vice and iniquity, the low houses in the Almonry, Orchard-street, Duck-lane, New Pye-street, and part of Old Pye-street to Strutton-ground. From thence it crosses over by Wood's Brewery, in Artillery-place, through Palmer's Village, and to the north side of the Westminster Bridewell, terminating at Shaftesbury-terrace, Pimlico.

A part of the Almonry has already been pulled down. One of its most celebrated antiquities was the house wherein Islip, Abbot of Westminster, permitted Caxton to set up his press, about the year 1471; and where he is said to have printed "The Game and Play of the Chesse."

PEST HOUSE, TOTHILL-FIELDS.

"CAXTON'S HOUSE," IN THE ALMONRY.

Another relic likely to be removed by these improvements is the Pest Houses, or "Five Chimneys;" or rather the remains of them, abutting on the Vauxhall-bridge-road. These were used as receptacles for poor creatures afflicted with the pestilence: they were not, however, temporary places, but substantial, red brick structures, built in 1644, or twenty years before the Great Plague. Early in the last century, they were converted into almshouses.

The Society for Improving the Dwellings of the Labouring Classes—(who are building the Model Lodging Houses in St. Giles's, of which we lately gave an account)—have received nearly £5,000 from the Church of England Building Society, to enable them to complete the Model Lodging House.

General Steam Navigation Company.—The half-yearly general meeting of this Corporation was held on Tuesday, at their offices in Lombard-street. The chair was taken by Mr. Wilson. A report from the directors, and a statement of the accounts for the half-year ending the 31st of December last, were read to the proprietors. From these documents it appeared that the affairs of the Company continue to be in the most thriving condition, the last year's profits equalling those of the most successful year of the Company's career. The report having been read, was unanimously adopted by the proprietors, when the usual dividend and bonus were declared, after which the meeting separated, highly gratified with the proceedings of the day.

Affecting Death in the West Indies.—The sudden and affecting death of Mr. Charles Thornton Cunninghame, Lieutenant-Governor of St. Christopher's and of the Leeward Islands, is announced in the last West India papers. It appears that this gentleman had driven in from the country to Basseterre, the seat of Government, in apparently vigorous health and cheerful spirits, to open the newly elected Houses of Legislature. After transacting some business with his private secretary, and despatching a note to invite some officers in a French ship of war just come into port to luncheon at Government-house, he rode down to the mail-office, to meet its letters and a box containing a picture of a much-beloved sister, recently deceased in England. He had stated to more than one person, that his earnest desire to possess the picture was not unmixed with fear as to the effect the sight of it might produce upon him. So strongly had this apprehension fastened itself on his mind, that, on the arrival of the box at Government-house, he sent a servant in quest of a friend who might be with him when the box was opened. Having failed in finding him, he proceeded to open the box. His butler, who was present, reports that he looked at the countenance earnestly, turned pale, whispered a few words to himself, walked hastily up to his own room, was heard almost instantly to fall as he entered it, and his servants following upstairs found him stretched on the floor a corpse. The greatest respect was paid to the memory of Mr. Cunninghame. He assumed the Government of St. Kitt's in May, 1836, and fell a victim, as his physician states, partly "to the exhausting influence of tropical climates on the nervous powers," and partly to the intensity of brotherly affection, in the 36th year of his age.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand aforesaid.—Saturday, February 27, 1847.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 253.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1847. [Sixpence.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE.

AMONG the most important business of the Session is the settlement of the Army and Navy Estimates. It is the weighing our power, and casting up its price; and if any one happens to be under the influence of chivalric and romantic notions of war and warriors, whether on sea or shore, the anatomy of both branches of the service given annually by the Ministers who act for them at the Admiralty and the Horse Guards, will go far to undeceive them. The cold calculations of cost, even to the niceties of pence and farthings—the regulations, checks, and fetters that are visible in every movement—the continual grievances poured in from almost every rank and grade—soon tell how very complete a matter of business all the "pomp, pride, and circumstance" of military display really is. And more than all this, it will teach those who have not reflected on the matter, that neither the soldier's nor the sailor's life is quite what it looks on the surface. There are few professions that are not better paid; none where the toils and dangers are so great; and neglect, apathy, and indifference on the part of the Government have been almost the general rule of treatment both as to men and material.

The general approval given to the Navy Estimates for this year, as proposed by Mr. Ward, of course implies that there are indications of improvement; so there are, but yet we should doubt if the Board of Admiralty is level with the times in any one department it manages. Some of the changes now proposed are so obviously necessary, that the wonder is, not that they are made, but that they have been so long deferred. The Navy, it seems to us, has gone on improving in spite of the Board of Admiralty, rather than in consequence of its supervision. Where it has done most, it seems to have done it badly. No doubt there is some misrepresentation and colouring of facts to be allowed for, but some of the details given by Sir C. Napier, and others, of the mishaps of the Government shipbuilders, are positively ludicrous, did not the cost of them make the matter too serious for trifling. The Commodore's "catalogue of ships" is in its way more remarkable than Homer's; the Admiralty may allude to its experiments, constructive and destructive, with all the complacency of Beau Brummell's valet, when he spoke of a score of starched cravats spoiled in the tying, merely as "our failures." But, as the nation pays for these experiments, it would be as well to consider whether some better system might not be formed. There seems to us something of an error in the whole matter.

At present the Government is largely engaged in the trade of ship-building: it constructs vessels of war, and brings in its bills annually to the nation in the shape of the Navy Estimates. Now, a Government never succeeds well in managing a trade of any kind. By a fatality that never varies, whatever it engages in languishes, whatever it directs goes wrong, whatever it protects decays—that is, be it understood, when it departs from its functions, and becomes a trader or manufacturer. In the business of shipbuilding it wastes large sums of money on the organisation of its establishments, with all their gradations of ranks and offices, necessary, perhaps, to a Government, but not to a trader—who would build a whole fleet without an Admiral at the head of his dockyard. And the result of all the elaborate system never surpasses in any case, in a great many is far inferior to, what is done by private parties without any pomp or parade. The secret is this: in a mere matter of business, the purchaser and the producer know exactly what they want, and all the calculations are plain and to the purpose, and are governed by the ordinary considerations of profit and loss. A Government is swayed by a hundred other influences; loss is of no consequence where there is no intention of making a gain; suggestions are pressed by parties who, having interest cannot be refused; or a wrong system may be taken up and persevered in, under circumstances that would ruin any one who had not the Fortunatus purse of the Exchequer to draw upon. Looking at the expensive blunders, proved and avowed, that have been committed in the Government dockyards, the question naturally occurs, why should the Government build its own ships at all? It does it far dearer and far worse than any private establishment in the kingdom. The orders and counter-orders, the constructing and pulling to pieces, the cutting down some ships and raising others, the lengthening this vessel and shortening that, the changing of square to round (especially in the matter of sterns), is altogether inexplicable on any principle of common sense. What is built for a frigate is converted into a steamer, and a steamer, built for a certain amount of power, has more put into her than the calculator allows, and is, consequently, spoiled. Why is all this? Do those who follow the business of shipbuilding ever make such a mess of their orders? We believe not; and we hear, too, that at this moment the very finest specimens of English naval architecture are launched from private yards. The French long excelled us in their naval models; the Americans now build the most perfect ships in the world. When the Government has a House of Parliament to construct, it gives over the work to a professional architect, Mr. Barry, and a contractor who would build a city, if required, at a fortnight's notice. Suppose it had taken the whole business into its own hands; there would have been been, perhaps, an old military or naval officer as the superintendent, who might barely know a base from a capital, with a whole chain of subordinates under them; and in thrice the time, and at thrice the money, the Lords and Commons would have been very badly lodged indeed. Our barracks, we believe, are built by the Government, or under its superintendence and direction: one blew down a short time ago, in India, killing half a regiment; those at home are almost too bad for Christians to live in. It is only in the Estimates of this year that there is a vote asked to add wash-houses to them, though a dirty shirt is a military crime never overlooked by "smart" officers! The same vice pervades all things a Government undertakes: it should be the employer only, not the operative. Why should the Government build its own ships more than its own houses? If the system is good why not carry it out in everything? The Government does not import its own flax and hemp, and tallow, nor turn miner for its coal and iron. It does not weave cloth for the army; it does not even make muskets; it does not import the rum, or salt the beef for its sailors! It goes into the market with its capital and contracts for all these things with those whose trade it is to forge, and weave, and pickle, and import. And what answers in one thing would succeed in another; what is advantageous on the small scale becomes still more so on a large one, the benefit multiplying in a rapidly ascending scale, in proportion to what is undertaken. There is no tendency to pare down the public expenditure to the verge of inefficiency; that would be bad economy; but, giving the same funds, there is no reason why they should not be better applied. The system we have noticed has become a gigantic one; but it is defective, and though it cannot be yet abandoned, we think it should be gradually contracted till it ceases to be acted on; or else it must be managed much better than at present.

BRITISH INSTITUTION.—THE VILLAGE CHURCH.—PAINTED BY BODDINGTON.—(SEE PAGE 148.)

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

Another journal is dead the largest of those of France—the Epoque is no more. No longer will its flowing sheet—large as the sail of a seventy-four—attract the attention of the early railway traveller; no longer will officials in livery and cocked-hat sublime tender men in this political hill of fare of the Parisian with the courtesy with which the lackey of Lords of high degree tenderan tea to a Duchess. Vain have been all efforts the Epoque is buried; two millions of francs extended upon it could not save its life. Still are these glorious days for newspapers in France, not only because all the writers get into office, and offices the best of the State, but likewise because never was society at large apparently more beguiled, confiding in the materials in which newspapers deal. The quarrel between M. Guizot and Lord Normanby, its lights and shades, its working up in interest, and its conclusion its public manifestations and its secret mysteries is alone a proof of the scandal-generating "where-about's" of society in the present age in France. Neither are the other departments of a newspaper worst served—in the Theatricel, for example, how novelty flows in. The great theatres keep up constant attention by their throes and struggles, whilst new ones rise. Who would have dreamt of such an institution being brought to bear as the Theatre Historique, where the public, the Dukes of Montpensier, Aumale, and Joinville at the head of the spectators, presented in at five P.M., and only left at three A.M. in the morning—as many remaining in the street as entered the house. Still are the newspapers here never satisfied with the burials of nuts, political and social, thrown to them to crack before the public whilst they eat the kernels. The most serious, the most Ministerial, journals have endeavoured, by insinuation of words of transparent bitterness and contumely, to revive the quarrel once more between Lord Normanby and M. Guizot. It was only the day before yesterday that Count d'Appony expressed himself as being almost in despair of readjusting the once more disjointed understanding, and was obliged to call for the Times to exchange. This wearable diplomatist has been most zealous in his efforts This is not due alone to his natural urbanity and good feeling, although for these he is highly distinguished. Austria is placed at this moment in a predicament where the unity of France, or of any other powerful country, has become of the highest importance. Ever since Frederick the Great conquered Silesia, Prussia and Austria have remained, whatever their apparent good understanding, rival Powers of German Diet. There the once petty Elector has brow-beat his liege lord. To accomplish the ultimate intimadation, if not destruction, of Austria, the establishment of a corn detention in Prussia was a most effective resource.

Baron Bernstorff, a great Prussian statesman, who held the helm, and by whom the vessel of the State was piloted in the storms of the Revolutionary and Napoleon wars, proclaimed, in a memoir before his death, "That Prussia, as every one could see that did but glance at the map, was a country made up of legs and arms; and that what it essentially required was a body and that body could only be found in a Constitution." The Constitution is now set up as under Austria it menaced with moral and political annihilation. Russia will not assist her, for the Czar waits for the day, not far off, when revolution and anarchy will begin to work their effects—to realise the chimerical all-powerful dream of Peter, of sending armies, and obtain the cession of Dantzbian and other provinces, which ultimately will unite St. Petersburg to Constantinople. France and England are the only countries that can counterbalance Austria's ascendancy, and those which have her in her strong hold of Lombardy and Hungary. In Germany, the largest of the secondary kingdoms are anything but friendly to Austria. In Bavaria, the largest of all that which, being so docile in the hand of Stolberg, would be most natural and useful ally, the King is beside himself. It is but a few days since that Lola Montes came driving into Paris, in a chaise and four horses, after having cavally prevailed on Austria, excited an insurrection in Munich, dissolved the Administration; and thus shown the impolicie state of one of the most absolute monarchies in Europe—with a King ballcrazed, and with an heir to the throne, rather than remain at home and behold the miserable spectacle, keeps his bed, and simulates disease in order to be allowed to remain at Palermo.

A very small circumstance has created a great sensation in Paris. The Duke de Nemours has sought, by a species of private hospitality he dispenses in his apartments at the Tuileries, in the shape of balls and concerts, to acquire some of that popularity hitherto so unjustly refused him. His Royal Highness, however, has most aristocratic tastes. At the balls of the King his father, at that please to attend may do so in trousers: at the parties of the Duke de Nemours this part of costume is abridged to the knees, and this abbreviation, combined with silk stockings, on occasions of a gala, form the sine qua non of admission. At the news the outcry was as great as if Louis Philippe had proclaimed that he reigned like his ancestors, by Divine right, or had proclaimed, like Louis XIV., "L'Etat c'est moi!" This most momentous affair has been fortunately arranged. The Duke de Nemours on Monday gave a grand concert, and all the scribblers in Paris were invited. Thus it happens that, whatever may be public opinion, it has no longer a public expression, and, perforce, the visitors to his Royal Highness must adopt a form of habiliment they had decreed as only fit for lackeys. When a great statesman and a story that was asked what he thought of the arts at the King's and the elegance at the Duke's, he exclaimed, "Le pantalon c'est le présent, la culotte c'est l'avenir!" There is great profundity, however veiling the material, in this sentence: the aristocratic tendencies of the Court and Government are as undoubted as our having ultimately an hereditary peerage.

A deep sensation of melancholy pervades society on account of the death of M. Jubal Delessert, one of the most honourable statesmen, and once the greatest banker in Paris: a man whose heart was as large as his mind, and whose benevolence was as untiring as it was unobtrusive. His brother is likewise a member of the Chamber of Deputies (Sir Robert Peel), and the most gifted and enlightened functionary of France, as Profit do Police. Both brothers are naturalised Swiss, and brought with them to Paris the severe integrity and the high mental feeling of their native extraction.

Another death is imminent—that of the Minister of Justice, Martin du Nord; and one perhaps, also, which will create still greater sensation—that of Mdlle. Mars, now dying dangerously ill.

Amongst the items of news, I shall add, that by decree of the Courts, M. Charles Laffite, the most clever and triumphant of bankers of this capital, has been separated from his wife—an English lady of "good connexion," and it is said, although the husband took all the legal steps, the lady did not resist them in the least.

M. Ancelot, the Academician, and the prolific manufacturer of plays, is about to assume the heavy load of the editorship of the Commerce—a journal long on the decline.

A curious circumstance is that the criminals condemned to execution have petitioned to be first sent into a sleeping trance by ether vapour; and all the gourmands of Paris are in a state of jubilation, for lo! and behold, in the depth of their distress at the scarcity of that most delicious of escalants, a new mine of truffles has been discovered in France.

Such is my budget of news.

FRANCE.

We are glad to find that the misunderstanding between the Marquis of Normanby and M. Guizot, which was beginning to excite such envenomed feelings, has been arranged through the friendly interposition of Count Appony, the Austrian Ambassador. The Advocate of the following statement of the affair:—"If we are well informed, the English Ambassador, on Friday (last week) requested the Ambassador of Austria to act as a mediator, in order to bring about an accommodation between him and M. Guizot, and to suggest the initiative of a step entirely conciliatory and of a nature to terminate their difference. The Minister of Foreign Affairs is said to have replied to this initiative by authorising Count d'Appony to declare, as he has accordingly done in the sitting of the Chamber of Deputies of the 6th of February, and even in the speech delivered by him in that sitting, that he had never intended to question the good faith or sincerity of the English Ambassador. M. Guizot, it is added, on this occasion recalled to mind the following passage of that speech, which we think it right to reproduce:—' After the question of necessity comes that of loyauté. I bring this forward, gentlemen, with regret. I have never, and my own account, inculpated the intentions or the good faith of any person. When I discuss with adversaries, foreign or native, I see only in what I discuss errors, and a good or a bad policy; but I never impute to any person either bad faith or déloyauté. This course is recommended by the freedom and dignity of diplomatic relations, as well as those of Parliamentary discussion; and, however different the conduct observed towards me may be, and whoever may be the persons who practise it, I shall neither change my maxim nor my practice on this subject.' The English Ambassador, on his side, is said to have previously declared to Count d'Appony that he never had, on the occasion of the soirée given by him on the 19th of February, the intention to do anything which could be improper or offensive towards the Minister of Foreign Affairs, and he disavowed all the reports which had been circulated on this subject. Things having been thus explained, he became the mutual cognity of the two parties, M. Guizot and Lord Normanby met on Saturday evening, at five o'clock, at the Austrian Ambassador's, and resumed, without other explanations, their natural relations."

On Sunday evening Lord Normanby and the whole of the gentlemen attached to the English Embassy, were received at the Palace of the Tuileries by the King and the Royal Family. His Majesty's reception of Lord Normanby was most cordial.

Lord Normanby went to the Foreign-office on Monday, and had an interview with M. Guizot, relative to the affairs of La Plata. This was the first time his Excellency visited the Minister since the commencement of the disputes.

The official papers state that despatches have been received by the French Government from Rear-Admiral Brat, dated Tahiti, the 19th November, stating that, on the 30th October, 7th and 12th November, engagements took place between the native insurgents and the native allies, the latter being supported by the troops established at the post of Pienavia. The skirmishes were occasioned by the necessity in which were placed both parties of the Indians of penetrating into the valleys for food. In the course of them, twelve men of the French troops and their native allies were wounded, the greater part only slightly. Several important Chiefs had made their submission to the Protectorate, but that did not appear to cause any change in the disposition of the insurgents, and Rear-Admiral Brat was of opinion that they would not lay down their arms until after the arrival of the expected reinforcements.

The Moniteur publishes an official account of the census of 1846, from which it appears that the population of France then amounted to 35,400,486 souls. In 1841, when the previous census was taken, it was only 34,230,178, thus showing an increase, in five years, of 1,170,308. In 81 departments there has been an increase in the population, and in 5 a decrease. At the commencement of the present century, the population of the French territory was 27,000,000. The increase in 46 years has, therefore, been 9,000,000

Bread, in Paris, continues to rise in price. For the fortnight commencing the 1st March, the price of the first quality bread is fixed at 55 centimes the kilogramme, and second quality, at 48 centimes, or about 7½ per cent. dearer than it was at the corresponding period of last year. The city of Paris continues to distribute bread to the poor at the reduced rate of 40 centimes per kilogramme. It is calculated that this charitable act will cost the city, in the course of the season, upwards of £120,000 sterling. The most alarming accounts have reached Paris from Lower Normandy, and a scarcity is apprehended along the coast. At Rouen and Havre the rise is considerable. Large orders daily arrive in those markets from the interior, but cannot be executed on account of the absence of grain. The price of flour has risen 6f. per sack at Rouen. The general impression is, that the prese t year will be more disastrous than 1817.

On the 27th ult. there were disturbances at Bernay, in consequence of the high price of the market corn was offered at 76f. the measure, but soon after there was a report that some of the dealers intended to raise the price, and in a few minutes the populace rushed into the market, forced the dealers out, and severely ill-treated them. They were only saved from the fury of the people by the gendarmes pretending to take them into custody, and conducting them to prison. Several measures were sold at the first price, but part of the supply was withheld, on the compulsion at from 40f. to 60f. the measure. In the evening of Sunday last a serious corn riot was got up at Meymac (Corrèze). About one in the morning the Procureur du Roi and the Lieutenant of Gendarmerie arrived with an armed force, and were received with showers of stones from the rioters, who then amounted to more than 500. But slight or ten of the most violent were arrested, and carried away to the prison of Neuel, in spite of the efforts made to rescue them. This resolution cowed the disturbers, and they were then easily dispersed.

M. Duvergier de Hauranne has given notice of a motion for a very extensive reform of the Chamber of Deputies.

Madame Hannemann, widow of the celebrated founder of Homœopathy, was summoned on the 30th ultimo, before the Correctional Tribunal at Paris, for having illegally practised the medical art. After hearing evidence, the Court condemned her to pay a fine of 100 francs and expenses.

Madame Bresson, the mother of the French Ambassador at Madrid, died on Monday, at Paris, at a very advanced age.

The cold during Saturday and Sunday nights was intense in Paris. At six o'clock on Monday morning the thermometer (Fahrenheit) marked 19 degrees (that is, 13 below the freezing point), and so ten o'clock in the morning, not withstanding the blazing sun in a cloudless sky, 26½ (or 5½ below freezing)

The Parisians have been amused this week with the following correspondence between Alexandre Dumas and M. Mauguin, a member of the Chamber of Deputies. M. Dumas sent the following letter to that gentleman:—"Sir, You insulted me the other day in the Chamber of Deputies. Free to-day from all business engagements, I shall be at your disposal from two to four, as President of the Society of Men of Letters, to learn the day, the place, and the Lour—(we give the conclusion in the original French) ou si vous aimez que nous nous coupions en quatre." M. Mauguin sends Dumas, Marquis de la Pailleterie. To this strange epistle M. de Malleville sent the following amusing answer:—"Sir, I thank you for having afforded me the opportunity of seeing the agreeable and excellent M. Mauguin. I have accepted for him the duty of cutting you in four, and cut my throat, I am charged and beyond measure at not being able to accept it. I have not the honour to be a gentleman.—Marquis DE MALLEVILLE."

The Moniteur de la Flotte mentions the death of Colonel Bory de St. Vincent, the eminent botanist.

SPAIN.

Private accounts from Spain represent the progress of the Carlist movement as rather alarming; and which threatens the overthrow of Isabella II.

"Every one is astonished at the apathy displayed by the Spanish Government in regard to the hostile preparations of the Carlists; and, if this be an affectation of contempt, it will turn to a serious account, for the Carlist bands formed of the Montemolinistes are becoming too well organised and bold to be trifled with. The audacious surprise of Cervera and Guisona have opened the eyes of the most sceptical to the danger which threatens the crown of Isabella II.

"In Navarre and the Basque provinces, everything remains quiet; but, be not deceived by this tranquility it is the heavy, gloomy calm which precedes the storm. Between 3000 and 4000 warlike peasantry, most of whom bore arms against the Queen in the last war, are ready to take the field and proclaim Charles VI. on the first signal."

One of the Madrid papers states that Queen Christina will leave that city for Paris in the course of the present month. The Queen will be accompanied by her husband, the Duke de Rianzares (Munoz). According to the Clamor Publico, one of the principal objects of their journey is to see the Duchess de Montpensier, "whose accouchement" is likely to take place "in June"

There appear to have been fond disturbances in Spain, as well as in other countries. In Galicia the armed force is constantly employed in repressing the disorders of the peasantry from the dearness of corn, but the Government has deposted quantities in the several prefectures to be sold at the cost price.

In the sitting of the Chamber, on the 24th inst., the Minister of War introduced two important measures. By the first, the Government is empowered to decree, when it thinks fit, the raising of fifty thousand men; and, by the second, the Government is authorised to increase the force to two hundred millions of reals, at three per cent. interest, and to appropriate as much as may be necessary of the revenues of Spain and the colonies to the payment of the interest on that loan. The Government being entitled to make use of this authority, it makes use of this authority. The introduction of these two bills created a great sensation.

THE OVERLAND BOMBAY MAIL.

The Overland Bombay Mail, via Marseilles, arrived on Thursday. The dates are, Bombay, Feb. 1; Galle, Ceylon, Feb. 10; Point de Galle, Jan. 21; and Alexandria, Feb. 21. The papers do not contain any news of striking importance, but the following summary from the Bombay Times of Feb. 1, notices the chief incidents which have occurred since the last arrival. It states that the reductions of the Sonda [illegible] in progress. Her Majesty's 17th, and the greater part of the 86th, have arrived in Bombay. Fourteen thousand men will still be left behind to guard Young Scindiah, while these are required, will continue to draw above £1,250,000 from India to meet her deficiencies. The Punjaub is quiet and newsless. The Governor-General gave a dinner to the officers on the 7th January, and in proposing the health of Sir J. Littler, complimented the newly appointed Commander of the Forces beyond the Sutlej, in terms which show how worthily his past services have been rewarded. His Lordship quitted the Sikh capital for India on the 11th. It is understood to have been determined that the native army shall immediately be reduced by 25,000 men—15,000 from Bengal, and 10,000 from the minor Presidencies. This will effect a saving of between a quarter and half a million sterling. The officers of European and native, are to remain as at present. This saving, added to the returns of the Jullundur Doab, and the contribution of £220,000 from the Lahore Durbar, will improve our income by a million sterling.

The Ganges Canal, on which £220,000 annually has hitherto been gradually bestowed, is now to be proceeded with at the rate of £250,000 a year; it will be completed by 1851. It will irrigate 800,000 of acres now comparatively barren, and save 2,000,000 of people from the periodical visitations of famine. Another canal, leading from the Sutlej, 50 miles into the Bhuttee country, is being surveyed. The two, when completed, will improve our revenues by no less, probably, than £10,000 to £15,000 a year. Sir Frederick Currie, who, together with Colonel Lawrence, has so wisely and honestly counselled and assisted the Governor-General in these glorious arrangements, has been made a Baronet.

Mr. Clerk, the Bombay Advocate-General, has left for Calcutta on the 23rd of January, and immediately assumed the reins of authority.

Sir T. M'Mahon continues Commander-in-Chief, by request of the Horse Guards. His Excellency has of late suffered severely from sickness; and, however much his friend may regret to part with him, they are getting anxious about his safe return home.

The Marquis of Tweeddale has returned to Madras.

A heavy shower of rain fell on the 26th January, and the weather, which before this was unusually hot for the season, has all at once become intensely cold, the thermometer sinking so low as 55 degrees overnight.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The business was of a general character, and not very important.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS.—Lord BROUGHAM laid on the table a bill for the amendment of the law relating to insolvent debtors, which was read a first time.

THE LABOURING POOR (IRELAND) BILL.—This bill elicited a short discussion, and it was then read a second time.

ARREARS OF THE REMUNERATION.—Earl GREY informed the House that he should, on Friday, state what measures were in contemplation in consequence of the intended abandonment of the punishment of transportation. He then moved the first reading of two bills connected with the subject; one for the purpose of amending the law as to the custody of offenders, and the other referring to Millbank, Parkhurst, and Pentonville prisons. The bills were read a first time, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

GENERAL FAST.—Lord J. RUSSELL announced that a Council had been summoned to take into consideration the subject recommended by Mr. Plumptre, of having a day appointed for a general humiliation

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIEF BILL.—In answer to Sir R. Inglis, Mr. B. Escott said that the first reading of the bill connected with the subject; one for the purpose of amending the law as to the custody of offenders, and the other referring to Millbank, Parkhurst, and Pentonville prisons. The bills were read a first time, and the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House having resolved into Committee of Ways and Means,

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER proposed resolutions for carrying into effect the loan of eight millions already sanctioned by the House. The right hon. gentleman stated that he had that morning received two offers of an identical character, and, most probably, the result of a mere misunderstanding. These offers were such as he and the Prime Minister felt themselves justified in accepting, considering the present state of the money market. The proposals were, that for every £80 10s., the parties should receive stock to the amount of £100. The interest which the public would have to pay would be, as nearly as it was possible to calculate, £3 7s. 6d. per cent; that is, the annual interest on the whole loan would be £268,155, or, with the bank charges, £270,930. No discount had been allowed, and it was arranged that stock should be given, as in France, according as the instalments should be paid. The interest would commence from January last

Mr. HUME regretted that the loan had not been contracted in a higher denomination of stock. It appeared to him a bad bargain to pay interest on £8,000,000 from January last, upon £8,000,000, which would not be received in full until after October.

Mr. WILLIAMS also objected to the terms agreed upon, and asked who were the two persons whose offers had been accepted?

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER replied, Messrs. Rothschild and Baring.

The resolutions were agreed to.

THE LABOURING POOR (IRELAND).—Lord J. RUSSELL then moved that the House go into Committee pro forma, on the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill, and mentioned the substantial amendments which he proposed to engraft upon the present Poor Relief Bill. It had been suggested that the following case might arise under the provisions of the bill. Empowering the guardians to relieve the able-bodied poor out of the workhouse when the workhouse was full, or when fever raged in it, so that it would be dangerous to send paupers into it. In such cases might refuse to give relief to the number sufficient to fill the workhouse, and then refuse to give relief to the destitute able-bodied without, because the workhouse was full. The following words were proposed to be added to the clause, giving the power alluded to, so as to prevent the abuse suggested. An amendment was also to be introduced into clause 2, in reference to the enlargement of the workhouse in certain cases. As to clause 9, he proposed to alter the liability for the charge of out-door relief in each union. The change thus proposed was to place the charge of such relief, up to a certain amount, upon the electoral districts. He also proposed an alteration in regard to the number of ex officio guardians; as well as to introduce a clause, similar to one in the temporary bill passed a few weeks ago, giving power to the Poor-Law Commissioners to remove the guardians and appoint paid guardians in their stead, in the default of the former in performing their duties. These were the main alterations which he proposed to engraft upon the bill. A discussion of a very general character was raised in regard to the proposed alterations, and it was then arranged that the bill should be re-committed next Monday.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES. On the question that the House should go into a Committee of Supply, Mr. HUME and Mr. WILLIAMS talked of the necessity of reducing our naval and military expenditure. At length the House went into Committee, and Mr. FOX MAULE moved the Army Estimates. He stated that the number of men to be voted in the United Kingdom and the Colonies was 138,860, the general charge for which, including [illegible] charge for the ensuing year was £2,[illegible]. The number voted last year was 138,398, showing an increase of 462 men. The number of the Company, for 30,497 men, was £[illegible]. The estimates in aid of the land forces in the United Kingdom and the colonies, amounting to £53,375; the balance from the Royal Military College of £17,033; a small appropriation for Maynooth and the Hibernian School of £245. There was also to be deducted the appropriation in aid of the non-effective service of £7,137, which made a total reduction from the effective and non-effective services of £77,545. The net total, then, to be provided for the ensuing year was £6,375,074, and the total number of men was 108,398. The first vote which he should propose was for that number of men, being the number considered necessary for the service during the ensuing year, and being a decrease on the number voted last year of 210 men. In the course of his speech, Mr. Fox Maule stated what had been done by the Government for the education of soldiers.—He took the vote of £2000 for the estimate of the schools in the Royal Military Asylum. Government proposed to establish a normal school for the training of schoolmasters for the regimental schools, for the orphans and children of British soldiers. This was a plan which he was bound in justice to declare was a legacy left to him by the right hon. gentleman who preceded him in office. (Hear, hear.) If that plan were brought fairly into operation, the army would look back to the founder of with the utmost gratitude. He believed from this plan we should not only have education for the children of the soldiery provided for, but also for the soldier during the time he remained with the colours. (Hear.) This would enable soldiers after their period of service, be that period long or short, by means of their talents, cultivated at these schools, to do something for themselves. He also proposed to take from the army with a small pension, or without a pension. He was happy to state that the libraries were increasing in utility: there were 10,000 additional volumes in them, and the vote he proposed to take for that purpose was £2000.—Mr. W. WILLIAMS rose when Mr. Fox Maule had concluded, and said that it was almost the first time since he had had a seat in the House that he had heard estimates in which there was hardly an item that was not objectionable. He had mentioned his intention of proposing a reduction of 20,000 men, but upon consulting his friends about him, he found so little encouragement that he did not intend to press his motion. (Laughter.) Several votes were agreed to Leave was given to Sir G. GREY to bring in a bill to amend the Drainage Act of last year

ENLISTMENT IN THE ARMY. Mr. FOX MAULE obtained leave to bring in a bill to limit enlistment in the army. The period named in the bill was ten years for the infantry, and twelve years for the cavalry and artillery.

The House adjourned at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY

THE POOR REMOVAL ACT.—The Duke of RICHMOND moved the appointment of a Select Committee upon the Poor Removal Act of last session. It was, he said, impossible to find any two men who could agree upon the mode in which it should be carried out, and he thought that the framers of the bill never anticipated the construction that had been put upon it by the law officers of the Crown. Some amendment was necessary in the present system, for it would lead to an enormous amount of litigation, and be productive of as much injustice to the rate-payers as injurious to the poor. It was only another proof of the absurdity of passing such acts at a late period of the session, and when comparatively few of their Lordships were present. The Government consented to the Committee, which was appointed.

RAILWAYS IN IRELAND.—Earl FITZWILLIAM, in presenting a petition from the Grand Jury of the county Wicklow, praying for encouragement of railways in Ireland, urged upon the Government the importance and necessity of affording to the people of that country the means of employment. If they waited for the introduction of English capital for the promotion of such works, they would see the country utterly ruined.

Earl LEITRIM expressed a hope that the evils of Ireland had been exaggerated, and that the dangerous crisis would soon pass away. The Government was most anxious to assist Ireland, but he did not believe there was any more dangerous delusion than that a country could receive the assistance of Government as its sole means of progress.—Lord MONTEAGLE agreed with the noble Earl that it was to Ireland that Ireland must eventually look for its regeneration; but those who said that Ireland ought to fall back upon its own resources now knew little of the magnitude of the calamity with which she was afflicted. The conversation then dropped, and the House adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY

THE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.—Sir G. CLERK moved for "a Select Committee to inquire whether, and in what part of Scotland, and under what circumstances, large numbers of her Majesty's subjects have been deprived of the means of religious worship and the ministrations of pastors to whom they have been attached by their own free choice, and to report from time to time their opinion upon the subject of the Church of Scotland, but, ultimately, the proposal for the Committee was agreed to by 89 to 51.

RAILWAY EXPENDITURE. Lord G. BENTINCK moved for a return, showing the sums of money actually expended by the following railway companies previous to 1841:—London and Birmingham, Grand Junction, Great Western, Brighton, South Western, South Eastern, and Midland, likewise the aggregate sum expended by the above-mentioned railway companies in each year previous to 1841. In making this motion the noble Lord referred into a lengthened statement to show that Mr. Gouldburn, in a former state, had exaggerated the expenditure during the two years previous to 1841 upon those railways by upwards of £27,000,000. The statement containing this exaggeration had been made to the House with all the "pomp and circumstance" of an ex-Chancellor of the Exchequer; and he thought that the exposure which he had just made of it would put the House on its guard for the future against placing any reliance upon the statements and statistics of Mr. Goulburn, although he had been a Chancellor of the Exchequer.—Mr. GOULBURN said that, as his Lordship had referred to speech words which he had never uttered, he must now state the words which he actually used, and must vindicate the argument which he afterwards used by those words. He had made no statement of what had been expended on railway for certain years; but he had stated that the sums to be paid for railways in progress or in completion during the years of deficiency, beginning 1847 and ending 1843, was £47,000,000.—The return was ordered, and the House resumed at a quarter past twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE FACTORIES BILL.

On the motion that the House should go into Committee on this bill,

Mr. B. ESCOTT moved as an amendment that the House should go into Committee on the bill that day six months.

Mr. W. BECKETT advocated a limitation of labour to eleven hours, to which proposition, he said, the majority of manufacturers were favourable.

Mr. WARD expressed his decided opposition to the principle of the bill.

Mr. BROTHERTON said he could, of his own knowledge, assert that the operatives generally were in favour of the measure. Parliament had already legislated to protect children, and it must now interfere for the protection of females. When a boy he knew by experience what it was to be a factory worker, and had then formed the resolution, if ever he should have the power, to use his utmost endeavours to bring about a diminution of the hours of labour for women and children in factories. The reduction of the cotton-tax alone would more than compensate the masters for any decreased production consequent on such diminution, and believing the measure would prove advantageous to all parties, he should give it his cordial and hearty support.

Sir J. GRAHAM pronounced a high eulogium upon Mr. Brotherton, who, having been himself a factory operative, had, in a manner which reflected the highest honour upon him, advocated the cause of these labourers; but he could not yield to his arguments, nor give way to what he considered the prejudices of those engaged in factory labour. He thought it was unwise to put a restraint upon men who were willing to labour twelve hours a day for the support of their families and themselves.

Sir G. GREY, Lord MORPETH, and Lord G. BENTINCK spoke in favour of going into Committee.

Mr. MILNER GIBSON spoke strongly against the bill.

Sir R. PEEL expressed his continued objection to all interference with the hours of factory labour. Looking at the question as it affected the general interests of the country, he must say that he viewed it with alarm. They were obliged to tax property to the extent of six millions to give food to those who could not procure it themselves, and they had no security for the continuance of that relief but the industry, the machinery, and the labour of the manufacturers. He could not deny that there would be advantages in a moral point of view in reducing the hours of labour, but it would be followed by a decrease in the comforts of the operatives. He attached the highest importance to the elevation of the working classes, but he should vote against the Committee, because he believed it would endanger the great resources of the country, cripple their energies, and dissipate their national wealth.

On a division the numbers were—

For now going into Committee	.. .. ..	190
For Mr B. Escott's Amendment	.. .. ..	100
Majority for the Committee	.. .. ..	—90

The House, however, did not go into Committee, for it being six o'clock, the Speaker adjourned the House without putting the question of adjournment.

HOUSE OF LORDS. THURSDAY

COMPLAINT AGAINST A MAGISTRATE.

Lord BROUGHAM moved for a return of the commital to Tothill-fields prison of James Gibson, a child of five years old, upon a charge of felony. (Hear.) He moved for it with a view to the removal from the bench of the Magistrate who committed that child to prison. (Hear.) The committal was dated the 19th of February last.

Lord CAMPBELL said, that in so grave a case there could be only one doubt as to whether proceedings against the Magistrate ought not to be taken in a criminal court—for the conduct of the Magistrate was quite monstrous. The person who was guilty of such an enormity was wholly unfit to be entrusted with the magisterial authority. (Hear, hear.)

After a few words from Lord BROUGHAM, the return was ordered.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. THURSDAY

THE RIOTS IN SCOTLAND.—Sir A. LEITH HAY said that it appeared that a very serious riot had taken place in Wick, in the north of Scotland, and he wished to know if the learned Lord had received any information on the subject. The Lord ADVOCATE regretted that a disturbance had taken place, but the account of it had been very much exaggerated, and he was enabled to say that the Sheriff and the local authorities had acted with the greatest humanity, caution, and forbearance. The Sheriff had received information in the morning of the intended disturbance, and he immediately sent a guard of soldiers to protect the vessel which the populace was about to attack. It was in consequence that a disturbance had taken place; but the injuries which had been sustained by the populace were not by any means so serious as those received by the military.

Ribbo-Dutton Lock.—Mr. HUME then brought forward his motion on the Ribbo-Dutton Lock, in the form of a series of resolutions, declaring England released from her engagement by the violation on the part of Russia, of the Treaty of Vienna. The motion was seconded by Lord SANDON, who stated his conviction that Russia had violated her engagements under the Treaty of Vienna.—Lord J. RUSSELL went into a detailed account of the relations of England with Powers with regard to Cracow, which, he agreed, were a violation of the treaty, and not justified by the excuses which had been made for them. But as the engagement was made in behalf of the three Powers of England, France, and the Sovereign of England ought to be the originator of any step on the question, there being a Constitutional distinction between what was done by the Crown and by the House of Commons. The debate, after the noble Lord's speech, was adjourned till next Thursday, and the House rose at twelve o'clock

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. March 1.

A meeting of graduates in the faculty of theology was holden this day, when the nomination of the Rev Edward Cardwell, D.D., Principal of St. Alban Hall, to the office of Examiner, under the provisions of the new statute, De Disciplina Theologica, was approved of by the faculty

CAMBRIDGE.

At a Congregation held on Wednesday, the following degrees were conferred:—

M.D.—E. L. Birkett, Caius College.

B.C.L.—J. Gardener, Trinity College.

M.A.—John Ball Chalker, St. John's Coll. Charles W. Strickland, Trinity Coll.

B.A.—John Beasley, St. John's College.

COWBRIDGE SCHOOL. The Head-Mastership of this school, which recently became vacant by the death of the Rev. Dr. Williams, has been conferred upon the Rev. Mr. Harper, of Jesus College, Oxford.

SCOTLAND.

THE FOOD RIOTS.—We find from the Scotch papers that the food riots at Wick and Thurso have turned out much more serious than any similar disturbances that have yet taken place in other parts of the country. Headed by a piper, the populace of the former place had become by degrees so infuriated, that on Saturday and then, in a short space of time, filled the grain vessel with stones; two measures which the civic authorities did not attempt to resist, and which prevailed for two days. At length a lieutenant-governor, with 200 soldiers, met the port, but, from the high surf, could not enter the harbour; and, as the fishermen sternly refused the assistance of their boats, their landing was effected hardly. Next day the soldiers, backed by a strong body of special constables, superintended the shipment of the grain, but carts and other requisites being wanting, and much time consumed in the process, the constables begged off. The shipping accomplished, a military guard was placed over the vessel, and some prisoners were in the act of marching back, when they were assailed by a volley of stones; the soldiers faced round, and by order, it is said, of the sheriff, fired. A man and a woman were both severely wounded, but no other serious casualty is reported. As usual, the women performed a leading part, many of them being armed with staves. The town of Wick had been in a state of great excitement. A public meeting was held, and all parties joined in the cry for the removal of the military. At Thurso the entrance to the river was blocked up with two sloops, and two ten-pounders were also placed on the beach, but no military had arrived.

CARTSBURN.—On Monday week several hundred persons assembled at Castlehill Harbour, in order to put to sea a vessel (The Fisher, of Leith) which had come there to load grain. Mr. Traill, M.P., and Sheriff Gregg, were quickly on the spot, and made several ineffectual attempts to address the infuriated multitude. The rioters forced their way on board the vessel, many of them armed with sticks and bludgeons; and the mate in attempting to defend himself, was felled to the deck. The onset had the effect of dispersing the crowd, it being supposed the man was killed. He had been severly, though fortunately, not mortally wounded. A night outbreak took place on Tuesday, but no damage was done.

LOCH.—Similar disturbances took place at this village on Friday and Saturday week. Three young men, considered to have been ringleaders in the riot, have been apprehended, and sent to the prison of Dingwall, under a military escort.

EXPLOSION AND LOSS OF TWO LIVES.—Last Sunday morning, the inhabitants of Bonnington, near Edinburgh, were alarmed by the noise of an explosion which occurred at the chemical works carried on there by Mr. Astley, whereby two men lost their lives. According to the practice of the establishment, the two men in question, of the names of Hart and Forbes, were left in charge of a still charged with nigsly inflammable materials, the progress of which they were required to watch. In the distillation of the articles, the man had become impatient, and one of them inadvisedly approached the still with a lighted lamp, to mark the progress of the operations, which coming in contact with the gas arising from the chemical liquid, instantaneously exploded, and killed him and his companion; the walls and roof of the building were also partially shattered.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The German journals speak of the excitement caused in Bavaria by the conduct of Mademoiselle Lola Montez, the Spanish dancer, who appears in London a year or two ago. Not only is it alleged that this lady has obtained undue influence over the King of Bavaria, but, it appears, that she has had disputes at Munich with a carman and struck him violently with an umbrella. The bystanders supported the carman and the lady took refuge in a chemist shop, which was much injured by the mob. Such was the state of things on the 21st ult., but it appears that on the following day, the populace became so exasperated that the authorities had been obliged to order the lady out of the city. She left in the night for the village of Starenberg, and her carriages was escorted by a troop of Dragoons.

The Augsburg Gazette has the following from Vienna, dated the 16th ult.:—"The new loan of 80,000,000, at 5 per cent., is definitively concluded with the houses of Rothschild, Sina, and Arnstein and Eskeles The details of the contract are not yet publicly known."

Rose Girard, member of the French Academy, died last week aged 82. He was one of the founders of the "Mercure," "Les Jullet," and "Virginie;" of the "Magasin Pittoresque," and other works.

The Belgian journals represent the misery in Flanders as very severe. The Journal de Bruges says:—"The mortality, already frightful, be not yet reached the horrible acme to which it will quickly rise. The reports of the physicians prove to us that the detestable food of the poor of the country creates diseases which must inevitably spread death around. More than 50 case of dropsy have occurred in a single village."

The Government of Brunswick has just suppressed, to the end of September of the present year, the entrance duties on corn, flour, leguminous seeds, and potatoes.

Letters from Milan bring alarming accounts of disturbances in the Tyrol (Austria). They state that an army of peasants had marched upon Lecco, and driven the soldiers from the town; that many thousand measures of corn had been thrown into the lake. All the transports for Switzerland have been stopped. It was said that politics were not connected with this movement, as the price of provisions is nowise exorbitant in Italy. Austrian troops have been ordered there from Mantua and Monza.

According to letters from Malta, of the 11th ult., the Porte is preparing a new expedition against Tunis, and reckoned on the support of England.

A Royal message, accompanied by a project of law, for the revocation of the Corn-law of Dec. 26, 1846, and for the abrogation of the duties on corn, was laid last Saturday before the Second Chamber of the States General of the Netherlands. The project of law, which is a further step towards free trad in corn, was referred to the sections of the Chamber

At a dinner given recently at Liverpool to Mr. Rowland Hill, that gentleman, by way of illustration of the difficulties connected with Post-Office management, said that the number of dead letters, since the adoption of prepayment, had become a very small fraction less than the 200th part of the whole; nevertheless the average amount of money found in such letters, in coin, bank notes and bills of exchange, was £400,000 per annum. Many thousands of pounds were actually found in letters with no address whatever.

There was another extensive slip at Shakspeare's Cliff, Dover, last week. A surface of chalk 250 feet in height, extending to a length of 350 feet on the eastern face, 15 feet thick, measuring 47,131 yards, and supposed to contain about 48,000 tons of chalk, has scaled off and fallen to the base. From a fog at the time the slip was not seen, but the noise of the fall was heard at a long distance. This recent fall will doubtless repay the search of the geologist. A smaller fall of about 10,000 cubic yards has since occurred

The Duke of Portland, in a letter dated Welbeck, Feb. 26, asserts that there can be no doubt of the re-appearance of the potato disease in the same form as last year. His Grace recommends the Swedish turnip for a substitute, and says it is much more nutritive than the potato.

A company has been formed at North and South Shields, to run a direct ferry across the river between the two towns for passengers only.

The King of Naples has presented Mrs. Gurwood with a beautiful diamond ring, as a token of His Royal regard for the distinguished compiler of the "Despatches of the Duke of Wellington."

We perceive, from a German paper, that the King of Prussia is following out his favourite project. Permission has been given to form a sort of national or civic guard, for the purposes of police, in case of disturbances Another law gives to the Prussian Finance Minister the control of calls made by railway companies.

The Grand Council of Berne has adopted the principle, as the future basis for the financial system of that canton, of establishing an income tax

The contract price of wheat for the navy is now from 80s. to 82s. per quarter at Brest; and freights from Odessa are enormously high

A convention has been concluded between the British authorities and the King and Chiefs of Cape Mount, West Coast of Africa, for the total abolition of the slave trade

At a meeting of the manufacturers of Manchester, held on Tuesday evening, a petition was adopted to Parliament, praying for a Select Committee to make a full and searching inquiry into all the circumstances which affect the cultivation of cotton in India

From a Parliamentary return just issued, it appears that, in England, there have been 48 applications made for advances, amounting to £211,843, of public money, under the Drainage Act of last Session; and from Scotland 108 applications, the sums applied for amounting to £303,804 From Ireland there have been 24 applications, for a sum total of £39,171; of which three have been sanctioned, to the amount of £9141

The munificent sum of £200 has recently been contributed by "A Lady," in aid of the Strangers' Friend Society, for visiting and relieving the sick poor at their own habitations in London and its vicinity.

The Presse states that the Sardinian Government has come to an understanding with those of Bavaria, the Duchy of Baden, and the three Cantons of Tessino, the Grisons, and St. Gall, for the construction of a line of railroads, to connect Piedmont with Germany across Switzerland, in the direction of the Lake of Constance.

The Cologne Gazette of the 23rd ult., publishes a letter from Berlin, which states, that it has been decided to appoint Prince Solms-Hohensolms-Lich President of the Prussian General Diet, which is to assemble on the 11th of April.

Prince Mourad Ali, the 35th son of Feth Ali, Schah of Persia, who had 104 children, of whom 30 are still living, died lately at Kind, a small town of Persia, at an very advanced age. He was a man of a cultivated understanding, and employed himself chiefly in astronomy. A few years ago a treatise on the prognostics of the weather, written by him, was published at Bombay.

Letters from Florence, dated the 16th ult., mention the arrival in that city of their Imperial Highnesses the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Modena and the Duke and Duchess de Bordeaux, on a visit to the Grand Ducal Court of Tuscany

The loan, contracted by the Wurtemberg Government for the execution of railways, has just been concluded with the firms of Rothschild and Gruneius, of Frankfort-on-the-Maine. The amount is twelve millions of florins (13,800,000f.), and the interest is to be four-and-a-half per cent.

There is more flour in Liverpool at present than the local want usually served by that market would take off in eighteen months.

The fair of Frankfort-on-the-Oder, which commenced on the 14th ult., was rendered perfectly nugatory in consequence of the total absence of the merchants of Cracow. Since the opening of the fair, three of the principal houses of that town have failed, and others will, it is feared, follow them.

The "oldest inhabitant" is said to be a woman now living in Moscow, in Russia, who is 168 years of age. At the age of 122 she married her fifth husband

The Bishop of Jerusalem, Dr. Gobat, reached the Holy City in safety, and entered it on the 30th of December

A letter from St. Petersburgh states that the health of the Empress of Russia had lately gained strength, and she was much better.

Isaac Holden, Esq., of Camden (New Jersey), is applying gun-cotton to the propulsion of machinery in his factory. The engine is constructed on the plan of the ordinary steam-engine, only there are two cylinders, one working in the other. The gun-cotton is ignited by electricity, augmented and applied in a novel manner. Any degree of power may be obtained It is safer than the ordinary steam-engine, and one person can run it.

At a public meeting held lately in Ipswich, for the distressed Irish, the Mayor stated that previous to the season's harvest the aggregate sum collected throughout the various parishes in the town amounted to not less than £2400

A letter from Alexandria of Feb. 19, says:—"The weather is becoming hot, and we have had several sirocco winds, which are always looked upon with dread by the natives. The season is, so far, much milder than in former years, and we have not had, since the commencement of winter, a fall of much over three inches of rain in all. The thermometer, in the shade, at present ranges, at noon, about 70 Fahrenheit; it was not lower this winter than 39."

Lord Hardinge, feeling for the "spiritual wants of a distant part of the parish of Penshurst, in which he resides, has sent £1000 towards building and endowing a church or chapel there."

Large orders for rye meal, both on Government and merchants' account, have been executed in the Russian ports of the Baltic, and only await the breaking up of the ice for the vessels to come to England. The quantities bought are what may be called immense

On the 25th ult., a waggon, drawn by five horses, and heavily laden with lime, was passing over the suspension bridge over the Mayenne, at Asvenbros, near Laval (France), when the structure gave way, and the waggon, horses, and driver went down into the river. The waggoner and two of the horses were drowned.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR MARCH.

LITTLE [illegible] FUNERAL.

Now the rosy children living opposite Mr. Dombey's house, peep from their nursery windows down into the street; for there are four black horses at his door, with feathers on their heads, and feathers tremble on the carriage roof they draw; and these, and an army of men with scarves and staves, attract a crowd. The juggler who was going to twirl the basin, puts his loose coat on again without the fine dress; and his trudging wife, occupied with her heavy baby in her arms, letters to see the company come out. But closer to her dingy breast she presses her baby, when the burden that is so easily carried is borne forth; and the youngest of the rosy children at the last window opposite, needs no restraining hand to check her in her glee, when, pointing with her dimpled finger, she looks into her nurse's face, and asks "What's that!" And now, among the knot of servants dressed in mourning, and the weeping women, Mr. Dombey passes through the hall to the other carriage that is waiting to receive him. He is not "brought down," these observers think, by sorrow and distress of mind. His walk is as erect, his bearing is as stiff as ever it has been. He hides his face behind no handkerchief, and looks before him. But that his face is something sunk and rigid, and is pale, it bears the same expression as of old. He takes his place within the carriage, and three other gentlemen follow. Then the grand funeral moves slowly down the street. The feathers are yet nodding in the distance, when the juggler has the basin spinning on a cane, and has the same crowd to admire it. But the juggler's wife is less alert than usual with the money-box, for a child's burial has set her thinking that perhaps the baby underneath her shabby shawl may not grow up to be a man, and wear a sky-blue fillet round his neck, and salmon-coloured worsted drawers, and tumble in the mud.—Dombey and Son

THE LORD MAYOR'S SHOW.

Without doubt you have changed, in your lifetime, to see the Lord Mayor's Show. If you have done so, you will recollect how the procession got confused with the mob, and the mob with the procession, until you could not tell which was which—how the military gentleman who headed it, balanced himself for dear life, in great fear, upon his horse—how the banners always overpowered the watermen and their props who bore them—how ignoble things fell into the tail of the procession advertising-vans, coal-waggons, and long apple-stalls upon wheels (a dreadful especially when it stopped, as it frequently did, you will call to mind how fearful was the want of respect paid towards the Ancient Knights by the mob—how the smallest boys chaffed the mailed and mounted warrior with the tall brass head-piece and mouse on his head, and recommended him "to get inside and pull the blinds up to be out of sight"—how the more matured intellects asked him "what he weighed in his own scales"—how they called out to know if he was "Alderman Armour"—and how, thereupon, the Ancient Knight got so carefully irate that he would have done terrible things to his persecutors—only that, in the first place, he could not turn his head in the saddle, he could not ride off his horse without the aid of a crane.—Albert Smith, in Bentley's Miscellany.

A FAMILY QUARREL.

The prosperity of the House of York was now only marred by a quarrel between the Dukes of Gloucester and Clarence. The latter had married Warwick's eldest daughter, and claimed the whole property of his father-in-law, of which Gloucester naturally wished a slice, and he struck up to Anne, a younger daughter, in order to derive some claim to a share of the family fortune. Clarence, anxious to baffle his brother, sent the young lady out to service as a cook, in London, when Gloucester—disguised, probably, as a policeman—found her out, and ran away with her. He won her by alleging his heart to be incessantly on the boat, and by promising her the advantages of a superior station. He lodged her in the then rural lane of St. Martin's, and, the King ultimately arranged the differences between his brothers by assigning a handsome portion to Lady Anne, and leaving Clarence to take the rest; while the widowed Countess of Warwick, who had brought all the money into the family, was obliged to leave it there, without touching it, for she got nothing.—Comic History of England

SENTENCE ON JOAN OF ARC

On the 24th of May, 1431, the Maid was brought up to hear her sentence, and the Bishop of Beauvais, taking out a pile of papers, endorsed re Joan of Arc, declared himself ready to deliver his judgment. An opportunity was, however, allowed her to stay execution, on giving a written acknowledgment of every charge brought against her; and such a document being drawn up, she reluctantly permitted Joan of Arc, ✕, her mark—for she could not write—to be affixed to it. Her punishment was commuted to perpetual imprisonment, with "the bread of sorrow and the water of affliction," which consisted of a stale loaf and a pull at the pump once a day, as her only nourishment. She found some of the crumbs of the short in her daily crust, and when the water was brought to her, she declared it to be very hard, which was certainly better than soft for drinking.—Ibid.

DUTCH CLOCKS.

The Dutch clock pointed to twenty minutes to three and struck eleven—the combination signifying that it was eight precisely, after the dissolute manner of Dutch clocks in general. Christopher Tadpole.

THE FAMILY OF MAN.

When I sit and look at the globe, I do think that the family of man, as we call ourselves—even while we're grinding swords to eat some of the family's throats—he family is, after all, a droll lot. I often do pity my millions of relations. When I'm in bed, I think there's my brother in Greenland snug in turn out in the snow, to catch a seal for dinner, and there's my brother in Kaffirland making himself a very handsome sash of sheep's entrails; and there's my brother in Patagonia with his body for windsail to roll him into pasts; and another Oriental brother standing upon one leg for twenty years, that he may pass to Brama as a cock passes to sleep; and there are thousands of other brothers hunching, and fishing, and paternal-fieldsh in all shapes and all patterns. Douglas Jerrold's Shilling Magazine.

LITERATURE A DESPISED PROFESSION.

Let us not be understood as arguing in favour of pensions to literary men. We want no Government largesse. Pensions are only warrantable in certain instances, and of them hereafter. All we ask for is justice. What is it debars us from that justice? Simply, the disrespect in which the profession of literature is held. That it is held in disrespect can scarcely be questioned by any competent person. Individual authors are treated with a respect, often exaggerated into servility. Men are proud to have them at their tables, in their drawing-rooms; men are glad to garnish their communications with anecdotes concerning their "literary friend." You find your fat-headed host scarcely daring to venture an opinion in your presence, and imagining, because you wrote that article in The Quarterly, you must be a great chess-player, and an incomparable hand at whist. You are asked for autographs; your commonplaces are received as jokes. But all this does not disguise the fact, that the profession of literature is despised

Its incurable sin being poverty!—Fraser's Magazine.

THE CAT DID IT.

I kept Mrs. Burgess' Tom unknown to my husband until it was impossible to keep him any longer, for really the things that creature would do, and the articles he would steal, no one would credit. If anything was to be missed it was a Christian that a dumb animal. If we had a fowl for dinner, and I missed it in the morning, the cat was sure to have taken it;—if the tarts disappeared, the cat had eaten them; if the flour ran short, the cat had upset it; if I missed a silver spoon, the cat must have hidden it;—if any of the crockery or glass was broken, the cat had knocked them down;—if the cask of table ale was empty long before its time, why the cat had pulled out the spigot. In fact, nothing was long before its time, why the cat had pulled out the spigot. In fact, nothing was missed that the cat didn't take, and nothing was broken that the cat did'nt break.—The Greatest Plague of Life; or, the Adventures of a Lady in search of a Good Servant. By one who has been "a victim." Illustrated by Phiz. Vol. 2.

We cannot resist the following extract from this admirable picture of domestic miseries.) The plates by Crulkshank are drollery at all points too

A BALANCE AT THE BANKER'S.

What a dignity it gives an old lady, that balance at the banker's! How tenderly we look at her faults if she is a wealthy relative (and every reader have a score of such), what a kind, good-natured old creature we find her! How the junior partner of Hobbs and Dobbs leads her smiling to the carriage with the lozenge upon it, and the fat, saucy coachman! How, when she comes to pay us a visit, we generally find an opportunity to let our friends know her station in the world! We say (and with perfect truth) I wish I had Miss Mac Whirter's partiality for a cheese for the thousand pounds. She wouldn't miss it, says your wife. She is my aunt, say you, in an easy, careless way, when your friend asks if Miss MacWhirter is any relative? Your wife is perpetually sending her little presents of affection, your little girls work cushions, worsted pockets, cushions, and footstools for her. What a good fire there is in Lor room when she comes to pay you a visit, although your wife loses her stays without one! The house, during her stay, assumes a festive, neat, and jovial, snug appearance not visible at other seasons. You, yourself, dear sir, forget to go to sleep after dinner, and find yourself all of a sudden (though you invariably lose) very fond of a rubber. What good dinners we have, Monday, Mathews's delicacies, and no end of fish from London. Even the servants in the kitchen share in the general prosperity; and, somehow, during the stay of Miss MacWhirter's fat coachman, beer is grown much stronger, and the consumption of tea and sugar in the nursery (where her maid takes her meals) is not regarded in the least. Is it so, or is it not so? I appeal to the middle classes. Ah, gracious powers! I wish you would send me an old maid—a maiden aunt on such an occasion in her carriage, and a front of light coffee-coloured hair how my children should work work-bags for her, and my Julia and I would make her comfortable! Sweet—sweet vision! Foolish, foolish dream!—Vanity Fair

THE NEW SERVANT.

One morning, when I went into the back bed-room, to put out some clean pillow-cases, and I happened to go to the window for a moment, I was never so astonished in the whole course of my existence as when I saw that impudent woman, who belonging to the S——ns—he's a prime house is just at the bottom of our garden) holding up a tea-tray, on the back of which was written, in large chalk letters, "HANGEL, CAN I GUM TO TEA." and I immediately saw what the fellow meant by his tricks; so I crept down stairs as gently as I could, and, in the back parlour, I found, just as I had expected, my precious bounty of a Susan perched on a chair, and holding up my best japanned tea tray—that cost me I don't know what all—and on the back she had written, with the same elegant writing materials "HADDOCKS ORE! YOU CARNT COM—ALAS! MISSES WILL BE HIM." So I scolded her well for carrying on those games, and ordered to chalk her nasty love-letters on my tea-trays, telling her that hars were pretty goings on, and fine doings, indeed.—The Greatest Plague of Life.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

FINE ARTS.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

We present our readers with three of the most interesting pictures in this Collection, which has been generally characterised in our previous notices.

The Picture upon our front page is Mr. Boddington's "Village Church"—a genuine scene of English life. The Church is placed beyond an avenue of noble trees; and the composition is in the painter's best style.

"Spring-Time," painted by Mr. Inskipp, is a country girl, seated upon a bank; the head beautifully painted, and the face lighted up with a pair of most brilliant eyes. It is, altogether, a very charming picture.

"Pastime of Neapolitan Peasants under the Royal Palace of Pausilipo," by Mr. Parrott, is a spirited scene of jocissance, very nicely painted: the bright sunlight streaming through the old palace windows; the sparkling, gemmy sea; the grouping of the figures; their picturesque costumes; and the sunny atmosphere—all make up a very brilliant performance.

We append, from the Art-Union for the present month, the following List of Pictures in this Collection which have already been sold:—

"On the Road between Leamington and Kenilworth," F. Baker; Lord Charles Townsend, 12 gs. "On the Thames—Moonlight," A. Gilbert; George C. Loftus, Esq., £10. "Epstein Castle, in the Taurus Mountains," G. C. Stanfield, jun.; — Wheeler, Esq., 18 gs. "Red Deer Reposing," G. Giles, R.S.A.; — Wheeler, Esq., £12. "Laying Eel-Traps," A. Gilbert; S. Colls, Esq., £8. "Moonlight," J. Holland; Charles Birch, Esq., 35 gs. "Irish Courtship," F. Goodall; S. Oxenham, Esq. "The Holy Well," F. Goodall; — Broderip, Esq. "A Road through a Wood," A. Vickers; S. C. Hall, Esq. "Bay of Porto Maurizio," E. W. Cooke; Charles Stokes, Esq. "Evening," H. Bright; Robertson Blaine, Esq. "Welsh Mountain Scene," H. Bright. "Water Mill at Ifley, Oxon," H. Bright. "Martello Tower at Mintore, near Monaco," E. W. Cooke. "The Love-letter," Thomas Mogford; £30. "The Frugal Meal," J. F. Herring; Robert Vernon, Esq., 60 gs. "A Straw-yard," J. E. Herring; 80 gs. "Venice," J. Holland. "Recollections of Venice," J. Holland. "On the River Maas," J. Holland. "View on the Rhine," Captain J. D. King; Rev. J. H. Randolph, £20. "Market-place at Coutances," David Roberts, R.A. "On the Coast of Yorkshire," A. Clint; £50. "Shallow Streams," T. Creswick, A.R.A.; — Musgrave, Esq. "A Break in the River," T. Creswick, A.R.A.; — Musgrave, Esq. "The Oak in Polstead Park," F. Lee, R.A. "Interior of a Welsh Cottage," E. A. Goodall. "The Shrine of St. Edward the Confessor," Westminster Abbey, E. A. Goodall. "The Abbey of St. Amand, Rouen," E. A. Goodall. "Fruit," G. Lance, 100 gs. "Fruit," G. Lance. "A Triograph," G. Lance. "A Slave," G. Lance. "An Israelite Indeed," W. Etty, R.A. "A Magdalen Reading," W. Etty, R.A. "Reposing after Bathing," W. Etty, R.A. "Entrance of Portsmouth Harbour," A. Vickers; James Weatherby, Esq., £8. "A Moorish Girl," T. Elderby; — Maitsland, Esq., £40. "Leander," statue in marble, W. C. Marshall. "Mungo and his Master," G. Cole. "Three to One," J. F. Pasmore. "Heidelberg on the Neckar," G. C. Stanfield, jun.; Edward Wilkinson, Esq. "The Way to Bembridge, Isle of Wight," A. Vickers; J. H. Mann, Esq. "Industry and Idleness," R. Ferrier; J. H. Mann, Esq., £30. "A Bacchante," J. P. Drew; J. H. Mann, Esq., 10 gs. "Enjoying a Snooze," H. Tiffin; R. H. Hand, Esq., 6 gs. "Interior of a Stable," Harry Hall; T. Jackson, Esq., 40 gs. "Study of an Indian's Head," J. E. Millais; Jonathan Peel, Esq., —. "The Village Church," H. J. Boddington; Charles Brind, Esq., £40. "Waiting for the Squire," H. Jutsum; Charles Brind, Esq., £35. "Scene in North Wales," J. Middleton; Colonel Hardwick, 20 gs. "Scotch Shepherd and Dogs," Thomas Woodward; Colonel Hardwick, 35 gs. "An Interior," A. Provis; F. Gibson, Esq. "On the Banks of the Thames," A. Gilbert; Mrs. Faulkner. "Cattle by a River Side," J. Dearman, £10. "The Flower of the Scheldt," A. J. Woolmer; Colonel Hardwick, 16 gs.

SPRING-TIME.—PAINTED BY INSKIPP.

AN AVALANCHE IN SWITZERLAND.—A letter from Chamouni, in Switzerland, dated the 17th ult., contains the following: "The great quantity of snow that has latterly fallen made us dread some disaster, and one has occurred. At seven o'clock yesterday even.ng, a noise was heard of something breaking, and immediately after an avalanche was precipitated from the heights of the Aiguilles-Rouges on the hamlet of Chable, not far from the Prieuré. The first-named hamlet, in which were several manufactories, was completely buried in snow, and the river Arve, which flows through it, was blocked up, its waters extending far over the plain. Eleven persons of one family, assembled in their common room, were protected by the resistance of a wall, and eventually contrived to escape through the roof. They immediately hastened to Prats to demand assistance, but, on returning, it was impossible to discover the site of the houses, more snow having fallen. After, however, two days' labour, the people succeeded in discovering six persons living, and seven dead; but there is little hope that any of the other inhabitants of the hamlet, of whom no traces have yet been found, will be discovered alive. All the fuel and food and other stores that the inhabitants had laid in for the winter have been buried by the avalanche, leaving them without any resource; and it is almost impossible, from the famine that exists, for the inhabitants of the valley to render them any assistance."

THE LATE MR. WARD.—The will of the late Thomas Ward, Esq., the eminent shipowner, has been proved in Doctors' Commons, by Sir W. Henry Richardson, Knight, and Norman M'Cleod and G. H. Stephenson, Esquires, the executors. Personalty sworn under £250,000. The testator has also left extensive freehold estates in Middlesex, for which county he served the office of Sheriff in 1829. Among other bequests, he has left £500 to the London Hospital, £500 to the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, £500 to the Ratcliffe Dispensary, and £500 to the Ratcliffe Charity School.

STATISTICS OF TRANSPORTS.—It appears from a recently printed Parliamentary volume on "Transportation and Convict Discipline," that on the 1st of January, 1846, the total number of convicts in Van Diemen's Land was 28,549, of whom 7,236 were holding tickets of leave, 12,340 were pass holders, and 10,473 were in the probation gangs. Of the 12,240 pass holders, 3,900 were unable to find work, and of the probationers 3,852 would receive passes in the year 1846. Of convicts sentenced to transportation in England, the number received into Millbank Prison in 1843 was 3,394, of whom 2,420 were sent to Van Diemen's Land; in 1844 the number received was 3,250, of whom 1,886 were sent to the colony, and in 1845 the number was 3,229, of whom 1,629 were sent to the same colony. By an order of the present Government transportation of male convicts to the colony of Van Diemen's Land has been discontinued.

PASTIME OF NEAPOLITAN PEASANTS UNDER THE ROYAL PALACE OF PAUSILIPO.—PAINTED BY PARROTT.

NEWTON ABBOT AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S PLOUGHING MATCH.

NEWTON ABBOT PLOUGHING MATCH.

On Monday, the 25th ult, the Ninth Annual Ploughing Match of the Newton Abbot Agricultural and Labourers' Friend Society took place on three fields in Buckland Barton, in the parish of Coombeinteignhead, the property of Sir W. D. Carew, Bart., in the occupation of Mr. Elias Rendell. A more beautiful locality, even among the unrivalled scenery of Devon, could not have been selected; fronting the river Teign, and affording a picturesque display of its course; on the right its estuary is seen most advantageously, the broad expanse of sea beyond it filling up the outline; whilst, on the left, the eye might wander many a mile ere it rested upon the lofty Dartmoor. The day was brilliantly fine, and the match, which comprised forty-nine competitors, attracted a great number of spectators; and the gaiety of the scene was much heightened by the performances of the Teignmouth brass-band.

At the conclusion of the match the company returned to Bearley's Globe Hotel, in Newton, where the dinner was attended by a much larger number than was anticipated, there being present nearly one hundred and fifty of the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, and Yeomanry of the district. Sir John Buller Yarde Buller, Bart., M.P. for South Devon, presided; and among those present were the Earl of Devon; Lord Courtenay, M.P.; H. Cartwright, Esq., Ford; Rev. C. Wolston; H. L. Browne, Esq.; Rev. J. Comyns; C. Manning, Esq.; S. C. Farr, Esq.; J. C. Tozer, Esq.; J. P. P. Phillips, Esq.; Rev. J. W. Davis; Rev. T. Clark; R. Francis, Esq.; C. H. Monro, Esq.; Capt. Beazley; W. Flamank, Esq.; S. Whiteway, Esq.; Rev. Templer; W. Bartlett, Esq.; T. Lane, Esq.; H. B. Swete, Esq.; R. Lane, Esq.; Tossell, Esq. The Hon. T. B. Bruce officiated as Vice President. After the cloth had been withdrawn, and the usual loyal toasts drunk, the Secretary, (Mr. Rendell,) read the List of Prizes, to which the Silver Cup, given by H. Cartwright, Esq., was awarded to Mr. F. Angel, of Berry Pomeroy; and a Sweepstakes, as a second prize, to Mr. Thomas Elliott, of Torbryan.

CLASS I.—First Prizemen without Drivers.—Four Competitors.

Ploughmen.	Masters	Parish
First, Joseph Mardon,	Mr. Venning,	Berry Pomeroy.

CLASS II.—Ploughmen without Drivers.—Fifteen Competitors.

First, George Fletcher,	Mr. G. Harris,	Ipplepen.

CLASS III.—Ploughmen with Drivers.—Seven Competitors.

First, John Shilston,	Mr. Wm. Reed,	Bishopsteignton.

CLASS IV.—Ploughing one way with a Double Plough.—Eight Competitors.

First, Thomas Alward,	Mr. E. Rendell,	Coombeinteignhead.

CLASS V.—Under 18, without Drivers.—Four Competitors.

First, William Street,	Mr. E. Rendell,	Coombeinteignhead.

CLASS VI.—Under 18, with Drivers.—Three Competitors.

First, Wm. Coleman,	Mr. Creed,	Abbotskerswell.

The Judges for Ploughing were—Mr. Hodge, Cornworthy, Court Barton; Mr. Oldry, Canonteign; Mr. Coulton, Dean Court, Buckfastleigh.

A sum of from £50 to £60 was, also, distributed in premiums to Labourers for length of Service, bringing up of large families, &c.; thus affording encouragement to laudable exertions among the labouring population of the district. The longest period of service thus rewarded was 58¼ years.

After the distribution of the prizes, the hon. Chairman, in returning thanks for the company drinking his health, referred to the appearance of the boys in the ploughing field, who were ardently contesting for superiority; the great superiority of the ploughs, which were very different from those in use some years back; and the improvement in harness. Several other toasts were drunk, and the Earl of Devon, and Lord Courtenay, M.P., warmly congratulated the company upon the sons of farmers having competed for the silver cup.

COMMENCEMENT OF THE IPSWICH AND BURY ST. EDMUND'S RAILWAY—NORWICH EXTENSION.

THE works on the Norwich Extension of the Ipswich and Bury Railway, were commenced on Thursday, the 25th ult., with the customary ceremonies. The day was fine; the bells of St. Peter's Church rang merrily; the Royal standard floated from the Church Tower, and from the Royal Hotel; and at about noon, great number of spectators had assembled to witness the sight. The ground was inclosed on Mrs. Dashwood's property, and on Mr. Cyrus Gullett's farm, at the foot of a picturesque hill, having a view of the valley of the Tas river, and of Lakenham. The chosen site extends to the river. On the other side of the Lakenham; and it is proposed to cross the river over a high embankment and bridge. Here several tents were erected. Spanton's great booth was appropriated to the reception of the guests of the contractors (Messrs. Brassey and Co.); and another to "Howlett's Band," which played with great spirit.

Soon after one o'clock, the ceremony commenced; and the spade and barrow were taken to the appointed spot. The spade is a handsome implement, manufactured by Mr. Freeman and Mr. Thompson, of Norwich. The handle, of polished oak, is intertwined with the vine tendrils and leaf; and the spade is formed of polished steel. A silver plate on the handle exhibits a locomotive engine, with a legend around it, "Ipswich and Bury St. Edmund's

COMMENCEMENT OF THE IPSWICH AND BURY ST. EDMUND'S RAILWAY.

Railway Company:" and, underneath, "This spade was used for turning the first sod of the Norwich Extension of the Ipswich and Bury Railway, Thursday, the 25th day of February, 1847." The barrow is of oak, and was made by Mr. Jolly of Norwich; and the joints and edges are gilt. On the ends and sides of the interior are emblazoned, a locomotive, the Norwich, Ipswich, and Yarmouth arms.

The spot was marked out by flags; and, whilst the "Old Corporation" banners, which have been for many a day shrouded in obscurity, floated in the wind, others, bearing the arms of Norwich, Yarmouth, and Ipswich, were exhibited at different parts of the ground. Amongst the company present, were the Mayor and Sheriff of Norwich, J. C. Cobbold, W. Burroughes, and G. Josselyn, Esqs., of Ipswich; J. Grayston, Esq., York; Sir W. Foster, Bart., S. Bignold, Esq., E. Willett, Esq., A. A. H. Beckwith, Esq., J. Wright, Esq., J. G. Johnson, Esq., J. H. Barnard, Esq., A. Towler, Esq., J. Hardy, Esq., J. Norrate, Esq., J. H. Lowry, Esq., J. Nunn, Esq., J. C. Culley, Esq., and a great many other gentlemen of the city and neighbourhood.

J. C. Cobbold, Esq., commenced by taking the spade, and, addressing the Mayor, invited his assistance

The Mayor then took off his coat, and, in a workmanlike style, turned up the first sods, filling the barrow with earth, which Mr. Cobbold wheeled away amid loud huzzas

Mr. Hardy and Mr. Bruff (the engineer of the railway) then went through the same ceremony, and addressed the company; as did, also, the Sheriff of Norwich (Mr. C. Winter), and Mr. Grayston, of York; Mr. J. D. Burroughes, of Ipswich, and Mr. J. Wright; Mr. R. Cobbold, Mr. Josselyn; Mr. Culley, of Cossey, and Sir William Foster; Mr. Roger Kerrison, &c.

The gentlemen present then proceeded to partake of an elegant collation, provided by Mr. Howell, of the Royal Hotel, in a spacious marquée. There was a profusion of the delicacies of the season, and wines of first-rate quality.

The marquée was very tastefully fitted up, and decorated with banners. A table ran nearly the whole length, with cross ends at the top and bottom, the Chairman's seat being placed in the centre.

After the usual loyal toasts had been drunk, Mr. Hardy proposed the toast of the evening, the health of Mr. John Chevallier Cobbold, the speaker felicitously observing: —"They looked to Mr Cobbold as the chief promoter of the undertaking, and he was entitled to all their esteem for the manner in which he served the city of Norwich. They were indebted to him for carrying out the grand scheme for this district—the first sanctioned by Parliament—the Eastern Counties scheme for a direct line to Norwich. (Cheers.) Mr. Cobbold had had arduous labours to perform, difficulties to overcome, and, therefore, they might regard him as the Suffolk Railway King. (Cheers.) He stood up for his county, in maintaining the direction of the railway in its natural course. He began with the line from Colchester to Ipswich, and he succeeded in carrying it out, a d he had proceeded onward to Norwich. (Cheers.) He was at the first meeting in Norwich, when Mr. Cobbold made his appearance, and promised his co-operation in carrying out the line to Norwich. Had he not fulfilled that promise? He had had overtures made to him from every quarter, but he stood stanch to his flag" (Cheers.)

Mr. Cobbold's health was then drunk with enthusiasm; and, that gentleman having returned thanks, the Mayor, in a complimentary manner, proposed the healths of Messrs. Brassey and Company, the contractors, with three times three The toast was responded to with enthusiasm; as were the healths of Mr. Locke and Mr. Bruff, the engineers of the line; also, several other toasts, which we regret we have not room to report.

A large number of people during the afternoon, enjoyed themselves in Mr. Spanton's booth, on the top of the hill, which was decorated for the occasion, and they were entertained by two bands of music playing alternately.

In the evening, the Victoria Gardens were brilliantly illuminated: a brass band was in attendance; Mr. Caston, the proprietor, gave away two barrels of beer, and there was a grand display of fireworks. A large number of persons assembled, and enjoyed themselves, though the evening turned out very cold, and between ten and eleven o'clock snow began to fall.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 7. Third Sunday in Lent—Perpetua.
MONDAY, 8. Old St. Matthias—The Sun is due ♓ at 5h. 55m., p.m
TUESDAY, 9.—Jupiter souths at 29m. after 8, p.m., and sets 1h. 31m. after midnight
WEDNESDAY, 10.—The Moon enters her last quarter at 39m. after 4, a.m.
THURSDAY, 11.—Mercury visible to the naked eye in the evenings during this week; near the bright planet Venus.
FRIDAY, 12.—St. Gregory. Venus precedes Uranus by 2m.
SATURDAY, 13.—Venus follows Uranus by 2m.; and both in the field of view of the telescope at the same time. (See "Illustrated London Almanack.")

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 13

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m	M. h m	A. h m
5 0	5 16	5 32	5 48	6 3	6 19	6 34	6 50	7 7	7 23	7 40	7 58	8 20	8 39	9 2	9 23	9 53	10 25	11 18

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. B."—Inquire of a Music-seller, for a Flute teacher at a shilling a lesson.

"A Love of Music."—Apply to Mr. Hullah, at the Rooms, in St. Martin's-lane: but our Correspondent has stated enough to prove the folly of assuming his voice to become a tenor

"Margaret."—Bellini died at the age of 35, in 1837. He composed "Adelson and Salvina" in 1824, his first opera and first "Bianca e Gernando" in 1827, he wrote the "Pirata" for the Scala, in Milan, for Rubini: in 1828, the "Straniera," for Tamburini and Madme. Merie Lalande; then the "Capuletti ed i Montechi," for Venice, for Schoberlechner, "La Prata, in Athen; and "Norma," for her and for Malebran. "Beatrice di Tenda" followed "Norma." In 1833, he visited London, and in 1834 produced his "Puritani" in Paris, for that unrivalled troupe comprising Grisi, Rubini, Tamburini, and Lablache—a cast that will never again be heard, and can indeed only be heard in one epoch

"A. Heathfield."—We can see no advice on the matter

"Dibdin's Songs"—Davidson's edition is published in three-penny weekly sheets, and monthly Shilling Parts, two of which have appeared. Apply to the Publisher, Water-street, Blackfriars.

"Jerome." "Dunny."—is correct.

"A. G. G."—The rank of the three principal ports of the kingdom is 1. London; 2 Liverpool: 3. Newcastle

"G M" We have not room for the Lines

"Can Bono."—The authors of the "Rejected Addresses" were Messrs. James and Horace Smith.

"A B." Brixton The premium of apprenticeship for a boy on board an East or West Indiaman, for three years, is commonly £50, outfit from £20 to £30.

"James B" Declined

"W. W. H." can only proceed by action at law, though his position would be, by no means, an enviable one

"G. W. R." The only true method of ascertaining when Railways now in progress are to be opened, is to apply at the Company's Offices

"J. J. L."—Apply to Mr. Sutherland, Bookseller, Edinburgh

"J. M. R." A bookbinder in the country may purchase the covers for either of our Volumes: the usual charge for over-sewing and binding is 5s

"Confidential."—The Charade has been solved.

"R. B.'s" is a medical request

"F. W. M" We thank the error has already been corrected.

"A Country Cousin."—We really cannot answer for the identities of the Ethiopian (!) performers.

"Neil." By way of preparation, read "The Boat and the Caravan, a Family Tour through Egypt and Syria," just published.

"A Country Subscriber" should apply to Mr. Lumley, bookseller, 36, Chancery-lane.

"A Subscriber," Wells—The price of the Knitting-book is 1s: it may be obtained by order of any bookseller.

"J. T. B" should advertise

"A Constant Reader." —Vidal's "Currents" will be found engraved in No. 202 of our Journal. The Satanic subject suggested is not to our taste.

"G. B. W.'s" letter did not reach us in time.

"W. W." Woodbridge, is thanked, though we have not room to engrave the subjects suggested.

"T. W. J.," Highgate, should buy Black's "Picturesque Tourist and Road-book of England and Wales."

"R. W. J.," Hull, should apply to a Seal Engraver. We cannot "find" crests and arms

"A Peninsular Officer," Gatcude, has subjected us to the expense of one shilling postage. The Medals, we presume, will be shortly forthcoming.

"E. S."—Plus is the nom artistique of Mr. Hablot Browne, the illustrator of Mr. Dickens's works

"T. T. H." "The Picture of London," edited by Mr. Britton, is one of the most accredited works of its class

"G. W. S."—Write to the Artists at Davenport.

"dgram." -We do not understand the question.

"L. H.," Cambridge A name or initial written upon a newspaper sent by post, will subject it to the charge of postage

"Cantab" is thanked for the Newspaper: the Sketch did not reach us in time.

"A Constant Reader," Islington.—See the Engravings of India Fowls in No. 85 of our Journal.

"H. D" is thanked; but we have not room for the Lines.

"E. G. H." See the Processes for preparing Gun Cotton, in the "Year-book of Facts, 1847," just published

"Fanny." —Taylor's "Treatise on Drawing" is, we believe, out of print.

"Delta" should apply to the Registrar of his district.—The Government Annuity Office, Old Jewry

"C. B.," Jersey. The original price was 2½d.

"An Admirer" can only obtain the information as to the fate of his Lottery Ticket of 1805, through a Stock-broker

"A Carvesgate Subscriber" is thanked for his suggestions as to the change of name, transfer of time, &c.: we have not got either hint

"Milton Regis." has not had letter about the distribution

"A. H." Otto

"A Constant Reader, Bermondsey," shall please the Statute of Limitations until 1848

"D. D." Wait a month

"H. S." Kentish-Town—The matter is under consideration.

The Cambridge Election Squibs" will not suit.

"Truth." —One of Lord A 's cousins is in the Royal Artillery; the other, in the 89th Regiment

"W. J. H." The late Duke of Northumberland and the present Earl of Beverley were cousins germain, their fathers having been brothers.

"An Inquiring Subscriber." The present Emperor of Brazil was married in 1843 to Theresa, daughter of Francis I., King of the Two Sicilies, but we do not know what children (if any) he has. A reference to this year's "Almanac de Gotha" will tell

"A. E. S." Beauchamp is pronounced Bétcham.

"Friar Dan."—The present Duke of Northumberland has no child. His Grace's heir-presumptive is the Earl of Beverley.

"A. B." A commission in the French Service can be obtained either by entering as a private, and rising by promotion; or by passing an exam ination for the Ecoles Polytechnique, or St. Cyr. There are no other means of entry.

"Aspirant." A candidate for admission into any of the Learned or Scientific Societies of London must be proposed by some one member, and seconded by another; after which, he will be balloted for. The addresses of the Secretaries may be found in the "Post-Office London Directory;" and those gentlemen will, on appl cation, offer i every information. A letter addressed to Mr. Burke, author of the "Peerage," care of Mr. Colburn, 13, Great Marlborough-street, will obtain for our Correspondent the knowledge he seeks.

BREAD. —We have received from Mr. Ingles, of New-street, Covent-garden, a loaf of Bread, made with half parmiga, and half English flour; and another loaf, made with seven-eighths Indian Corn Meal, and an eighth part English flour. Both are very palatable; but the maker has not stated the cost

"An Orphan" is recommended not to calculate on the employment in question.

"A Lodger" should state his case to the Health of Towns Association.

"M. S.," Shrewsbury. -The person named was not, in any way, related to the Kemble family

"H. C. P.," Liverpool, is thanked; but we have not room for the Sketch.

"R. J. J.," Peterborough.—We cannot spare space.

"M. N." Hornchurch.—A Savings' Bank.

"A Surrey-Man," Brighton. Farm Mead, and an excellent English flour. Both are very palatable; but the maker has not stated the cost

"An Orphan" is recommended not to calculate on the employment in question.

"A Lodger" should state his case to the Health of Towns Association.

"M. S.," Shrewsbury. -The person named was not, in any way, related to the Kemble family

"H. C. P.," Liverpool, is thanked; but we have not room for the Sketch.

"R. J. J.," Peterborough.—We cannot spare space.

"M. N." Hornchurch.—A Savings' Bank.

"A Surrey-Man," Brighton. Farm Mead, and Land, Watchmakers, Cornhill.

"T. W." near Chippenham. The price of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," 21 vols. quarto, last edition, is £31 16s. The plates are not coloured.

"A Subscriber." The dress of Mrs. Gore's "Knitting Receipt Book" is 6d.

"A Constant Subscriber."—"Lenny's English Grammar," to be had, by order, of any Bookseller

"F. P. P.," Fleet-street. -The fluted Skate is usually used for beginners.

"Another Admirer," Manchester.—Lucile Grahn, as stated formerly in the biographical sketch in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, is of Danish birth and parentage; grand-daughter of a Noblemen and Minister of State, degraded from his rank in the days of Struensee. She made her début at thirteen, at Copenhagen, in the part of Marguerite, in "Faust"

"A. B. P."—was a note in publication, containng Specimens of the Speeches of distinguished Orators

"Old Subscriber," Bath. -The Epact for the year 1847 is 14. (See the "Illustrated London Almanack" for the present year.) For calculations of Eclipses, see the Appendix to the "Nautical Almanack" for 1835

"Chisholm," Sleaford. The back Numbers of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS cannot be forwarded to India postage free.

"S. H." should advertise in a Colchester newspaper for the Register in question.

"J. B." Probably, Mr. Hinton, School Agent, 30, Soho-square.

"W. P." Stepney. Declined.

"J. N.," Darlaston.—Shop-keepers, generally, are liable for "Sunday Trading."

"A Subscriber," Leominster. -Harding's "Park and Forest Trees," A guinea.

"M.," Lynn. No. 98 of our Journal, containng a Portrait of Mr. John O'Connell, M.P., can only be obtained in the Volume.

"A Constant Reader since 1844." —No. 71 of our Journal, containing a Portrait of Mr. Puttison, M.P., can only be purchased in the Volume.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK

Heroines of Shakspeare, Part 11.—Ralph the Gipsy.—Free Thoughts on Protestant Matters. By the Rev. T. D. Gregg.—Knight's National Cyclopædia, Part 2.—Carpenter's Cyclopædia. Part 1.—Scotland Delineated. Part 2.—Observations on Naval Affairs. By the Earl of Dundonald.—Knight's History of England, during the Three Years' Peace.

MUSIC.—Merrily Gildeth the Life of each Fairy. W. M. Tolkien.—Poor Mary. By A. Lee.—Ye are Lovely Hopes. By C. E. Horn.—The Arundel Waltzes. By J. B. Lee.—Anthems and Services. No. 12.—The Music Book. Part 5.—Haydn's Creation. Novello. Nos. 4 and 5.—Handel's Messiah. Novello. Nos. 7 and 8.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION.—COMPLETE.

THE NEW TESTAMENT;

WITH UPWARDS OF

SIXTY ILLUSTRATIONS BY KENNY MEADOWS,

AND OTHER EMINENT ARTISTS

A Large Copper-plate View of the Holy Land, and Notes, Historical and Descriptive

London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. Sold by all Booksellers.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ONLY!

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1847.

THE discussion on the Poor Removal Act of last session has been a most edifying one; it has laid bare most completely the mechanics of law-making, and shown how a whole Legislature may bend all its faculties to the construction of an Act, which, when put into operation, turns out not only different from what was intended—for that often happens—but the very reverse of what was contemplated. It was meant to make all persons who had resided five years in a parish irremoveable in case of becoming chargeable; but by some oversight, the wording of one of the provisions makes the operation of the Act prospective, and this has set half the parishes in England at work getting rid of paupers who have nearly completed the term of industrial residence, causing much hardship and suffering, which every one of those who passed it, say they never intended. The whole debate on Tuesday, which was raised entirely on this legislative blunder, was an instance of grave and reverend seniors using the schoolboy's excuse, "I didn't mean to do it." But whether meant or not, it is done; and what is worse, there is no small difficulty in the way of undoing it. The whole of our complex laws of settlement are under consideration, a complete change and reorganization being intended, and this unlucky act of last session must be treated as part and parcel of the entire system. A large section of members wish to repeal it at once, or to pass "a clause to explain" what failed to explain itself; but as far as can be gathered by those who must from "indirections find directions out," the Government will back Sir J. Graham, the author of the Bill; he resists any alteration for the error's sake; when the whole fabric is rebuilt, the new porch just added will harmonise with it, though at present a little out of keeping. Knock down the "old Gothic" structure so full of crooked passages, and then the Greek entrance will be unexceptionable; in the meantime pruned directions are to be issued to show how people are to go in and out. It would seem the most obvious course to accommodate the less to the greater, and make the part suit the whole, rather than wait till the whole is remodelled to agree with the part. But opinions differ, and as the act itself, though extended in a wrong direction by a mistake, appears to contain some good provisions, we will not take on ourselves to decide. The measure, however, has read the Legislature two good lessons, of which not the least valuable is this—that laws passed avowedly as "a boon" to any class whatever, if they take the shape of favours and exceptional enactments, are pretty sure to be mischievous, and not seldom to the very class intended to be benefited. The Poor Removal Act was one of the "compensation" measures meant to lessen the opposition of the Landed Interest to the abolition of the Corn Laws. The large manufacturing towns have absorbed a great deal of labour from the rural districts, and during the fierce debates of former years, the facility with which those towns could throw off those who had worn out their years and strength in mills and factories, and send them back to the country parishes again, was often made a very telling point against the "selfish" capitalists. The bill was passed, then, to make "industrial residence" a legal settlement. Bad as factory labour is said to be, there are no instances of men quitting it for rural employment; there is always an absorption going on from the rural districts to the towns. So far the bill told certainly in favour of the land. But another thing had been overlooked, which was the interchange of labour between counties and parishes purely agricultural. Some of the country parishes find themselves saddled all at once with paupers long resident in other places, also agricultural; and where there are what is called close parishes, which belong to a single proprietor, who has discouraged as much as possible a resident population, which involves "birth" settlements, this bill has given a power of getting rid of the few liabilities that did rest upon them. The remedy will, ere long, be a Union, or a national rate, for which the landed interest itself is beginning to call. The rural districts find themselves as much burdened by the clearances from each other, as from those manufacturing abodes of Mammon which have afforded such materials for declamation. Men should be chary of making charges of class oppression and selfishness; we fear none can be found justified in casting the first stone. The landed interest charged the manufacturers with a greedy monopoly, and the old law of settlement in getting rid of a burden; a new law—or hardly that, a blunder in a new law—enables the Agriculturists to do the same; and they are by no means slow in using the opportunity. Mutual defects should teach us mutual forbearance. It is the greatest danger of bad laws that they demoralise society; men will rarely refrain from doing anything, however cruel and unjust, if it happen to be legal: the higher law, the lex non Scripta, is weak beside them. Let human law ally itself to human selfishness, and woe to all who become subjected to it.

The other lesson to be derived from this by no means solitary blunder in an Act of Parliament, is rather one of grammar than morality. The Legislature must soon learn to write its laws in the English language, and not in that absurd jargon which, though created by lawyers, often cannot be understood either by lawyers themselves or by any one else. We cannot believe that the language Shakspeare and Milton found equal to the expression of every minute shade of thought and meaning, from the highest soarings of sublimity to the most playful flights of fancy, cannot be made to convey clearly the regulations for the management of paupers, if a little sound judgment were only brought to bear on the subject. Lord Brougham's proposition on the subject is a good one; there should be some revision of a law as a whole before it is tried in practice. At present, a score or two of legislators patch and tinker up an Act, each contributing an amendment, or an addition, till nobody can tell what it means; and when put to the test of action, it turns out, if it has any meaning at all, to be directly contrary to what was intended?

In connection with this subject, we publish a communication we have received, showing what oppression can be practised under the present imperfect system of Settlement; we have no doubt that similar cases are by no means rare, though, perhaps, not quite so bad as this one:—

Jas. Walker, belongs to Stainbro, a parish near Barsley, and, in the winter of 1844, lived at Attercliffe, in the Sheffield Union, and was compelled during that winter to apply to the overseers of Stainbro for relief; they gave him 4s. 6d. a day for himself, his wife, and family; but compelled him daily to walk from Attercliffe to Stainbro, a distance of about thirteen miles, and back; and his wife stated that her husband used to leave home about half-past seven in the morning, to get to Stainbro between twelve and one, worked on the roads until four, and then walked thirteen miles home; and that, in consequence of want of food, and having this shameful task to perform for upwards of six months during the winter, he had never been himself since.

THE REPRESENTATIVE SYSTEM.

THE granting of the Prussian Constitution has given so little power into the hands of the people, and reserved so much in the hands of the Crown, that in its examination, a more device to get money through taxation, without exposing the King to the odium of taking it by his own act; it is a cleverly devised scheme for making it appear to the nation that they are taxing themselves, while, in fact, they have no real voice in the matter. This is an old and approved plan; the forms of a Constitutional Government have often been adopted by despotic Monarchs with great success. Where the Crown commands a majority in the Chambers, it does exactly as it likes; while the nation, blinded to the vision of self-government, cannot oppose the acts of its own representatives. This advantage has been cleverly pointed out by an able French writer, P. L. Courier, whose caustic satire, it is believed, cost him his life. At the time King Ferdinand of Spain was playing fast and loose with his oaths and pledges, and wavering between his hatred of the very name of Charters and Constitutions, and the promises he had made to the Spanish people to observe them, the writer we have named published one of his short, pithy letters, in which, with quiet irony, he lays bare the whole system of Government by a Court, through the forms by which a people are deluded into the belief that they are governing themselves. He represents Louis the Eighteenth writing confidentially to his Royal Cousin, at Madrid, to calm the fears he had expressed of a Constitution, and to point out its convenience if properly managed. Having expressed his perfect sympathy with the principles of Absolutism, and that "right divine of Kings to govern wrong," of which the Bourbons were always so tenacious, he still can modify his principles in this manner:—

Thus, you see, my Cousin, I entirely share your Royal sentiments on this subject, and pray Heaven to continue you in them; still I am not at all of your opinion as to what kind of Representative Government is necessary, and which I call "recreative" —for I know nothing in the world so amusing, not to speak of the no small convenience that results from it. I love Absolutism, but this—for what it produces—is the pleasure of life, and the connection between them. The Representative System suits me wonderfully -provided, always, that I nominate the Deputies, which we have here very happily and completely effected. We live under it in the midst of Luxury and Abundance; the money descends in showers; only ask my nephew, Angoulême: we reckon by thousands of millions—or rather, to say the truth, we have ceased to reckon at all, since we obtained what is called "unlimited credit," which expresses, certainly, but only a tribe. My hundred votes cost me every year about a month of Madame de Cayla; with these at our command, everything goes smoothly: money without stint or measure, and the right divine on our part of losing nothing, whatever may happen:—

Your Cortes have disgusted you with deliberative assemblies; but one experiment is never decisive: my late brother made at awkward business of it; yet that has not prevented me from trying again and succeeding

I confess I thought as you do, before my residence in England; I did not like the Representative scheme at all; but there I saw what it really is. If our friend the Sultan had but an idea of it, he could wish for nothing better, and would turn his Divan into two Chambers immediately. Try it, try it, my dear Cousin, and then tell me your opinion. You will soon find that your Indies, your galleons, your Peruvian mines, are but pitiful things, compared with a Budget discussed and voted by loyal Deputies

The words Liberty, Publicity, Representation, must not frighten you. The Representation is only a comedy, played for our benefit, of which the profit is immense, and the danger nothing. An illustration may make the matter more clear to you, perhaps. Did you ever see the steam digester, that produces a basin of rich soup every minute, and knows how to manage it, but which may burst and kill you, if you are not careful? That is the thing exactly—just such a machine is Representative Government. You have only to heat it to the right point—neither too much nor too little: a very nice thing—which is, besides, the business of your Ministers and the soup is a thousand millions. Talk of your absolute power after this! What did it produce my poor late brother? Three or four hundred millions a year—and with what difficulty! Every one of my Budgets is ten times the amount, without the slightest trouble! Come, lay aside your little aversions, my Cousin, and let us share our good things en famille. Of course, we must have an understanding with each other, in case of accidents.

* * * * * * *

I could re-establish you on the throne a dozen times, if necessary, without the least inconvenience in the world, and without the expenditure of a sous. On the contrary, I can let you and your subjects have as much money as you like. I pay everybody, everywhere, for everything. I have paid for my Restoration, and will pay for years. I paid the Foreign Powers, when they were sore. I'll pay you, if ever I'm forced on a visit. Occupied or occupying, I pay for the occupation. I paid Sacken and Pilatow; I pay Murillo and Ballesteros; I pay Cabinets and Governments, I pay the Cortes and the Regency, and I pay the Swiss; and, besides paying all these, I have still enough to keep up my guard, a house here, which is really very passable, and other things which naturally cost me something. The Budget covers all; and all this springs from that Representative System of which you have made a scarecrow! Fully, fully, my Cousin! There is nothing equal to it!

To construct this machine for you, and set it at work without the slightest danger to your Royal person, I will send you, if you like, M. Villele—an admirable man—and a score of Prefets. You may rely upon them; in less than no time they will organise two Chambers and a Ministry, behind which you may go to sleep, while they coin money for you. From the serene height of your revolving position, as General Fop says, you will have the amusement of watching their debates the drollest things conceivable! They are often perfect cat and dog fights for the bone; when the Budget is voted, and their sinews become troublesome, you have but to throw a few pails of water over them

Grant a Constitutional Charter, then, my Cousin, immediately, and all that accompanies it—the Franchise, Right of Petition, Liberty of Conscience, Freedom of Press—grant all, and stick at nothing. More especially, do not omit making a new Aristocracy to mix with the old one—another kind of amusement which will keep you in good spirits and temper for a long while; without it there is at the Tuileries we should die of ennui. When you have settled with your liberals, under the guarantee of foreign powers, and have sworn an oblivion of the past to all the Progressistas, hang five or six of them directly; and others will be encouraged, and make the rest jump and Pearn, especially if any of them have been footmen and stable-boys. The advocates, authors, and philosophers, announced of equality, cover them with orders, and load them with old titles of new parchments. Then look at them quarrelling their arms and mounting their crests among your Guzmans and Salontas—and I defy you to be melancholy. It is a comedy that never wearies, and will be to your subjects as good as a perpetual carnival.

THE RUSSO-DUTCH LOAN.

THE history of the Russo-Dutch Loan is but little understood; and no wonder; a more egregious piece of folly than the act which encumbered England with such a contract was never perpetrated. It seemed in 1815, to be the express vocation of the English Ministry to give up every advantage we had gained during the war, and to pay every power of Europe for their condescending to receive back what they had lost. We had taken some Dutch colonies during the conflict; that we chose to give them back at the Peace was not much to be condemned; but that we should agree to pay three millions for the annexation of Belgium to Holland is a marvel of absurdity. Like the restoration of the Bourbons, all the settlements we paid so dearly for, were knocked to pieces within a few years; a sign there was no natural strength in them. We subjoin an explanation of the miserable transaction:—

By a convention, signed on the 13th of August, 1814, between the Cabinets of Great Britain and the Netherlands, the Dutch colonies conquered by Great Britain were restored to their former owners, and England agreed to contribute to the arrangements for annexing the Belgic provinces to Holland by paying one million sterling to Sweden, and a further sum of two millions sterling for the defence of the Low Countries, on these conditions the Cape of Good Hope and British Guiana were ceded to England. By a further treaty, dated the 19th of May, 1815, the King of the Netherlands, together with the Prince of Orange, made to the Emperor of Russia the services rendered to the Netherlands in the course of the war, took upon himself the sum of 25 millions of florins, being a part of the capital and arrears of interest of the Russian loan made to Holland, which the King of England took upon his Government an equal sum. That sum was, and still is, in fact, paid by us for Holland to Russia. The payment was made contingent on the maintenance of the union of the Belgic provinces with Holland, and we were moved to make it in consideration of the acquisition of some of the Dutch colonies.

When Belgium separated from Holland, the English Government very gratuitously renewed its engagement by express treaty with Russia itself, under the old delusion of the "Balance of Power." It has cost this country more millions than would suffice to make Ireland a garden of the earth. But as the payment was to be conditional on the maintenance of the provisions of the Treaty of Vienna, which Russia has openly violated, it is believed that the contract, as far as we are concerned, is void. Dr. Addams, the eminent civilian, has given a formal opinion to this effect; the question was discussed on Thursday, on Mr Hume's motion. It is one of the worst engagements of the worst era of our annals, when our Government seemed to have a perfect mania for covering the Continent with English gold.

THE WEATHER.

During the week the sky has been generally covered by cloud; the wind has been principally from the E. and the N.E.; the weather has been generally fine but occasionally excessively cold. The hygrometrical state of the air, from February 25 to March 1 inclusive, has been very remarkable, on account of its excessive dryness, the average quantity of water in a cubic foot of air during this interval being less than one grain and a half, being about one half the usual quantity at this period; in consequence all moisture evaporated from the skin so quickly as to cause a great sensation of cold, to a degree much below that indicated by the thermometer. This was particularly the case on Saturday and Sunday. On Monday it was not so dry, and since then the due quantity of moisture has been mixed with the air, which has felt soft and pleasant. The average temperature of Thursday was 36½° of Friday was 32½°; of Saturday was 30½°; of Sunday was 26°; of Monday was 33°; of Tuesday was 43°; and of Wednesday was 31°. The extreme thermometrical readings each day were—

Thursday,	Feb. 25,	the highest during the day was 43; deg., and the lowest was	29 deg.
Friday,	Feb. 26	,, ,, ,,	26
Saturday,	Feb. 27	,, ,, ,,	24½
Sunday,	Feb. 28	,, ,, ,,	23
Monday,	March 1	,, ,, ,,	30
Tuesday,	March 2	,, ,, ,,	40
Wednesday,	March 3	,, ,, ,,	29

Blackheath, Thursday, March 4, 1847. J. G.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

PERSECUTION OF MISS BURDETT COUTTS BY MR. DUNN.

In the Court of QUEEN'S BENCH, last Saturday, Mr. Dunn, the Irish barrister, was tried before Lord Denman and a Special Jury, on an indictment for perjury.

Sir F. Thesiger, Q.C., Mr. Clarkson, and Mr. Hawkins were counsel for the prosecution; the defendant acted as his own counsel. The prosecutrix, Miss Angela Burdett Coutts, is a partner in the banking-house of Coutts and Co., and preferred this indictment against the defendant, Mr. Dunn, a member of the Irish bar, for perjury alleged to have been committed by him in swearing an affidavit in the Court of Bankruptcy, with the ostensible object of obtaining from that lady, under composition of the bankrupt laws, payment of the sum of £100,000. The material part of the affidavit, which was sworn under the 6th and 6th Vict., c. 122, s. 67, before a registrar of the Court on March 30, 1846, when the Court was not sitting, was in these words:—"Richard Dunn maketh oath, and saith that A. B. Coutts is justly and truly indebted to this deponent, Richard Dunn, in the sum of £100,000, by virtue of a certain bill drawn by this deponent on the bank of Messrs. Coutts and Co., by the especial authority in writing given by the said A. B. Coutts to this deponent, which was given in exercising her power of nomination to vacant offices and emoluments in the gift of Coutts and Co., and is a trader within the statute, as this deponent verily believes." The "bill" was in fact an order thus worded:—"6th March, 1846. Messrs. Coutts and Co. Pay myself, or order, one hundred thousand pounds. (signed) A. B. Coutts." The "especial authority in writing," alleged in the affidavit to have been given by Miss Coutts, consisted of the last two stanzas of a copy of doggrel verses which the defendant had himself sent to her within the last few years by the defendant, to her solicitor, and to others, the handwriting was recognised on the superscription, and unread, so soon as others, not so superscribed, were found to be his, and that her solicitor had general directions that every legal measure to protect her from the defendant should be taken; that she had not given authority for paying the sum in question, or any other sum, to the defendant; and that she never was indebted to him in any way. Mr. Marjoribanks and Sir Edmund Antrobus, who are partners of Miss Coutts; Mr. Humphries, her solicitor; and two of the clerks in the bank of Coutts and Co., deposed, in substance, to the effect, that the defendant had twice presented the order for payment, and had each time been refused; that on these occasions he had produced the same verses as before, and had been distinctly told that it was not in the handwriting of Miss Coutts; and that he had written letters, the object of which was to induce Miss Coutts or her partners, under the bankrupt laws, or by intimidation, or by reluctance to encounter the annoyance of legal proceedings, however ill-founded, to compromise his alleged claim by payment of the sum of £.00,000. The cross-examination of these witnesses was directed towards creating the inference that Miss Coutts, by not writing herself to the defendant, or authorising others to write to him, for the purpose of assuring him that she had not written the supposed authority, had confirmed the defendant in the delusion that it had been written by her; that her partners had, in like manner, and also by not giving the defendant into custody when he presented his order at the bank, strengthened his belief that the authority to draw on the house had come from her; and that Mr. Humphries had likewise contributed to this error, by the hostile bearing which he had exhibited towards the defendant.

[In the course of his cross-examination of Miss Coutts, the defendant put into the hands of that lady a letter written by her father, the late Sir Francis Burdett. Her struggle with the emotions which the sight of the handwriting caused, and the strongest indignation of the audience against the defendant, and, as it appeared, of the noble and learned Lord who presided.]

The defendant addressed the Jury at some length, urging the points indicated by the cross-examination, and protesting his belief that the sufferings and persecution which he had met with from Miss Coutts and her friends, had led to the affidavit which he had been induced to make him compensation, and had left that sum due to him from the Court of Bankruptcy jurisdiction to admit. He therefore sent him the authority on which he had acted. He then called witnesses to prove that he had received the alleged authority by post, and that he had compared the handwriting with that of Miss Coutts, and, from the result of that comparison, was justified in arriving at the conclusion which had dictated his subsequent conduct.

Lord Denman having summed up, the Jury at once returned a verdict of "Guilty."

The defendant then moved in arrest of judgment on two grounds first, that the affidavit did not allege a positive debt by Miss Coutts, but a hypothetical debt only, depending on the fact whether or not the authority had been signed by her, and therefore had not given to the Court of Bankruptcy jurisdiction to admit the debt; secondly, that there was a variance between the affidavit set forth and that proved.

Lord Denman ruled against him on both points, and then sentenced him to be imprisoned in the Queen's Prison for eighteen months, and after that until he should enter into recognisances for good behaviour, himself in £100, and two sureties, each in £50.

The trial lasted till late in the evening

CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.—This Court recommenced its sittings on Monday. A true bill has been found against Dr. Cronin for manslaughter, but the trial has been postponed till next session. On Thursday, Robert Kerr, aged 28, a mariner, was found guilty of stealing two packages of diamonds, value £3,000, the property of John M'Millan, and others, upon the high seas, within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, &c. The Court sentenced him to seven years' transportation.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

TRIALS FOR MURDER.

At the Assizes at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, last week, James Welsh was indicted for the wilful murder of Thomas Proud, at Warden, near Newbrough, by stabbing him in the neck with a knife. By the evidence of several witnesses it appeared that the prisoner was a quarry-man, employed at the Pear Stones, somewhere near the Newcastle and Carlisle Railway. On Sunday, the 7th February, the deceased, who lived at the village of Allerwash, invited several of his neighbours to the christening of one of his children. After their return from the church they had tea at his house, and he then invited them to a public-house to drink the child's health. They did so, and there encountered the prisoner. On leaving, Welsh followed them, and solicited several females present to dance with him. They declined, and he at length caught hold of Mary Ann Towers, who was walking with the deceased, and endeavoured to separate them. Towers begged of him to desist, and, being further insulted, Proud interfered, and desired Welsh not to molest her. High words here ensued, and a scuffle followed, in the course of which Proud fell upon his antagonist, and, it is said, kicked him. The deceased then made all haste home with the female, but had not gone far ere the prisoner was seen running after them, with no coat on. On coming up with them, he struck the deceased twice over the head with a stick, and eventually plunged a clasp-bladed knife into the unfortunate man's neck. He instantly dropped on the ground, and, in a few minutes, expired. The prisoner escaped, but was shortly captured. The knife was found near the body, and it was sworn to having been seen in the prisoner's possession. The clerk found the prisoner "Guilty." Mr. Baron Rolfe, in a very feeling and impressive manner, sentenced the prisoner to death.

George Matthews and John Hughes were indicted for the wilful murder of Daniel Hives, at Long Benton, on the 16th of October last. The deceased was employed on the Newcastle and Berwick Railway, where the prisoners, who are Irishmen, were also employed. There had been much ill-feeling between the English and the Irish employed on the line, and on the day mentioned in the indictment it was proved that the two prisoners passed the deceased when he was alone on the line, and that a quarrel and blows ensued. On the deceased having been joined by Mr. Potter, a tax, struck, called out to the two prisoners to come back and fight it out, when Matthews returned, stabbed him with a knife, and he died in a short time afterwards. The Jury acquitted Hughes, but returned a verdict of "Guilty" against Matthews, on whom sentence of death was passed.

LAW AND JUSTICE.

Last week, at the Drogheda Assizes, a railway case was tried, Barker v. Taylor. It was an action brought by the plaintiff, an advertising agent, carrying on business in London, against the defendant, one of the provisional committee of the Irish West Coast Railway, to recover the sum of £1188 os., for advertising the undertaking

Mr Justice Perrin did not think the evidence sufficient, and suggested a nonsuit, but, at the request of counsel, the case went to the Jury, but the Judge directed them to find for the defendant.

The Jury asked leave to retire, as a difference of opinion existed among them.

After an absence of a quarter of an hour, the Jury returned.

Clerk of the Jury: My Lord, I am deputed by the Jury to ask your Lordship whether it be a question of law or a question of justice that the Jury are called upon to decide?—Mr. Justice Perrin: Law; I told you so.

Juror: There is a difference of opinion between us on this subject, as to what is justice; for, if we were at liberty to consider the honesty of the case, we could not agree to a verdict for the defendant.

Another Juror: It is by justice or law we are to go, my Lord?—Mr. Justice Perrin: It is a question of law, and it is the duty of the Jury to bow to the Court on a question of law

Juror: We bow to your Lordship.

Mr. Justice Perrin: If I am wrong my decision can be set right.

The Jury then found, as directed, a verdict for the defendant.

The counsel for the plaintiff shortly afterwards tendered a bill of exceptions, which was received by his Lordship

POLICE.

ASSAULT UPON MR. URQUHART BY A POLISH REFUGEE.

Major Bartholomew Beniowski, the Polish refugee, and teacher of phrenotypics, was on Wednesday charged, at BOW-STREET, with committing a violent assault on Mr. David Urquhart, at the Freemasons' Tavern, while at the meeting held there on Tuesday evening on the subject of Polish affairs.

Mr. Anstey, barrister, appeared for the complainant, and Mr. Wolf, as attorney for the defendant.

The complainant said, that having attended the meeting with a friend, he was going away at about half-past five o'clock, when the prisoner, who was at that time unknown to him, met him in the vestibule, and asked to speak with him for a moment. He (complainant) asked him what his name was, and the prisoner having answered "Beniowski," he turned away and was proceeding with a friend when the prisoner immediately followed him, sprung upon him, and would have seized him by the throat, but that he bowed his head, so as to meet defendant's grasp with the lower part of his face. The prisoner thus caught him with both hands, gave him a "squeeze," by which his face was severely lacerated, and the skin torn from his lips, cheeks, and lower part of his face, by pressure. He bled profusely at the time. He had not had the slightest provocation was to cause him to be thus assailed in the manner described by the prisoner, but knew him by reputation. No blows were struck on either side.

Mr. Urquhart, in cross-examination by Mr. Wolf, stated that some years ago he had said of the defendant that he was a spy. He had also said, in a pamphlet, which was published in 1840, that Major Beniowski was a Polish Jew, who had been employed by Russia to foment insurrections in Central Asia, and that he was at that moment acting as an agent of London, and organising the Chartist disturbances for the purposes of Russia. He had made this statement, believing it to be true, and still believed it to be true

The Rev. J. Hamilton Grey, and James Hays, complainant's servant, corroborated his statement.

The Major, being called upon for his defence, said that he could not deny any part of what had been stated against him, though he had something to add. About six years ago his attention was called to a pamphlet written by Mr. Urquhart, in which that gentleman attacked him as a spy of the Emperor Nicholas. He had a very great respect for Mr. Urquhart, and he was only sorry that so good a man should be so misled, and should injure his own cause by maligning one of its advocates. He (Beniowski) had endeavoured to find Mr. Urquhart for the purpose of having an explanation with him, and convincing him that he was wrong, but had failed. At one time he (Beniowski) designed to bring an action for libel against him, but was prevented by the necessity. Having seen the contusion for libel against him, but was prevented by the necessity. Having seen the contusion received by accident at the meeting, it occurred to him that he would speak to him, and have such an explanation as he had long desired. When he was contemptuously repulsed by Mr Urquhart he was much annoyed, and followed the complainant, intending to detain him, and press the conversation. He laid his hand on Mr. Urquhart's shoulder, and that gentleman turned round and made a blow at him with a stick which he carried in his hand. Then he committed the assault described, and he was glad when he was taken into custody, that he had an opportunity of confronting him. He could not but regret the assault, which he knew was not justifiable under any circumstances.

Mr. Henry committed the prisoner for trial, admitting him to bail in his own recognizances of £40, and two sureties of £20 each.

CHARGE OF STEALING A LIBRARY OF BOOKS. On Wednesday, at MARLBOROUGH-STREET, Frances B. Hoare was charged with having fraudulently disposed of upwards of £600 worth of valuable books, partly the property of Mr. Bohn, bookseller, St. James's-street, the Bishop of Llandaff, and others. The books had been left in the charge of Mr. Bohn, who, falling into difficulties, was prevailed upon to execute an assignment of his stock and business to Mr. Hoare, on the promise of an advance of £3000; under which deed Mr. Hoare took possession of the stock and business, and subsequently sold the books. A great deal of evidence was given in support of the charge. The answer to it was, that Mr. Hoare had a joint interest in the books, and was fully authorised to sell them. The case was ultimately adjourned till Wednesday next.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. FRIDAY.

The report on the Labouring Poor (Ireland) Bill was brought up and the third reading appointed for Monday.

PUNISHMENT OF OFFENCES.—ABOLITION OF TRANSPORTATION.—Earl GREY then moved the second reading of the Custody of Offenders Bill. In doing so he said the Government had determined to abolish the system of transportation which had been in operation as a punishment for offenders for a great number of years. It was a subject of the utmost importance, as well as one of much difficulty, to provide a good and salutary system of punishment for crimes against the law and society. To Gibraltar and Bermuda offenders would still be sent because punishment there was more like an extension of the hulks system than transportation; the criminals being brought back to this country at the public expense, when the period of their punishment had expired. If their Lordships had read the papers which had been laid on the table upon the subject, they must have come to the conclusion, as the Government had done, that the time had arrived when the system of transportation must absolutely cease.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

THE SPANISH BONDHOLDERS. Lord G. BENTINCK gave notice that on Monday next he should present a petition, most numerously signed by Spanish bondholders, stating that the Government of Spain had contracted debts to the amount of seventy-one millions sterling; and they, therefore, prayed the House to make an inquiry into the subject.

THE CANTEEN SYSTEM.—On the order of the day being read for going into Committee of Supply on the Ordnance Estimates, Col. LINDSAY moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to direct inquiry to be made into the effect that the present Canteen system has upon the army; and whether it would not be advantageous to discipline, and to the moral improvement of her Majesty's troops, to prevent the sale of spirituous liquors to be consumed within the precincts or proximity of barracks. The hon. and gallant member stated that, in his opinion, allowing Canteens for the sale of spirituous liquors to exist in the neighbourhood of barracks was one of the main sources of irregularity and disobedience to orders which at times exhibited themselves in the British army.

CABINET COUNCIL. A Cabinet Council was held at the Foreign Office at three o'clock yesterday afternoon.

RECOVERY OF THE "SPHINX."—The exertions of Captain Austin, C.B., Mr. Bellamy, the Master Attendant, and the other officers and men employed in the floating of the steam-sloop Sphynx, have at last been crowned with success. This fine vessel was got off the shore, at the back of the Isle of Wight, on Wednesday evening. She is, we understand, notwithstanding the length of time she has been ashore, and exposed to the heavy surf on that part of the coast, comparatively but little injured.

FIRE "GREAT BRITAIN."—At a meeting of the proprietors of the Great Britain steam-vessel, held at Bristol, on Thursday, a letter from Captain Claxton was read, detailing his proceedings in Dundrum Bay during the time he had been employed in floating this unfortunate vessel. On the arrival of the steamer Sirius engaged in forming the breakwater to protect the ship, in the manner described by Sir J. K. Brunel. The latter eminent engineer, through whom the report was transmitted, writes in an introductory letter as follows:—"Notwithstanding the great difficulties he has had to contend with from almost constant bad weather, with the wind blowing dead on shore nearly the whole of the month of January, and consequently preventing the tides from ebbing sufficiently out to allow of the work being properly proceeded with; and, notwithstanding the occurrence of more than one storm at the most critical period of the work, he has, as I fully relied upon his doing, succeeded in so far protecting the ship that she has been comparatively unaffected by recent seas, which, there is no doubt whatever, would otherwise have seriously damaged her. We may now calculate with tolerable certainty upon preserving her without further injury until the finer, or at least more settled weather sets in."

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS

TURKEY AND GREECE.

Letters from Athens, of the 14th ult., speak of the excitement existing in that city, in consequence of the Turkish Minister, M. Musurus, having demanded satisfaction for an insult at a Court ball. The Turkish Government insists that M. Coletti should proceed to the Turkish Minister's house, and make an apology, which demand has been strengthened by an official despatch on the part of the Greek Government. This apology had not yet been made, and it was believed that the Turkish Minister would demand his passports. The Greeks have been taught to believe that France will declare war against Turkey, if a single Turk should cross their frontier.

FRANCE.

The Chamber of Deputies met on Wednesday, when the Minister of the Interior presented a project of law, demanding an extraordinary credit of 4,000,000 francs, to provide labour for the destitute poor in the departments.

It is stated by the Constitutionnel that Lucerne is preparing for war; an account rendered probable by the late remonstrance respecting its military organisation, addressed to that canton by the Vorort of Switzerland.

The Duke de Polignac died at Paris, on Tuesday, after a long and painful illness.

ITALY

Letters from Milan announce serious disturbances on the frontier of the Tessin. From Lecco to Pavlese, the greatest agitation reigned. Several thousands of peasants had advanced on the Saturday previous (before the 28th ult.), upon Lecco, from whence they expelled the Austrians. The people, in spite of measures of corn were in motion on the lake; several vessels which attempted to get away were stopped and their cargoes cast overboard. All exports for Switzerland were suspended. In the evening the agitation increased. It was conceived that politics were mixed up in these movements, because provisions were not too dear in Italy. There was no talk of sending troops from Milan, but a regiment of cavalry had received orders to march from Monza to Milan, as more considerable corps were to leave Mantua for the frontier. The Swiss peasants showed a determination of resistance.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

FIRE AND LOSS OF LIFE.—Last Saturday morning, a fire, resulting in the loss of one life, broke out at No. 9, Wood's-buildings, Woodstock-place, Hoxton. The house, occupied by a female named Harriet George. Smoke having been perceived issuing from the first-floor front room, the place was entered by some of the lodgers, when a box of linen, a thick bed, and the flooring were discovered in flames, and Mrs. George was lying in the midst of them. The fire was speedily extinguished, but the unfortunate woman, who was seventy-five years of age, was burned in a most frightful manner, and life quite extinct. It is supposed that a spark must have shot out of the grate, and falling upon the clothes, set them on fire.

FATAL COLLISION IN THE RIVER.—A collision, involving the loss of seven lives, happened early on Sunday morning, in the river, off Old Haven, about two miles below Tilbury Fort. The vessel which is lost was the Rose, of Exeter (Webber, master), and having been loaded with a cargo of miscellaneous goods, at Topping's Wharf, reached Old Haven Bay. She there brought up for the night. The Rose, it is stated, was moored well in the bay, on the Essex side, and remained safe until about a quarter to four o'clock on the following morning, when her bowsprit was run into by the Royal Victoria steamer was seen coming down at a speed of 12 or 14 miles an hour, having the ebb-tide with her. She exhibited the usual lights at her bow and mast-head. She continued her course, and, on coming to the starboard quarter of the vessel were thrown out. The master's cabin was then discovered in preserving. They had barely got him on board before the vessel went down with the remainder of the crew, five in number, in her. Passengers and crew were put off in the direction whence the cries proceeded, but their aid was of no avail. The steamer proceeded on her voyage to Leith, the damage she sustained not being serious.

SUDDEN DEATH AT THE RAILWAY STATION, LIVERPOOL.—On Sunday morning, about a quarter past seven o'clock, a person who was sitting upon a bench in the outer lobby of the booking-office, at the Liverpool Railway Terminus, with a gentleman from Chester, and who appeared to be in good health, suddenly sank down, and almost instantly expired. A medical man, who was going as a passenger by the next train, promptly and kindly lent his assistance, but said from the first the man was dying. Articles of some small value were found upon deceased, but not anything by which he could be identified. He was a stout man, about fifty years of age, with a bald head, and wore a wig.

CORONER'S INQUEST BY THOMAS HOTHER.—An inquest has been held at Preston, Lancashire, upon the body of Fanny Leadbeater, aged nine years, who died in the Spendmore-street workhouse, in that borough, under circumstances which led to from the effects of poison, supposed to have been administered by her mother. Mrs. Leadbeater had three children, on Friday evening (last week), the mother afterwards being found drowned in the river near that town. Thomas Moore, a surgeon, of Preston, said he knew the deceased, Fanny Leadbeater, mother's child. She had been poisoned. He had known her ever since she was born. She was confined in an asylum about six years ago. He had seen her several times since, and considered her insane. When in a convulsive state she was removed by the medical superintendent of the asylum, in the charge of keepers, she jumped off one of the bridges into the canal. When told she had so drowned herself, he was not surprised, and would not have been had she done so. Death resulted from the effects of poison. The jury returned the following verdict: "That the deceased, Mrs. Leadbeater, administered a certain deadly poison called laudanum, to the deceased Fanny Leadbeater, she (Mrs. Leadbeater), being, at the time, in a state of insanity."

THE THAMES TUNNEL. On Tuesday a general assembly of proprietors of the Thames Tunnel Company was held at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, to receive the annual report, Mr. Hawes in the chair. He expressed his regret to that the state of the Company's affairs was not very favourable. The tunnel was in a sound condition, and the most perfect order. The only water that entered in a sound condition, and the most perfect order. The only water that entered it was from the land springs, which they had not yet been able to overcome. Mr. Blundell, the secretary, read the statement of the receipts and expenditure for the year ending December 31, which showed that—including tolls, £4910 14s. 5d., and ending December 31, which showed that—including tolls, £4910 14s. 5d., and £1496 13s. 8d., balance in hand—the receipts amounted to £7146 10s. 10d., and that after paying the necessary expenses, there was a balance in hand of £624 10s. 6d.

THE CAMBRIDGE CHANCELLORSHIP ELECTION.

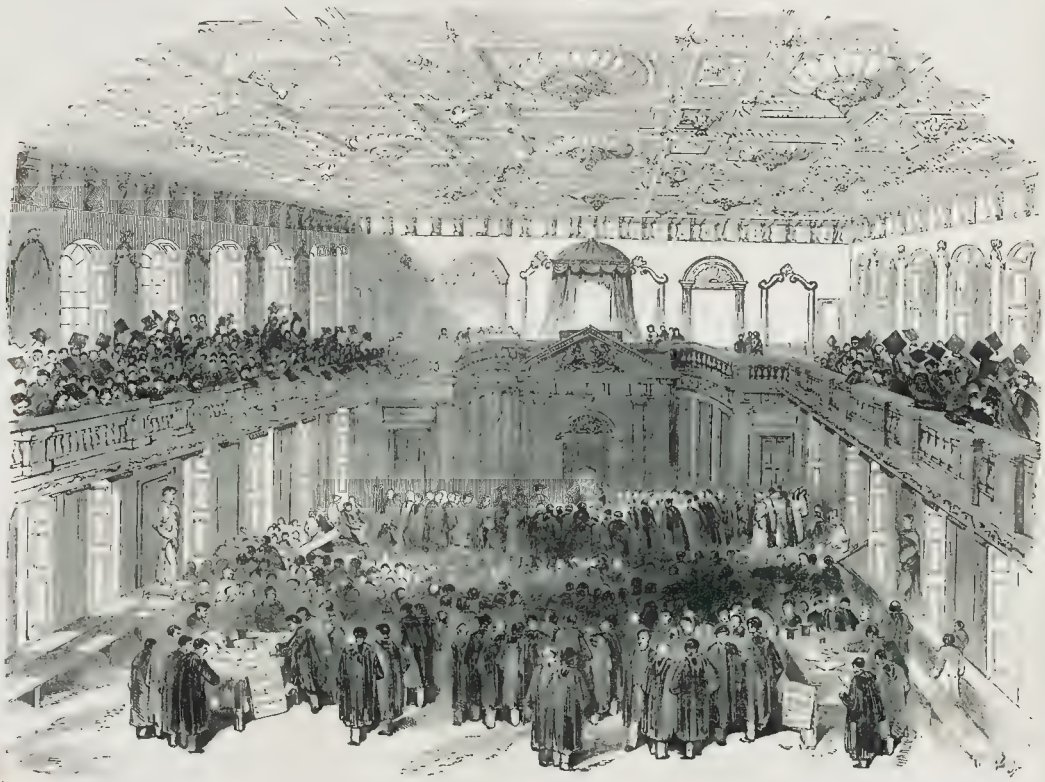
EXTERIOR OF THE SENATE HOUSE DURING THE ELECTION.

In our Journal of last week, we briefly recorded the progress of this very spirited contest for the high and important trust of the Chancellorship of the University of Cambridge; and, in our latest edition, we recorded the result the election of His Royal Highness Prince Albert to the honourable office by a majority of 116 votes over the Prince's noble opponent, the Earl of Powis. The contest has been, indeed, a memorable one; and its more characteristic scenes and incidents have been sketched by the Artist whom we dispatched to Cambridge for the purpose. To this graphic record we shall, therefore, proceed to append a concise narrative of the Election; though, we shall only be enabled to retain such documentary portions entire as are essential to circumstantial completeness.

On Saturday week, immediately on the receipt of the intelligence at Cambridge, that the Prince Consort had declined to accede to the request to allow his name to be offered to the Senate as a candidate, a meeting of his Royal Highness' Committee was holden, the Master of Trinity (Dr. Whewell) in the chair. The Chairman read to the meeting the communication we have adverted to, and which was in the following terms:—

"The expression of the wish upon the part of so numerous and influential a portion of the members of the University of Cambridge, declaring my name eminent among those who might be proposed for election into the vacant office of Chancellor of that University, cannot be otherwise than highly gratifying to my feelings. Did it not appear from the proceedings entered into by others in the University, there does not exist that degree of unanimity which would leave me at liberty to consent to be put in nomination, I should have felt both the greatest pleasure and pride in acceding to the desire expressed in this Address, and to personally connect myself with your ancient and renowned seat of learning."

Resolutions were then passed unanimously, regretting the above announcement, but by no means abandoning the hope of seeing the wishes of the Committee realized; and a circular was subsequently issued, containing this announcement.



INTERIOR OF THE SENATE HOUSE.—THE ELECTION.

THE CAMBRIDGE CHANCELLORSHIP ELECTION.

THE RAILWAY STATION AT CAMBRIDGE.—ARRIVAL OF VOTERS.

"The Committee, which was appointed for promoting the election of his Royal Highness, being persuaded that a large majority of the University agree with them in thinking his Royal Highness the most proper person to be the Chancellor of the University, are resolved to record this opinion by their votes at the election. They are fortified in this resolution by finding that many persons of the highest rank and authority have the same intention. They earnestly request that you will give your attendance here at the election, and unite your vote with theirs."

In the meantime, a circular was issued by Lord Powis's Committee, recognising the intention of the Prince's Committee, and requesting votes in favour of his Lordship.

On Monday morning, Prince Albert's Committee again met at Cambridge, and adopted a resolution to use all possible exertions to secure the Prince's return.

Upon the same day, and for the same object, a meeting of the Members of the Senate was holden in London, over which the Marquis of Northampton presided; and, among the Committee then appointed, were the Marquis of Lansdowne, K.G.; the Marquis of Douro, M.P.; the Earl Grey, the Earl Jermyn, M.P.; the Viscount Sydney, the Lord Ernest Bruce, M.P.; the Lord Bishop of London, the Lord Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, the Lord Bishop of Ely, the Lord Bishop of Norwich, the Lord Bishop of Lichfield, the Lord Bishop of St. David's, the Lord de Lisle and Dudley, the Lord Norreys, M.P.; the Lord Montagle, the Lord Melgund, the Right Hon. Sir H. Jenner Fust, the Hon. Baron Alderson, the Hon. Justice Coltman, the Hon. Baron Rolfe, Right Hon. Sir John Hobhouse, Bart., Right Hon. Sir E. Ryan, Right Hon. T. B. Macaulay, Right Hon. G. Strutt, M.P., the Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor, the Hon. Charles Howard, M.P., the Very Rev. the Dean of Canterbury, the Very Rev. the Dean of Ely, H. W. Tancred, Esq., M.P., Q.C., Ralph Neville, Esq., M.P., &c

In consequence of their resolution to proceed to the poll, the Master of Clare Hall (Dr. Webb) withdrew his name from the Committee, considering that the proposing of the Prince as a Candidate would be putting the Members of the Senate into a most delicate and painful situation, by exciting a contest.

The election was then announced to commence at ten o'clock on Thursday, the 25th; the poll to last from ten A.M. to five P.M. on Thursday and Friday, and for a short time early on Saturday morning. And, on Tuesday, the Vice-Chancellor announced that in order to suit the convenience of non-resident members of the Senate, besides the hours already named for taking votes, the polling would be resumed at eight o'clock on Thursday and Friday evenings, and continued for one hour

During Wednesday, a great number of non-resident members of the Senate arrived in Cambridge. Anxious faces and bustling figures flitted about in all directions; and large posting-bills announced Mr. Elliot Smith's rooms to be the rendezvous of "Earl Powis's Committee," and Mr. Barraclough's that of "His Royal Highness Prince Albert's Committee." In the afternoon, strangers showed themselves here and there; and, criticising the Fitzwilliam, or strolling through King's, and looking with admiration on the Chapel, one might observe many "an old Master," who had, probably, not visited his alma mater for many a long year. The trains kept bringing in additional company; and many of the College Halls presented no small addition to their usual occupants.

THE POLLING. THURSDAY.

The poll began on Thursday morning, at ten o'clock, but long before that hour

GATEWAY OF ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE.—(EARL POWIS'S)—FROM THE GARDEN.

fiss, omnibuses, porters, committee-men, under-graduates, and heads of houses hurried about in every direction: placards met the eye on every wall, and on nearly every vehicle: one omnibus announced itself in staring characters as "Prince Albert's Committee," and another as "Lord Powis's Committee;" and men with decorated hats, jealous of the honour done to dumb vehicles, put in a claim to the like distinction.

The scene of the contest was, of course, the Senate House. On the opening of the doors the galleries were speedily tenanted by a body of under graduates, who, throughout the day, kept up a fire of cheers and groans

The Vice-Chancellor's table was literally visible from every part of the galleries; and, as the votes were taken by cards dropped into boxes appropriated to each candidate, every vote was known to the in minores as it was given; and here was a constant source of cheers and counter-cheers; for, upon a vote being dropped into the Prince's box, up rose a deafening shout, and a low groan; and precisely the same thing happened when a supporter of the noble Earl recorded his choice. All this was in addition to the usual sources of merriment and noise. They had, of course, three-times-three for the Prince, and three-times-three for his noble opponent: popular individuals, also, came in for their share of applause, and unpopular ones met with hisses, and groans, and whistles, and catcalls; and, in the evening, some adventurous individuals pressed breastrumpets into their service; and there were barkings, and howlings, and crowings, and brayings, so that altogether there was as pretty a piece of Babel confusion as can well be imagined.

The Vice-Chancellor entered the Senate House about ten o'clock, and loud cheers greeted his appearance. He took up his post, (and a wearisome post it must have been,) at the upper end of the building, and in front of him was placed a large box, in two divisions, that on the right labelled "For Prince Albert," and that on the left "For Lord Powis," into which the cards containing the votes names were dropped through narrow apertures. At the Vice-Chancellor's table sat the Proctors; the University Assessor, W. Hunt, Esq., M.A., of King's College; the Registrary; the Esquire Bedells; and the Scrutators, the Rev. R. Burkett, B.D., of Emmanuel College, and the Rev. John Mills, M.A., of Pembroke College, for Prince Albert, and Dr. Snowball, of St. John's College, and the Rev. H. W. Cookson, M.A., of St. Peter's College, for Earl Powis. The upper end of the Senate House was cut off from the body by a barrier, at one end of which voters were admitted, and at the other egress was afforded to them after having recorded their votes. These passages were guarded by men with staves.

In the body of the Senate House, two tables were placed for the distribution of voting tickets, that on the right for Lord Powis's supporters, and that on the left for the friends of the Prince: armed with those tickets, the voters made the best of their way to the barrier, after a struggle to get to the tables, in which many a gown was torn, and many a bruise was received, they advanced to the Vice Chancellor, and recorded their votes.

The proceedings began with the reading, by the second Esquire Bedell, of the 33rd Stat. Eliz. De Electone Cancellarii (Lib. Stat p 241). The Vice-Chancellor and the Proctors, and the Junior Doctor in Divinity present (Dr. S. E. Walker, of Trinity), then stood in order, and gave their votes in the following form:

"A. B. eligit Celsissimum Principem Albertum in Cancellarium hujus Academiæ."

Or,

"C. D. eligit Honoratissimum virum Comitem de Powis in Cancellarium hujus Academiæ."

The Vice-Chancellor voted for Prince Albert, the Senior Proctor for Lord Powis, and the Junior Proctor for Prince Albert

The poll now commenced in earnest, and was carried on with great spirit by the friends of Lord Powis, who, throughout the greater part of the day, had a decided advantage

Towards one o'clock, the Senate House was densely crowded. "Amongst the occupants of the floor," says the Cambridge Chronicle, "we noticed many distinguished men; for instance, the Dukes of Rutland and Buccleuch; the Bishops of Lincoln, Ely, Hereford, Norwich; Marquises of Northampton, Exeter, Downshire, Lansdowne and Camden; Earls Brownlow, Fitzwilliam, Nelson and Grey; Lords Lyndhurst and Palmerston; the Vice-Chancellor of England; Sir John Herschel; Lord John Manners, &c. The press at the barrier was excessive: there were orators, and heavy swells, and divines—pears and communists; cabinet ministers and country curates, all pushing, and bawling, and striving for ingress with a resolution and zeal somewhat damaging to both raiment and temper. The most conspicuous object in this onslaught was the scarlet gown of my Lord Fitzwilliam, who had the ill luck to be the only individual clad in a Doctor's robe. From this time the star of Lord Powis declined."

At five o'clock the poll closed, and the numbers were:—

Lord Powis	603
Prince Albert	579
Majority for Lord Powis	24

The poll was resumed at eight o'clock, about which hour a train from London brought down a large number of voters. In the galleries of the Senate House there was a perfect cram of under-graduates; and, as the only lights in the building were at the Vice Chancellor's table, the semi-darkness in which all things were enveloped added at once to the oddness of the appearance and the boldness of the shouters. At nine o'clock, the poll closed for the day, and the numbers were as follows:—

Prince Albert	689
Lord Powis	602
Majority for Prince Albert	87

FRIDAY

The poll was resumed at ten o'clock; the voting was far more slack than on Thursday; but the zeal and enthusiasm did not appear to have suffered much diminution. The following was the hourly state of the poll during the day:

	P. Albert.	L. Powis.
Half-past 10	14	17
Half-past 11	46	45
Half-past 12	53	58
Half-past 1	103	81
Half-past 2	148	107
Half-past 3	181	134
Half-past 4	212	168
Gross poll at 9 o'clock	875	789

In the course of the afternoon, a perfect revolution was effected in a point which has for years been conceded by graduates to the younger members of the University. One of the most grievous sins that can be committed in the body of the Senate House is for any man to keep on a hat or cap in the presence of the gods in the gallery; and, Friday being a very cold day, after some consultation, hats and caps were put on by those in the body of the house. A frightful storm of hisses and all opprobrious epithets gave evidence of the wrath which this daring revolution had excited. But it was of no avail; the hats and caps kept their ground

One of the most interesting occurrences during the day took place about four o'clock, when the Master of Trinity entered the Senate House, accompanied by the Bishop of London. The appearance of the Bishop, about whose intent no some rumours had been circulated, was a signal for a loud burst of applause, in which not only the under-graduates, but the Senior Members of the University, took part. His Lordship was almost mobbed on his way to the pay lingstable, and the cheers were kept up without abatement until the Bishop and Dr. Whewell left the Senate House together

At eight o'clock, the polling was renewed amid tremendous uproar. Interest in the election was now pervaded by lassitude in the extreme; and a confounded din of discordant sounds was kept up without intermission, so that all business was transacted in more dumb show. The object of all this uproar was to displace the hand-gong, which the bedells would persist in wearying us by recording so far that the Vice-Chancellor received showers of peas, and other missiles, whereupon a practical clearing of the galleries was effected, and then there was a state of comparative quietude.

SATURDAY

Polling was resumed at nine o'clock. The attendance was thin until after ten, when the ladies began to arrive in successive groups, conducted by academic friends; then the gownsmen's breakfast parties breaking up contributed several hundreds, and the early London train poured in its important and anxiously-expected quota.

The following was the hourly result until twelve:

	P. Albert.	L. Powis.
Half-past 9	5	2
Half-past 10	28	17
Half-past 11	50	50
12	78	60

At twelve o'clock, Henry Gunning, Esq., M.A., Senior Esquire Bedell, called "Cessatum est a Scrutatoribus." The Vice-Chancellor then opened the vote-box and proceeded to count, first the votes for Earl Powis, and then those for Prince Albert. The numbers were found to be

For H.R.H. Prince Albert	934
For the Earl Powis	837
Majority for the Prince	116

On the numbers being exhibited, three times three cheers were given for "Our Royal Chancellor."

After the Vice-Chancellor had counted the votes, the Senior Proctor went to his place in front of the table, (the Junior Proctor standing by him), and read one vote for Prince Albert: a full majority of the others, merely read, "Eandem eligit A. B." &c. &c. When he had finished them all, he read the votes for the Earl of Powis in the same manner; and amongst those declared to have voted on either side were the following

FOR PRINCE ALBERT.

Marquis of Exeter	Master of Magdalene	Lord Arthur Hervey
Right Hon. R. Gordburn	Viscount Sidney	Hon. W. H. Lyttelton
Sir J. H. Inglefield	Duke of Rutland	Marquis of Northampton
Wm. Cubitt	Lord Henry Bruce	Lord Alfred Hervey
[illegible]
Viscount [illegible]	Sir S. Cunliffe	Master of Peterhouse
Earl [illegible]	Viscount Lascelles	Master of Jesus
[illegible] Palmerston	Marquis of Bute	Master of Christ's
[illegible] Grey	Sir G. Pechell	Master of Sidney
[illegible] Peel	Lord Rev. Denman	Master of Emmanuel
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Bishop of London	Bishop of Hereford	Lord Wharncliffe
Lord Norreys	Lord Montague	Lord Whitefoord
Master of Trinity	Hon. C. Spring Rice	Lord Melgund

Master of Caius	Sir J. Herschel	Sir R. Ferguson
Lord Lyndhurst	Bishop of Ely	Hon. F. Bouverie
Sir J. V. B. Johnstone	Earl Jermyn	Hon. F. J. Ryder

FOR LORD POWIS.

Earl Nelson (paired)	The Right Hon. the Vice-Chancellor of England
Lord John Manners, M.P.	Hon. Mr. Justice Cresswell
Sir R. Fitzwilliam	The Master of St. John's, D.D.
Viscount Adare, M.P.	The Professor of Greek
Earl Nelson	Rev. J. Griffith, D.D.
[illegible] Fust	Rev. H. Kynaston, D.D.
Mr. Leslie Ramsden	Rev. C. Wordsworth, D.D.
Lord Godolphin	Rev. W. H. Mill, D.D.
Viscount Sandon, M.P.	A. B. Hope, Esq., M.P.
Viscount Clive, M.P.

Amongst the votes disallowed were those of Earl Fitzwilliam (for Lord Powis), and, we understand, the Provost of Eton (for Prince Albert). It appears that both had taken their names off the University boards previously to obtaining their M.A. degree, and had not subsequently resided three terms, as enjoined in such case by the University statute. As soon as the reading of the names had been concluded, the Senior Proctor advanced in front of the dais, and made the following announcement:

"Ego, Edvardus Brumell, Procurator Senior hujus Academiæ, et cum eo mihi proruncio Celsissimum Principem Albertum in Cancellarium hujus Academiæ."

A Caput was then called by the Vice-Chancellor, and it having been formed, the following "grace" was submitted by the senior Esquire Bedell (Mr. Gunning), and read in both houses:

"Placeat vobis, ut Celsissimus Princeps Albertus de Saxe Coburg et Gotha, nuclo dictus ad officium Cancellarii hujus Academiæ, literas habeat patentes ejusdem officii sive munoris sigillo vestro commun sigillatas."

This grace, having been read a second time in both houses, was declared passed by the Vice-Chancellor. The congregation broke up at a few minutes past three o'clock, and thus terminated the third and last day's proceedings of this important and most extraordinary election, amidst the music of the joy-bells of St. Mary's, which continued to ring out merrily.

The absolute amount of those who voted may be set down at about three-fifths of the whole constituency in England, leaving out of the calculation those who are abroad, or in the colonies. Nearly 1,500 voted in all sides. The members of the Senate are above 3000. The number polled on this occasion of Prince Albert's election was far greater than at any former contest of the kind. At Lord Lyndhurst's election for the High Stewardship, the majority of both sides was 1461 Lord Lyttelton polling two to nothing against Lord Lyttelton. When his Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester was returned, against the Duke of Rutland, for the Chancellorship, the numbers polled by both amounted only to 926. On this occasion, it is worthy of remark, that his Royal Highness' majority was within two of Prince Albert's.

On Tuesday, a Congregation was held, at 11 o'clock, for the purpose of reading to the Senate the following letter, written to his Royal Highness the Prince Albert by the Public Orator, in the name of the Senate, announcing his Royal Highness' election into the high office of Chancellor of the University. From this letter we subjoin a passage, translated in the Morning Post

After a just tribute to the memory of the late lamented Duke of Northumberland, the Public Orator proceeds in this vein:

"Where, after all, could this University fly for refuge, but, most highly prince, to thy clemency and matchless favour? Where, but to thy most illustrious Queenliness among all the nations of both sides was 1461 Lord Lyttelton polling two to nothing against Lord Lyttelton. When his Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester was returned, against the Duke of Rutland, for the Chancellorship, the numbers polled by both amounted only to 926. On this occasion, it is worthy of remark, that his Royal Highness' majority was within two of Prince Albert's.

On Tuesday, a Congregation was held, at 11 o'clock, for the purpose of reading to the Senate the following letter, written to his Royal Highness the Prince Albert by the Public Orator, in the name of the Senate, announcing his Royal Highness' election into the high office of Chancellor of the University. From this letter we subjoin a passage, translated in the Morning Post

After a just tribute to the memory of the late lamented Duke of Northumberland, the Public Orator proceeds in this vein:

"Where, after all, could this University fly for refuge, but, most highly prince, to thy clemency and matchless favour? Where, but to thy most illustrious Queenliness among all the nations of both sides was 1461" [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE THEATRES.

There has not been, for the last twelve months, a week so entirely barren of naught that might interest the theatrical reader, as the one that has just passed; nor, in the absence of novelty of any kind, are any of the theatres particularly well attended.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

Nearly is the order of the day at this theatre. There have been as yet but SIX nights of performance, and we have already witnessed five debuts; and next week, or the week after, we may have to record nearly as many more! Under such circumstances, the task of the critic, at the same time that it becomes more interesting, becomes likewise more arduous. We have not had time to mature our judgment of one novelty before our attention is necessarily carried off to another; but hitherto, however, we are fortunate in having so much to praise, and so little with which to find fault.

The appearance of Coletti was the event of the last week. Every one who remembered the début of this celebrated baritone on these boards, several years ago, was anxious to observe the alterations the lapse of time had worked in his voice and style; and we may here record, as many more have done before us, the gratifying fact that which Fornasari gave it. It is the first portion which he renders the most prominent, and which now obtains the encore. In that part where the two voices combine, his full deep tones and clear and manly articulation, in high notes, and the ensemble produces an admirable effect. The second part, "Deh' Perdona," he treats merely as the Scherzo, pressing the time very much, except at the words non ordenare il grano, where his strictness and precision of time form a most effective contrast. In the change, however, we require time to reconcile ourselves completely. The applause given to this duet, both on Saturday and Tuesday, was rapturous and most deserved. Coletti has not yet appeared in any part which to so great a degree calls forth the display of his vocal powers as this. The audience, however, we require time to reconcile ourselves completely. The applause given to this duet, both on Saturday and Tuesday, was rapturous and most deserved. With the remembrance of Fornasari, who appeared to greater advantage in this character, than perhaps in any other. But the superiority of Coletti's voice makes itself felt, even from the very first notes he pours forth; it is, however, above all, the two combined that gives the superiority. Coletti's voice makes itself felt, even from the very first notes he pours forth; it is, however, above all, the two combined that in comparison with each other; he is now in every respect a finished artist—and in addition to the many points of extraordinary improvement, he retains that tragic power for which he was always distinguished. "I Due Foscari" is, we have heard, the one of Verdi's operas which most completely elicit this artist's resources; but it is not easy to imagine anything finer than his rendering of Foscu, a part in which he had to contend with the remembrance of Fornasari, who appeared to greater advantage in this character, than perhaps in any other. But the superiority of

MARCH.

Fierce Month! that comest in as Lion wild,
And, as the proverb saith, dost
end thy reign,
E'en as the moonbeams, or a
Lambkin, mild,
Blest be thy coming to the suffering plain!
Oh! bring with thee, upon thy rushing wings,
Some bushels of that dust our sires of old
Valued beyond the ransom of their Kings;
Who loved dire warfare more than field or fold.
But, "Tempora mutantur," and we hail
Thee, month of Mars! as month of love and peace;
When Nature's gentler harmonies prevail
And the sweet Spring smiles promise of increase.
Albeit, wild March, thy frown be fierce and proud,
The Bird of Hope sings, soaring o'er thy cloud.

Full welcome are thy kalends to the land Where good St. David bore the verdant leek
High in his casque; and still the sturdy hand
And honest heart may Cam-bria's worth bespeak.
Alas! how different, on yon
blighted strand,
Returns the day when glen and mountain peak
Shouted aloud with joy, as each gay band,
On Patrick's Day, the dance and cup would seek.
Warm-hearted race! Warm-hearted to the death
Most terrible! The silent tear will gush
In bitterest sorrow, o'er thy shamrock wreath,
O'er ills that might call up a demon's blush!
Dread is the lesson! Still, o'er
Heaven's high arch,
Hope's rainbow beams upon the wings of March. L.

HEADS OF THE MONTHS.—DRAWN BY KENNY MEADOWS.

THE NATIONAL FAST.—A Privy Council will be held at Osborne House on Tuesday next, when a day will be appointed for a general fast.

GENERAL THEATRICAL FUND ASSOCIATION.—An adjourned meeting of members of the committee of the fund was held on Wednesday, at the saloon of the Lyceum; Mr. Cowle, in the absence of Mr. Buckstone (treasurer), in the chair. Mr Cullenford, the secretary, announced that several noblemen and gentlemen, patrons of the drama, had intimated to the committee their intention of being present at the anniversary festival of the fund on the 29th inst., at the London Tavern, at which Mr. Macready would preside, supported by Mr. Charles Dickens. The first list of vice-presidents was now complete, and included the Duke of Devonshire, Earl Fitzhardinge, Earl of Ellesmere, Hon. F. H. Fitzhardinge Berkeley, M.P., Sir Bellingham Graham, Bart., T. S. Duncombe Esq., M.P., Benjamin Bond Cabbell, Esq., M.P., J. Colleit, Esq., M.P., Mr. Sergeant Talfourd, J. Shutt, Esq., C. Manby, Esq., Horace Twiss, Esq., Luke James Hansard, Esq., T. P. Cooke, Esq., E. Stirling, Esq., D. W. Gebaldeston, Esq., T. L. Greenwood, Esq., and Wm. Henry West Betty, Esq.

THE HERRING FISHERY.

This is the first of a Series of our national Fisheries, from the pencil of Mr. Duncan, which we intend, as the season may suggest, to present to our readers.

The great winter rendezvous of the Herring is within the Arctic Circle: there they continue for many months, in order to recruit themselves after the fatigue of spawning; the seas within that space swarming with insect food in a far greater degree than those of our warmer latitudes. This mighty army begins to put itself in motion early in spring; appearing off the Shetland Isles in April and May; but the grand shoal does not come till June. In fine weather they reflect a variety of splendid colours, like a field of precious gems.

"The first check that this army meets in its march southward, is from the Shetland Isles, which divide it into two parts: one wing takes to the east, the other to the western shores of Great Britain, and fill every creek and bay with their numbers; the former proceed towards Yarmouth, the great and ancient mart of herrings; they then pass through the British Channel, and after that, in a manner, disappear. Those which take towards the west, after offering themselves to the Hebrides, where the great stationary Fishery is, proceed to the north of Ireland, where they meet with a second interruption, and are obliged to make a second division: the one takes to the western side, and is scarcely perceived, being soon lost in the immensity of the Atlantic; but the other that passes into the Irish Sea, rejoices and feeds the inhabitants of most of the coasts that border on it."

The artist has chosen his scene from the Fishery off the Isle of Man, where, in successful years, from 40,000 to 50,000 barrels of herrings are taken.

The Fishermen have already been diligent in Fifeshire, where the Herring Fishing has been prosecuted most successfully. Many crews have slept but little for a week.

The importance of the improvement of our Fisheries, especially in a time of scarcity like the present, has often been insisted on. A Correspondent of the Daily News says:—

"The Herring Fishery is well known to be precarious, as it is dependent on the unexplained migrations of the shoals that visit our coasts; but the deep-sea fishing which I recommend would afford a regular and profitable employment, if maintained in steady operation by sufficient capital. The banks on the southern and western coasts of Ireland abound with fine fish. Success there has no limit in nature, but is limited by the inefficient means in the hands of poor fishermen. Yet, even with these inferior means, the success has often been such that, in some seasons, large quantities of fish have been thrown on the land as manure, for want of a ready market. Ireland, with abundant stores on her own coast, has been in the habit of importing about 200,000 barrels of herrings from Scotland and Shetland. Why? Because the Fisheries of these coasts were under better management."

We learn that Government has just voted £8000 for the management of the Fisheries on the west coast. It will be given through the Fishery Board, and will be chiefly expended in the providing of lines and other fishing materials for the destitute Fishermen.

NEW CLUB.—A new club is in course of formation in the metropolis, under the title of the Union Hunt Club, to be composed of members of the leading hunting fraternities of England. The extensive premises in Bond street, formerly in the occupation of the Navy Club, will, it is stated, form the head-quarters of the new association.

ST. DAVID'S DAY.—Monday being St. David's Day, the Society of Ancient Britons celebrated their 133rd anniversary. The members of the Society and the children of the schools attended divine service in the afternoon at St. James's Church, Piccadilly. The prayers were read in the ancient British language by the Rev. Mr. Edwards, the chaplain of the institution, and a sermon was preached in English by the Bishop of Worcester, after which a collection was made for the benefit of the charity. In the evening the Society dined at Freemasons' Hall.

HERRING FISHERY, ISLE OF MAN.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

SCENE FROM WALLACE'S NEW OPERA OF "MATILDA OF HUNGARY," AT DRURY LANE THEATRE.

MUSIC.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

Mr. Wallace's opera of "Matilda of Hungary," has been repeated every evening since our last publication; and having been judiciously pruned in the first and second acts, the third now goes off with increased spirit. The nightly encores are Miss Rainforth's beautiful ballad, "In that devotion;" Miss Isaac, in the "A lowly Youth;" and Mr. Harrison, in "Adieu fair Land," and "Gone is that Calmness." His barcarole, "Like Waves on the Ocean," is too badly placed to command the demand for its repetition, which its intrinsic beauty might call forth. In the concerted pieces—the finale of the first act, the canon, the quintet in the second act, and the admirable trio in the last, excite the utmost admiration of the musician, if these pieces do not provoke the furore of the multitude. The orchestra goes remarkably well infinitely better than on any former occasion during the the season. The wind instruments are very good, particularly the clarionet, flute, and serpentcleide—a decided improvement on the ophicleide. The violins have been strengthened, but might be still more so, and the tenors and basses require reinforcement. On the whole, the Druly-Lane band, with all defects, has never been in better trim. It behoves our lyrical directors, in these days, to pay strict attention to the band and chorus, for audiences now understand the value and importance of these adjuncts, and are not alone carried away by a brilliant prima donna, or a tender tenor.

Mr Bunn, after having produced the three operas, by Lavenu, Balfe, and Wallace, promised in his prospectus, has resolved to give a fourth work by an untried composer. It is now in active preparation, and will be brought out after the run of Wallace's production. Mr Laurent, junior, the pianist, is the composer, and his opera is called "Quentin Durward"—an admirable subject for the libretto. Mr. Travers, one of the most promising tenors who has appeared for years, and who created such a sensation in Donizetti's "Favourite," will have for his second character Quentin Durward.

The annual benefit of the spirited Director is fixed for Monday week (the 15th instant), and we trust he may have, as he amply deserves, a bumper. Mr. Bunn has done much, under trying difficulties, for our native talent; and we do not believe that any other manager but himself could have kept the theatre open so long for lyrical art. With the exception of the principal danseuse, the entire establishment—band, chorus, leading vocalists, and corps de ballet—is English; and so far, therefore, as private enterprise can constitute a National Opera—for there has been nothing but the fluctuating support of the public to rely upon Mr Bunn has fully achieved his object.

Our Artist has engraved the last scene of the new opera—the Grand Hall of the States of Bohemia, filled by Senators, Peers, Grand Officers of Justice, and the Nobles of the Court and Army, wherein the Queen confers on Podiebrad, the serf, the Daidem of Bohemia, as the saviour of her Crown.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

There has been an influx of concerts during the week. On Monday, Mr Charles Mangold gave a performance of classical instrumental music at the Hanover-square Rooms. He is a clever pianist, and in the Kreutzer Sonata of Beethoven he played well, and had the advantage of the powerful violin execution of M. Sainton. With Hill, the tenor, Rousselot, the violoncello, Howell, contra-basso, Clinton, flute, Nicholson, oboe, Boosé, clarionet, Jarrett, horn, Keating, bassoon, and Harper, trumpet, the instrumental attraction was unexceptionable. Miss Lincoln, Miss S. Flower, and Madame Mortier de Fontaine were the vocalists. On the same evening, Mr. Henry Phillips gave his Vocal Entertainment at the Music Hall, Store-street, with his usual success; and Mr. Laurent, junior (a brother of the pianist, and composer of "Quentin Durward"), gave a Concert at the Casino of which he is the able conductor of the music.

The third Soirée of the Blagrove Quartet Party took place on Tuesday evening, at Doctors' Commons; and Mr. Genge, whose beautiful high tenor voice, but uncultivated style, we have often spoken of, gave his Annual Concert at Crosby Hall. The programme of Mr. Lindsay Sloper's second Soirée, at the Beethoven Rooms, comprised J. S. Bach's Sonata in A major, for piano and violin (M. Deloffre); a selection from Scarlatti's Pièces pour le Clavecin; Beethoven's Sonata in F minor; Cramer's Study in F sharp minor; Moscheles' ditto in B flat minor; and Mendelssohn's Trio in C minor, op. 66, for piano, violin, and violoncello, played by Mr. Sloper, MM Deloffre and Pilet. Madame Fontaine and Herr Brandt were the vocalists—the latter singing German songs, with Rousselot's violoncello obligato.

We have great pleasure in recording that Mr. Lindsay Sloper has postponed his third Soiree, fixed for Wednesday, March 17, to the following evening, as the former date has been selected for the Concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms, for the benefit of the widow and children of the late Mr Kearns

The scheme for Mr. Lucas's Second Musical Evening consisted of quartets, played by Sainton and Blagrove, Hill and Lucas—namely, No. 7 of Beethoven, No. 66 of Haydn, No. 9 of Mozart, and No. 8 of Bernard Romberg

Mr. Henry Russell's dramatic singing has been the attraction at the Strand Theatre every evening; and the Ethiopian Serenaders at the St. James's, in addition to the Lantum Serenaders at the Egyptian Hall, have now fresh rivals at the Princess', in the "New Orleans Ethiopians." This is "nigger work" with a vengeance—the great attraction of modern vocalisation being to sing until you are "black in the face."

Mr. Edney commenced, on Wednesday, a series of Concerts at the Clerkenwell School-rooms.

Music is thus spreading in every direction of the metropolis.

Sir H. R. Bishop, who has been lecturing with success in the provinces, began a series, on Thursday, at Crosby Hall.

It will be too late for us to record the doings at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Friday night, for the Concert in aid of the Distressed Highlanders, conducted by Mr. T. G. Reed, of the Haymarket Theatre; and, for the same reason, we can only mention that Miss Mounsey gave her sixth and last Concert of Sacred Music, at Crosby Hall, and that the Amateur Musical Society held their third meeting at the Music Hall.

Mr. J. W. Sharp's Concert, at the National Hall, took place on Wednesday night.

Society of British Musicians.—We regret that the Concert given on Wednesday night was so indifferently attended, at the Hanover-square Rooms. Mr. Sterndale Bennett conducted the band, of which Mr. Thirlwall was Leader. Beethoven's Symphony in F, No. 8, and the overtures to the "Ruler of the Spirits," the "Wood Nymph," and "Don Quixote," by Weber, Bennett, and Macfarren; Moscheles's "Recollections of Ireland," finely played by Mr. W. H. Holmes; and Moliqué's Flute Concerto, cleverly executed by Mr. B. Wells, were the prominent instrumental items. The patriarch of tenors, Braham, sang "Deeper and deeper still!" and Miss Lockey, the Misses Williams, Mr. Burdini, and Mr. Lockey, contributed their vocal aid; Messrs. Broadwood kindly lending the use of their pianofortes.

Sacred Harmonic Society.—The annual performance of Cathedral Music at Exeter Hall comprised specimens of the productions of Orlando Gibbons, in 1610; T. Purcell, 1668; Mr. Wise, 1670; Dr. Blow, 1678; H. Purcell, 1683; Rev. Dr. Creyghton, 1690; Dr. Croft, 1720; Weldon, 1730; Dr. Greene, 1740; Robinson, 1750; Dr. Boyce, 1760; Kent, 1770; Butchshell, 1795; and Mendelssohn, 1846: the last being the Te Deum performed at the Sacred Concerts at Crosby Hall. Mr. Turle was the organist: and the leading vocalists were the Misses A. and M. Williams, Messrs. Genge, Hill, Howe, Lockey, Kench, and Phillips. Handel's oratorio of "Belshazzar" will be executed, for the first time, by the Society, March 19.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

This evening (Saturday), at the Sussex Hall, Leadenhall-street, a series of four popular Concerts will be commenced, for which the leading English vocalists have been engaged. The Western Madrigal Society meets this evening; its Anniversary Festival, at the Freemasons' Hall, will take place on the 8th of April. On Monday night is the first meeting for the season of the Beethoven Quartet Society, for which David, of Leipzick (brother of Madame Dulcken), was engaged;

NEW BRANCH BANK OF ENGLAND, AT MANCHESTER.

NEW BRANCH BANK OF ENGLAND, AT MANCHESTER.

This handsome new edifice will, it is expected, be open for business on Monday next.

The first stone was laid by the Agent, John Reid, Esq., June 6, 1845; and the last stone was laid by the same gentleman, with much ceremony, 23rd June, 1846. The design is in the Doric style of architecture, and reflects much credit on C. R. Cockerell, Esq., R.A., architect to the Bank of England. The progress of the works was under the superintendence of Mr. J. F. Matthews.

The Bank is situated in King-street, the principal façade being nearly opposite the Town Hall. It is bounded on one side by Pall Mall, and on the other by Essex-street.

The Banking Room, which is handsomely fitted up, covers an area of fifty-two feet by forty-five, with a waiting-room on the left of the vestibule, and the Agent's private office on the right The entrance is in Pall-mall. In the building there are the residences of the Agent and Sub-Agent.

This Branch of the Bank of England was first established at Manchester, 18th September, 1826, at which time the present Agent, Mr. Reid, was appointed.

but his coming is not yet [illegible]. Viennese ops, however, is expected to-day, and [illegible] and Rousselot, will constitute a gr[illegible] ... young, Mr. Dando's Fourth Quartet Party will take at Crosby Hall; ... Third Concert of English Vocal Music will be given at Exeter Hall.

On Tuesday, Mr. Sterndale Bennett's Second Pianoforte Performance ... place at the Hanover-square Rooms.

On Wednesday will be the First Concert of Ancient Music; and Mr. Ransford's Annual Concert will be given at the Hayma[illegible] Theatre.

On Thursday, Mr. Lucas's Third Musical Evening ...

On Friday evening at Drury Lane and the Princess' Theatre; and Tuesday, ... Thursday, ... at Her Majesty's Theatre. Mr Love's Polyphonic E[illegible]tainment at Crosby Hall, was attended as usual. Miss Anne Romer[illegible] ... successful at the Princess' [illegible] ... "Four Brothers Aymon," has since appeared in Anne Page, in the "Merry Wives of Windsor," with Bishop's [illegible].

FOREIGN MUSICAL NEWS

MEYERBEER'S "CAMP OF SILESIA."—The long-expected opera was produced for the first time in Vienna on Thursday, the 18th ult., under the direction of the eminent composer. It has received a new name, and was christened "Vienna," since its original representation in Berlin, in 1844-45 ... as the Hereta been altered, but Meyerbeer has changed and introduced new music. The house (the Theatre an Der Wien) was crowded to excess, and the entrances and lobbies were filled with persons unable to obtain admittance into the interior. ... Duchess, and suite entered the ... at half-past six o'clock, and, ... Meyerbeer came to the orchestra to conduct. He was received with tremendous applause. ... the subsequent receptions of Jenny Lind and Staudigl were also great. ... and, with the delays, occupied nearly four hours in the execution. A March de Chorus in the first act was encored; in the second act, the encores were another Marching Song, and also a Drum Chorus; in the third act, the flute song of Jenny Lind. ... time, and two other songs by Jenny Lind and Staudigl. ... The audience carried the other encores by storm—especially the Drum Chorus, which pleased amazingly. ... the principal characters, Meyerbeer conducted the opera with skill. Jenny Lind did and sang admirably, as also Staudigl in the marching song and flute song of the former were beautiful. ... The opera is full of beauties of melody and harmony, and the scene many novel and curious effects in the instrumentation, with new combinations of wind, brass, and wood bands. ... bands on the stage. The brilliant mise en scène is in the second act, but [illegible] would prefer the first and last acts. It would be an ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ... scenes was enormous. As a work of art it is not equal to the "Hugenots" or "Robert le Diable," but it is one worthy of Meyerbeer's genius. ... [illegible] added that, from first to last, the opera of Silesia, or rather "Vienna," has been upwards of five months in preparation, of which two months have been taken up by Meyerbeer in personal superintendence of the rehearsals.

Duprez quitted Paris last Monday, on a four months leave of absence from the Academie Royale. He goes first to Vienna, and will sing in ... Berlin, ... "Crusaders" will be produced both in that capital, Vienna, Dresden, and Stuttgard. ... Marzida of Bologna, is in all probability, will be represented soon in Vienna.

Pauline Viardot Garcia continues to create the greatest furore in Berlin; she will no doubt come to London next. Jenny Lutzer (now Madame Dinglestadt) will return to her musical ... and will be here during the season [illegible] ... tandini come in April, as also Mendelssohn, to fulfil his Exeter Hall engagement to conduct "Elijah," which he has altered since its triumphant production at Birmingham Festival. Amongst the pianists expected this ... Madame Pleyel, Clara Scumann (formerly Mdlle Wieck), Wilmers, who is now in Paris, Thalberg, Dohler, Prudent, perhaps Liszt. Schumann's ode symphony, "The Paradise and the Peri," has been well received in Berlin.

From Italy we hear of nothing but failures of new operas. Bartista, in Naples, at the San Carlo, in "Eleonora de ... though supported by Madame [illegible] ... [illegible] ... "Gusmano di ... Lagrange, in Milan for Florence, to superintend the production of his new opera of "Macbeth." Madame Eugenia Garcia (formerly at the Princess's Opera) had been singing at Verona, in Desdemona. Donizetti has [illegible] ... analysis, near Paris, and which, we hear, will be ... Carlotta Grisi and Mdlle. Plunkett had returned to the Academie, the former from Rome and the latter from Turin. A. Adame's new opera of "La Bouquetiere" was produced at ... and the new ballet of "La Tentazione" ... Mdlle. Fanny ... of Carlotta Grisi ... Cerito and La Fitzjames ... [illegible] ... Bordas, a new tenor, was to appear at ... Lablache's benefit, at the Italian Opera, took place on Monday, when the "Matrimonio Segreto" was given with Rubini, Tamburini, Mario, Persiani, the contralto; and Pauline ... Mario Lablache, ... [illegible] ... ode symphonie ... [illegible] ... age now, since David's "Desert." "Manfred" was to be performed on the 21st.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (3rd day).—Since Monday the arrivals of English wheat have been on a very limited scale, and the show of ... [illegible] ... millers purchased with extreme caution, but, as about 1200 quarters of ... [illegible] ... qualities changed hands in the quarter. In white wheats very little was doing ... [illegible] ... at Monday's quotations. Barley ... [illegible] ... at Monday's currency. Beans ... [illegible] ... Peas ... [illegible] ... Flour ... [illegible] ... Oats ... [illegible] ... Linseed Cake ... [illegible] ... Rapeseed ... [illegible] ... Foreign

THE MAN IN THE MOON,
EDITED BY ALBERT SMITH AND JOHN LEECH.
"This is an admirable serio-comedy of fun. The illustrations, by Phiz, Meadows, Hine Thomas, &c., are capital."—Spectator.
"This is a truly delightful addition to our comic periodic literature; and we have before richly amused with smiling and laughing over its bright and facetious pages. There is not only excellence in quality but liberality in quantity. The 'Panoramic Tragedy of the Life and Death of Jon Gosnell of Curzon's magic Scott' . . .
No 3 is Now Ready. NOS. 1 and 2 have been REPRINTED, and may be had of all Booksellers. Offices, 17, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row.

CHEAP EDITION OF THE WORKS OF MR. CHARLES DICKENS, in Weekly Numbers containing Sixteen closely printed Pages, with Two Illustrations on Steel, by Phiz, Meadows, Hine, &c., price Three Half-pence each, and in Monthly Parts, sewed in a Wrapper, price Sevenpence. To commence with the PICKWICK PAPERS, which, completed in Thirty-two Numbers, and Four Shilling Parts, and to close with MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT.
The First Number will be published on Saturday, the 27th of March.
Prospectuses, with Specimen Pages, may be obtained of the Booksellers.
London: CHAPMAN and HALL.

DEATH-BED REPENTANCE IN DEVONSHIRE.
On the 31st of March, 1847, will be published, the First Part of a New Edition of THE NEW TESTAMENT, Superbly Embellished with a Series of beautiful Vignette Illustrations, and each page surrounded by an elaborate decorative Border, drawn by the first Artists, and engraved in the highest style of the art on Wood, under the superintendence of Mr. CHARLES HEATH.
To be published in Monthly Parts of Sixteen Pages, elegantly printed in small folio, price Two Shillings, or, on large paper, price Three Shillings each.—Specimens may be seen at all Booksellers'.
London: CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand.

NEW WORK BY MR. CAPTAIN MARRYAT.
On the 31st of March, 1847, will be published, in the First Part of the JUVENILE LIBRARY, By CAPTAIN MARRYAT.
To be continued Monthly, price One Shilling—commencing with an English story, entitled THE CHILDREN OF THE NEW FOREST; to be followed by others in succession. The work will be printed on superfine paper, and illustrated with Engravings on Steel. . . . set of seventy-two pages of letter-press, and two illustrations engraved on steel.
H. Hooper, King William-street, Strand.

SCOTLAND DELINEATED, in a SERIES of VIEWS, by STANFIELD, ROBERTS, NASH, LEITCH, HARDING, MCCULLOCH, CATTERMOLE, and GOODALL. Drawn on Lithographic Stone by J. D. HARDING; the Letterpress by the Rev. J. PARKER LAWSON, M.A., forming a Comprehensive History of the Country and its Antiquities. Part II. will be ready on the 1st of March.—Price to Subscribers' Plates, £1 4s.; Proofs, £1 11s.; Part I. Delineated and Described, 24s.—Published by J. HOGARTH, Royal Exchange, London; CRICHTON, Edinburgh, and LOUGHAS and SMITH, Dublin.

MARY BLAKE, Lucy Neal, Lucy Long, Buffalo Gals, Old Dan Tucker, and Six others of the most favourite Songs as sung by the Dublin Serenaders (genuine edition), are all given (with Words and Pianoforte Accompaniments complete) in THE PLANETA, No. 27 (price 2d.), for the week ending March 6th, with 16 fine Spain and Mary Blane Quadrilles (copy arrangement) . . . Those who have not given a Perusal to No. 26, price 2d. Either Number, p. p. 36 stamps. "Planeta Office, first floor, 67, Paternoster-row.

HENRY RUSSELL.—The New Compositions of this Eminently Popular Vocalist now in course of publication in THE MUSICAL TREASURY, the improved Threepenny Music for the Many:—"Man the Life-Boat," "Man the Life-Boat, on Monday next, will be "Little Fools and Great Ones," on March 15, for 3d. . . . The Sea King's Burial" . . . Nos. 22, for 3d. Delivery to follow in addition to the stars already published in Nos. 1 to 21, for 3d. each. . . . fourth, is DAVISON, Water-street, Bankside; and 309, Regent-street; of whom may be had, gratis, Hats (above 400 Pieces) for Pianoforte and most Instruments, all in Threepenny Sheets . . . rectly and elegantly printed in modern type.

3, Great Mad Bradley, Soho.
MR. COLBURN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.
Mr. DISRAELI'S NEW WORK—TANCRED; or, THE NEW CRUSADE. 3 Vols. In a few days.
BURKE'S PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE FOR 1847. New and Revised Edition. Corrected throughout to the present time, from the personal communications of the Nobility, Baronetage, &c., and containing ALL THE NEW CREATIONS. 1 Vol., with 1300 Engravings of Arms, 38s., bound. (Now Ready.)
II.
A THIRD EDITION OF HOCHELAGA; or, ENGLAND in the NEW WORLD. 2 thick Volumes, post 8vo, with Maps and Plans, 21s. bound.
III.
THE STORY OF LILLY DAWSON. By MRS. CROWE, Authoress of "Susan Hopley." 3 Vols. (Now Ready.)
"Mrs. Crowe has in her line of quite as interesting a character as Susan Hopley, and her adventures are not less romantic. Mrs. Crowe's style possesses a charm which renders her work irresistible."—Britannia.
HENRY COLBURN Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

19, Holles-street.
NEW SYSTEM AT BULL'S LIBRARY. The very general satisfaction that has resulted from the System planned and adopted by Mr. Bull, Librarian for several years past, renders it desirable more extensively to make known the advantages which it secures to Subscribers at the Library exclusively one of which may be particularized—namely, that the New Publications being always in demand, cannot be had for perusal, are in the course of the year shared equally among the Subscribers, to the extent that every year a Subscriber may have Two Guineas worth of the Books he may wish to keep.—Further Particulars may be seen in the Terms, which are sent gratis and post free.
19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, London.

AMERICAN SODA BISCUITS.—The only shop in England where they can be had fresh, is WEBBER'S, 8, Lombard-street, near the Mansion House. Also, fine Valentine Pie by 6d., Pineapple, 1s., Ginger Wafer, Thin Cadeaux, and a most infinite variety of Wine Biscuits, all as per pattern. Made on the Devonshire and School Cake, fresh daily. Scraps—Mock Turtle, Ox-Tail, Giblet, &c., at 2s. 6d. a Quart.

STAFFORD PENLEY'S EAU DE CARMES, a most fragrant, grateful, and delicious Perfume for the Toilet, the Bath Room, and the Chamber of the Invalid, composed of the choicest aromatics from the rarest sources. Its refreshing qualities render it indispensable to the World of Fashion, and its strength is not impaired by climate or change. Its purity revealed, and considered the most beautiful Perfume of the day.—Sold by appointment, by Mr. R. Inc, Perfumer, 13, Haymarket, Oxford-street; Mr. Jennings, 100, Quadrant, Regent street; Mr. Barnes, 1, Tichborne-street, opposite Haymarket.

DEACON'S IMPROVED PORTABLE GARDEN PUMP.
This novel, but most simple, and inexpensive Invention is admirably adapted for . . . watering and syringing a pond. The Pump has a very neat, stainless-line appearance, may be . . . and is extensively patronised by eminent horticulturists and nurserymen. . . . Manufactory, London-bridge. Deacon's Illustrated horticultural Implement Catalogue . . . to all parts of the United Kingdom.

SEND EIGHT POSTAGE STAMPS, and by return, and post-free, you will get a handsome TEA-SPOON, of C. WATSON'S SOLID ALBATA PLATE, which is highly appreciated as a Sovereign Remedy . . . It is equal to Silver in sweet and handsome as Silver itself. This is the only . . . substitute . . . and, unlike Fakes, Goods of any kind, there is nothing to wear off, so that the . . . you may clean it, but better it will continue to look, though in daily use for fifty years. Don't be afraid to put it any test, and then send your order. A full catalogue of prices, with patterns of every other article manufactured from this beautiful Metal, will be enclosed with the samples.
Address C. WATSON, 4 and 5, Northumberland-alley, Fenchurch-street.

TEAS at WHOLESALE PRICES, 2, BUCKLERSBURY CHEAPSIDE.
Good Useful Breakfast Tea . . . . . 3s. 0d. to 3s. 4d.
Fine Rich Pekoe Tea . . . . . 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.
Rich Pekoe Souchong . . . . . 4s. 4d. to 5s. 0d.
Good Useful Green . . . . . 3s. 4d. to 4s. 0d.
Fine Imperial Gunpowder . . . . . 4s. 4d.
Superior Young Hyson . . . . . 5s. 0d.
Finest Gunpowder . . . . . 7s. 0d.
Six pounds of the above delivered free of carriage to any part of England.
MANSELL and CO. Wholesale Tea Dealers, Pocket-handkerchief Manufacturers.

INVALUABLE IN EVERY LAUNDRY.—ROBINSON'S DRYING MACHINE entirely abolishes the destructive system of wringing, and so greatly facilitates the drying of all articles of apparel, blankets, counterpanes, &c., as to offer an important saving of time and fuel. It has been adopted in her Majesty's Laundry Wonsor, and in many public and private establishments throughout the Kingdom, including the Royal Naval Hospitals at Plymouth and Haslar, the Royal Marine Infirmary, Chatham, and the Baths and Washhouses, St. Pancras and Bethnal Green. The operation is performed without pressure or friction, and cannot possibly injure the most delicate fabrics. Copies of testimonials, and all further particulars, may be obtained on application to W. H. JENKINS, Proprietor of the Patent, and Sole Manufacturer, 37, Cursitor-street, Chancery-lane, London. Machines are also made of sizes suitable for Dyers, Manufacturers, &c.

CLARKE'S PATENT MORTAR LAMP and LAMP MOTAL.—These Incomparable Night Lamps are now manufactured in beautiful plain, coloured, and painted glass, and papier machée, which, with the great improvements that have been made in the Lamp Mortars, render them, without exception, the most elegant and perfect night lamp ever invented. Lamps, 1s. 6d., and upwards; Mortars, 2d. per box. Double burn, 4d. CLARKE'S PATENT ARGENTINE LAMP. This lamp burns the Patent Lamp Mortars, and will be found invaluable not only in the Nursery but in the Bed-room; it will not hold a quart of water, or a pint of water and pint of food, at an expense of one farthing per six hours, burning, serving as an excellent night lamp. It is entirely free from smell or smoke, and may be carried about with perfect safety. May be obtained retail from most respectable Ironmongers, Oilmen, and Grocers in the Kingdom, and wholesale of Patentee's Lamp Manufactory, 35, Albany street, Regent's-park.

WINDOW BLINDS.—TYLOR and PACE, General Window-Blind Manufacturers, 3, Queen-street, three doors from Cheapside.
Venetian Blinds per . . . . . 0s. 8d.
Holland or Blonde 0 6
Holland Spring ditto 0 9
Un on Velvet Blinds 0 4
Perforated Zinc Blinds, in mahogany 0 9
Gems Wire ditto ditto 1 1s
Oriental Blinds of Striped Cloth 1 9
Transparent Blinds, each, 12s., 18s., 24s. . . . . &c.

FOUR FIRES FOR ONE PENNY!!! by EDWARDS'S PATENT FIREWOOD. It flgnts instantly, . . . saves money, time, and trouble. Sold by all the notable cumnen and grocers. Families in the country supplied with . . . forwarded to the carrier, on receipt of a post-office order for 10s., payable to Thomas Edwards, No 18, Wharf-road, City-road.

A CARD.—Mr. BROUGH, ACCOUNTANT, HOUSE and GENERAL AGENT, VALUER, SURVEYOR, and AUCTIONEER (Pelegrave-place), 225, Strand, and No. 6, South Lambeth-place, Vauxhall, London. The agencies for advertisers has had in arranging difficult Accounts, and his large practice as a Valuer, Surveyor, and Property Agent, Household, Fixtures, and other Properties, gives him confidence in asking for a portion of the support and patronage of his friends and the public. Valuations for the Transfer of Property, for administration, or for other purposes, properly and carefully attended to. N.B. Reference of the first respectably, and (if required) security to any amount can be given.

SECOND-HAND SILVER.—The Seller or Purchaser may receive every information, gratuitously, at T. COX SAVORY & CO., Silversmiths, 47, Cornhill, seven doors from Gracechurch-street London.

SHEFFIELD PLATE FOR THE DINNER TABLE. The Catalogue of Prices, with Drawings of Silver-plated Dish Covers, Vegetable Dishes, and other requisites for the Dinner Table, is Published, and may be had on application, or will be sent Postage Free to any part of Gens, Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies.
T. COX SAVORY and CO., 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

SILVER SPOONS and FORKS, 7s. per ounce.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank of England, Publish a Pamphlet containing Drawings and Prices of Silver Spoons and Forks, Tea Services, Dish Covers, and every other article required in family use. It may be had gratis, and will be sent free by post to any part of the United Kingdom.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES. A. B. SAVORY and SONS, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the Attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves in their own Manufactory. In silver cases, with the Hunting Cases ornamented or Bevelled; the prices are for guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock now offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his purpose.

ORNAMENTAL CLOCKS.—Recently received from Paris, an unusually large variety of FOURTEEN-DAY CLOCKS, in virtue the best and half-hours, in Ormolu, Marble, and China. The designs are Pastoral and Historical, and in point a few of great merit in the style of Louis XV. The prices range from £2 2s. and upwards; each, and upwards.
T. COX SAVORY and CO., No. 47, Cornhill, seven doors from Gracechurch-street, London.

SILVER TEA SERVICES of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, respectfully inform their customers that they have recently finished a few new designs in the present Improved taste, and that they are sold at reduced prices from those now usually in the trade.

Un bridge Pattern.		Thain Pattern.
Strong Silver Tea-pot	£10 10 0	Strong Silver Tea-pot	£13 0
Ditto Cream-jug	2 2 0	Ditto Sugar basin	2 5
Ditto Cream-jug	1 10 0	Ditto Cream Ewer	2 2
Ditto Coffee-pot	3 14 0	Ditto Coffee-pot	3 15
Complete	£20 16 0	Complete	£22 12 0

A variety of upwards of 50 Silver Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the Show Rooms and on application the illustrated price current, containing drawings with the weights and prices of recent designs, will be forwarded by post to any part of the United Kingdom, India, or the Colonies. Old Silver taken in exchange, or purchased for ready money. Parcels carriage free to the country.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at 56, Regent-street, Waterloo-place, and 338, Strand, Temple Bar Corner. These watches are of the most modern construction, and have recently received many improvements, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. Each watch is compared with the Greenwich time, and is sent to any part of the country free of expense. On receipt of a Post-office Order payable to John Jones for £4 4s. Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

INDIA. NOVEL AND IMPROVEMENTS.—Besides other desirable advantages, Parkes' fine compressed steel shawl is available in two forms, will be granted by her Majesty's Bankrupt Maker and Patentee, J. H. R. MOTT 76, Strand.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase these first-rate instruments is at HOLKIEN'S manufactory, 28, King W. Lam . . . Cambridge. H. T. Lavenu, Esq., Organist and Professor of Music, Ireland, India, or the Colonies. A splendid stock of PIANOS, which is not to be equalled . . . charged by them. H. T.'s much-admired Pianos, Cheltenham, each price . . . exchanges. FOLKIEN, 28, King William-street, London-bridge.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS HOWELLS, of 366, Regent-street, two doors from Margaret-street, Soho Bazaar, . . . ing the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the most moderate capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most Finished . . . in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The system is entirely new, and fully adapted for Ladies residing in the Country or Colonies. Prospectuses may be had at the Rooms, or by letter. Paper Measure.

THE selection of Ladies is respectfully requested to the NOVEL KNITTING COTTON COMPANY'S Knitting, and Netting Cotton, as being of the most beautiful texture of any yet . . . Knitting, and Netting Cotton, as being of the most beautiful texture of any yet . . . manufactured. Sold in Balls, 100, 200, and 300 yards; and also in skeins at all the first respectable Mercers, Drapers and Haberdashers; and wholesale only of the Agents in London, Mr. W. W. Greenwood, 41, Cheapside, Corner of Bread-street, and Messrs. Newell and Co., 6, Watling-street.

THE SALE AT GEORGE SMITH'S . . . Drawing of the Patterns of the ALTERATIONS, Specimens of the Stock of India, French, and British Shawls, Silk Dresses, Mantles, Velvets, Bonnets, Cashmeres, Robes, embroidered and printed muslins, Lace Veils, Collars, Sleeves, Jewellery, Swiss Cuffs, &c., will be SOLD by Private Contract, at greatly reduced prices, in the Rooms . . . certain end of the last quarter, and the entrance to which is from the Quadrant, 59, Regent-street, opposite Swan and Edgar's. Ladies are invited to . . . inspect the interest of . . . together with Babies' Hats . . . and Infants' Caps, at GEORGE SMITH'S, 237, Regent-street.

THE LAST WEEK of DISON'S SELLING OFF, at 237, REGENT STREET.—In Consideration of Wood and Brown having given their House to the alterations, the 13th instant will be the last Day that Ladies can be participators in the . . . which would otherwise . . . to long immovable prices . . . Handkerchiefs, whereby so great a saving may be effected that we . . . any . . . to say by the Ladies . . . Shawls, Dresses, Mantles, Velvets, Bonnets, Cashmeres, Robes, embroidered muslins, Lace Veils, Collars, Sleeves, Jewellery, Swiss cuffs, &c., will be SOLD by Private Contract, at greatly reduced prices, in the Rooms . . . certain end of the last quarter, and the entrance to which is from the Quadrant, 59, Regent-street, opposite Swan and Edgar's. Ladies are invited to . . . inspect the interest of . . . together with Babies' Hats . . . and Infants' Caps, at GEORGE SMITH'S, 237, Regent-street.

KING and SHEAFF will send Patterns to Ladies in the Country of all the New SILK DRESSES &c., FREE OF EXPENSE.

Plain Black Gros de Naples	2 Wide, 5s. 9d. per yard
Ditto	2 wide, 6s. 9d. and 7s. 9d.
Ditto	Patterns Free	An Intermediate quality, at 5s. 6d.
Rich Black Gros de Naples	2 wide, 8s. 9d. per yard
Ditto	and 9s.
Ditto	ditto

Address, KING and SHEAFF, Silk Mercers, 220, Regent-street, corner of Little Argyll-street.

GIBBINS' CREAM of ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This is most respectfully offered to the Public as the most delightful Perfume for the Handkerchief, and the most effectual Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade . . . fully applied to the most delicate Hair without . . . Bertial Preservative of the Hair. Being a pomade . . . fully applied to the most delicate Hair without . . . Gibbins' Cream of Roses and Rosemary, 3s. 6d. per bottle.

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY . . . WATER BETHUNE, Esq., Chairman. . . . Deputy Chairman. . . . Esq. . . . Esq. . . . Esq

CHURCHES OF THE METROPOLIS.

ST. GEORGE THE MARTYR, SOUTHWARK.

THE parish of St. George is of great antiquity. It was originally given by William the Conqueror, soon after the year 1066, to the noble family of Arderne. It was, for some time, attached to the priory of Bermondsey, having been given to that foundation by Thomas Arderne, and Thomas, his son, in 1122; and St. George's continued to be under this religious control, until the extermination of the monasteries in the reign of Henry the Eighth.

The original church of St. George had become so ruinous, that in 1732, the parishioners applied to Parliament, and obtained an Act for the erection of another church; and the sum of £6000 was granted for this purpose out of the fund raised in the reign of Queen Anne for building Fifty New Churches. Accordingly, the present edifice was commenced in 1734, from the designs of Mr. John Price, architect. It is placed at the southern end of High-street, just at its junction with Blackman-street; parallel with its south side is a narrow street leading to Kent-street, now relieved of its traffic by the fine wide road of Great Dover-street. Thus the Church occupies a very conspicuous site.

SAINT GEORGE THE MARTYR, SOUTHWARK.

There is little to describe in the design; the object, doubtless, being to accommodate a large and rapidly increasing population, rather than attempt architectural embellishment. The whole structure is placed on a lofty plinth-form, to which there is an ascent by steps from the pavement; the tower and spire facing the street. These are of stone, mostly worked in the tasteless style of the last century: the tower is very poor; but the spire, with its open arches, is somewhat better; it is lofty, and is surmounted by a gilt ball and vane. The body of the Church, 110 by 52 feet, is of red brick, with stone finishings; and its western end is surmounted with a stone balustrade. In the centre of this front, flanking the principal doorway, is a pair of lofty columns, supporting a semicircular pediment, in the tympanum of which is some appropriate sculpture; and, upon the crown of the pediment, and at the angles of the balustrade, is a handsome stone urn. There is a fine peal of bells.

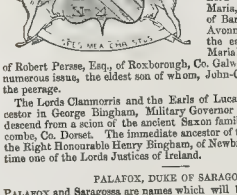
The interior is very roomy, and contains 1200 sittings, of which 550 are free: the fittings are mostly of oak. There are several handsome mural monuments: and, if we mistake not, the remains of Cocker, the well-known arithmetician, were interred here: this, however, must have been in the old church, as Cocker died before the year 1677.

The parish is very populous, and contains upwards of 50,000 inhabitants. A very interesting paper of its statistics was read to the Statistical Society of London, in 1840, by the Rev. Mr. Wright.

Hogarth, in his plate of Southwark Fair, represents Figg, a celebrated prize-fighter, and a worthy named Cadman, flying, by means of a rope, from the tower of St. George's Church. This fair was held in part of the Mint, which lies in the rear of the houses opposite. It was formerly called "Suffolk Manor;" and, opposite the Church, where the premises of Mr. Pigeon, the distiller, now stand, was formerly the mansion of Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, the brother-in-law of Henry VIII. The history of the place is very interesting, as detailed by Mr. Wright. A few years since public attention was attracted to the Mint, in consequence of its having been the scene of "the life, character, and behaviour" of the notorious Jack Sheppard, the hero of "felon literature." His companion, Jonathan Wild, kept his horses at the Duke's Head, within the precincts of the Mint.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

LORD CLANMORRIS.



DENIS-ARTHUR BINGHAM, third Lord Clanmorris, died a few days since at Rugby, in Warwickshire, aged 39. His Lordship, who succeeded to the family honours at the decease of his brother, the second Baron, in 1829, was younger son of John, first Lord Clanmorris, by Anne Maria, his wife, only daughter of Barry Yelverton, Viscount Avonmore. He married, at the early age of eighteen, Maria Helena, second daughter of Robert Persse, Esq., of Roxborough, Co. Galway, and has left a very numerous issue, the eldest son of whom, John-Charles-Robert, inherits the peerage.

The Lords Clanmorris and the Earls of Lucan have a common ancestor in George Bingham, Military Governor of Sligo, in 1586; and descend from a scion of the ancient Saxon family of Bingham, of Melcombe, Co. Dorset. The immediate ancestor of the Clanmorris line was the Right Honourable Henry Bingham, of Newbrook, Co. Mayo, at one time one of the Lords Justices of Ireland.

PALAFOX, DUKE OF SARAGOSSA.

PALAFOX and Saragossa are names which will be always dear to the national pride, and will live for ever in the national memory of Spain. The hero who bore them is no more, but we announce his death with the full confidence that his fame is immortal. Don Joseph Palafox was the scion of a noble family, and from his early years immersed in those pleasures which attend patrician life in Spain. At the period of the memorable invasion of the Peninsula by the French, Palafox was Governor of Saragossa, the capital of Arragon. This ancient city was defenceless, excepting for the old Gothic, or Roman, or Moorish wall, of ten feet high, by which it was surrounded. The garrison consisted chiefly of the citizens of the place. Lefèbre Desnouettes, the French General in Arragon, having defeated such of the insurgents as had shown themselves in the field, he conceived he had only to advance in security of occupying the capital of the province. But there never was on earth a defence in which the patriotic courage of the defenders sustained so long, and baffled so effectually, the assaults of an enemy provided with all those military advantages, of which they themselves were totally destitute. This siege commenced the 15th June, 1808, and lasted till the 17th of the ensuing August. The conflict was carried on from street to street, and from house to house. The most desperate courage was displayed, even by the women: the contending parties often occupied different apartments of the same house; the passages which connected them were choked with dead. Palafox was the soul and spirit of the whole resistance. His wisdom directed—his courage inspired. A great triumph was the result. After the horrid contest had continued for several weeks, a considerable reinforcement was thrown into the place, and Lefèbre was compelled to raise the siege, and retreat. The indomitable courage shown by the Spaniards at Saragossa threw new life into their countrymen, and gave them energies which ceased not till the French were driven from Spain. In the after campaigns of the Peninsular struggle, Palafox took a conspicuous share. He commanded the eastern division of the Spanish army that was organised under the auspices of the Supreme Junta at Aranjuez. In reward for his brilliant services, he was created Duke of Saragossa. In the commotions and wars which have latterly distracted Spain, Palafox—though a supporter of the existing Government—had little part: he, of late, lived in retirement. His death occurred recently, and he was interred, at the request of his Sovereign, with great magnificence, at Madrid.

THE REV. EDWARD SOUTH THURLOW.

THIS gentleman, who died on the 17th February, was only son of Alderman John Thurlow, of Norwich, and nephew of Edward, Lord Thurlow, the celebrated Chancellor. At the period of his decease, Mr. Thurlow held the following valuable preferments:—A prebendal stall at Norwich; the Rectory of Houghton-le-Spring, Co. Durham (estimated at £2157 per annum); the vicarage of Stanfordham, Northumberland, the yearly income of which is £574; and the sinecure benefices of Eastyn, Co. Flint, and Llandrillo, Co. Mericneth, producing together an additional revenue of £700 per annum. The reverend gentleman married, first, 17th July, 1786, Elizabeth Mary, daughter of James Thompson, Esq.; and, secondly, in 1810, Susanna, youngest daughter of the Rev. John Love, and by both leaves issue.

SIR GEORGE GIPPS

THIS gallant officer, lately Governor of New South Wales, was a veteran of the Peninsula. His first commission as a Lieutenant in the Corps of Royal Engineers, bears date the 11th January, 1809: he rose through the different grades to that of Lieutenant-Colonel the 23rd November, 1841. He served in the Peninsular campaigns to the end of the war: he was at the siege of Badajoz, where he was wounded: he was also at the Pass of Biar, at the Battle of Castalla, and at many other brilliant triumphs of our armies. He received the honour of Knighthood in 1835. In 1837, he succeeded Sir Richard Bourke as Governor of New South Wales. His administration there lasted from that period until a short time before the arrival of his successor, Sir Charles Fitzroy, in 1846.

Sir George Gipps's government of New South Wales was, it is to be regretted, an unhappy one. Sir George, though a man of great intellect, information, and integrity, had a somewhat proud and peremptory disposition. Owing partly to this infirmity of temper, and partly to the extremely embarrassing state of the affairs of the colony at the time, the Governor came into such unpleasant collision with his elective Legislative Council, that his recall was the consequence. Yet, whatever complaint there might have been against Sir George's prudence, he retired with his honour unsullied, and the purity of his motives acknowledged.

The brave Knight expired at Canterbury, on the 28th ultimo, in the 57th year of his age.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

ANCIENT CROSSES AT SANDBACH.

In the market-place of the pleasantly-situated town of Sandbach, in the hundred of Nantwich, in Cheshire, stand the two ancient Crosses represented in our Illustration; stated by Ormerod, the historian of the county, to be indisputably ranked among the finest monuments of antiquity of this kind now in the kingdom. They are of that description of Crosses supposed, in some instances, to have been erected shortly after the introduction of Christianity, on the places where it was first preached; and in others to have been raised in the early Saxon period, over the graves of personages of distinction.

ANCIENT CROSSES AT SANDBACH, CHESHIRE.

The substructure consists of a platform of two steps, on which are placed two sockets, in which the Crosses are fixed. At the angle of each stage of the platform are stone posts, on which rude figures have been carved. The platform and sockets are 5 feet 6 inches in height: at the time Ormerod wrote, the height of the greater Cross was 16 feet 8 inches, and that of the smaller one 11 feet 11 inches, making the greatest height from the ground 22 feet 2 inches.

The larger Cross (east side) bore a large circle, containing three figures, to the central one of which the others appeared to be paying homage; over, three other figures. After a short deficiency occurred a clear representation of our Saviour in the manger; above, a crucifix, with Christ attached to it; and then various mutilated figures. The west side was originally divided into eight double compartments; the first filled with dragons; second, mutilated representations of winged figures; third, a winged and sitting figure; fourth, Simon bearing the Cross; fifth, our Saviour; sixth, destroyed. The south side was filled with foliage knots and fancy ornaments. The north contained eleven figures, over which was a large fish, with a mouth downwards, and tongue triple cloven—supposed to be the eleven original apostles, with the newly elected one, and the spirit descending in the form of cloven tongues.

The smaller Cross has a variety of human figures, placed within niches and lozenges, on the east and west sides; and others, within niches, on the north and south sides. The twelve figures on the north side have a marked resemblance to the eleven on the other Cross; and on the west front is a group of three persons, apparently representing the Trinity.

Both Crosses have terminated in ornamental circular or elliptical tops, round which other figures have been carved. It is probable the smaller has been similar to the Maltese in form.

These Crosses were standing in the reign of Elizabeth; and must, therefore, have escaped the fury of the Reformation. They were placed in their original position—the fragments being surrendered for that purpose by the various possessors Sept. 1816. All attempts at restoration were abstained from, the chasms being filled with plain stone.

These Crosses are ascribed to the date of 653; when Peda returned a Christian convert from Northumbria to Mercia, attended (according to Bede) by four priests to preach the Gospel throughout his dominions.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"S. B.," Hull.—We fully appreciate your industry and skill, but the diagrams forwarded occasion so much unnecessary trouble that we are compelled to give them up. If you would content yourself by simply writing the initials of the several pieces, as "W. K." "B. Q." and the like, you would save us labour, and yourself from such palpable errors as occur in the diagrams lately sent. In No. 1, you place the Black, or White, or Red King to check of an adverse Knight at starting, and to be remains to the end, neither piece being moved at all.

"S. J. H."—We shall have much pleasure in giving the solutions, if you send the positions; but we have no opportunity of referring to them.

"M. S.," "G. B. S.," and twenty others, will find the error corrected in the present Number.

"F. E. F."—The "Hand-book of Chess" will be published in a few weeks. To the second question, it depends entirely upon the party you engage.

"Tyro," Birmingham, should immediately devote himself to the study of the Elementary Lessons in the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." He will not then be puzzled by so simple an occurrence as his opponent's playing Q P two, in answer to his first move of K P two. You should at once take his Pawn; if, then, he retake with his Q, you bring out your Q Kt, attacking the Q, and thus gain a move—sufficient advantage, between the highest order of players, to frequently decide the game.

"R. S. C."—There is a very obvious and easy way to get a sight of the Indian Problem, which is merely to buy any Monthly Part of the Magazine on the wrapper of which it appears.

"E. S. T." The Indian Problem can certainly be solved in four moves.

"B. M. P."—Sarratt's solution is—1. R to B 8th (ch); 2. R to Q R 8th (ch); 3. Q to K B 8th (ch); 4. Q to Q B 8th (ch); and the adversary must take the Queen.

"H. E. W." is thanked. The system of notation he recommends has long been familiar to us, but is not likely to be adopted in this country.

"F. M. S."—The position in last week's Enigma No. 121 is quite correct. You must not permit a Problem in two moves to defeat you: look again.

"P. P. E."—The Knight's march over the Chess-board is now well understood. You will find several beautiful modes of effecting it in Tomlinson's "Amusements of Chess."

"W. R." The King can never Castle while any piece stands between him and the Rook.

"F. P. T."—The Games played in the Match between England and France were all published in the 5th Volume of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." Those between Paris and Perth may likewise be found in the same work.

"Brother Jonathan."—The Queen can go into any square adjoining that on which the adverse King stands; but, unless she be protected, the King may capture her.

"C. E. R."—The openings you speak of will be fully treated of in the forthcoming Hand-book.

"M. N. O."—"G. A. H."—Enigma No. 123 shall be given correctly next week.

"N. D.," Nottingham.—It shall have due attention.

"A Subscriber."—You may always find opponents at Rex's Grand Divan

Solutions by "Sopwith," "R. K. S." "Old Dan," "H. W. E.," "C. E. R.," "G. A. H.," and "N. D.," are correct

PROBLEM, NO. 162.

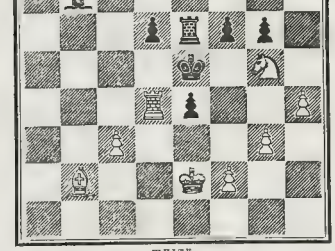
 In the diagram of this Problem, by an unfortunate inadvertence, a Black Knight was inserted at Black's Q Rook's 2nd sq instead of a Black King. The reader is requested to make the correct on, and we will give the solution next week.

PROBLEM, NO. 163.

By MR. KUIPER.

White playing first, can mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

The two following Games, hitherto unpublished, were played some years ago, at the Westminster Chess Club; the first between Mr. Slous and Mr. Scott, and the other between Mr. Slous and Mr. Walker.

White (Mr. Slous).	Black (Mr. Scott).	White (Mr. Slous).	Black (Mr Scott)
1. K P two	K P two	10. P takes P	B takes Kt
2. K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	11. K B P takes B	Q takes B
3. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th	12. P takes Kt	Q takes Q P (ch)
4. Q Kt P two	B takes Kt P	13. B to K 3d (d)	Q to K Kt 5th
5. Q B P one	B to Q 3d (a)	14. B to K B 3d	R to K sq
6. Castles	Kt to Q R 4th	15. R takes P (ch)	Q to K 5th
7. B to Q 3d	Q B P two	16. R takes B P	Q to K Kt 3d
8. Q Kt to R 3d	K Kt to B 3d	17. R takes B P	Q to K Kt sq
9. Q Kt to B 4th (b)	Kt takes Kt	18. P takes P	K to K Kt sq
10. B takes Kt	Kt takes K P	19. Q to K B 2d	Q Kt P one
11. Q to K sq (c)	Kt to K B 3d	20. P to K B 7th	B to Q Kt 2d
12. Kt takes K P	Castles	21. B to Q 5th (ch)
13. Q P two	Q to her B 2d	And mates in two more moves.
14. K B P two	P takes Q P

(a) This is a poor, feeble mode of defending the Evans' gambit.
(b) B to Q B 3d would have been better, we think.
(c) Q P two would also have been good, if Black then took the Q B P, Q to her Kt 3d would have given White a capital attack.
(d) White is minus a Pawn, but his position is more than a piece superior to his antagonist's.

BETWEEN MR. SLOUS AND MR. WALKER.

White (Mr. S).	Black (Mr. W).	White (Mr. S).	Black (Mr. W).
1 K P two	K P two	19. B takes Kt	Q takes B
2 K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	20. K R P one	Q R to K R sq (c)
3. Q P two	Kt takes P	21. K R to K 3rd	R to K R 5th (d)
4 Kt takes P	Kt to K 3rd	22. K B P one	Kt P takes P
5 B to Q B 4th	Q B P one	23. Q to her B 7th (ch)	K to Kt 3rd
6 Castles (a)	K Kt to B 3rd	24. Q R to K sq (e)	B to B sq
7. K B P two	B to Q B 4th (ch)	25. B to Q Kt 2nd	K B P one
8. K to R sq	K Kt takes K P	26. R to K B 3rd	Q to K B 4th
9. B takes Q Kt	B P takes B	27. Kt to Q 6th	R takes P (ch)
10. Q to K R 5th (ch)	K Kt P one	28. R takes R	R takes R (ch)
11. Kt takes Kt P	Kt to K B 3rd	29. K to Kt sq	Q to K B 3rd
12. Q takes B	P takes Kt	30. P takes R	R to R 3rd
13. Q to K Kt 5th	K to B 2nd	31. R to K 2nd	Kt to R 3rd
14. Kt to Q B 3rd	R to K R 4th	32. Kt to K 8th	Q to h B 4th
15. Q to K Kt 3rd	Q P two	33. Q to K Kt 7th (ch)	K to R 4th
16. B to K 3rd	Q Kt P one (b)	34. Kt to B 6th (ch)	K to R 4th
17. B to Q 4th	B to R 3rd	35. Q to K R 6th	Q to R 4th
18. K R to K sq	Q B P one	36. Q takes Q—Mate.

(a) A splendid attack may now be got by taking the K B P with the Kt, and then Kt with B.
(b) He would have gained nothing by Q P one, because White could reply with Q R to Q sq.
(c) Black's pieces are now extremely well placed.
(d) Again an advantage would have accrued from Q P one, on account of Kt to K 4th.
(e) White has now a favourable opening for the attack of his forces.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No 124.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R sq	K at Q R 6th	B at Q R 8th	P at Q B 3rd
B at K B sq		Kt at K 4th

White, having to play, can mate in four moves.

No. 125.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q B 6th	K at Q R 3rd	P s at Q 3rd, Q Kt 4th, and Q R 3rd	P s at Q B 2nd, Q Kt 4th, and Q R 2nd
Kt at Q 4th	R at Q R sq
	Kt at Q R 5th

White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 126.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Kt 2nd	K at K B 4th	Kt at K Kt 4th	B at Q sq
Q at her B 5th	Q at K sq	P s at K B 3rd, Q 5th, and Q B 3rd	P s at K R 5th, Q Kt 3rd and 4th
B at Q 4th	R at Q Kt sq

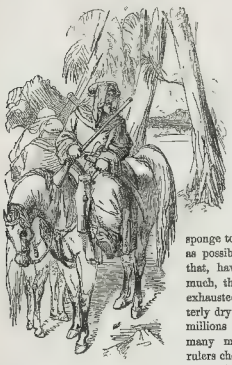
White to play, and mate in three moves.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLER, 198, Strand; aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 6, 1847.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 254.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1847. [Sixpence.

THE RUSSIAN TRIBUTE.



S OFTEN as the Continent goes to war, England pays a large part of the cost; and when the world returns to peace, England pays again the price of the settlement. All the Powers of Europe seem to regard England as a mine of wealth, to be drawn upon in all circumstances—or, to use a better simile, as a sponge to be squeezed as much as possible. It is a wonder that, having parted with so much, the mine is not quite exhausted, and the sponge utterly dry. But we have a few millions left; credit for as many millions more as our rulers choose to ask for; and beyond that the hands and heads that, with incessant toil, can create yet more wealth, when even credit begins to fail. May we learn to use it better than we have done in time past: now that we have a whole nation to keep on daily wages, we may, perhaps, begin to spend our money at home. And may we never see another war to keep Legitimacy on the thrones it forfeited by its follies and crimes; and, above all, no more Holy Alliances and Congresses of Vienna, to suck us of subsidies and saddle us with future contracts as absurd and extravagant as the Russo-Dutch Loan!

We are wholly at a loss to understand the lofty disdain of pounds sterling with which Lord John Russell speaks in treating this question; are English Ministers always enamoured of cash payments when made to such States as Austria and Russia? And can a Russell emulate the profligate subserviency to crowned heads which made a Castlereagh scatter millions over the Continent with almost criminal profusion? Are we for ever to be bound by the engagements with other nations, which those nations make no scruple of breaking with us? When they violate their treaties with us in letter and spirit, are we to adhere fanatically to both? So it seems: we are the very Quixotes of Europe—fighting for all, paying for all, and not to be cured, even by the most manifest insults, of our delusions. We have long been convinced that, instead of deserving the name of the most practical of nations, we are, in some things, the most visionary, unreflecting, and rash. We laugh at the dreaming Germans—lost in the clouds of metaphysics and philosophy, till the most obvious of political expedients appear impossibilities to them; we look down on the light, volatile Frenchman, who, in a month's campaign, has scattered European armies, who requires but three days to upset a dynasty, and then subsides into his former bounds, and his old servitude in a new shape, as before. To both these we rate ourselves superior. Do either French or Germans, though with tenfold the interest in the state of the Continent than we, in our sea-girt kingdom, pay their annual subsidies to those whom nine-tenths of the nation cordially detest? No; to enrich those we hate, and bestow wealth for which we receive no return, is the peculiarity of the practical, common-sense Englishman!

After the declaration of the Government on the first debate, it was, of course, certain that Mr. Hume's motion would be rejected. We are not sure it is made in the best form, but with the main object—stopping the annual payment of a large sum of money for the advantage of Russia—a large mass of the English public must concur. The Government thinks otherwise at present; but that it will have to change its opinion in the course of time is certain. We have enough to provide for without paying on a broken bond; and, as on many other questions, our rulers will have to gather wisdom from the Hustings; it is there they will learn that, though there is a time to pay, there is also a time to withhold from payment. At present "we are to continue;" we shall still lay, or rather fling, our yearly offering at the feet of the Czar—for it is done, we allow, with a sufficient air of contempt—and the Autocrat will pocket the insult and the gold, and therewith pay another regiment to support the reign of "order" and the knout at Warsaw. For the Poles we have public meetings, and strong resolutions, and "tremendous cheers," in abundance; but the solid thousands go to St. Petersburg; our sympathies are with the oppressed—our real help with the oppressor. Our public opinion is as empty as Pistol's "brave words, spoken at the bridge;" but, where there is a terrible activity, where there are "throats to be cut and work to be done," strange enough it is to reflect that the hilt of the sword is forged from the gold of England.

Lord John Russell's speech on this Russian payment resolves itself into bad logic and a quibble; his reasoning is defective, for his premises lead directly to a conclusion he refuses to adopt; the quibble consists in riding off on the "constitutional" distinction between an act of the Legislature and an act of the Crown. On all questions the Parliament and the Ministry are the power which the Crown represents, and what they choose to do, the Crown must do; that has been proved in a hundred instances, which need not be specified. This very payment is made under an Act of Parliament, and what the Legislature does, it can undo; what it passes, it can repeal. That all the Administrative part of diplomacy is carried on by the Crown—that all treaties and alliances are made in the name of the Sovereign—is quite true; but when they involve payments of money, the act of the Crown requires the ratification of the Commons of England. The engagement to pay this money to, or (which amounts to the same thing) on account of, Russia, was so ratified by Parliament, on certain express conditions; these conditions have been flagrantly violated, and the Legislature is bound to act on the plain and ordinary principle that governs all compacts and alliances—the party that wilfully breaks them, forfeits all the advantages and rights it has under their written conditions. That we take to be a fair, clear, legal, and unforced conclusion. This conclusion the Government both admits and eludes; it admits the violation of the bond; but, when it comes to deal with the consequences that ought to follow the violation, it mixes up other considerations with the question. True, we are dealing with a Power that never kept oath, faith, or treaty, when it suited its purpose to break it; and we have just had a new specimen of the old cunning and craft. But then really the sum is so small; it is beneath our dignity to keep to the strict letter of the engagement; England ought not to make it a question of pounds, shillings, and pence! We ought to have a soul above reckonings. Shall we demean ourselves like tapsters and be anxious as to amounts; shall we not rather comport ourselves grandly and display a noble contempt of cash and sums total? This is the excuse of the Government for allowing a forfeited debt. How little do we deserve the reproach of Napoleon, that we are a nation of shopkeepers, with whom the state of the till is the first consideration! Certainly we spend more and get less for it than any nation on the face of the earth; in the last war we paid Prussia and Austria to defend themselves, though it was their duty to fight for their own sakes; and though we paid them well they spent very badly, and our subsidies did not prevent Napoleon from dictating decrees at Berlin and treaties at Vienna, the Kings of both capitals kissing his feet. We paid the Spaniards and fought by their side; and they fought too and nobly; but they never thanked us either for our blood or gold, and at this hour deny that we ever won a battle for them, or did much except plunder the country rather more than the French. We fought and paid on our own account, till the Bourbons were on the throne once more propped up by foreign bayonets, and in a few years the worthless branch that cost so many lives and so much treasure was shipped off again into exile. At the Congress of Vienna we paid for all kinds of arrangements, the chief of which were as soon and as completely overturned as the elder branch of the Bourbons; and now that another breach is made in the great compact of Europe, we pay on as before. In all this there is nothing of the thrift or prudence of shopkeepers to be traced, but a good deal of the political enthusiast, with no slight mixture of the dupe.

PARKHURST PRISON.—GENERAL VIEW.—(SEE PAGE 164.

The Government, however, as it must notice "the manifest violation" of a solemn contract, feels bound to "protest" against it. That, it thinks, is sufficient; a somewhat coldly polite official notice of our displeasure at an Imperial robbery and fraud is despatched; an equally cold and polite acknowledgment of "the receipt of your favour" is sent back; both protest and answer repose in the pigeon-holes of the respective diplomatists, and things go on as before—a nation blotted from the map, and the thousands drawn from the English Exchequer. We protest, but do not add that which would make the protest something more than waste paper; we begin a battle of diplomacy, and fight it out with blank charges. We censure the act, and pay the door of it; we are too dignified to hold others to their bond, too magnanimous to keep in our pockets that which is our own. So small a sum! says the Premier measured by the scale the Government applies to other things, it is not small, but enormously large. Twelve hundred a-year is all that can be given to the impoverished or the deserving cultivators of science, literature, and the arts, by the sadness case or the strongest claim from these classes before Lord John Russell to-morrow, and the reply will be to regret that he has no fund at his disposal, either for encouragement or reward. Ten times as many thousands go yearly to pay a Russian debt upon a broken bond! Are we wrong in believing that the degrading anomaly cannot last?

DESTRUCTION OF THE CARLSRUHE THEATRE, BY FIRE.

In our latest edition last week, we stated that the Grand Ducal Theatre of Carlsruhe was destroyed by fire on the 26th ult. From subsequent accounts, it appears that, unhappily, a great loss of life was occasioned.

Soon after five o'clock in the evening, when a considerable number of persons had already entered the theatre, the third tier of boxes being nearly filled, the fire broke out suddenly in the centre of the Court lamps. It is said that one of the gas-pipes burst, and this was probably the case, for in a few minutes the whole of the interior of the theatre was in flames. Assistance was soon procured from all sides; but, as it was impossible to save the theatre, the efforts were directed towards the preservation of the adjoining houses. At ten o'clock, all danger was over as regarded them. But what is most terrible in this affair is the loss of life. Several persons in the boxes, as soon as the fire in the house had declared itself, escape was difficult. Some, who were in the third tier, jumped into the second, and then into the pit; others threw themselves out of the windows into the yard.

The rapidity with which the fire spread is easily accounted for by the interior arrangement and decorations of this building in common with all old theatres. As soon as the sublime part of the piece was beginning to be filled with the volumes of smoke, the confusion and alarm became general and frightful. Many persons on the third tiers of galleries were stifled. The number of persons dead and missing amounts, according to the police returns, to 70. The Grand Duke, although he had for several days been confined by indisposition, hurried to the scene of disaster, and by his presence encouraged the firemen. His Royal Highness has expressed, through the authorities, his warm thanks to the inhabitants of Carlsruhe and its environs, and the military and gendarmerie, for the zeal with which they all lent their assistance on this lamentable occasion.

A counts from Carlsruhe of the 3rd of March bring further particulars of the lamentable fire at the theatre. An eye-witness says:—

"I have just returned from the scene of action: the theatre and the church-yard, and it is impossible to find words to describe the fearful impression which these two places made on me. Of the theatre only the main walls are left standing right and left, and underneath its smouldering ruins nearly 200 persons, mostly women, servants, and children, lie buried. In the dead-house in the churchyard the scene is awful and horrible beyond description; entire bodies and different limbs, and members of others, completely roasted, and totally incapable of being identified, are lying about. Seventy corpses are said to have been taken up; many burnt to death, others suffocated or crushed beneath the ruins or in the narrow passages. The whole city is in the greatest consternation, and many are families which are thus suddenly plunged into grief and mourning."

It may be regarded as certain that most of the victims were suffocated, and that they had not to undergo death from the flames; it is almost beyond doubt that, overpowered by the gas, they lost all consciousness before the fire reached them.

DEATH OF MR. HALL, THE PUBLISHER.—This gentleman breathed his last on Sunday, after struggling for some time with the most severe suffering. His name, together with that of his partner, Mr. Chapman, has been for many years associated with the most successful literary works in the department of fiction of the present day—those of Mr. Charles Dickens.

THE NEW COUNTY COURTS.—To-day (Saturday), in pursuance of an Order in Council, a number of Small Debts Courts will be established, and next Monday the various district offices, under the new County Courts, will be opened for the transaction of business. Summonses will be issued and days appointed for the Judges to proceed on circuit. The Judges of the Superior Courts have issued fifty-two rules and the necessary forms of procedure. A Defendant to be served ten clear days before the return of the summons, and on the trial he can be examined as well as his wife.

DAVY WARNER'S INVENTIONS.—A long correspondence has been published, from which we learn that the Committee appointed by Government to inquire into Captain Warner's invention of "the long range," have reported, after a trial which took place on the 8th of November last, that it possesses a failure, and that it could not be made available for the general purpose of war. Her Majesty's Government did not, in consequence, deem it necessary to institute any further experiments, and declined to test the value of the other inventions. Captain Warner demurs to the judgment pronounced, upon a variety of grounds, and concludes by re-asserting the precision and efficacy of "the long range."

DISCOVERY OF A LONG LOST WIFE.—The Glasgow Post contains a romantic story of a discovery made at the Adelphi Theatre in that city. During the performance of the "Battle of Sedgemoor," when a favourite actress as Mrs. De Jongh was on the stage, a tall, military-looking gentleman suddenly started up from his seat and exclaimed, "My wife! by Heaven! my Eliza." Of course, astonishment and excitement ensued, and an explanation took place, which resulted in the discovery, that the gentleman was a Lieutenant Lewis, and that he was in truth the lady's husband. He had been on [illegible], and was now accompanied by the lady's son, a [illegible] Each believing the other dead, the lady had married [illegible] about 18 months ago. One day last week, a [illegible] a respectable body of friends, the happy pair, both being of the Catholic persuasion, appeared before a clergyman, who, after hearing the particulars again formally re-united two whom fortune and the chances of war had pu[illegible]under.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE

The Paris papers this week betray great alarm at the rise in the price of corn. There is an evident dread of famine. The Reforme states that the accounts received from the different corn-markets in France are really alarming. In the department of the Eure, the rise in price has been terrible. There has been an increase of from 5f. to 6f. the hectolitre in the value of wheat at Valenciennes, Cambrai, and Arras. Most of the arrivals expected are bespoken, some by the municipalities, and some by benevolent societies established for the aid of the poor in the interior, and these will not, therefore, enter the market, or produce a sensible effect on the price.

The price of flour in Paris, on Monday, was 92s. per sack. Bread is expected to undergo a further rise in the last fortnight of March.

The merchants and corn factors in the department of the Cotes-du-Nord have taken a judicious precautionary measure, having just entered into a written engagement not to purchase corn for six weeks, in the hope that this step may tend to bring down prices.

At the last market at Boulogne-sur-Mer, there were scarcely any supplies of wheat, a circumstance which excited the greatest alarm among the authorities and principal inhabitants. M. A. Adam, M. L. Foutaine, M. Chavean-Sire, and M. Arch Adam, who are at the head of four of the principal mercantile houses of the town, immediately advanced a sum of 200,000 francs, with which they despatched M. L. Foutaine, jun., to England, to purchase corn. They took this measure only in the interest of the town, having declared that if any profits should arise from the sale of their purchases, they should be given to the charitable institutions; and that if there should be any loss, they would bear it entirely themselves.

In the Chamber of Peers, on Tuesday, the Minister of War laid before the Chamber a bill for the increase of the effective strength of the army, which was referred to the Bureaux. In the Deputies' Chamber the day was taken up with granting a credit of 4,000,000f. for works of utility in the communes, which was adopted unanimously without discussion.

On Sunday, M. Dumas appeared in a new character. A strong minister of the National Guards of St. Germain and some of the neighbouring communes assembled to witness his reception as Commandant of the National Guard of that place. After the reception of M. Alexandre Dumas, the whole body marched in excellent military appearance, and who were on the occasion only the Cross of the Legion of Honour, assumed the command, and gave the word with all the readiness of an old soldier.

On Saturday last M. Fould subjected his proposal in the Chamber of Deputies for canceling 11,584,984f. of Three per Cent. Rentes, inscribed at the Treasury in the name of the Sinking Fund, and redeemed between the 1st December, 1833, and 31st December, 1845. This proposition was opposed by M. Lacave Laplagne, the Minister of Finances, who made some rather important statements in regard to the financial condition of France. He first argued that it was not at a time when a loan might become necessary that the Sinking Fund should be abolished. He then defended himself from a charge of having reduced the interest on the bons royaux so much that they were no longer sought by the monied interests; and then alluded to the rumours abroad with respect to the embarrassments at present felt by the Treasury, and its inability, without a loan, to pay the six months' interest just falling due. These rumours he declared to be utterly devoid of truth. M. Lacave Laplagne added that, on the 5th instant, there were 118,000,000f. in the Treasury, whereas, in ordinary years, since 1820, the average sum in the Treasury, on the 5th of March, had been but 60,000,000f. He concluded by stating that he did not consider that a loan would be necessary now, though, as he could not see into futurity, he could not say what might happen some years hence.

On Monday the debate was resumed by M. de Lasteyrie, who brought forward a long statistical detail to refute the arguments of the Minister of Finance against the measure. On M. Lasteyrie's condition of Funds being urged,

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF LORDS Monday.

THE PUNISHMENT OF TRANSPORTATION

Lord Brougham moved for the appointment of a Select Committee, to inquire into the operation of the criminal law, more especially with regard to juvenile offenders

Lord Stanley protested against the prospective and wholesale alteration of the criminal law which the Government had announced their intention of carrying into effect. If he understood that announcement aright, they had decided upon making a two years' experiment of commuting all sentences of transportation into imprisonment, hard labour, and exile, without applying to Parliament for power to make a change in the law of such extraordinary magnitude. In his opinion, such wholesale commutation would be an abuse of the valuable prerogative of the Crown; and if it were known to the judge, the jury, and the prisoner, before the trial took place, that the sentence passed could in every case be changed, the prerogative of the Crown would infallibly be weakened. The noble Lord pressed on the Government the advisability of bringing in a bill to sanction the experiment for two years, if they so thought fit, and warned them of the unconstitutional mode in which they were proceeding.

Earl Grey contended that the Crown had by statute the power of commuting all sentences of transportation.

Lord Brougham denied that the Crown had the power to commute a sentence of transportation for twenty-one years to an imprisonment for two years, and an expatriation of which the law knows nothing.

Lord Campbell said that the meaning of transportation must be taken to be this, that the Crown had power to transport, if it should be thought advisable that that sentence should be carried into effect; but that within the period for which transportation was ordered, the Crown might retain the prisoner in the country, in gaol, and employ him at hard labour for the period of the sentence of transportation.

The motion of Lord Brougham was agreed to.

The Lieutenant-Poor (Ireland) Bill was read a third time.

The House adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

New Writ.—A new writ was ordered for Canterbury, in the room of J. Bradshaw, Esq., deceased.

Changes in the Reform Bill.—Mr. T. Duncombe gave notice that, shortly after Easter, he should move for leave to bring in a bill to repeal a portion of the 4th of William IV., being an act to amend the representation of England and Wales, as that act had failed to fulfil the just expectations of the people, and therefore could not be received as final. He should move for leave to repeal the rate-paying clause, and also for the Legislature to take proper measures to prevent undue influence, so that the towns and boroughs might have the benefit of a full and fair representation.

The Spanish Bondholders.—Lord G. Bentinck presented a petition signed by the chairman and deputy chairman of the Spanish Bondholders, praying the assistance of the House in obtaining redress from the Spanish Crown in the matter of a debt of upwards of £71,000,000, due from the Spanish Government, principally to British subjects. The petitioners prayed to be heard by counsel upon the subject.

PROPOSED INCOME-TAX FOR IRELAND.

On the question that the House should go into Committee on the Landed Property (Ireland) Bill,

Mr. Roebuck moved, "That any plans of relief for the distress of the Irish poor, by means of loans to the owners of property in Ireland would be unjust and impolitic, unless accompanied by a system of taxation which would subject such property to the burdens already imposed upon all property throughout Great Britain." Mr. Roebuck, in support of this proposition, again condemned the Government for appropriating eight millions for the benefit of Irish landlords, and said the object of those landlords appeared to be to share in that blessing but not in their obligations or difficulties. Ireland was at present exempted from Assessed Taxes, taxes for the relief of the poor, and the Income-Tax—these were all taxes pressing upon the rich, and he thought it most unfair that the Irish landowners should be exempted from them. The Irish members in that House appeared unable to propose any practical measure, and thought their whole duty was to take care of the interests of the rich, although those men were in numberless instances neglectful of their local duties. He appealed, then, not to Irishmen, but to his own countrymen, to say whether they would longer endure such a state of things. The Irish landlords appeared to act like the slaveholders of America, and did what they liked with their tenantry; and they ought to be made to feel that they had duties to discharge of another character. He confessed he had little confidence in Lord John Russell's ability to act impartially towards England with regard to any Irish question, surrounded as he was by so many Irishmen, from Lord Palmerston, who shook Europe to its base, to Lord Monteagle, who was busily knocking for admission at the door of the Treasury.

Mr. Labouchere regretted that the hon. member thought it desirable to interpose such an amendment, and such exasperating topics, between the important measure before the House. He admitted that the measures of the Government were not free from faults, but the difficulties they had to contend with were most extraordinary.

Mr. Shaw deprecated Mr. Roebuck's acrimonious language, and defended the Irish landlords from the invectives cast upon them. He contended that it would be impossible to assimilate the burdens on property in the two countries.

After an appeal in behalf of Ireland from Mr. J. O'Connell, who said that country was utterly unable to bear such a tax, and a few remarks from Mr. H. Baillie and Mr. Hume, Sir R. Peel said, he did not think the present a fitting time to discuss the question of the share borne by Ireland in the financial burdens of the country, nor did he regard Mr. Roebuck's proposition as the best means of carrying the object he had in view into effect. The bill before the House proposed, that a fund for landed proprietors to borrow money from the Treasury to employ a portion of the 700,000 persons now engaged on the public works in Ireland in the cultivation and improvement of the land, and he thought it most important to look to that unchangeable in its mode of application. That was certainly not the time to call upon the House to impose the Assessed and Income-Tax on that country. It was engrossing the question, and leading to the consideration of great magnitude in a petty way, which would be prejudicial to the hon. and learned gentleman's own case. He did not contest the principle of the proposition, but when they were approaching the discussion of a very difficult question they ought not to encumber themselves with additional perplexities.

Lord J. Russell said, he thought that if they had to renew the Income and Property Tax many arguments might be urged to show that it ought to be extended to be extended to Ireland. But this was not the moment to argue such a proposition. Passing by the "ingenerous sarcasms with which the hon. and learned member assailed the House," Lord J. Russell said that he did not propose that the Landed Property Bill as a boon to Irish landlords, nor did he intend the Irish Poor Relief Bill as a penalty on them. It was desirable that the people of Ireland should find employment in the land, and he knew of no better means to obtain that object than by enabling landlords to afford that employment. But the beneficial effect of that measure would be very problematical unless it was accompanied by the Poor Relief Bill.

Lord G. Bentinck opposed the amendment. It was not the time to consider whether the Income-Tax ought to be added to the burdens of Ireland. The noble Lord expressed his regret that the money expended by the Government had not been applied in a way that would have given the greatest possible amount of employment on reproductive works, such as the encouragement of railways.

Mr. Smith O'Brien, Mr. Callaghan, Mr P. Howard, Mr. B. Escott, and Mr. M. Milnes addressed the House, which then divided:—

For going into committee	121
Against it	38
Majority against the amendment	83

The House went into committee on the bill, and agreed to all its clauses, with several amendments and additions, but without any division. The report was ordered to be brought up on Wednesday.

The House did not adjourn till two o'clock in the morning, and was occupied with the discussion in committee up to that time.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday

Personal Altercations about Ireland and the Irish.—No substantive business was transacted to-day; but some personal altercation took place of a somewhat curious character. Lord Lucan defended himself from some statements made on a previous occasion by Lord Brougham; to which the latter noble and learned Lord replied, and asserted his right not to make known the authority upon which he had made his statements. He said that, from the time of Harry the Third, when Parliament first assumed its form, downwards, common fame has been held to be a ground for statements made in Parliament, and proceedings founded thereon. He said, he should move for some returns of processes for rent, to show that his information was correct.—The Marquis of Londonderry laid down the doctrine that Lord Brougham had no right to occupy the time of the House with bad jokes, ridicule, and sarcasms, in order to turn away their attention from his general declarations. He (Lord Londonderry) appealed to the judgment of their Lordships if the noble and learned Lord had not made the Irish landlords a sort of general butt; and then he got up, and with his special pleading, his volubility, and his bad jokes, attempted to show that he had not. (Laughter.) The noble and learned Lord went on in this way to the end of it, would be that nobody would what he said. If he made such attacks upon other persons as he had done upon the Irish landlords the noble and learned Lord would find that they would turn him in the contempt which he richly deserved. Lord Brougham replied, that with respect to the contempt in which it seemed he had fallen with that House and the country—so much so that no person would listen or attend in the smallest degree to anything he said—he could not help it; it was the common lot of mankind, senators as well as others. He could not, of course, hope ever to receive or meet with the same reception as the noble Marquis received when he addressed the House (a laugh); but he was satisfied with the reception he got; and, if he were satisfied, the noble Marquis had no right to complain. If what he said was so very contemptible, he only hoped and trusted that the noble Marquis would take the most ready means of shewing his contempt, which was by letting him entirely alone, and which he thought would be the more prudent, as it certainly would to him be the more agreeable recompense to give to anything he said. The noble Marquis had accused him of special pleading, volubility, and bad jokes; but what he had said about the Irish landlords was [illegible] he had stated facts, though he denied that he had attacked them. It seemed, however, that the noble Marquis would not allow him to know whether he had attacked them or not; and he had appealed to their Lordships to examine whether or not he had done so. He (Lord Brougham) had a great respect for their Lordships' judgment; and, if they, in their wisdom, should decide that he had not attacked the Irish landlords, that he had only mentioned a few instances and given them a little advice, then that would acquit him; but if, on the other hand, they should convict him, by saying that he had attacked the Irish landlords, then he would follow the example of that body, and "cheerfully submit," as the noble Marquis said they were prepared to do to the Income-Tax (laughter); which, by the way, was more than could be said for the people of this country, for they made many very fusses at it, and the longer it continued they liked it the worse. (Hear, hear.) But such, it appeared, was the blessing of the Legislative Union, that the people of Ireland would be delighted to have it, if their landlords only think it necessary. (Laughter.)

Lord Brougham's motion for returns was agreed to.

The House adjourned about six

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday

The Regent's Canal Bill.—On the proposal for the second reading of the Regent's Canal Company's (Paddington and Limehouse Railway and Branch) Bill, Lord Morpeth, in answer to a question from Mr. Warburton, said the Company had engaged to leave the Regent's Park quite intact, and he did not feel called on to oppose the further progress of the bill. It was therefore read a second time.

Repeal of the Septennial Act.—Mr. S. Crawford gave notice that on Tuesday, the 23rd of March, he should move for leave to bring in a Bill for the Repeal of the Septennial Act.

THE PUNISHMENT OF DEATH.

Mr. Ewart moved for leave to bring in a Bill for the Total Abolition of the Punishment of Death. He said that it was now seven years since he had the honour of bringing this subject before the attention, or rather before the patience, of the House. In those years this subject had excited a deep interest, but it had now assumed a far deeper and greater interest. He thought this was shown partly in the number of petitions on the table, and partly by the numerous meetings which had been held throughout the country. At that time, few of the clergymen of the Established Church had given in their adherence to the principle of the total abolition of the punishment of death, but now they had vast numbers who thought as they did, and who had not only appended their names to petitions, but also appeared at public meetings held for the purpose of advocating the same cause with that punishment. There was now also a great difficulty in obtaining verdicts from juries in cases which involved the punishment of death. Many instances had occurred of this kind instances in which the guilt of the criminal had been clearly established, but in which the juries refused to return a verdict of Guilty. Mr. Ewart said he should not enter into the theological part of the question, but he contented himself with quoting eminent authorities in favour of the total abolition of the punishment of death; among other that of the Marquis of Beccaria and the King of Sweden, who had written upon the subject. The hon. member next argued that severe punishments did not lessen the number of crimes, and brought forward statistics with a view to prove that since capital punishments had decreased, great crimes had also decreased

Dr. Bowring seconded the motion.

Sir G. Grey said he should give his most decided opposition to such a general and sweeping proposition for the abolishment of the punishment of death in all cases. It would be absolutely necessary for the public interest to retain capital punishment for the crimes of murder and treason. So far from public opinion being in favour of the abolition of capital punishment in all cases, such a measure would shock and outrage the feelings of the country.

A short debate took place before the House divided. The result was—

For the motion	41
Against it	81
Majority against the motion	—40

The House adjourned at eight o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

Arrest for Debt (Ireland).—Sir H. W. Barron moved the second reading of the Arrest for Debt (Ireland) bill, the object of which he stated to be to assimilate the law in Ireland to that in England with regard to debts under £20. He briefly asked the House to affirm the principle of the bill, and leave the details to be considered by a committee upstairs.

Mr. Monahan (the Solicitor-General for Ireland) objected to a bill which by one short clause would interfere in an ordinary degree with the rights of property in Ireland. They had no machinery of inferior courts in Ireland, by which bond fide creditors could recover the amount of the debts due to them, and as the subject was at the present time under the consideration of the Government he hoped the bill would not be pressed any further

Mr. Labouchere, on being appealed to, said the Government was desirous to assimilate the law in England to that in Ireland in this respect, but he could not pledge himself to introduce a measure this session, as there was already so much Irish business to be disposed of. Upon the genera. understanding, however, the hon. gentleman would take up the subject, and Sir W. Barron withdrew the bill

The Drainage of Land Bill, which amends the Drainage (Great Britain) Act of last year, passed through Committee, after having received various amendments, the chief one in each case having been limited to £5,000, with the understanding that the Government shall consider the expediency of limiting it to £10,000 before the Bill comes to its last stage.

The report of the Landed Property (Ireland) Bill was received, after having undergone several alterations.

The Loan (£8,000,000) Bill was read a third time and passed.

The House, which met at twelve, adjourned at six.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

Lord Brougham's Bankruptcy Laws Amendment Bill.—Lord Brougham said he had been in correspondence with the Bankruptcy Commissioners in town and country, in consequence of which he begged to withdraw the Bankruptcy Laws Amendment Bill. He had made many and important alterations in a new bill, which he laid on the table, and moved that it be read a first time and printed. Agreed to

The Custody of Offenders Bill was read a third time and passed, as were also the Consolidated Fund Eight Millions Bill, and some other bills.

The House then adjourned

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

New Writ.—On the motion of Lord M. Hill, a new writ was ordered for the borough of Lewes, in the room of Sir H. Edmistone, who has accepted the Chiltern Hundreds

DEATHS IN IRELAND

Lord G. Bentinck moved for a comparative return of the number of deaths which have occurred in each parish of Ireland in each of the three last periods of six months, commencing the 1st day of September, and ending the 1st day of March respectively, with a summary for each period. It was important that they should know whether the proper course had been taken, in order to save human life. There had been two systems in operation. One, the last year, which provided food and maintenance for the people; and this year a system of political economy in which all the previous precautions were treated as of no use. It was for this purpose that he moved for these returns.

Mr. Labouchere could assure the noble Lord and the House that, whatever difficulty there might exist in meeting the present motion, he had no wish but to furnish the fullest information of the destruction of human life which had taken place. He regretted it as much as any man could do, and he believed it was owing on, and would continue to do so, to a fearful extent.

The adjourned debate on the Russo-Dutch Loan was commenced by Mr. M. Milnes, who was followed by Sir R. Inglis.

Lord G. Bentinck then addressed the House, and, in a speech of great length, defended the policy of Austria and Russia, and contended that the Poles had benefited by the destruction of their nationality.

After an ably speech from Mr T. Duncombe,

Sir R. Peel rose to oppose the motion of Mr. Hume, the last of whose resolutions he designated as unjust.

At the close of his address the adjournment of the debate was moved; after a short discussion it was agreed to; it will be resumed on Tuesday next.

The House rose at one o'clock

Railway Groups The Committees to whom Railway Bills have been referred met for the first time this session on Thursday. The Groups which commenced their proceedings were Group 1 and Group 12, but nothing of interest occurred.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE HOUSE

The Queen and Prince Albert attended Divine Service in Whippingham Church on Sunday The Rev. Mr. Prothero officiated The Countess of Charlemont, Lady Caroline Seymour Locks, Major General Bowles, Lieutenant Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, Colone. the Hon. Charles Grey, and Colonel Bouverie also attended the service. The Royal children went for an airing to the sea beach in the morning. Sir James Clark arrived at Osborne House on Saturday, and had the honour of joining the Royal circle at dinner.

On Monday her Majesty and Prince Albert took their usual early walk in the forenoon, on the beach, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice

On Tuesday her Majesty held a Court and Privy Council. At the Court, Lord Howden was presented to the Queen, as an audience, by Viscount Palmerston. Breakfast was served at Osborne House to the noblemen and gentlemen present at the Court. His Serene Highness Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar arrived at Osborne House, on a visit to the Queen, on Tuesday, and dined with her Majesty and her Royal Consort.

The unfavourable state of the weather on Wednesday morning prevented her Majesty and the Royal Family from taking their accustomed walks in the pleasure grounds and on the beach.

The Inauguration of Prince Albert.—It is said the inauguration of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, as Chancellor of Cambridge University, will take place, in London, on Thursday week.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Duchess of Kent (who, upon her Royal Highness's arrival at Frogmore, from Clarence House, St. James's, on Wednesday, the 3d instant, was expected to remain until after the Easter Holidays) will take her departure to-morrow for town. The Duchess of Kent has given two grand dinner and evening parties, at Frogmore House, during the past week.

Royal Marriage.—A matrimonial alliance is contemplated between H.R.H. Prince Albert Frederick Auguste, son of Prince Johan, and their presumptive to the Throne of Saxony, and H.R.H. Princess Charlotte, eldest daughter of their R.H. Prince and Princess Albrecht of Prussia. The Prince Albert of Saxony was born [illegible] 23rd April, 1828, and Princess Charlotte of Prussia, 21st June, 1831.

Lady John Russell.—Lady John Russell, though considerably improved in health, is not yet convalescent. Her Ladyship is still confined to her room. Dr Ferguson continues in attendance.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

The Abbeville and Amiens section of the Boulogne Railroad will be opened on Monday next, the 15th instant, and the Havre and Rouen on the 20th.

Letters from Vienna state that England, France, and Austria, have concluded a treaty with the Porte for piercing the isthmus of Suez. By virtue of this treaty, Austria is to undertake the works on the coast and in the port of Alexandria, the regulating the course of the Nile is to be at the expense of Egypt; France to undertake the roads through the Desert. England to restore the port of Suez, and to construct the basins and all other necessary establishments.

A considerable portion of the lower jaw bone of a person named Riley, was removed, at the Devonport workhouse a few days ago, without the slightest pain, the patient being under the influence of ether. He smiled and talked while the parts were being dissected.

Government have prepared a bill to prohibit the further interment of corpses in the churchyards of large towns and populous districts. The greatest and most disgusting national nuisance of modern times is likely, therefore, to be sooner abated than was expected.

A letter a short time since was received by a person in Wales, which, from an error in sorting in London, had performed a voyage round the world. It was directed to South Wales, and by mistake was forwarded to New South Wales. It was then returned by a ship mail landed at Penzance, and endorsed, "Not known here, try South Wales, England," where it soon found its proper owner.

A report is current on the Continent, that it is the intention of the King of Sardinia to construct a railroad from Genoa to Chambery, with a tunnel under Mount Cenis, eight miles long. Should this railroad be constructed, Genoa will become a formidable rival to Marseilles, and the route by Genoa will, in that case, probably be found preferable either to that by Marseilles or by Trieste for the conveyance of the Overland Mail.

A correspondent of the Augsburg Gazette, in a letter from Bavaria of the 28th of February, the elevation of Mdlle. Lola Montes to the rank of Countess of Sternberg had already been carried into effect.

It is said that her Majesty's pardon is about to be extended to a great number of convicts at the Hulks at Woolwich, sentences to hard labour has nearly expired, and whose exemplary conduct has recommended them to the Royal clemency.

A letter from Constantinople, dated Feb. 18, says:—"Yesterday an important modification took place in the Cabinet. The Minister of Finance, Nafiz Pacha, tendered his resignation, which was accepted by the Sultan. The Councillor of the Grand Vizier, Sarim Effendi, was appointed Minister of Finance, and afterwards the dignity of Muchir, or Pacha with three tails, Sarim Effendi is considered one of the ablest men in Turkey, and his nomination to that post must tend to strengthen the Ministry."

The accounts of Munich created a disturbance in that capital on the 1st inst. Its real nature is not clearly explained, but the immediate cause is stated to be the dismissal of some of the University professors, including Doctor Lassaulx.

Letters from Presburgh, Hungary, mention the destructive effects of an inundation in that country. No similar occurrence is recollected since the year 1809. The waters were out for several days, and at one time the river had swollen to 20 feet in height.

The Italian journals state that Mr. Cobden has been introduced to the Pope by Cardinal Fiesoli, and had a prolonged interview with him. The most distinguished of the Roman nobility vie with each other in doing honour to Mr. Cobden.

New Zealand papers of the 24th of October, bring advices from the Bay of Islands down to the 17th of that month. At that date affairs generally bore a quiet and peaceable aspect. Heki and Kawiti had held a conference with Waka Nene, the stanch and tried ally of the British, and the result was mutual interchanges of forgiveness and reconciliation. Heki, it is stated, has signified his readiness to restore the horses purloined by the rebels, whenever the Governor shall inform him of the owners.

At the last return under the Income Tax Act, no fewer than thirty surgeons practising in London admitted that their professional earnings exceeded £5,000 per annum each; and of these, three were upwards of £20,000 each

Mr. Clive has tendered his resignation to the Home Secretary as one of the Judges of the Sheriffs' and Hammersmith Police Courts, having been appointed by the Lord Chancellor as Judge of the County Court at Southwark.

An amateur theatrical performance took place a few days ago at Venice, in the Palace of the Duchess de Berri, at which the Vice-Roy and Vice-Queen were present, as also Don John, the second son of Don Carlos, and his bride, who were the objects of general distinction

The trade of corn from the continent of Europe, during the last few days, have comprised an unusually large number from the ports of Denmark and the Hanoverian dominions, in addition to those from Holland and the neighbouring states.

A Cholera Asiatic letter states, that in consequence of the large quantities of corn late exported to Europe, some disturbances had taken place at Salonica. They were at last put down, but the Pacha, in order to avoid the chance of a similar outbreak, has forbidden, for the present, all further exportation of grain.

On Saturday last, at Shaftesbury Market, a Jew, of the name of Marcus Lewis, exposed four pigs for sale, and after great laughter amongst the dealers, he ultimately sold them for two pounds the entrance we ever heard of an Israelite dealing in pork, it being also his sabbath day.

In Denmark hitherto imprisonment for debt extended to ten years for amounts of the smaller amounts, and for debts of the larger sums, but the king has just issued an ordonnance, limiting confinement for all sums, whatever their amount, above 50 rix dollars (125f.), to three years, and suppressing it altogether for debts below that sum

According to the latest news from Turkey, the Sultan threatens to send a fleet to the Piræus, to avenge the insult to his Ambassador. The ministers of the Five Powers are, however, endeavouring to have the matter arranged, but it is said that the resignation of Colletti will be one of the terms.

The Officers' and Clerks' Committee of the Corporation of London have received that the City gauge-dues of 4d. per ton of 210 gallons, upon wines imported into the port of London, be discontinued, and have given instructions to the proper officer at the Custom house.

The accounts from the West India islands, by the last mail, respecting the weather and the crops, are favourable, and it would appear that the planters have industriously set to work to meet the competition raised by the late alteration of the Sugar Duties.

A Commission of Russian Physicians are at present occupied in Egypt in investigations relative to the plague. They have everywhere found cellars ready, for a trifling remuneration, to allow themselves to be opened on, in order to test the long-disputed questions of the contagion and inoculation of the malady.

The Society of Marit.me Commerce of Berlin, intend to send a commercial expedition, consisting of several vessels, to China, and it is to be accompanied by a Government Agent charged to open diplomatic relations, and establish Consulates. The King of Prussia has given about £160 towards sending two religious missionaries to China.

It seems probable that Cork is to become a port in connexion with New York. A ship of 490 tons was launched at that port on Tuesday last, intended as one of a line of ships to sail to and from New York.

It is stated that not less than a peck and a half of peas was gathered from the floor of the Senate House, Cambridge, after the memorable proceedings on Saturday last.

The Brussels papers give an account of an incendiary fire which took place in the night of the 2nd of this month in the Commune of Larnes, near to Gemaive. The fire first appeared in the thatched roof of a barn, belonging to a farmer named Dulin, and soon extended to the adjoining farm belonging to Mr. Van Schavort. This barn, together with the stables and the outhouses, were reduced to ashes Several horses and cows perished in the flames. The dwelling houses belonging to the two farms were saved by the strenuous efforts of the inhabitants.

The total number of persons who passed to and from France by way of Boulogne during the week ending last Sunday, was 800, and by way of Calais, 922. The numbers in the corresponding week of last year were—Boulogne, 885; Calais, 170.

At the opening of the Belgian Chamber on Monday, the Minister of Finance proposed two important measures, both of which had reference to the dearness of provisions—the first to take off all duties of tonnage from vessels laden with grain till the 1st of September next; the second prohibiting the exportation of potatoes in distilleries till the same period, under penalty of from 500 to 1000 francs, to be doubled in case of a repetition of the offence.

Mr. Greenwood is to be the new Recorder for Portsmouth, vice Sir Christopher Rawlinson, recently appointed to the Recordership of the Prince of Wales's Island.

Letters from Rhodes, (France,) state that part of the building of the fortress had been thrown down, and several soldiers killed, by the explosion of a powder depôt. The damage done is very considerable

A German journal states that the application of galvanism has been made in Austria for preserving trees and plants from the ravages of insects. The process is very simple, consisting only in placing two rings, one of copper, the other of zinc, attached together, around the tree or plant. Any insect that touches the copper receives an electric shock, which kills it or causes it to fall to the ground

Mr. Tidd Pratt, the Barrister appointed to certify rules for Savings' Banks, has drawn up a statement with a view to destroy the notion that if persons left their savings for more than six years, they would be prevented from recovering them by the Statute of Limitations. He states that there is an express provision in the Savings' Banks Act preventing the operation of the Statute of Limitations.

PARKHURST PRISON.

INTERIOR OF THE COURT.

ONE of the earliest measures contemplated by Government, in consequence of the discontinuance of the System of Transportation, will be certain alterations in Millbank, Pentonville, and Parkhurst Prisons; a Bill for which purpose has just been read a second time in the House of Lords. The paramount effect will be to substitute for Transportation, imprisonment in the three national prisons above named, or in the county prisons already constructed, which, it is asserted, will meet the exigencies of the case. Pending the consideration of this important change in the Convict System, it may be interesting to introduce to our readers the present discipline at Parkhurst,—the Reformatory, or Juvenile Prison, as it has been termed; from its being the receptacle for the younger class of offenders, sentenced to transportation, but not actually transported.

DRESSES OF THE OFFICERS AND PRISONERS.

The Establishment at Parkhurst was commenced in the year 1838: it is situated nearly in the centre of the Isle of Wight, to the right of the road leading from Newport to West Cowes, about one mile and a half from the former place. It presents altogether an imposing appearance; and, a portion of the buildings being placed upon a rising ground, it is visible for several miles round. The original building formed the Hospital to the adjacent Barracks, and was altered for occupation as a prison in 1838, from the designs of Major Jebb, Surveyor-General of Prisons. In 1843 were commenced some extensive additions, viz., a ward in the rear, a Chapel, a Probationary Ward, Schools, &c.; together with the entire Junior Ward. There were also built at this time residences for the Surgeon, Assistant-Chaplain, Steward, Schoolmasters, &c.; houses for Warders; besides two Lodges, and an Infirmary: and there were then completed roads and other works connected therewith. These additions were executed from the designs of the Surveyor-General, at a cost of about £30,000.

The several buildings are of brick, with cement dressings; and the portions appropriated to the Prisoners are surrounded with walls fifteen feet high. The principal entrance is through a rusticated archway, of Isle of Wight stone; flanking which are two lodges, that on the left for the Porter; and on the right are the office of the Clerk of the Works, the Surgery, and the Receiving room; in the latter are slipper baths, supply of hot water, and fumigating apparatus. Here each Prisoner, previous to his admission, is examined by the Surgeon, is next washed, and clothed in a Probationary Ward dress, entirely new; the Probationary Warder then takes charge of him, and he is marched, privately, to his department.

The Engraving upon our front page shows a general view of the Prison, from the ground appropriated to spade husbandry. The first of the annexed Illustrations is from the gateway; with the Governor's House and Steward's Office in the centre, this being a portion of the building formerly the Hospital Barracks. It is surmounted by a cupola and clock; immediately in front is the Pump House, fitted with treble pumps and cranks, which twelve of the prisoners can work at a time, the reliefs changing every ten minutes; by this means, the whole of the upper establishment, the cottages &c., are supplied with excellent water, of which there is generally 90 feet in the well. The three tiers of buildings south of the Governor's House, form Ward A; they are surrounded by exterior galleries, leading to the SLEEPING CELLS, each of which contains a bedstead, hair mattress, bolster, and blankets according to the season; sheeting and coverlid; a pin-rail for clothes, and small desk for day-instruction. Each Cell measures 6 feet by 10 feet, and is 10 feet high

THE INTERIOR OF THE COURT,

North of the Governor's House are three tiers similar to the above: those nearest forming Ward B, fitted similarly to A; the former receiving 110 Prisoners, and the latter, 96. In the north wing, too, is the Refractory Ward, wherein are confined such Boys as have committed offences in the Establishment; they are kept on short diet, and in "solitary confinement."

These Wards are warmed and ventilated on the principle introduced by Messrs. Haydon, of Trowbridge. To each Cell is a grating, to admit fresh air, and a corresponding one communicating with extracting flues, which are concentrated in the roofs; the vitiated air being discharged by the working of four large shafts shown in our Engraving.

PRISONER'S CELL.

THE DINING-HALL.

SHOEMAKERS' DEPARTMENT

PARKHURST PRISON.

In the rear of these buildings is C Ward, capable of holding 158 Prisoners, in as many each 6 feet by 5 feet, and open at top; they were formerly entirely open; but, from the unruly conduct of their inmates, it was found requisite to separate them, which has been done by a thin deal partition.

DORMITORIES,

Next to C, is D, generally called

THE PROBATIONARY WARD,

(a great improvement upon the original system), for the reception of Boys on their first arrival. This division of the Building consists of THE CORRIDOR, with three tiers of Cells, 137 in all; each being 11 feet by 7 feet, and 8 feet 6 inches high, brick-arched, and provided with a hammock, of cocoa-nut fibre, shown in the Engraving of rolled up, and laid on a shelf in the corner, to the right of the door; at night, it is stretched with straps, from wall to wall, and fastened to cleats, 15 inches from the floor. Each Cell is furnished with a small table, stool, and writing-desk; a Bible, Prayer-book, and Hymn-book, for Chapel use; school-books, slate and pencil; and upon the wall of the Cell are placed the Morning and Evening Hymn cards with prayers, and copies for writing; by the side of which is an iron holdfast candlestick, to receive a "Palmer's candle." Immediately over the doorway, is an iron plate for the admission of fresh air, from the Corridor; and in each door is an inspection-plate, of glass and iron wire gauze, 4 inches by 3. There is, also, a spring-bell, which the Prisoner is to sound when he requires the attendance of an officer; there being affixed to each bell an iron plate inscribed with the number of the Cell, indicated, as the bell rings, to the officer in the Corridor.

THE CELL,

DORMITORIES OF THE PRISONERS.

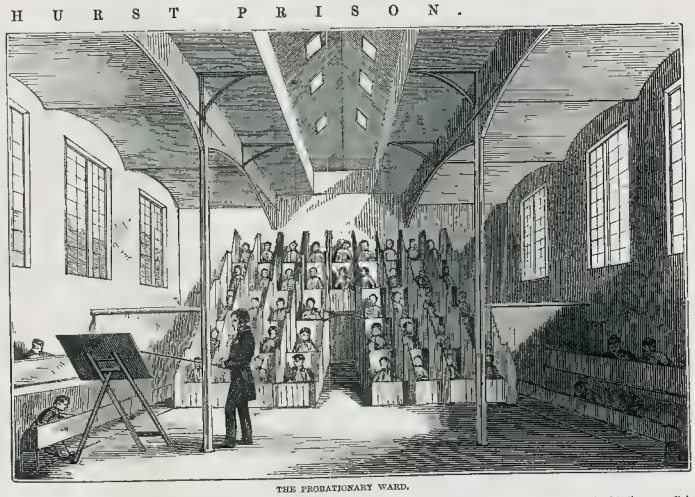
THE CORRIDOR.

The Prisoners in this Ward take their meals in their separate Cells, from which they are only allowed to be absent, each day, 1½ hour for exercise; 2½ hours in school; half an hour cleaning; and half an hour in the morning, in chapel, for prayers. The average time of the boys being confined in this Ward on Probation, is 3 months; but, all depends on their individual behaviour.

THE CORRIDOR,

as shown in the Engraving, is surrounded with galleries and flights of steps leading to the upper tiers; and there is, also, for raising the food for the Prisoners, an apparatus, such as is used at the PENTONVILLE PRISON, and shown in the illustration of that Establishment, at page 4, vol. II. of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. On the door of each Cell is its number, and immediately above it is affixed a card, inscribed with the name of the Prisoner, his number, date of reception, and place of committal: for example—



THE PROBATIONARY WARD.

PHILIP P——,
No. 302,
Aug. 12, 1846.
BIRMINGHAM

The Corridor is lighted from the roof; and the floor is of iron, perforated for the admission of fresh air. In the basement are two Dark Cells for punishment, and two Baths for the Ward. There are Washing-rooms to each gallery, with separate compartments, so that the Prisoners cannot communicate with each other. There are, also, two water-closets on each floor, for night use.

Instruction is given in each Cell according to the knowledge possessed by the Prisoner on entering; when not otherwise employed, he is set to work at tailoring, shoemaking, or other occupation; so that he is not allowed to be for a moment idle. Next is in plan, consisting of three semicircles, divided into four sections. Thus, immediately in the front of the Engraving are the Boys from the General Ward, B and C division; in the next, those of the Junior Ward, from the Upper Prison; on the left, separated by a high wooden screen, are the Boys of the Probationary Ward; and, on the opposite side, or right, are sittings for the Officers and Prisoners of division A. The building is neatly fitted: the seats for Officers to watch the behaviour of the Boys are considerably raised; each of the Boys' seats is numbered, and the Boys are marched into the Chapel in double files, and branch off, right and left. The Boys of the Probationary Ward enter before the others by a door to the left of the communion-table, they immediately retire to their places, so that they neither see the other Prisoners, nor are seen by them. The communion-table is covered with crimson cloth; above it is placed the Decalogue; and the Lord's Prayer and Belief on either side; the whole surmounted with a Cross in relief. The cases on each side are for the admission of warm air, which is regulated by thermometers. The Governor's seat is on the right of the reading-desk, and commands a view of the whole of the Chapel.

THE CHAPEL,

THE CHAPEL.

It may now be interesting to give an outline of

THE COURSE OF INSTRUCTION PROBATIONARY WARD.

Two hours and a half, on alternate days, of elementary instruction, chiefly religious and moral. By good conduct, the Boys are admitted to the senior division of the School, and instructed at open desks, of which the School Room is provided with 8, as well as fitted with 50 compartments: each of the latter holds but one Prisoner, and is so planned, that the Schoolmaster can inspect and instruct without the possibility of the Boys communicating with or seeing each other.

When a School Class is occupied in Cells, the Boys are regularly visited several times a day by the Schoolmaster of the Class, for scholastic instruction: as well as by the Chaplain and Principal Schoolmaster, for the purpose of religious and moral admonition.

From this School the Boys are drafted, on good behaviour, to where the attendance is five hours on alternate days: except on one day in each week, when one of the classes is instructed in Cells during the morning, and employed in knitting during the afternoon. The School Room is divided into two main sections, each being subdivided, as shown in the Engraving. The co[n]- instruction comprises Scripture lessons, biography, sacred geography, Scri[p]- history, emblems, parables, &c.; also, arithmetic, writing, general geography, etymology, English grammar, music, and written and oral useful knowledge lessons.

THE GENERAL WARD SCHOOL,

GENERAL W[illegible]

The mode of instruction is a combination of the collective and individual systems; and the masters have the whole command and charge of the Prisoners, during school-hours, without the presence of the discipline officers.

Attached to the Schools is a Library of from 700 to 800 volumes, a large number religious, and used chiefly for Sunday reading by the Prisoners; the other books being upon generally useful subjects, solely for the use of the Boys of the Evening Class. The Chaplain also distributes Tracts to the Prisoners at his discretion.

The General Ward School is immediately beneath the Chapel, and of the same size and form. Each Class is separated by green baize curtains; and the walls are hung with maps. In the evening there assembles here a Class of Boys, from seven to eight years old, from the General Ward; their good conduct rendering them fit objects for this privilege.

The flight of steps shown in the front of our Engraving descends, through a long, arched passage, to a spacious room, fitted with wooden tables, and raised platforms for Inspecting Officers. Each Boy is furnished with a knife, fork, and spoon. The Dietary is as follows:—On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays—Breakfast, one pint of cocoa, made with ½ oz. flake cocoa, ¼ pint of milk (rest water), and sweetened with ½ oz. molasses; 6 oz. bread. Dinner, one pint of soup, made with 3 oz. beef, 3 oz. potatoes, 2 oz. barley or rice, and 1 oz. onion or leek, with pepper and salt; also 1 lb of potatoes, and 6 oz. bread. Supper, one pint of gruel, made with 2½ oz. of oatmeal; boiled 6 oz. bread. On Sundays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays, the Dietary is the same as above, except Dinner, which consists of 4 oz. cooked meat (without bone), 1 lb. potatoes, and 6 oz. bread.

THE DINING HALL,

The Junior Prisoners have the same Dietary, with the exception of 4 oz. bread, instead of 6; and 12 oz. potatoes, instead of a pound. The Refractory Prisoners have gruel for Breakfast, bread and potatoes for Dinner, and pot-liquor for Supper.

Before they proceed to Dinner, the Boys are paraded in front of the Hall, are counted, and, if all are present, they are marched by Wards, in ranks, within three paces of the table, with their caps on; an Inspector at the upper end of the room then gives the words, "Attention! Stand at Ease—Three Paces Forward —Take off your Caps (which are placed upon iron pins, under the tables) Ask a Blessing—Eat your Dinners;" and they stand throughout the meal.

The Employment of the Prisoners is a very important feature of the Parkhurst System. There were instructed in trades by competent persons at the time of our visit—

20 as Brickmakers,	6 as Painters,
24 as Bricklayers,	24 as Gardeners
24 as Bricklayers' Labourers	36 as Agricultural Labourers
4 as Tailors of the General Ward, and all the Juniors, 200	All the Prisoners of the Divi[sion] attending the General Ward School, labour on the land daily, from half past one o'clock to half past three.
60 as Shoemakers,
6 as Bakers,
12 as Sawyers,	10 as Cooks' Assistants.
12 as Carpenters,	8 as Blacksmiths

The best-conducted Boys are selected for these trades; the remainder, unattached, do the washing, pumping, and lower prison duties.

The Cookery is by steam; all the bread and Officers' rations, are baked in twelve ov. loaves. About 200 pieces are washed weekly, and dried by a hot-air apparatus (by Hayden), which also heats the water for washing.

The various articles made are mostly apparel, &c., for the Prison, and the use of the Establishment; and some contracts are executed by the various trades. We have engraved

THE SHOEMAKERS' WORK-SHOP.

In this and the other shops, the boys are instructed in every branch of the business. In the Carpenters' Shop, at the time of our visit, there were tables, chairs, wheelbarrows, &c., in various stages; iron-work at the smiths', &c. In short, a portion of the new buildings was erected by the Boys and their Instructors; and repairs are done by the same means. In sawing, the Boys average more than 2000 feet per week; and much work is taken in from the neighbourhood. In some cases, the Boys work with almost military precision: thus, we saw the Lads assemble in the Tailors' Shops, on either side of the tables; and they did not begin work until they had obeyed the word of command: "Attention Stand at Ease—Take off your Jackets—Unbutton your Stocks," &c

It is important to state that each Prisoner in the General and Junior Wards receives School instruction on three days of each week, and the whole Wards meet in the Class rooms together on Sundays. To attend to each Prisoner of the General Wards an occasional opportunity of quiet consideration of his condition and prospects, as well as reflection on the admonition and instruction which he has received, the several Schools are placed, for one day in the week, in small separate cells, and there furnished with light employment, which, while it has afforded manual occupation, has yet allowed time and opportunity for thought.

The whole of the Prison Establishment extends 940 acres, and is surrounded on the north, east, and west sides, by a belt of trees; and, on the south, by Parkhurst Barracks. About 80 acres are occupied in spade-husbandry, and from 20 to 25 in pasture. At the date above-named, eight cows, yielding milk for the Prisoners' consumption here, also, are kept several pigs, from the refuse of the Prison; there are fattened and sold.

The number of Boys employed in agricultural labour varies much at different periods of the year. According to the last printed Report (1846), the ground had been much improved in condition; parts of it drained, and some very rough and unprofitable pasture-land broken up, and brought under cultivation. The potato-crop here, as elsewhere, was scanty, and of inferior quality. But of cabbages, carrots, leeks, onions, Swedish and white turnips, mangel-wurzel, barley, rye, and tares, there were excellent returns. About 100 tons of good hay were also cut off a portion of the land in grass. The earnings of the labour-party were £465, including those of the gardeners.

The total value of the Prison-labour for the year was £2045 9s. 2d.; and this sum, at least, must have been paid to private mechanics and artificers, if the prisoners had not been employed at the several trades

The total expenditure for 1845 was £13,561 14s. 7d.; of this sum, £504 6s. 7d. was paid for repairs or alterations of the buildings.

The receipts from various sources during the year were £10354 13s. 8½d., reducing the actual expenses of the Establishment to £3207 1s. 3½d. The average number of prisoners on the daily diet book having been 622, the cost of each individual for the year was £20 9s. 1½d., of which sum £6 14s. 6 3-5d. was consumed in food, and £1 13s. 1d. on clothing.

We conclude with a few minor details of the Engravings yet undescribed.

DRESS.

The Officers of the Prison wear military undress—blue frock-coats, cloth caps, and leather belt and strap holding keys.

Each Prisoner wears a leather cap (made in the Shoemaker's Shop), and bearing on front the Boy's No. in brass figures; the trousers and jacket are of drab cloth; on the left breast of the latter are sewn P. P., and the No.; and P. P. on the left thigh. The rest of the clothing is striped shirt, leather stock, waistcoat for winter wear, worsted stockings and boots, all of which are made in the Prison. On the right breast is worn a brass medal, with No. The Penal Class is denoted by yellow collars and cuffs, and letters of the same colour.

THE GENERAL VIEW,

upon our front page, shows the Boys employed in Spade Husbandry, in which they cultivate potatoes and other vegetables for the Prison supply. At the extremity of this piece of land is a burial-ground; and among the mass of trees in the foreground may be seen the chimney of the Chaplain's residence, and of the farm-house, near which is the yard for making bricks and tiles.

The mass of buildings in the centre is the Junior Prison; it consists of a circular way, with lodges on either side; and residences for the Chaplain (who is also Deputy-Governor of this part of the Establishment), and Assistant-Warder Steward's, and School Rooms. In the court-yard is a Gymnasium, where the quality of some of the Boys often very surprising. Here they also, shoeing drill, and for picking oakum in wet weather. In the rear stands the main building, forming the Prison, consisting of the various departments we have described.

The number of new cases in 1845 was 260, received from Millbank Prison; of which number London and Westminster contributed 78. Their ages varied from under 10 to 18 years; there being 50 between 14 and 16 years. In 1845, 70 Boys were removed from Parkhurst, to whom 2 more are sent to Western Australia, with conditional pardons, and 74 to Van Diemen's Land, under modified circumstances. Two Prisoners escaped from Parkhurst in the above year, and eight others attempted to run away; they were employed on the land adjoining the Prison; but, all were re-captured before they had left the Island. The health of the Prisoners is remarkably good: only four deaths occurred in 1845, three of consumption, and one by drowning. The Boys become healthy in appearance after they have been some months at Parkhurst; and this in contrast with that which many of them presented at the time of their reception is very striking.

A visit to Parkhurst Prison—there to witness the exertions of philanthropic enlightened men to reclaim the juvenile offender from the ways of error to the paths of virtue and peace—is one of the most gratifying scenes of philanthropy to be enjoyed in this great Christian country. To secure admission to the Prison, it is requisite to obtain the permission of her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department; and to such courtesy are we indebted for access for ourselves and artist to complete the foregoing illustrations.

In the summer of 1845, the Queen visited the Prison, with her suite; and her Majesty was graciously pleased to pardon, in person, two of the Prisoners, one from each Division of the Establishment

THE HEALTH OF M. ... Mr. O'Connell is gone to Hastings for the benefit of his health. Although ... Duke, ... given his opinion ... is patient to h...

OF THE NEW PLANET.—Nearly the whole of the astronomical world are now ... in commemorating ... epitome to be an appropriate means for the new planet; ... giving to it the name of Le Verrier. Mr. Struve, on ... ary of sciences, says: Far be it from us to ... our entire admiration of the eminent merit of M. Le Verrier. But impartial history will, in future, mention honourably (et à ...) in the same track with M. Le Verrier, the name of Mr. Adams; and ... two individuals as having, independently of one another, discovered ... beyond Uranus; consequently, we shall retain the name of Neptune, ... make no change, unless, hereafter, the general voice shall determine in favour of another name. Professor Airy has announced his adhesion to the conclusion of the Petersburgh Academy, and states that Gauss and Encke have, for the same reason, decided on retaining the name of Neptune.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 14. Fourth Sunday in Lent.
MONDAY, 15.—Venus sets at 8h. 1m., p.m., near the W. by N.
TUESDAY, 16. New Moon at 11h. 9m., p.m.
WEDNESDAY, 17.—St. Patrick.—The Moon and Mercury near each other.
THURSDAY, 18.—Edward, King of W. Saxony The Moon and Venus near together.
FRIDAY, 19.—Mercury sets at 7h. 53m., p.m.
SATURDAY, 20.—Sir Isaac Newton died. 1727.
During the evenings of this week, the planet Mercury is visible to the naked eye, appearing a little below the bright planet Venus.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 20

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h. m. 11 55	A. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 0 26	A. h. m. 0 54	A. h. m. 1 19	A. h. m. 1 43	A. h. m. 2 8
M. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 0 26	A. h. m. 0 54	A. h. m. 1 19	A. h. m. 1 43	A. h. m. 2 8	A. h. m. 2 30
M. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 0 54	A. h. m. 1 19	A. h. m. 1 43	A. h. m. 2 8	A. h. m. 2 30	A. h. m. 2 51
M. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 1 19	A. h. m. 1 43	A. h. m. 2 8	A. h. m. 2 30	A. h. m. 2 51	A. h. m. 3 13
M. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 1 43	A. h. m. 2 8	A. h. m. 2 30	A. h. m. 2 51	A. h. m. 3 13	A. h. m. 3 35
M. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 2 8	A. h. m. 2 30	A. h. m. 2 51	A. h. m. 3 13	A. h. m. 3 35	A. h. m. 3 57
M. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 2 30	A. h. m. 2 51	A. h. m. 3 13	A. h. m. 3 35	A. h. m. 3 57	A. h. m. 4 19
M. h. m. ...	A. h. m. 2 51	A. h. m. 3 13	A. h. m. 3 35	A. h. m. 3 57	A. h. m. 4 19	A. h. m. 4 40

* * There is no high tide during the afternoon of Sunday.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"F. S.," Edinburgh. The Façade of the New British Museum, (from the Architect's Drawing), has been already engraved in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

"Robin Goodfellow."—Thanks; but we have not room.

"A. C."—There is a cheap reprint of Gifford's "Baviad" or of his "Mæviad." By the "Baviad," the Della Cruscan School of Poetry was exterminated, and hence its interest has ceased. The "Mæviad" was less successful; and its object—"the puerilities and extravagance of the modern drama"—holds out with front of brass, to the present hour.

"Lysteus."—Ordeal was the punishment of a person who, being called into law, and lawfully sought, according to the usual forms, contemptuously refuses to appear. Hence, his goods and chattels are forfeited to the Crown, and all profits of lands, so long as the contempt lasts. He is, moreover, out of the protection of the law.

"G. R.," Clapham, should apply to the Patent Agent. The cost will be about £15.

"Iberia."—We do not recommend puzzled cages for Canaries

"Casuist" is thanked; but we could not make room for his Sketch.

"F. H. K.," Manchester.—The work shall be noticed.

"X. Y. Z."—The locality named ranks low in the scale of the healthiness of English towns

"Kratosthenes."—See the published account of the Great Rose Telescope, printed at Parsonstown.

"A. E." is thanked.

"A Subscriber," Rotherham, is mistaken. In Mr. Condy's Drawing of the Thetis, the head-yards are braced, so as to cast the ship to port: the appearance that our Correspondent fancies to be an error is not unlikely to deceive a landsman; as, the head-sails will, however well set, blow over the masts, and apparently hide part of the top-mast and top-gallant-mast.

"Kruk," Pembroke-street. "Foster's Book-keeping," published by Souter and Law, Fleet-street.

"Lucretia."—The lady was in error.

"H. S.," Plymouth.—M. Guizot is Premier of France.

"München."—We cannot advise.

"F.," Barnsley.—We cannot further assist our Correspondent.

"W. G.," Long Stratton.—Order of any London bookseller.

"A Cheerful Subscriber."—Mr. Dickens is a native of London. Ackermann has published some fine Architectural Sketches by Prout.

"A Country Subscriber," Chatham, had better apply to the Insurance Office.

"N.," Henley. When the Regatta Chart appears, we will notice it.

"E. G." The matters in question cannot be attended to in the Almanack; and the Replies are too long for insertion in our Journal.

"M. F.," Waterford.—We cannot advise further

"C. D." will find all the information as to obtaining a Writership in the East India Company's Service, in Hudson's "Parents' Handbook," pp. 149—150. The passage is too long for quotation

"A Distressed Mother" should apply at Woolwich

"S. B. L.," Leeds.—There is no cheap French work of the character named.

"J. A. J.," Tunbridge Wells.—Cockaday's solution of the passage in the opening of Pindar's first Ode is, perhaps, the best: the Poet, no doubt, alludes to the liberality of his patron, Hiero. We could not spare room for the Epigram.

"A Subscriber," Rochdale.—Nicholas Wood's Treatise, published by Longmans.

"P. Hunter." We have not room

"J. C. G.," Messrs. Barraud and Lund, Cornhill.

"J. M. A."—Apply to Dulau and Co., Foreign Booksellers, Soho-square.

"Cives." City.—The Statue of Nelson, on the Column in Trafalgar-square, is of Scottish stone, from the Granton quarry of the Duke of Buccleuch.

"A Knitter" is thanked.

"Chemin de Fer."—Buy the little "Hand-book to Paris."

"Agrum."—Walker's "Manly Exercises"

"A Subscriber"—Mr. Cobden's recent speech, Mr. Cobden was in Rome.

"A. T. D. H.," Dethorough, must take out a Plate License. The price of the "Illustrated New Testament," complete, is 2*s.* 6*d.*

"E. L." should apply at the Office.

"A Well-wisher," Cheapside.—The matter is under consideration.

"J. M." may translate the French works in question; but we do not recommend him to do so

"Blanche." The price of the "Work-Table Magazine" (to be had, by order, of any Bookseller) is 1*s.* 6*d. each No*

"A Subscriber"—Apply to Mr. Bell, Fleet-street.

"Railway Shareholder's Manual."

"O." Ab[e]rgh. The Rental must be reckoned as Income.

"P. S. B."—No.

"S.," Garstang.—We regret that we have not room.

"L." Aberdeen.—Single Numbers of our Journal are best preserved by the new Envelope, in passing by post.

"L." "Grandpapa's Evening Tale" has merit, but is too long for our Journal. We have not room for "Paul's Friend;" "Omega;" "Zero."

"R. G.," Lakenham.—Supposing the Population of the World to consist of 1000 millions, (see "Pebrer's Peat Essay"), it is computed that 84,192 die every day, and 37 every minute

"Phonographer"—We are willing to concede that great merit is due to the system of Pitman. The Phonographic Society's, in respect to brevity, is evident; but that it is easier to decypher after it is written, we think, is a question. We revolted there have been principles of Stenography already before the world entitled to equal claims of priority with that of Mr. ; viz., the systems of Richardson, with and without lines, published thirty or forty years ago. "Phonographer" is hardly correct in his statement that "no other system than Pitman's professes to enable you to take down a speech verbatim:" inasmuch as that of Richardson does so profess.

"X. X. X." asks Why are Chequers painted on public-houses? Because, in early times, a chequered board, the emblem of calculation, was hung out, to indicate an office for changing money; and it was subsequently adopted as the sign of an inn, or hostelry.

"A Fellow of Jesus College," Dorchester, is thanked: his letter has been handed to our Artist

"Amicus."—Stock bought for Money is transferred immediately, and paid for. Stock bought for Account is transferred on the account-day as the price of the day on which the transaction took place

"Pastor."—The Hon. Charles Howard, M.P. for East Cumberland, is fifth son of the present Earl of Carlisle, and brother, consequently, of Lord Morpeth. Mr. Philip Howard, the Member for Carlisle, is the eldest known of the hon. gentleman, being representative of the Corby branch of the illustrious House of Howard, a branch sprung from a younger brother of the ancestor of the Earls of Carlisle

"A Constant Subscriber" should apply to the Heralds' Office, where he will, in all probability, ascertain the particulars of his arms and crest. It does not, however, follow that all families have a right to armorial bearings. If the arms required be recorded in the College of Heralds, a sketch may be obtained at a very small charge. No one can legally assume or change a coat of arms and a crest, without the sanction of the Earl Marshal.

"H. R. F."—Lord Stanley has been summoned to Parliament in his father's Barony. Should he, in the lifetime of the Earl of Derby, his eldest son will succeed to the Barony, and be entitled to a seat in the House of Lords.

"Coventry."—Miss Eliza Peel, daughter of Sir Robert Peel, Bart., was born 17*th April,* 1830

"Carolene." A learned dissertation on the title of "Esquire" has appeared in Mr. Burke's "Patrician," to which we must refer our Correspondent, as the subject, to be properly explained, would occupy far more space than we could spare.

"Naurrys."—Marks of Cadency, such as the "crescent," the "mullet," the "martlet," the "annulet," &c., are used to distinguish the arms of the younger sons of a family. We see no objection to the transmission by post of the memorial in question.

"A Young Subscriber." The children are half-brothers and half-sisters. The relationship is the same on both cases.

"A. B."—The same amount of capital is necessary to form a great Composer as is requisite for a great Poet or Painter, and to this standard the female mind seldom attains. Moreover, a Composer is necessarily acquainted with the capabilities and powers of almost every musical instrument; a knowledge beyond the sphere of Ladies, who confine their practice to the cultivation of the Voice, the Harp, Guitar, and Piano

"A Constant Reader."—A Mauresque may be bought of Messrs Cary, Strand, at from 3 to 5 guineas, Solar, £6 to £21.

"G. H." Pembroke.—Address Her Majesty's Theatre.

"W. R. W." should inquire of Lord Morpeth.

"A. A. M.," Islington.—The Model Steam Engines may be bought for Two Guineas, and upwards. Mr. Cruikshank resides at Amwell-street, Islington. The Terrible Steam-ship is engraved in No. 96 of our Journal.

"X. Y. Z."—If the daughter be under age, the notes will be good.

"B. D." Sir G. Carroll is Lord of Finsbury, and Lord Mayor of London by courtesy only.

"M. A. P." and "Scotch Laddie" should apply to a Solicitor.

"N. W." Passley. See the "Biographie des Contemporaines." The City of Paris will appear in our Series of Views

"Translodus." Apply at the Government Annuity Office, 10, Old Jewry.

"Inquisitor."—The Solicitor must be free of the City of London.

"G. J. P." A Grand Juryman must be a Freeholder

"Junius W." Certainly.

"W. E. D. S."—The Duke of Wellington is Master of the Trinity House.

"The Sara Sara."—Andrea del Sarto's name has kept its place for 300 years. Our Correspondent should consult Dr. Waagen's "Life of Rubens" for the best estimate of his merits

 We have received from Miss Cruston, of Stones End, Southwark, the Sum of Five Pounds towards the Relief of the Distress in Ireland; and we have paid the same to the British Association.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1847.

THE change in the system of punishment by transportion is one of the most important steps taken for many years. Convicts are no longer to be sent out in ship-loads, and landed on the shore of a distant country, to be something between free men and slaves—with the chances before them, according to individual character, of rising to be among the most wealthy men of the settlement, or to sink to that "lowest deep," the penal colony at Norfolk Island. The dreadful condition of that place has compelled the Government to change the system; no rulers of a Christian land could, knowing what effects it was producing, allow it to continue. The mass of crime we have hitherto thrown from us to the other side of the world—without much care what became of it, so it was out of sight—will henceforth remain within our own borders, rigidly watched. The necessity this will create for an enlarged system of prison discipline is evident. In fact, we are taking a step that assimilates our system to that of France, with its bagnes and travaux forcés. France has had no penal colonies; her criminals remain on their native soil; expiating their crimes, surrounded by, though separated from, the society they have injured. We are approaching the same system of punishment, and, without great care, shall eventually have to adopt it entirely.

The question of punishment is one of the most difficult problems of a complicated stage of society. Men differ even as to its objects; all agree that it is necessary for the protection of society; but, beyond that, others add that it should be made an expiation for crime committed; others, again, that it is meant to reform bad habits and teach better—that the prison door ought to be the porch of an academy of moral improvement. But, practically, the security of society has been, and is, the first principle of nearly all punishments; and, by their efficiency in this respect, they are judged. The present change in the transportation system is avowedly only an experiment; if it does not answer it will be given up; and we are by no means sanguine in our belief that it will finally succeed. The great difficulty is not in holding men safe prisoners between four walls. That, by material means is easily accomplished. But when the term of imprisonment ends, and the criminal is let loose again upon society, the peril to the community and to himself begins anew. This is severely felt in France; at the end of their terms of five, ten, or twenty years of confinement at Toulon or Brest, the criminal is free again; there, as everywhere else, the brand of degradation is upon him. Even if repentant and honest, which is an exceptional case, he can find no occupation, no employer; and he is driven to theft and violence in order to live as before. The most atrocious crimes in France are often committed by liberated or escaped forçats. They take refuge in Paris, and form the most dangerous element in what are called the "dangerous classes" of that capital. They furnish at once the great terror and chief occupation of the police; and perhaps we have not sufficiently estimated the effect of watching this class of known criminals, dexterous and ferocious as they are, in giving that character of espionage to the French police system, which has been turned to such dangerous account by the Government in political affairs. The streets of the French capital are far less safe by night than those of London; and every one acquainted with French habits knows how late hours and certain quarters of the city are avoided. If any person reflects on what London would probably be, with all the convicts whose sentences are short of confinement for life set free as those sentences expire, to roam this vast city, at large, surrounded by the lawless population of Ireland, and quite as desperate, he may form a faint idea of how much peace and good order we owe to our convenient depots for criminals at the antipodes. Set at liberty there, a new country and a wide sphere shorebed them: comparatively but a small number returned to England: the convict ship with its dark freight once on the ocean, the crime and criminal were alike lost and forgotten.

But this security was purchased at a heavy price; we cannot, at any risk, continue the system—what is to supply it?

We are trying to blend the plans of imprisonment and expatriation: close restraint, with labour, and the application of a rigid prison discipline is to be a probation through which all criminals must pass. The working in the stone quarries of Portland is but a continuation of that employment of convicts in our Naval Arsenals, which is completely French. And after their term is thus worked out, the French difficulty occurs in all its force—what is to become of the criminal? It is useless to let him loose on Society, it will not receive him; generally he has not a home than his first, and it is morally certain he will return to the world only to prey on it. The remedy at present suggested is a kind of enforced emigration; he will be assisted to reach another country, but England he must leave. It is, in fact, the old practice, now long disused, of banishment. We do not think it will succeed; it will involve us in endless troubles with our own Colonies; perhaps, with foreign countries; for, once out of England, the liberated convict may apparently roam where he pleases. But we cannot here notice half the difficulties that suggest themselves. Shall we not be obliged to import another French practice, as yet unknown to our law—that of surveillance by the Police? It keeps a check over criminals for a long time after they are liberated; but we have not the machinery for carrying it out, nor would it be liked by the people at large, who would suspect its tendency. The question has not yet taken a shape definite enough to warrant an opinion; but we fear we perceive the germs of failure in it. It is comparatively easy to render our Prison Discipline all that can be wished; there is something beyond it, far harder to deal with.

THE WEATHER.

The past week has been dull, the sky having been covered by clouds, with but few slight exceptions, throughout the week; the weather has been cold, the wind blowing from the East and North-East principally; but at times it has been calm. The air has been generally dry. On Tuesday and Wednesday some snow fell. The average temperature of Thursday was 41°; of Friday was 41°; of Saturday was 39°; of Sunday was 41½°; of Monday was 42½°, of Tuesday was 35½°; and of Wednesday was 33½°. The average temperature of the week has been 39°. The thermometrical readings each day were:—

Thursday,	March 4, the highest in the night-day was 45 d	.....	and the lowest was 30½ deg.
Friday,	March 5	41	 37
Saturday,	March 6	40½	 37
Sunday,	March 7	45	 36
Monday,	March 8	50	 35
Tuesday,	March 9	43	 28
Wednesday,	March 10	43	..... 23½

Blackheath, Thursday, March 11, 1847. J. G.

S. The reading of the thermometer this morning, between five and six o'clock, was as low as 17°: a very great degree of cold, so near the vernal equinox.

BUILDING SOCIETIES.—A Lecture was given on Monday evening, of the St. Luke's Equitable Building Society, at the Prince of Wales, Barnet-street, St. Luke's, an opinion of Mr. Tidd Pratt was read upon a point of great importance to Building Societies. That gentleman says—"It appears to me that in strictness, under the provisions of the Benefit Building Societies' Acts, the money borrowed from the Society should be to erect or purchase property; and, consequently, that a member cannot assign as security property which he already possesses. If money is advanced not according to the rules and provisions of the Act, I am of opinion that the member, or any person obtaining under him, might set the transaction aside, and, in equity, would be entitled to a return of his deeds on payment of principal and legal interest."

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

THE LONDON AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY COMPANY.—The Earl of Fife presented a petition from the Chairman of the Oxford and Birmingham Railway Company, complaining of the conduct of the London and Birmingham Company, in defeating the policy of Parliament, by buying up the shares in the Oxford Line, and upsetting an arrangement entered into with the Line, and the Great Western Line, which was sanctioned by the bill. The noble Earl gave notice that he would call the attention of the House to the subject matter of the petition on Tuesday next.—Lord LYNDHURST gave notice that on that day he would move that the petition be referred to a select committee.

Lord FREEMAN presented a petition from Liverpool complaining of the influx of Irish paupers, and stating that the Irish landlords gave them 2s. 6d. a-head to come to this country. The petition gave rise to some animadversions and contradictions.

The House adjourned at an early hour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

EXPORTATION OF CORN.—In answer to a question, Lord J. RUSSELL said that he was aware that there was a great demand for corn both in France and Italy. [illegible] He understood a conference on the subject on the part of the British government, would not be attended with advantage to this country. (Hear, hear.)

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

On the order for going into Committee on the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill being read,

Lord J. RUSSELL said he wished to make some statements as to the nature of this bill, and what it was proposed to do. The Government were of opinion there ought to be 10,000 tons of provisions always in store in districts where no market was held. The noble Lord then alluded to the amount of money which had been expended in the employment of the poor in Ireland since the month of September last; and the number employed, by which it appeared they had regularly increased, until the number of persons employed last week amounted to 702,228. (Hear.) He was convinced if Government and Parliament had not interfered and taken aid in the manner they had done, the most frightful starvation and death must have ensued. (Hear.) He regretted that the calamity still existed to a fearful extent, but he was happy to say there had been no general confusion among the working classes. Every measure possible was also resorted to for the better providing destitute persons with food and subsistence at as little expense to the public as possible. (Hear, hear.) With respect to the bill which the Government were framing (the Poor Relief Supervision, Ireland, Bill), he had received a number of communications from different parties, some of which contained useful informations and suggestions. With respect to giving out-door relief and employing able-bodied men, [illegible] Poor-Law Commissioners to issue similar orders in Ireland to those issued in England. What was to be done with the destitute sick, and [illegible] they were to be left to the tender mercies of their friends? [illegible] proposed, discarding and destitute poor? It appeared that that proposed [illegible] which he [illegible]

Mr. S. O'BRIEN agreed generally with what had been stated by the noble Lord as to out-door relief. It was a great experiment, and he should support it, because it was necessary.

Mr. F. SCROPE expressed his gratification at the proposal.

A long and somewhat animated discussion ensued upon the question of going into Committee. In the course of it,

Mr. [illegible] expressed his surprise at the views of the Government and urged that the Irish landlords ought to support the poor of that country.

The House then went into Committee pro formâ, and the debate upon the substantive proposals of the Government was adjourned.

The House sat till a late hour, but nothing further of importance took place.

THE GENERAL FAST.

Last night's Gazette contains the following proclamation:—

A PROCLAMATION—BY THE QUEEN

Victoria R.—We, taking into our most serious consideration the heavy judgments with which Almighty God is pleased to visit the iniquities of this land, by a grievous scarcity and dearth of divers articles of sustenance and necessaries of life, and, trusting in the mercy of Almighty God, that notwithstanding the sore punishment which He hath sent upon us and upon our people, He will, if we turn to Him in due contrition and penitence of heart, withdraw His afflicting hand; have, therefore, resolved, and do, by and with the advice of our Privy Council, hereby command, that a public fast and humiliation be observed throughout those parts of our United Kingdom called England and Ireland, on Wednesday, the 24th day of March inst., that so both we and our people may humble ourselves before Almighty God, in order to obtain pardon of our sins, and may, in the most devout and solemn manner, send up our prayers and supplications to the Divine Majesty, for the removal of those heavy judgments which our manifold sins and provocations have most justly deserved, and under which we at this present time labour; and we do strictly charge and command, that the said public fast [illegible] Ireland, do, on the said day, tender the favour of Almighty God, and would avoid His wrath and indignation; and upon pain of such punishment as may be justly inflicted on all such as contemn and neglect the performance of so religious and necessary a duty. And for the better and more orderly and solemnising of the same, we have given directions to the Most Reverend the Archbishops, and the Right Reverend the Bishops of England and Ireland to compose a Form of Prayer suitable to the occasion, to be used in all churches, chapels, and places of public worship; and to take care the same be timely dispersed through their respective dioceses.

Given at our Court, at Osborne House, Isle of Wight, this ninth day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1847, and in the tenth year of our reign.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN.

The Gazette also contains a similar proclamation, commanding a Fast to be observed in Scotland on the same day as that in England.

MR. ALDERMAN GIBBS AND THE PARISH OF ST. STEPHEN, WALBROOK.—[illegible] Attorney General v. Gibbs. The case on the part of the defendant was that, besides a deficiency of upwards of 4000 due to him, £610 had been paid by him out of the rents and dividends, as well as out of his own pocket, for the parish, which sum the Master could not allow him in the account. There was also a sum of more than £400 paid on the joint account of the parish of St. Stephen and St. Benet Shire Hog, which the Master found to have been paid, but it could not be [illegible] his claims could not legally be allowed to him.—Vice-Chancellor Bruce held that there was no fund out of which these alleged payments could be reimbursed. It was said that, before and after the institution of the suit, Mr. Gibbs claimed a large sum from the parish than had since been found to be due to him. It must be satisfactory to all persons, however, if possible, to ascribe that claim rather to mistake and error than to a want of integrity; and upon the materials which were [illegible] Court, he could not say that any part of the sum originally claimed by Mr. Gibbs had been expended, though not in a manner which could be allowed adversely against the parish. In conclusion Mr. Bruce said, in reference to the accounts:—"I am at a loss to see a satisfactory explanation given for Mr. Gibbs having allowed a period of twenty years to pass without having presented or exhibited his accounts. It may be that he was not asked for them by his colleagues of the select vestry, but I am of opinion that he ought not to have waited for that. The parish at large was interested in knowing them, and the neglect of duty on the part of a body of which he was a member could be no apology for that neglect of duty on his part." His Honour then directed that all the defendants, except Mr. Gibbs and Dr. Croly, should be dismissed; that Mr. Atkins should neither pay nor receive costs, and Dr. Croly's costs, they were to be received out of the unreceived dividends, and that the balance of such dividends, if any, should go in part discharge of the balance found due to Mr. Gibbs.

REDUCTION IN THE PRICE OF BREAD.—Yesterday morning a reduction of one halfpenny in the price of the 4lb loaf was made by [illegible] bakers generally.

ARRIVAL OF THE "SARAH SANDS" AT NEW YORK.—The Sarah Sands, the screw-propeller, is reported at Lloyd's as having reached New York on the 12th ult., being about 24 days passage.

THE "GREAT WESTERN" STEAM-SHIP.—The Great Western steam-ship was offered for sale by auction, at Bristol, on Thursday, in accordance with public advertisement; but, although she was stated to have cost £[illegible],000, and to have been surveyed by Lloyd's, and found in as good condition as the first day, after having made 90 successful voyages, only £20,000 was offered for her, and she was withdrawn at the reserve of £25,000.

THE ALLEGED CASES OF POISONING AT CLAVERING, ESSEX.—Sarah Chesham was brought to Chelmsford, on Thursday, upon the charge of having poisoned several of her children with arsenic. Our readers will recollect the circumstances. There was no direct evidence against the prisoner, and the Jury acquitted her.

DISTURBANCES IN ROSS-SHIRE.—Yesterday week, an attempt to ship meal at Fowlis, for the West Highlands, was prevented by a resolute and determined mob. The day previous a similar occurrence took place at Invergordon. A portion of grain was put on board the [illegible] at Invergordon during the night, but the populace assembled, took out the grain, and marched the carts from the pier. A detachment of military has since been sent to protect the grain and effect its shipment.

The latest accounts from Ross-shire show that food rioting still prevails to a dangerous extent. A new method of preventing the shipment of grain is to break open the granaries and mix the different kinds of corn, &c., a plan which has been twice resorted to in the above county. Dingwall has hitherto been the chief scene of disturbance in that quarter, and, accordingly, 100 men of the 27th, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Goodman, have arrived there from Inverness, carrying with them thirteen prisoners, of whom eight were females.

GRAND ENTERTAINMENT OF THE FRENCH AMBASSADOR.—His Excellency the French Ambassador has issued invitations for a grand entertainment to their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, on the 17th instant, at Manchester House

DEATH OF A VICE ADMIRAL.—Vice-Admiral of the White, Nicholas Tomlinson, died at his residence Middleton House, Sussex, last Saturday, in the 83d year of his age.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

NEW CHURCH, ST GEORGE'S, HANOVER-SQUARE.—A new church is about to be erected on the south, or Piccadilly, side of the parish of St. George, Hanover-square.

NEW CHURCH AT WINCHESTER.—The Bishop of Winchester has appointed Friday, April 16, for the consecration of the new church, dedicated to St. Thomas, in the city of Winchester.

CHURCH FOR SEAMEN.—The church for the seamen of the port of London, the first stone of which was laid by his Royal Highness Prince Albert in May last, is now completed. About £2000 more will be required to be added to the endowment fund before the church can be consecrated.

OXFORD. March 9.

The Professorship of Political Economy, founded by Mr. Drummond, has just become vacant, Dr. Twiss having held that office for five years. The election, which is with the members of convocation, will probably take place within the next fortnight.

OXFORD. March 10.

The Vice-Chancellor has fixed Tuesday, the 23d instant, at two o'clock, for the election of a professor of political economy. The candidates already announced are, Mr. Nassau Senior, the Master in Chancery of Magdalen College; and the Rev. Edmund Robert Larken, of Trinity College.

IRELAND.

THE PROGRESS OF STARVATION

The Irish provincial papers continue to supply lamentable accounts of starvation and death. We select the most prominent of these statements.

COUNTY OF ARMAGH.—The reporter of the Banner of Ulster, after giving several instances of extreme distress under which the people of the north are suffering, states that, in the town of Derrymacash, "from the 1st of January last to the 20th of February, the number of deaths in this townland alone exceeded nine hundred; and, almost in every instance, the illness by which they were swept away could be traced to originate in want of food."

COUNTY OF ARMAGH.—It is stated that nearly 400 paupers have died in the Lurgan Union workhouse during the last eight weeks. In Armagh, there is some dread that mortality will spread beyond its usual limits in the workhouse there. Typhus fever has appeared, and the medical attendants are fearful of the spread of the disease. On Wednesday (last week), the remains of fourteen of the paupers were lying in the deadhouse

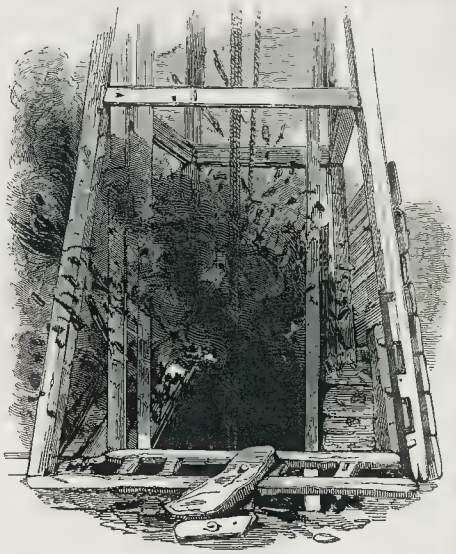
THE SOUTH OF IRELAND.—The Cork Reporter of Thursday (last week) says:—"The following brief abstract from the transactions of the presentment sessions tells its own awful and astounding tale:—At a presentment sessions at Ballydehob, held on the 2nd instant, for the barony of the west Carbery, in West Carberry, the following presentment was passed by Lionel J. Fleming, Esq., chairman,

"To place a layer of earth over the following burying-grounds, to the depth of three feet, and to surround the same with [illegible]

[illegible] Ballyhilane Burying-ground, Kilmoe, Ballydehob, Kilcrohane, Kilmichael, Durrus, Ahagurrane, Ballyvourney, Kilmacabea, Ballyfeard, Kilnamartyra, Templenacarriga, Kilmeen, Kilcaskan, Kilmocomogue, Ballyroe, Kilmoe

THE EXPLOSION NEAR BARNSLEY.

THE GREAT ARDSLEY MAIN COLLIERY.



THE EXPLOSION.

on applying these two tests on Friday morning, no appearance of foul air in the first hole. I tried every hole in the pit. I found no foul air where the men were to work. I found foul air in the old workings, and in which men are not now employed. The depth of the seam of coals is about eight feet two inches, and the break or hole when the coal is got will be about the same depth, twenty to thirty yards wide, and from seven hundred to one thousand yards in length. The breaks are propped with props, puncheons, and packs. I found foul air in some of the breaks on Friday morning last. I went down at twenty minutes past three, and examined the men's working holes, as I have stated. I make this examination every morning, and have examined the pit in the way mentioned every morning for about a year and a half. There has always been foul air in the breaks where the coal has been got. After I had been round the pit last Friday morning, I considered it safe, and I gave the signal to the top, and the men began to come down to their work. I staid in the pit until a quarter before three in the afternoon. My duty, after I have been round in the morning, is to go round the pit, and see all is safe. I go to the most dangerous places. I go about from one to the other to see that all is safe. The depth of the shaft is about 280 yards. There is an air shaft about the same depth, which is about nine feet from the drawing shaft. The air shaft has a cupola, in which a fire is constantly kept whilst the pit is working. There are no other means of ventilation than the air shaft I have mentioned. The furthest part of the workings is about half a mile from the shafts. The shaft is unusually deep. Foul air will accumulate very soon in breaks of the depth of eight feet, and the roof is more likely to fall after the coal is got than in a smaller seam. I think all the foul air in the pit has not exploded. I went down the pit between four and five o'clock the same evening the explosion happened. I found the wall or partition between the drawing-pit and the air-shaft blown down. The safety-lamps used by the men are not got out; they are covered by what has been blown down by the explosion in the breaks. There is a scaffolding in the air-shaft for the purpose of repairs. I don't know how long it has been in. I should say the space between the scaffolding and the sides of the shaft is about two feet. The shaft is about nine feet wide, and is circular. Before I came out, George Armitage, the bottom steward, came out. There was no person in authority down when I left the pit on Friday last, nor when the explosion took place. I cannot account for the explosion. I laid shovels, as usual, on Friday morning in seven or eight breaks in which the men were to work that morning. When a fresh man comes to work, he is told the signal. It is possible a man might come to work and not know. He would not know the signal until he was told. He might work awhile before I saw him, and he, not knowing the signal, might walk over a shovel with a lighted candle in his hand. The repairs to the shaft might have been done at night when the men were out of the pit; and the scaffolding might have been taken out in the day time. The shaft which is now used as an air-shaft, has been originally used as a drawing-shaft. The shaft is level with the ground, and there is no chimney or other brick-work above the ground. If there was a chimney or brickwork above the level of the ground, the draft would be greater. A proper air-shaft is one sunk down to the coal and walled up from it with a chimney, and made for the purpose.

At the request of Mr. Means, some questions were put to the witness, who added: The men are cautioned not to go into the old breaks either with or without lamps. The air shaft, I should say, is nine feet across at the top; it widens towards the bottom.

The evidence was proceeded with till about eight o'clock in the evening, when the Deputy-Coroner adjourned the inquest on these cases till Tuesday next, the 16th inst.

Just as the Coroner and Jury were leaving the Court-house, intelligence was given to them that four more bodies had been taken from the pit. The Coroner then announced his intention of remaining all night, and requested the Jury to meet him at Ardsley, on the following morning, at nine o'clock, in order that the bodies might be viewed, and interred without delay.

The Coroner and Jury assembled on Tuesday morning at the White Bear public-house, where the bodies of the four sufferers mentioned above were lying. Three of the four stood in the relationship of father and sons—the latter two fine youths, aged 18 and 16 years. The names of the four deceased are James Whiteley, William Whiteley, George Whiteley, and John Riley. After the Jury had viewed the bodies, this inquest was also adjourned to the same time and place as the last. The Coroner and Jury took this opportunity of visiting the pit, and viewing the position of the shafts, &c., a matter which appeared of the greatest importance in the inquiry in which they were engaged.

The bodies of three men are known to be still in the pit, and it is more than doubtful that one of them will never be recovered, such a vast quantity of the works having been blown down upon the place where he was employed.

THE FUNERAL.

NEWSPAPER
ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

SAINT PATRICK'S DAY.—DESIGNED BY JAMES MAHONY.

ST. PATRICK'S DAY.—1847.

[The Illustration upon the previous page is from a design by Mr. James Mahony. In the centre of the composition is a medallic representation of the Birth of St. Patrick; surrounded by a St. Patrick's Cross of Shamrock. To the left is St. Patrick, with his attendant Missionaries, banishing the "frogs and vermen" into the bogs; whilst the aborigines of the country are struck with amazement at his miraculous power; and here, too, are the Irish Court, afterwards his converts to Christianity: to the left is one of his priests preaching; and in the distance is a long procession to a ruined temple; and beyond it an ancient round tower, backed by lofty mountains, behind which is the setting sun, emblematic of the fall of idolatry in the country. In the lower left foreground is a picture of the Evils of Intemperance: a drunken "Paddy" —the row; the fire; the military called out; Bridewell; and in the extreme distance, the gibbet; all traceable from the flowing can, the beloved bottle, and the noggin. Thus far, the dark side. The opposite shows Father Mathew, "the Apostle of Temperance," administering the pledge to anxious crowds, with a long "Temperance" procession from the distant hills. Instead of the decayed hamlet and the pagan pile of stones, we have the neat village and its Christian church, backed by mountains, and the rising sun to indicate emancipation from a dark age. As a contrast to the old mode of keeping St. Patrick's Day, in the lower right foreground, is the innocent recreation of the dance; and beneath, is the happy tea-party, indicative of the regeneration of Ireland, and bringing the miseries and crimes which spring from intoxication into powerful contrast with the peace and joy accruing from Temperance.]

Alas! though the clouds of misfortune may hover
Green Isle! o'er thy mountains and vallies so fair,
Through darkness and death thy true soul will discover
The sunbeams of Hope which shall conquer despair.
Cold, cold is the heart, in this hour of dire sorrow,
That fails to accord thee blest sympathy's ray;
And colder the harp which one stigma would borrow
To brand the brave Shamrock on Patrick's Day.

Thou type of the Trinity! through thee the glory,
Love, goodness of God was proclaimed to the land;
The King and the Kerne, the blooming and hoary,
All loved the good Saint whose apostolic hand
Expell'd viper-vice, and uncleanness before it,
Redeem'd the fair Island from paganish sway,
And long as the teardrops of Heaven stream o'er it,
Shall Erin pay homage to Patrick's Day.

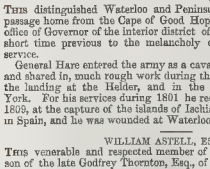
But wild was the homage. The vice of all others
Most baleful arose from the festival bowl,
And men became foes who but lately were brothers,
"The joy of the fight" baffled Friendship's control.
Raise, raise ye the statue to good Father Mathew,
His trophies o'er vice shall not soon fade away;
He taught a whole nation Peschew death's potation,
And yet be most happy on Patrick's Day.

Oh! soon may the day dawn, sweet Isle of the Ocean!
Whose warm smile will banish the tear from thy cheek,
When scorning the leaders of factious commotion,
The true good and fame of thy sons thou wilt seek,
When the 'prentice of Derry shall love Pat of Kerry,
And both with the Saxon be prudent and gay;
When plenty and peace and the arts may increase
To honour our Empire on Patrick's Day.—L.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE COUNTESS DOWAGER OF STAIR.

JOANNA, Countess Dowager of Stair, died at Edinburgh, 16th February.



Her Ladyship was eldest daughter of the late Charles Gordon, Esq., of Cluny, county Aberdeen, and sister of the present Colonel Gordon, of that place, one of the most considerable landed proprietors in North Britain. Her marriage to the late Earl of Stair took place in 1804; but his Lordship, under the impression that the contract was not binding, entered on a second alliance, in 1808, with Lady Laura Tollemache, daughter of the Countess of Dysart. In the following year, however, Miss Gordon substantiated the validity of her marriage, and Lord Stair's union with his second wife was dissolved.

MAJOR-GENERAL HARE, C.B., K.H.

THIS distinguished Waterloo and Peninsular officer, who died on his passage home from the Cape of Good Hope, filled, for many years, the office of Governor of the interior district of that colony, and had, but a short time previous to the melancholy event, completed his term of service.

General Hare entered the army as a cavalry officer in 1799, and saw, and shared in, much rough work during the late war. He took part in the landing at the Helder, and in the campaign under the Duke of York. For his services during 1801 he received a medal. He was, in 1809, at the capture of the islands of Ischia and Procida. He was also in Spain, and he was wounded at Waterloo.

WILLIAM ASTELL, ESQ., M.P.

THIS venerable and respected member of the House of Commons was son of the late Godfrey Thornton, Esq., of Mogerhanger House, county Bedford, one of the Bank Directors, and grandson of Godfrey Thornton, Esq., of Clapham, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of William Astell, Esq., of Everton His descent from this lady gave rise to the deceased gentleman's change of name from Thornton to Astell. Mr. Astell, for a long series of years, carried on an extensive business in the City of London. He was also a director, for a considerable period, of the East India Company, and chairman of the Russian Company, and of the Great Northern Railway, and was a large shareholder in other undertakings. Of the House of Commons, he was one of the oldest members, having first entered it as representative for Bridgwater in 1807; he was returned for Bedfordshire in the last general election in 1841.

Mr. Astell was a Tory: he voted against the Catholic Relief Bill, the Reform Bill, and the Free-Trade measures of Sir Robert Peel. He was one of the Board of East India Directors who recalled Lord Ellenborough from his post of Governor-General. Mr. Astell was a Deputy Lieutenant, and Magistrate for Bedfordshire, and also Lieutenant-Colonel of its County Militia. In 1800, he married Sarah, only daughter of John Harvey, Esq., of Ickwellbury, and by that lady, who died in 1841, he leaves a large family, the eldest son of which, Richard William, is Lieutenant-Colonel in the Grenadier Guards. Mr. Astell, after an illness of a month's duration, expired on the 7th instant, at his seat, Everton House, Huntingdonshire, aged 73.

JAMES BRADSHAW, ESQ., M.P.

THIS gentleman died on the 4th inst., after a long and painful illness, at his residence, South-street, Park-lane. He had a seat in Parliament for very many years. From 1823 to 1832 he represented Brackley, sat for Berwick in 1835, and was member for Canterbury since 1837. In politics he was an undeviating Tory; and, during the recent struggles on the Corn question, gave his strongest support to the Protectionists. He was son of the late James Bradshaw, Esq., of Portland-place, by Harriet, his wife, daughter of Thomas Fitzhugh, Esq., of Plas Power, county Denbigh, and became, by the second marriage of his mother, stepson of Sir Henry Peyton, Bart. Mr. Bradshaw married, several years since, Miss M. Tree, the celebrated actress, who, with his only daughter, attended him in his last moments.

THE NATIONAL FAST. At the Privy Council held on Tuesday, at Osborne House, Wednesday, the 24th inst., was appointed as the day for the observance of a general fast and humiliation

THE CHARGE OF STEALING VALUABLE BOOKS.—Mr. F. B Heare, the solicitor, who was last week charged at Marlborough-street Police-office, with having fraudulently disposed of trust and other books of great value, the property of Mr James Bohn, the bookseller, was re-examined at that Office on Wednesday, and Mr Bingham said he should send the prisoner for trial, but he would accept bail for him.

The Rev Chas. Trift, D.D., Rector of Silverton, Devon, on Monday last, laid the foundation stone of a Girls' School there in the presence of Lady Egremont, and a large assembly of the neighbouring gentry.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. N." You ought to have given mate in four moves easily, instead of six. 1. Q to B 8th (ch); 2. Q Kt takes Q P (ch). *Black, for his best, must have moved K to Q Kt sq - then—*3. Q to her 6th; and mate next move.

"Pawns Saturated"—We have attempted to explain the solution of Mr. Bolton's Problem, which you have forwarded, and regret that we have not space this week to repeat it.

"A. L."—They shall receive attention shortly; in the meanwhile, it will be well for you to examine them closely yourself once more, as we have no time for corrections, and make a point of destroying all MS. positions wherein we detect mistakes.

"S. G."—Your Problem appears now to be correct, but it is still very easy. We shall endeavour to find a place for it ere long.

"R. S.," Worcester—Thanks for the position, although it is so obviously won for White, that we should think mate may be effected in fewer moves, by simply playing Q R to K 3rd as the first step.

"Philidor, Jun."—The chess type is ordinary use is from Caslon's Foundry. We never heard of a Hand Press for printing Chess Problems.

"C. F."—Our diagrams are not engravings, but are put together like ordinary type. The Chess type may be obtained of any type-founder.

"T. G. O."—We cannot at the moment recollect the author of the clever Enigma 126.

"Britonicus."—You are mistaken: Problem 153 cannot be solved in less than the stipulated number of moves; for when you advance the P two steps, Black takes it in passing. You cannot Castle out of check. Study the excellent series of Chess Lessons now publishing in the Weekly Numbers of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."

"A Dudley Subscriber" is wrong. Mate cannot be given in the way suggested

"Rindo." The position you mention is by Mr. Bolton, and is the finest three-move Problem known. Your position shall be examined.

"Miss L. C." has failed in Enigma 121. The solution is—1. R to K R 3rd. Black has then no move left but to play his K's Pawn; whereupon White moves the Rook back again to R 4th, giving checkmate.

"Cuv." Enigma 126 is correctly stated. Try it once more.

"W. B.," Ely. Thanks It shall be looked to immediately.

"Z." The royal letters are supposed to indicate observations in the mode of play, and the particle "(if)" to be an abbreviation of "if he play," &c.

"Philo."—You have been misinformed. Mr. Von H. der Lasa's connexion with the Berlin Chess Journal is confined to occasional contributions. He is not resident at Berlin, and is in no respect responsible for the direction of that Magazine. The annual subscription is only 10*s. Apply to Williams and Norgate, Foreign Booksellers.*

"D. C. P."—"Nimrath."—You may now obtain the three first Numbers of Stanley's American Chess Magazine of Wiley and Putnam

"Y. H. d. L.," Stockholm.—A private communication will follow this; and the periodicals required shall be sought for; but we apprehend their transmission by post will be an expensive monthly item. Perhaps, some other channel may be found.

"T. P. W." Get Kenny's Shilling "Manual of Chess," which contains the Laws of the Game, and much that is indispensable for you to know, before you venture on the larger and more important Treatises

"H. L. S."—If you will write out the position, the solution shall be promptly given; but we have no means at hand of referring to it.

"R. L. P.," Uckfield—"A. W. H."—It is a fundamental principle of the Game itself, that the King can never move into check of an adverse piece: and the mistake of believing that this prohibition is inoperative when the piece within whose range he wishes to move is employed in covering his own King from check, can only arise from ignorance of the theory and practice of the Game both in ancient and modern times. You are perfectly correct, therefore, in assuming that a Queen, when interposed between the check of an adverse piece, as effectually protects any man from capture by the opposing King, as when she has freedom to range over the whole field.

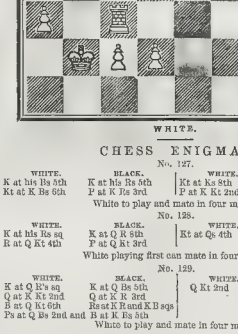
Solutions by "Bridgnorth," "K. P.," "W. W.," "Phil," "C. F.," "Sopracitta," "T. C. G.," "Britonian," "W. H. C.," "Sam Slick," "R. D.," "P. V. N.," "N. D.," "R. M.," "G. A. H.," "O. W.," and "R. G.," are correct. Those by "W. W. F.," "A. M. B.," "S. H.," and "Brother Jonathan," are wrong.

PROBLEM, No. 164.

BY CHARLES STANLEY, ESQ., of the Brighton Chess Club.

White to play first and mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 127.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Rs 5th	K at his Rs 8th	Kt at his 8th
Kt at K Rs 6th	P at K Kt 3rd	P at K Kt 2nd

White to play and mate in four moves.

No. 128.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Rs sq	K at Q R 6th	Kt at Qs 4th
R at Q Kt 4th	P at Q Kt 3rd

White playing first can mate in four moves.

No. 129.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R's sq	K at Q R 8th	Q Kt 2nd	B at Q Bs sq
Q at K Kt 2nd	Q at K R 3rd		Kt at K B 8th
B at Q Kt 6th	Rs at K R and K B sqs		P at Qs 3rd
Ps at Q Bs 2nd and	B at K Rs 5th

White to play and mate in four moves.

LOSS OF THE "TIGER" STEAMER.—Accounts have been received from Oporto of the total loss of the Oriental and Peninsular Company's steam-ship Tiger. She left Lisbon on the 25th ult., at eight o'clock, with about twelve cabin passengers, a few second-class, and several Gallegos returning to Vigo. She was the bearer, it is said, of important despatches for the Commodore of the inner squadron at Oporto and for the Consul; and Captain Bingham, who commanded the Tiger, in endeavouring to make that difficult port in a dreadful fog which had overlung that coast for three days, unfortunately run his ship on shore at a point of land near Villa de Conde, about twelve miles from Oporto. No want of diligence or skill can be imputed to the captain, as he kept the most active look out, and fired guns repeatedly, when he judged he was in that neighbourhood. The last time he cast the lead he found he had seventeen fathoms, and he supposed he was off the bar a moment before he struck The event took place soon after noon on the 21st ult.; and before an hour passed the ship broke up, and became a total wreck. The Gallegos, in endeavouring to lower the ship's boats, stove them all, and every soul on board would have perished, if the people from the shore had not gone off in boats, and saved nearly all the passengers and crew. One old Spanish General was washed off the deck and lost. Captain Stevens, late of the Superb, 80-gun ship; Commander Pascoe, of the Jackal steamer; Mr. Nicle, a merchant of Belfast; the purser and stewardess of the Tiger, and a young English lady, governess of a family at Cadiz, all escaped without other damage than the loss of their luggage. Captain Bingham also escaped, and another captain belonging to the Company. The conduct of the country people was admirable: they refused reward, and rendered the most useful services. The Tiger was an iron ship, built in 1845, expressly for the Italian line. She was a remarkably fast and very handsome boat of 800 tons, fitted with two engines of 280 horse power. She has only made three voyages (to Gibraltar), and in the last was commanded by Captain Bingham, who succeeded Captain Russel, now in the Eyre. Mr. Clarkson was at the same time appointed chief officer. We hear that the mails she had on board were totally lost. The value of the Tiger may be fairly estimated at £30,000. It will be recollected that the Tiger was stopped on her voyage to Genoa for some necessary alteration to her boilers, which proved perfectly successful. It is melancholy to add that more than one life has been lost. It is known for a certainty that the cook, a native of Southampton, was drowned; as also a little Spanish boy, about ten years of age, and in all probability one or two more Spaniards. The name of the Spanish General was Lecarte.

EVERYBODY'S COLUMN.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

THE NEW OVERLAND MAIL

HE newspapers of the past week have contained the startling announcement that the King of Sardinia had some notion of cutting a tunnel under the Alps at Mont Cénis, eight miles long, and making a railway from Genoa to Chambery pass through it. The rapidity of transit for the Indian mail by this route will be such, that when all the ancillary advantages are in full play, it is expected that we shall always be able to procure news up to the end of the following month

Calcutta will then become our favourite watering-place, to the great detriment of Boulogne and Brighton. We shall go to eat curry at Chusura, on Sundays, instead of whitebait at Blackwall: and ride elephants to Ramjamjolyhug, or some place of equal importance, instead of donkies to Pegwell Bay. We shall say to bores "Go to Hoogly" instead of Bath: objectionable persons may be sent to Chittagong instead of Coventry: and Juggernathan will be preferred to Jericho for social transportation. All our sentiments and poetry will change: and a song like this may be looked for:—

THE LAND OF THE EAST

AIR.—"The Land of the West."

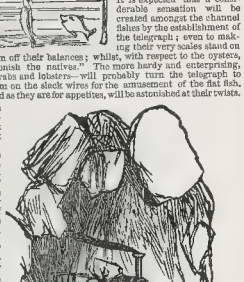
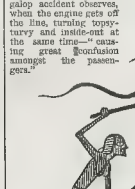
Oh! Come to the East, love, oh! come there with me.
Thy food shall be Chutnee and freshest of Ghee:
Your tiffin be cook'd by the best Bobberjee;
Your feet page the prince of Khadmutgars shall be.
I'll feed thee: I'll cram thee; each day you shall feast,
And you'll say there's no land like the Land of the East.

The North is a land of knouts, sledges, and fax.
And the West is all planters, and chewing, and blacks.
The South's full of brigands and dirt, as you know.
And everywhere else but just here it is "slow."
On curry or mulligatawny you'll feast,
And have nothing else in the land of the East.

The first great saving of time will be by the submarine electric telegraph; on which such improvements will be made that visitors will be transmitted along its wires as quickly as messages. Hence the period of submersion will be of no consequence. "Tell it to the marines," has long been a phrase of disbelief; but the apparently incredible results of this telegraph, will lead to the advice being turned to "Tell it to the sub-marines." It is expected that a considerable sensation will be created amongst the chaunel fishes by the establishment of the telegraph; even to making their very scales stand on end, thus throwing them off their balances; whilst, with respect to the oysters, it will, in reality, "astonish the natives." The more hardy and enterprising, however—such as the crabs and lobsters—will probably turn the telegraph to some account, and perform on the sleek wires for the amusement of the flat fish. The very sharks, renowned as they are for appetites, will be astonished at their twists.



The Tunnel through the Alps will only be inconvenient at one part of the passage—where it goes through the glaciers for, if it is stopped, the passengers will either be frozen in these "regions of thick-ribbed ice," and on their egress be removed like so many sticks; or the heat of the fire will thaw the blocks, and produce an artificial torrent whenever they halt, "causing" —as the Ethiopian describer of the railway galop accident observes, when the engine gets off the line, turning topsy-turvy and inside-out at the same time—" causing great confusion amongst the passengers."



This Desert transit will be altered beyond all idea, becoming a perfect sand toy, instead of the arduous undertaking it has hitherto been; and the old proverb "Ex Nile nihil fit" will be refuted. The Egyptians, however, have always been good couriers, equalling indeed those of St. Petersburg, whom we have seen at Astley's, riding six horses at once—a singular race, it must be admitted. From an old illustrated news papyrus, published at Memphis, we extract this sketch of an Egyptian courier of the time of Ptolemy. It will be observed that his own powers of locomotion are added to those of the animal

There is considerable equity in this style of equitation, the labour being divided. So anxious were the Egyptians for speed, that the sacred bird, or Ibis, signified "you shall go." By the present arrangement, travellers will be shot off from Cairo by a catapults, so delicately regulated as to deposit them safely at Suez, in a square paved with India-rubber for the purpose.

The improved breed of Bengal elephants will materially abridge the route from Bombay to Calcutta. It is known that elephants are very touchy: we need not wonder then to see them "taking a fence," as shown in this illustration of the reporters on the rival Calcutta newspapers. This line will be, of course, a trunk line, and the dispatches printed on "double elephant." Once in the Indian capital, by the aid of Little's press (which has entirely controlled the prevalent opinion of "a little learning is a dangerous thing") millions of copies of the news will be forwarded to all parts of the empire within ten minutes.

THE WEATHER.

During the past week the snow has again visited us, as if Winter had come back for something he had left behind him. People have been walking about the streets wishing one another "the compliments of the season;" and our old-minded man, our friend, Mr. Straggles, so far forgot himself, on Wednesday, as to wish us "a merry Christmas." We have heard of a play called "The Winter's Tail," and we are sure, judging from the present specimen, it must be a very long one.

THE WAY THE SNOW WENT.

An intelligent correspondent wishes us to explain the best method of shielding oneself from the snow. He forwards this illustration of his position this week, the arrows indicating the direction taken by the snow. It will be seen by this that an umbrella in a snow-storm is a popular error.

FLOATING OF THE STRANDED "SPHYNX" STEAM SLOOP.

We are enabled to present to our readers, from an accredited source, the annexed illustrations of the successful means adopted for floating this fine vessel; fully to explain which it is necessary to represent the position of the Sphynx, when ashore at the back of the Isle of Wight; as well as the "Camel" placed under her bow, and which proved the chief auxiliary in floating her off. The details of the operations we abridge from the Hampshire Telegraph:

"The plan was by means of "camels"—the project of Com. Caffin, of the Scourge, steam-sloop, and Mr. Watts, the senior assistant-master shipwright of Portsmouth dockyard: the buoyant power of which amounted to about 130 tons, brought under a strong frame-work constructed under the paddle-boxes of the vessel: to this was added by Mr. Watts, another camel, which was brought under the head of the vessel, on which, at the extreme foremost end was erected a high frame-work for supporting the chain cables, hawsers, &c., used in heaving the vessel off. To counteract this downward pressure, at the end of the camel, next the stem, was fixed a fork of two stout pieces of fir timber placed a little more than the breadth of the stem asunder, and bolted firmly to the back of the camel. This fork came underneath two stout cleats fastened to the stem of the vessel, so that the downward pressure of the cables when bove upon constituted a power, at one end, of a lever to lift the bow of the ship at the other end. This was found to render most important aid in getting the vessel over the bank or reef of rocks, up to which she had been driven on the previous occasions, but could not then be got over. This ledge has not more than six feet of water on it at high tide, whereas the Sphynx, when lightened of everything except her engines, drew ten feet of water. The first, therefore, of getting her over the reef is one of the most remarkable incidents ever recorded in naval science

FLOATING OF THE STRANDED "SPHYNX," STEAM-SLOOP.

The preparations for the great work were completed on Tuesday the 2d inst. The decks were strewed with a profusion of casks, anchors, cables, hawsers, liners, handspikes, and other useful apparatus; and Captain Austin, under whose directions the operations were carried on, was ready for the task he had undertaken; the starboard side was appropriated for the seamen to work at, and the port side for the Dockyard men; and the greatest confidence was felt in the trial to be made in the evening.

The morning tide did not rise so high as was anticipated; the rollers which had set in the night before had produced a heavy swell, and although the wind was not high, and was blowing off the shore, they could not secure the camel under her port paddle wheel framing; consequently, they moved the ship very little; nevertheless, quite up to the ledges of soft rocks which formed a barrier to her further progress towards the sea, as it also served as a protection to the ship against its ravages.

As the tide dropped on Tuesday morning every means were taken to husband the advantages which had been gained. The wind continued to blow off the land from N.W.; three steamers were under steam about three-quarters of a mile from the Sphynx, about a couple of hundred yards distant from each other, ready to take the lumps and lighters in tow in the event of a change of wind. Two of the lumps were moored, but one having snapped a couple of hawsers of immense strength, and having, from the very bad holding ground, brought home a 45 cwt. anchor, she was busily engaged repairing her moorings. The ship herself was perfectly upright, with her bows pointing directly seaward. Around her bows and stern were floating a large number of casks; one camel was lashed under her starboard paddlebox massive framing; the other camel, the "refractory one," was tethered off on the port side, ready at low water to be harnessed under the other paddle-box framing.

At the highest time of tide on the reef outside the Sphynx (when on shore), there was never more than 6 ft. 6 in. water; while the least water the Sphynx drew, when all the camels and casks were under her, was 7 ft. 6 in. It therefore may be imagined what a purchase was required to drag her over. However, the swell (or rollers) assisted in this case; and, between eleven and twelve o'clock on Wednesday night, the vessel was floated into deep water, from off her bed of rocks. She then had to wait for a flowing tide; and, at ten o'clock on Thursday morning she was finally extricated from her stranded position. Next morning she was towed into Portsmouth Harbour

The Sphynx had been forty-seven days on shore, in the most exposed situation, on the south side of the Isle of Wight.

Among the officers who have rendered essential service on this occasion, we have to mention Mr. Biddlecombe, master of the St. Vincent, who surveyed the position by Admiralty directions; Mr. Mallard, second master, of the St. Vincent; and Lieut. Thompson, of the Victory.

In the Illustration the spots denote where the vessel first struck on the shoal, where she was afterwards driven by the rollers; and whence she was, at length, hauled off.

MUSIC.

ANCIENT CONCERTS

On Wednesday evening, the first Concert of Ancient Music was given at the Hanover-square Rooms, under the direction of the Duke of Cambridge, who was present with the Duchess and the Princess Mary, the Duke of Wellington, the Russian and Prussian Ministers, the Countess of Jersey, the Earl of Devon, Lady Shelley, the Countess of Mansfield; Sirs A. Barnard, G. Staunton, S. Glynne, R. Glynn, J. Johnstone, &c.

Sir H. R. Bishop conducted, Mr. T. Cooke was the first violin, and Mr. Lucas organist. There were seven pieces from Handel, namely, the "Coronation Anthem," "Zadok the Priest," the "Hallelujah," and the "Lord shall reign" choruses; the occasional overture, the air from "Susanna," "If guiltless blood," sung by Miss E. Birch, but too much for her limited powers; the air from "Athalia," "Through the land so lovely blooming," sung by Madame Caradori; and the 11th Violin Concerto, superbly played by Blagrove. Hummel's Gradoale, "Quod quod in urbe," the "Sanctus Benedictus" and "Agnus Dei," from Mozart's Mass; Pergolesi's Chorus, "Gloria in Excelsis;" and the Earl of Mornington's Glee, "Oh! hard of ear," sung by Miss E. Birch, Miss M. Williams, Messrs. Lockey, Peck, and Machin, were the other pieces.

For the leading artists, in addition to what we have mentioned above, there were Cimarosa's Aria "Deci parate," from the "Abraham's Sacrifice," energetically declaimed by Miss Bassano; the Cantata by Pergolese, "Lurdica," finely given by Madame Caradori, who, we hear, retires after the present season. Haydn's air, "In native worth," sung by Mr. Lockey quite admirably. Mozart's glorious bass song from the Nozze di Figaro, "La Vendetta," artistically rendered by Signor F. Lablache, and Mayer's duo, from Lodoiska, "Portoi il lasci," sung by Madame Caradori and Miss Bassano.

This selection does not present a single novelty, but it is unobjectionable in point of taste. Owing to the General Fast Day being fixed for the 24th of March, the second Concert is fixed for the 21st of April, and the dates of the remaining Concerts are 5th and 19th May, 2d, 16th, and 30th of June, and 7th of July, the "Messiah" being given on the 14th of July, for the Royal Society of Musicians

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

ENGLISH VOCAL MUSIC.—The Third Concert was given on Monday last, at Exeter Hall, before a numerous audience. The scheme opened with a Bishop's hymn, "When rising shines the morning star." He was the organist of Winchester College and Cathedral in 1729. Weldon's verse anthem, "Hear my crying," was then sung by Mrs. Weiss, Miss Duval, Messrs. Manvers, Machin, and W. H. Seguin, and chorus. Dr. Croft's anthem, "God is gone up," went well as did Greene's "God is our hope" Mr. Oliver May presiding with judgment at Mr. Robson's organ. A charming air by Dr. Boyce, "Softly rise, O southern breeze," with Keating's bassoon obligato, was so nicely sung by Manvers as to command an encore. Mr Willy's excellent band aided in the accompaniments. After Nares's verse anthem, "Blessed is he," Dr. Boyce's, "Lord, thou hast been our refuge," closed the first part of sacred music. The second act of Secular Music began with Dean Aldrich's well-known round, "Hark! the Bonny Christ Church bells," which was encored, although the effect was not good, the peals being too far apart. Then came one of Travers's exquisite canzonets, "He is not numbered with the blest," sung by Miss Duval, Manvers, and Seguin. A selection from Dr. Arne's "Comus" followed. Mrs. Weiss sang "Haydn's air, "In native worth," whom Mr. Lockey again

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—SELECT SPECIMENS OF BRITISH DECORATIVE ART.

THE Society of Arts have just, in popular parlance, "made a move in the right direction," which is especially adapted for illustration in our pages. On the evening of Wednesday week, they commenced a Series of Annual Exhibitions, from which we anticipate the most beneficial results. In some "Introductory Remarks" read to the Meeting, it was well observed that the Society, by their annual premiums, endeavour to stimulate the progress of Invention and Design. So far the object is a good one; but, it is maintained that the first step to the improvement of an Art or Manufacture is the knowledge of what has already been done in that Art and Manufacture; and to show this, the above Exhibitions have been undertaken. Another object is to cultivate Taste, Design, and High Art, so as to maintain them in all branches of our Manufactures, and thus render them appreciated by the thousands and the millions. The first Soirée, or Exhibition, was given on the 3rd instant, and the second on Wednesday last; and it is now proposed to open the Exhibition to the Public, to be admitted by tickets, to be obtained of the Members of the Society.

FLAXMAN'S DOLPHIN, AS A CANDLESTICK.

The Selection comprises Specimens of a few Branches only of Manufacture and Decoration; but, especially those in which improvements have been made, or are likely and desirable.

In Pottery and Porcelain, there some specimens before Wedgewood's time. We have engraved some of these. The first is a specimen of Agate Ware, manufactured in the reigns of Anne and George the First; the design, the body of a sedan-chair, with a figure inside; the glaze of lead-ore and manganese, called tortoise-shell.

Next are three specimens of the time of George the Second. They are of Crouch Ware—mixture of Devon clay and Mold Cop sand, and a glaze made of common salt. This Ware was also called Salt Ware-glaze, and was manufactured almost exclusively, and in quantities, in the Potteries, previous to the introduction of Common colour, or White Lead Glaze. The articles engraved are—1. A Mug; figures in relief on the outside; turned on the lathe; and with handle set on afterwards. 2. A Cop, made from a brass or metal mould. 3. A Trencher, made at Delft, in Holland, which gave rise to the term generally applied in Ireland to English earthenware.

In comparing these Specimens with present productions, we cannot fail to remark the great advances made during the last half century; "until we have arrived at an execution which fairly rivals the production of Sevres and Dresden. We equal those celebrated manufactures in execution, and greatly surpass them in facility of manufacture, and, therefore, cheapness of production. It may almost be said that with reference to these specimens, shillings will nearly produce what cost pounds in the original."

BLACK MARBLE LOTUS CUP AND TAZZA, CARVED BY IRVING'S PATENT MACHINE.

The classic figure upon the upper left hand of the page is a Candlestick in white stone body, designed by Flaxman, and manufactured by Wedgewood; the candle is to be placed in the tail of the fish.

It has been thought that an exhibition of a few of the earliest Specimens of Staffordshire Pottery would be a suitable introduction to an examination of the China and Earthenware of the present day. A very fine collection of similar Specimens has been lately purchased for the Museum of Economic Geology; and they may be seen on application to Sir Henry Delabeche.

The Modern Earthenware and "Stone" Body comprise Ariadne, after Danecker; and Mercury, after Thorwaldsen; Encaustic Tiles, &c.

There are several exquisite Statuettes. We have engraved two: Narcissus; a Statuette in Statuary Porcelain, after the original by Gibson; modelled for the Art-Union of London, manufactured and exhibited by Messrs. Copeland and Garrett.

By means of this Statuary Porcelain, or "body," it is clear that our sculptors have an opportunity for distributing works of the highest art among an unlimited number. In place of the solitary unique statue we may have thousands of repetitions of beauty. The Council rejoice to hear that arrangements are in progress for connecting the skill of our best Sculptors with manufactures of this nature, and that the next Exhibition will show works of a higher art than any which have preceded them.

The other Specimen engraved is the Sutherland Vase, modelled in Parian for the Duchess of Sutherland, after a Swiss original, and exhibited by Mr. J. Mortlock: this is very beautiful.

ORNAMENT—TIME, GEORGE I.

There is likewise a Copy of the Portland Vase, in Parian; blue ground, with white figures in relief. This Vase is not a copy, but from a mould actually taken from the original, about three weeks before its destruction. The difference of size is occasioned by the shrinkage of the material in which it is manufactured: exhibited by Messrs. Minton and Co.

WOOD CARVING BY MACHINERY

The China and Porcelain Specimens display exquisite art in painting; and, as a Specimen of Gilding, we were especially pleased with a Coffee Cup and Saucer, green ground, richly gilt; part of a service made by order of the Duchess of Kent, as a present to the Queen, on her Majesty's birth-day.

There are some very successful Specimens of Carving in Wood and Marble by Irving's patent Machine. We have engraved three—an elaborate composition in wood; and two in Black Marble—a Lotus Cup; and a Tazza, ornamented with Hercules destroying the Centaur a group by Canova.

We intend to resume these interesting Illustrations in our next.

STATUARY PORCELAIN—NARCISSUS, AFTER GIBSON.

CROUCH WARE MUG, CUP, AND TRENCHER—TIME, GEORGE II.

THE SUTHERLAND VASE.

SIGNOR COLETTI.

No Italian singer of eminence, at the present day, but was destined to another profession—from Rubini, who was first a tailor, to Coletti, who was destined for the Church. He made his first entrée in the dramatic career at the second theatre, the Fondo, at Naples, in the "Turco in Italia;"—this was in 1834. He afterwards went to Genoa, Padua, and Rome. Next, he was engaged for the great Lisbon Opera, where his exploits were celebrated in verse; the enthusiasm for his talent turning each Portuguese Vates into a Camoens in their own estimation, if we are to believe the Lisbon newspapers. In 1840 he came to London; although then comparatively inexperienced, he made a decided hit in Torquato Tasso; but, falling a victim to the "Tamburini row," Coletti repaired to Naples, where his reputation daily rose higher. He was engaged this season in Paris, had surpassing success in "I Due Foscari;" and, at Her Majesty's Theatre he has been equally prosperous.

SIGNOR COLETTI, AS "ENRICO," IN "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR."

SIGNOR FRASCHINI.

There appears to be an unkown mystic connection between medicine and music: the ancients said that the God of Music, Apollo, practised medicine. The great singer, Fraschini, like the great physician, Orfila, is a modern example of the combination of the two ruling tastes in the same person. He was born with a love for medicine and a ruling passion for music. However, in practical life, the two tastes cannot often be indulged at the same time. A celebrated maestro of the day, Moretti, hearing the young student of medicine sing for his own amusement, and by rote, advised him to abandon medicine and study music exclusively. Urged by other friends, he adopted this course; and, after a few months' study, entered as chorister at the Cathedral of Padua, his native town, where he was born, in 1807. It was only in 1839 that he made his début as Rodrigo, in "Otello:" it was at Bergamo, and with Mdlle. now Madame, Castellan, who then played Desdemona. Merelli, with his hawk-eye, soon discovered his talent, and brought him to his great theatre, La Scala, at Milan, in 1840. There he created a furore, and immediately had engagements offered him for Turin, Venice, Rome, and Naples. The latter city has been his principal head-quarters, where the great composers of Italy—Verdi, Pacini, Mercadante—came purposely to write operas for him, such as "Alzira," "Fidanzata Corsa," "I Orazii," &c. His fame ultimately reached Paris and Vienna. The Emperor of Austria's offers were the most tempting: he went to Vienna last season, and created an immense sensation amongst those keen sy-

SIGNOR FRASCHINI, AS "EDGARDO," IN "LUCIA DI LAMMERMOOR."

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

We are happy in having to record another début, that of the celebrated Tenor, Fraschini, who made his first appearance on Tuesday, in "Lucia di Lammermoor."

The first duet with Castellan, "Sulla Tomba," gave no idea of this singer's power; he was comparatively inefficient; and, but that we have all had so many lessons as to distrusting first impressions, we should have declared that nothing here warranted the great reputation that has preceded him. Perhaps this may, in some degree, however, be attributed to the effect of a cold under which, we hear, he was labouring; but there was no evidence of this afterwards. His next appearance was in the splendid concluding scene of the second act. Here the whole man was changed. On entering, his was the concentrated demeanour of one worked upon by powerful excitement, calm and solemn: then the words "Tardi Ingrata, t'amo ancor," towered above the voices of the others with thrilling expression; and then came the burst of furious passion in the malediction, in which his voice came forth with wonderful power and electrical effect. So short and yet so overpowering in effect was this last solo, that the listener was carried away, and, absorbed by the passion of the actor, forgot all criticism. It must have been with something of this feeling that an encore was demanded by those who wished to judge as well as to admire—for against an encore in such a scene as this, on an ordinary occasion, we must protest, as totally destroying the illusion.

That most beautiful of scenes beautiful from the first note of the recitative to the last dying cry beautiful in sentiment, in situation and exquisitely beautiful in music—which concludes the opera—brought Fraschini again before us: here, again, his great powers displayed themselves. The first movement, "Fra poco," we never heard more exquisitely sung; and this is much to say for those who have heard it executed at this theatre by tenors like Rubini or Moriani of whom this scena was the chef d'œuvre. The others who have sung it have, however admirable, been imitators. But Fraschini gives it with all the freshness of originality. He, neither, like Rubini, makes the singing pre-eminent over the action, or, like Moriani, the acting pre-eminent over the singing. Heard in a drawing-room, apart from all theatrical pomp and circumstances, the "Fra Poco" of Fraschini, could be sung there as he does on the stage, which we doubt, would be quite in keeping, and admirable as a vocal performance, while yet it is impossible not to be penetrated by the deep and overwhelming passion, which gives tone to every note he utters, and which renders it essentially dramatic. This portion of his song was constantly interrupted by applause and bravos; and even while all were listening most intently, a sort of approbatory hum echoed through the house. In the second part, "Tu che a Dio," Fraschini surprised us by the delightful sweetness of his notes, for which, as we have said, his opening duo by no means prepared us: in fact, to the last this scena was admirably given, and the feeling which impressed us most at the conclusion was the desire to hear it again

One remarkable feature of Fraschini's performance is, that he sings solely from the chest, and never employs the falsetto. He has evidently a tendency on all occasions to slacken the measure—a practice totally opposed to that of most modern singers; and so strong was this tendency, that he hardly kept pace with the remainder of the artists: and a very slight irregularity in the concerted pieces was therefore occasionally observable from this cause. He has but just arrived from a long journey, therefore a deficiency of this nature is not to be wondered at. When "Lucia" has been performed once or twice more, we can predict for the performance of the whole a perfection which the excellence of the artists engaged in it must ensure.

Madame Castellan made her rentrée on Tuesday, and was most warmly and loudly welcomed. She has increased in embonpoint, and is prettier and more graceful than ever. She presents, now as ever, a charming impersonation of Lucia; but her performance on Tuesday was unequal; while in some parts she had more than her former power and splendi, in other portions of the drama her strength seemed to fail her, and the paleness of her countenance told, we thought, of real as well as acted suffering

Coletti's splendid voice told with admirable effect in the concerted pieces of this opera. He sang excellently from beginning to end

The admirers of novelty as well as of excellence in lyrical and chorographic art, will enjoy a rich treat on Thursday next, at Her Majesty's Theatre, when all the resources of the establishment will be brought into play. Independently of the attraction of a new ballet, entitled "La Fée aux Fleurs," to be produced with those charming dancers, Rosati and the young Marie Taglioni, we shall hear the exquisite tenor, Gardoni, in the "Sonnambula," with Castellan; and "La Lucia" will present to us that great dramatic and lyrical artist, Fraschini.

We hear that the Easter piece, at Drury Lane, will be a dramatic adaptation, by Mr. Fitzball, of Felicien David's "Desert;" to give due effect to which a whole jungle of lions, tigers, and other animals have been engaged.

The entertainment for Easter, at the Adelphi, will be a burlesque on "The Tempest," from the pen of Mr. Charles Selby.

The Lyceum will also bring out a new burlesque about that time, the subject being taken from Monk Lewis's melodrama of "One o'Clock, or the Knight and the Wood Demon," and put into its modern costume by Messrs. Albert Smith and Charles Kenney

Mr Love, the Polyphonist, of whom we have before had occasion to speak favourably, has been giving his entertainments with his usual effect at Crosse Hall. The pressure of theatrical matter has prevented us from seeing him this week, but we hope to be enabled to give a due account of his performances in our next.

DRURY LANE.

"Spanish Gallantries" is the name of a new ballet in two acts, produced at this theatre last week; and if it is at all a faithful setting forth of its title, then are "Spanish Gallantries" very pleasant things to be engaged in; for they appear to consist of moonlight appointments, al fresco festivals, illuminated gardens, and every kind of joyous diversion; concluding with a grand fête in the Temple of Momus. The ballet is, however, scarcely to be considered as such the interest being very slight, and the story, if there be one, not clearly explained by the action. It is rather a long divertissement, and a very good one of its kind, serving to introduce a series of most agreeable dances, and some beautiful scenery It embraces the talents of all the principals now in the Drury-Lane ballet troupe. Of these, Mdlle. Baderna at the head, was most enthusiastically applauded. A new Cachuca in the last scene perfectly took the house by storm, being loudly encored, and even asked for a third time. A feeling for the exhaustion of the fair danseuse, however, alone prevented its second repetition. Mdlles. Dubignon and Benard came out surprisingly in a Pas de Six, in the last scene; and the two sisters St. Louis danced with more spirit than we have hitherto suspected them of possessing.

The "Marche Triumphale de Momus" is, apart from the interest of situation, as good a thing in its way as was the "Fête des Fous," in "Esmeralda." The coloured umbrellas, all in motion, had an animated appearance; and two of the smallest children we ever saw, who danced in a species of Chinese costume immediately behind the car, looked so very quaint and comical, that they called forth a loud burst of laughter. Mr. W. H. Payne had a trifling part of a valet, which he made very droll. It was only to be regretted that he had not more to do. "Spanish Gallantries," in two words, may be considered a perfect success.

It was preceded, on Tuesday evening, by Mr. Wallace's opera, Miss Rainforth winning golden opinions as the heroine.

Mr. Bunn announces his benefit for Monday next, when Miss Romer will reappear, in "The Bondman," after which, Mr. Farren and Mrs. Glover will play in "Popping the Question;" and Mr. Braham and Mr. Harley, together with the whole force of the theatre, will lend their aid to increase the attraction. A new dance, "La Pleiade de Terpsichore," by the seven principal "stars" of the ballet, will be a leading feature.

FRENCH PLAYS.

M. Alcide Tousez, one of the comiques of the Palais Royale Theatre—that small nest of fun-makers, and titterers of double entendres—made his début before an English audience on Friday evening, at the St. James's Theatre. His line of characters are those of simple-witted individuals, termed technically "les niais," on the French stage, and answer very much to those parts usually allotted to Keeley in our theatres. He has a quiet comico-serious expression of countenance, which, added to a ludicrous lisp in his pronunciation, renders the absurdities of his impersonations irresistibly droll.

The piece in which he appeared was "Le Roi des Frontins," a comedietta known to our play-goers in its English garb of "Luck's All," at the Lyceum; indeed, it must be a matter of difficulty, now-a-days, for the management of the St. James's Theatre to bring forward any piece, with which we are not, in some way or another, acquainted, from the vigilance of our translating dramatists. Though somewhat toned down from the breadth which is predominant at the Palais Royale, the performance of M. Tousez had still enough of native drollery in it to call down repeated bursts of laughter: and allow us to record his début as a most successful one. M. Lafont and Mademoiselle Fargueil, continue to be leading favourites: and the house is well attended every evening.

SURREY.

There was evidently some important festival being held at the Surrey Theatre on Tuesday evening, for when we entered the house we saw in the centre box six gentlemen of imposing aspect, dressed after the received notions of Robin Hood, in Lincoln Green, with bright buzle horns, russet boots, gauntlets, and tall ostrich feathers in their caps. Others, similarly attired, pervaded the lobbies and looked proudly down from private boxes. At first, we thought that according to the fashion of the times, some foreign potentate was honouring the theatre with his presence, and had put his suite into their national costume; but the house was so densely crowded, everybody, at the same time, appearing to know everybody else: and there was such general good fellowship amongst the entire audience, and the merry outlaws went out with such an entire absence of pride, to partake of common refreshments between the acts, that all our conjectures were beaten. Even the bill said nothing about them; and a gentleman to whom we applied for enlightenment, said that they were "ancient foresters," with such an air of contempt for our ignorance, that we did not press the question further: so that, whether they were "Walworth Freischütz," or "Lambeth Woodrangers," or any other denizens of the Borough greenwoods, remains a mystery. We opine, however, that they were attached to some charitable institution taking a benefit; if so, the crowded state of the house must more than have rewarded their exertions.

The new drama, "Lilly Dawson," is about the best, of its class, that we have seen for some little time. It is founded on a story written by Mrs. Crowe, the authoress of "Susan Hopley," and lately published. We have not read the work, but, for a dramatised novel, the plot of the piece is very clear and intelligible. Lilly Dawson (Mrs. H. Vining) is a poor girl, whom circumstances are constantly plunging into situations of misery and apparent guilt. To escape from the brutal treatment she experiences, as servant at an inn, she runs away, intending to go to London. On her journey, she is witness of the murder of a miller, by one Luke Lattlehaus—the villain of the piece—who, perceiving her, is about to assassinate her also, when she is saved by Philip Ryland (Mr. J. T. Johnson). After some trouble, she goes to London, and gets a situation in the establishment of a fashionable milliner. To shield one of her companions from disgrace, she incurs the suspicion of having stolen an article of dress, and is, in consequence, turned away. She then falls into the hands of Lattlehaus and some of his desperate companions, who shut her up in a garret, in a Smithfield "rookery," kept by the sister of her persecutor. Lattlehaus here intends to murder her, but kills his sister in the dark by mistake, and Lilly again manages to escape. After many other vicissitudes, she returns to Cornwall; and is, at last, found to be the child of an officer, who was murdered by the wreckers during a storm; Lattlehaus confesses his guilt, and Lilly becomes the wife of Philip Ryland.

This is but an outline of the story, which abounds in very dramatic incident and situations; and is admirably played by all parties concerned, especially by Mrs. Henry Vining, who, as the heroine, displayed an intelligent perception of the character, worthy of the highest commendation. Mr. Savile was a sturdy and effective representative of Lattlehaus, and Mr. T. Fredericks drew a great deal of individuality into one of his associates in crime, Hans Peffer, a Dutchman. The part, however, was a weak copy of Grangrass in the "Wreck Ashore." Little Miss Terry made everybody laugh, and got uproariously encored in a song, "We're all babies," each verse ending with a comical jingle of nursery rhymes, to the screaming delight of the audience. Mr. H. Webb is a clever low comedian, and evidently a favourite with the habitués of the Surrey; he played an ostler who goes to a Bal Masqué as Richard the Third, and is overtaken by drink and daylight in the streets—with much humour. A scene of Blackfriars-bridge at sunrise was evenly painted; but the tableaux in Lilly's dream might have been better arranged, the mechanism that produced them being too hard and apparent, and robbing them of all illu-

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.—PICTURE, NO. 286.—PAINTED BY A. JOHNSTON.

"In some thick wood we've wander'd heedless on,
Hid from the vulgar eye; and sat us down
Upon the sloping cowslip-covered bank,
Where the pure limpid stream has slid along
In grateful eddies through the underwood,
Sweet murmuring."

BLAIR.

sion. The double phantasmagoria—the agent in what is commonly termed "dissolving views" offers the only means by which a really good effect of this kind can be produced. The drama was entirely successful, and the curtain fell amidst general applause

In the course of the evening much amusement was created by Messrs. Ashby and Harding, described as "pupils of Signor Rubby, of Her Majesty's Theatre, who attempted to sing a scene from the "Elisir d'Amore." But their performance was so very bad, that the gallery and pit turned the duet into one grand concerted piece; and recommenced singing "Hail, smiling morn," and "Do not fear!" Good night!" with various uncomplimentary imitations, merged at last into a shower of hisses, amidst which the tenor and baritone were at last shut out from view by the act drop. Their appearance was the only disappointment we had to witness—all those great exhibitions must hurt the credit of the theatre, the audience of which have been used to first-rate vocalists.

Elsewhere, everything went off with great spirit; and "Lilly Dawson" will, we have no doubt, enjoy a prolonged existence.

ADELPHI

The announcement of a new drama, by Mr. Buckstone, was sure to create some little interest in the theatrical world; and, accordingly, the doors of the Adelphi were stormed on Thursday evening by a large audience, anxious to witness the last production of the author of "The Wreck Ashore," and "The Green Bushes." two pieces which may be placed at the head of their cast in the English school of melodrama. They were not disappointed; as the "Flowers of the Forest" was triumphantly successful, albeit its performance occupied within a few minutes of four hours—a time unprecedented for the representation of a three act drama. As in Mr. Buckstone's other dramas, the period of action is laid about a century ago; and the interest is centered in a clever union of the deeds of the romantic and domestic classes of the dramatis personæ. The plot is too complicated for us to unravel it, until it turns on the devotion of an Italian gipsy, Zingana (Mdme. Celeste), living with an English tribe, to a young Englishman, Alfred (Mr. Boyce), whom she had met abroad. Wandering to our land with her father, Armad (Mr. A. Smith), she finds Alfred about to be married to the Lady Agnes (Miss E. Harding), sister to Captain Lancrack (Mr. C. J. Smith.) She watches the wedding, and interrupts it at the church-door. The bridegroom becomes jealous; and, in consequence, Lancrack is challenged by Lawrock. Lawrock has in the morning soundly horsewhipped a young gipsy boy, Lemuel (Miss Woolgar), who swears to be revenged. The duellists meet at Skiddaw. Alfred refuses to fight, but, goaded on by Lawrock, he takes his place and fires in the air: when, at the same instant, Lemuel, who is on the watch, fires and shoots Lawrock to the heart. He then escapes, and Alfred is, of course, accused of the murder, although he declares at the cause of the other's death. Cynthia, the Zingana, contrives to rescue him from the room in which he is confined, with the assistance of another gipsy, Starlight Ben (Mrs. Fitz William.) By her father's orders, however, he is given up; but the Italian having overheard Lemuel confess his guilt to Ben, gives him to the Court of Justice. For this, she is cast out of the tribe, and left to perish, when Ben, who is engaged to Lemuel, and whose heart is breaking at his fate, takes compassion on her, in spite of everything, and leads her back. Jasmoel agrees to receive her on one condition—that she will kill Alfred, whom they have got in their power. She promises to do so, but, on finding him asleep, she places poisoned flowers on his bosom. In an underplot the fun is well kept up by Cheap Jack (Mr. Wright) and The Kinchins (Mr. Paul Bedford), who appear first as vendors of cheap Sheffield goods, and secondly as sham criminal lawyers, lastly figuring in a pen stocks.

The piece was admirably played. To Miss Woolgar must the greatest praise be awarded, her acting far exceeding all that she has ever done. Her part was not one of comedy, but of deep pathos, and in the opening scene of the third act she played with such intensity and truthfulness, that the action was constantly delayed by the loud bursts of applause from the house; indeed, throughout the piece her performance was truly admirable. Madame Celeste had full scope for her clever and striking peculiarities; and Mrs. Fitzwilliam's Starlight Ben was a charming and effective impersonation. Mr. G. Smith looked, as he always does, a perfect picture; and Messrs. Wright and Bedford were themselves; which means that they kept the house in roars of laughter whenever they were on the stage.

We cannot conclude this notice without speaking in the highest terms of the scenery, by Messrs. Pitt and Johnstone, which is the most beautiful we ever saw at the Adelphi. Every scene, as it was discovered, drew forth the applause of the audience, and most deservedly so. At the conclusion, all the chief performers re-appeared, amidst enthusiastic cheering. Madame Celeste announced the drama for repetition, and Mr. Buckstone bowed his acknowledgments before the curtain.

We would recommend considerable curtailment in the first and second acts, and then "The Flowers of the Forest" will flourish at the Adelphi for many nights to come.

ASTLEY'S.

We paid a visit to Astley's on Wednesday evening, to see a most extraordinary display of what may be called the graceful trahison of horsemanship. Mr. Pablo Fanque is an artiste of colour, and his steed goes through a variety of paces with a regularity and apparent intelligence which we have not only never seen surpassed, but never equalled. In addition to cantering and dancing trained horses, when performance it has been our lot to witness, there has always been a certain degree of difficulty in getting them to the required measure of the time to which they were presumed to be stepping, and after that the beat had to accommodate itself to the action of the horse, throwing the bars of the accompaniment into all sorts of time. With Mr. Fanque's horse we observed nothing of this. The steed—a beautiful animal, by the way, who offered a spirited contrast to the sable animal cage of the scene—went into his time and paces at once, and sustained both throughout each division of the performance with very singular regularity. This was more generally observable in the dancing, for none or two well-known ballet-airs by different times; but the intricate and difficult road-paces into which he was put by his clever rider, were no less astonishing or worthy of the highest praise, and drew forth the loudest applause. The exhibition alone will repay a visit to Astley's; and we recommend it to the patronage of our readers.

The performances commenced with the drama founded on Sir Walter Scott's "Kenilworth;" and, in the scenes in the Circle, a very expert rider, who was called the Juggler of Antwerp—which fact we learned from the bills rather than from our recollection of the costume observed in that city—did better things than sticks and basins than others of his class, from whom, or otherwise, have hitherto attempted. A monkey rode in a very comical fashion upon a diminutive pony, and Madame Dumas, a graceful and pretty person, went through a transformation scene as "The Goddess of Happiness." All these were very much applauded, but Mr. Pablo Fanque was the lit of the even.ng.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—The arrivals of English wheat since Monday having been very moderate the show of samples of that grain here to-day was small. The best quality of both red and white commanded a steady sale, at an advance in the quotations of 1s per quarter, while the value of other kinds was well supported. In foreign wheat a good business was doing for shipment to France, and fully 1s per quarter more money. The barley trade was in a very dull state, at barely stationary prices. In malt nearly anything was doing, and the currencies had a downward tendency. The quantity of foreign oats was good, yet the last trade was firm, at 6d per quarter more money. In beans and peas no alteration, but flour was the d ll er. Flour of the best sorts sold readily at 40s per sack. Indian corn was held at 72s to 73s; and Polish Odessa wheat, 72s to 74s; and for Jano shipment, 68s per quarter.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 4610; barley, 1630; malt, —; oats, 2820; rye, —; beans, —; peas, —; flour, —; meal, —; oats, —. Foreign: Wheat, 280; barley, 5190; malt, 3400; oats, 9960. Flour: 4580 sacks.—Mark Lane.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 72s to 75s; ditto white, 75s to 85s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 72s to 73s; ditto white, 72s to 82s; rye, 48s to 50s; grinding barley, 41s to 43s; Malting, 50s to 56s; malt, 70s to 74s; beans, 40s to 44s; Lincoln and Essex, new, 38s to 40s; old, 42s to 44s; Suffolk and Norfolk, new, 38s to 40s; old, 42s to 44s; white, 44s to 46s; Scotch, 38s to 40s; ditto white, 44s to 46s; grey peas, 34s to 35s; maple, 34s to 36s; white, —s to —s; boilers, 38s per quarter. Flour, per sack, 38s to 40s; Suffolk, 36s to 38s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 40s to 44s, per 280 lbs. Foreign. Wheat, Pomeranian, 70s to 72s; Polish, 68s to 70s; Marianopoli, 68s to 70s; Taganrog, —s to —s; Egyptian, —s to —s; Spanish, —s to —s; Tuscan, —s to —s; Leghorn, —s to —s; Sicily, —s to —s; Barbary, —s to —s; American, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s; flour, —s to —s per barrel.

Liverpool Market.—We report a very active business in wheat, clever send, at barely last week's quotations. Canary s. d is quite as dear, with a fair inquiry. Linseed and rapeseed, as well as cakes, are held at very full prices.

Linseed, English, crushing, 46s to 50s; Baltic, crushing, 44s to 48s. Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 44s. Hempseed, 30s to 32s per quarter. Coriander, 16s to 18s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 8s to 10s, white ditto, 9s to 12s. Canary-seed, 48s to 52s per bushel. English Rapeseed, (new) £32 to £25 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 5s to £13 15s; foreign, £11 5s to £12 0s per 100; Rapeseed cakes, £7 5s to £7 15s per ton. Linseed oil, 27s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, —s to —s extra, s to s; white, —s to —s extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s extra.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 10d to 10½d; of household ditto, 8d to 9½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 74s 6d; barley, 34s 11d; oats, 32s 3d; rye, 55s 11d; beans, 38s 6d; peas, 36s 1d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 73s 6d; barley, 34s 1d; oats, 32s 3d; rye, 55s 11d; beans, 38s 6d; peas, 36s 9d.

Sugar.—Owing to the extensive public sale and the anxiety manifested by the importers to rid themselves of stock, the demand for raw goods is by no means active, yet a full average business is doing, at late rates. Refined goods are quite as dear as last week. All qualities of grain 1 Cs 6d to 64s per cwt. for standard lumps

Provisions.—There is still a good business doing in Irish butter, at, in some instances, a further improvement in value of 1s per cwt. Pork, first, is selling at 94s to 96s; Limerick, 84s to 86s; Cork, 80s to 82s, and Clonmel, 84s to 86s per cwt. Bacon is in good demand for future delivery, scarcely a transaction has taken place. Dutch butter is a slow sale, and rather cheaper. The best quarters are selling at 104s to 106s; other and good, 92s to 96s per cwt. English butter is quite as per cwt. lower. Lard, 50s to 52s per cwt., and fresh, 11s to 14s per pound. Bacon is in very brisk inquiry, at very full prices. Prime sizeable Waterford, 60s to 62s; and heavy, 56s to 58s per cwt. Hams are in good demand, and quite as dear, with a steady inquiry. English do. as a slow sale, but large parcels of American have changed hands, at from 38s to 40s per cwt. Barrel of Irish Pork has improved in value 2s 6d per barrel. All other kinds of provisions support last week's quotations

Potatoes.—There is very little doing in the market, at prices ranging from 150s to 220s per ton.

Kilkenny, 18s 3d; Braddyll's Hetton, 20s 9d; Lambton, 20s 9d; South Hetton, —s; Cowper's Hartley, 16s 6d; and Tees 20s 6d per ton

Hops (Friday).—Since we last wrote, our market is still but moderately supplied with really fine hops, and which command a steady sale, at full prices. All fine kinds, the quantity of which on offer is good, are in full inquiry, and previous rates are with difficulty supported Sussex pockets, £4 6s to £4 8s; Weald of Kent ditto, £4 4s to £4 16s, Mid. Kent ditto, £4 16s to £6 12s per cwt

Wool (Friday).—The number of bales s. ce our last, this morning, was limited, and of very inferior quality. The demand for all descriptions of English wool was extremely dull, at bar y stationary prices. Nothing selling. Otherwise, the business was unusually dull, at bar y stationary prices. Even a small parcel was received 58 sacks and cows, sheep, and 24 calves. With sheep, we were scant, y supplied; yet the market is dull, was heavy, and, in some instances, the currencies declined 2d per 8lb. Calves were in limited supply, and sluggish trade, at a not bad v

Of the whole number re ceived was only from 2 to 3 cwt. was sold at 3s per 8lb.

For 8lb. of sinking offal.—Coarse, and inferior sheep, 2s 6d to 3s 0d; prime Scots, 3s 2d; small coarse and middling, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime Southdown ditto, 3s 8d; second quality ditto, 3s 10d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; inferior sheep, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime Southdown ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; large hogs, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; small coarse and middling, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; small porkers, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; suckling calves, 18s to 28s; and quarter old store pigs, 18s to 28s each. Beasts, 558; cows, 187; sheep, 2770; calves, 148; pigs, 296.

The arrivals from Ireland during the week ending last Monday were as follows:—

[illegible] by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 3s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 10d to 3s 6d, prime ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 6d to 4s 6d; prime ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 10. to 4s 0d, prime ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4

[illegible]

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

A considerable change has occurred in the value of Money during the current week The leading discount houses on Tuesday, advanced the rate of interest for Money on "the call," to 3½ per cent., and the Bank of England have limited the period of this customary advance during the settlement now at the recent meeting of the Shareholders. The question asked is, when, or what rate, was the Stock purchased. It cannot, however, be doubted that the loss must have been considerable. A general spirit of caution prevails, and every thing tends to indicate a further increase in the value of Money, and a more limited period for advances generally

The English Market opened on Monday at a slight improvement upon Saturday's quotations. Consols at Opening quoted 89¾ ⅞ for Money, and 89¾ ⅞ for Time. Exchange sales, however, reduced these prices to 89¾ to ⅞ for Money, an 89¾ buyers for Account. Towards the close of the day, at the commencement of the day, the finance discussions in the French Chambers having terminated by decision not to negociate any loan. Money, however, becoming scarcer in the Discount Market, prices declined; and, by the evening, every thing tends to indicate further increasing

THE MAN IN THE MOON,
EDITED BY ALBERT SMITH AND ANGUS B. REACH
"This is an admirable supernewspaper of fun, in the Illustrations by Mr. Lowe Jacobinson Prout, Mr. Crowquill, Meadows, Kine, Thomas, &c., are capital!"—
"This is truly grateful addition to our comic periodical literature; and we h ve been richly amused with reading and laughing over its bright and facetious pages. There is not only excellence in quality, but liberality in quantity. The Panoramic Tragedy of the Life of Napoleon is worth the money."—Sun.
No 3 is Now Ready. NOS 1 and 2 have been R PRINTED, and may be had of all Booksellers. Office, 17, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row.

ELIHU BURRITT.—Just Published, a Characteristic and Carefully-finished PORTRAIT, by T. Woopford, Esq., for which this distinguished Author has sat at Artist. Engraved on Steel, in the Illustrations by Lowe Jacobinson Prout, Phiz, &c.; proofs, 7s. 6d. Jackinson, 114, New Bond-street. London

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS: History of the Reigns of the Emperors of the Antonine Series, with Descriptions of their Coins, having Portraits, their Dates and Mottoes, is just published by T. Whellan, Dealer in Ancient Coins 4b, Strand, London, price 1s.; by post, 1s. 2d. Coins sent by post. Bought, Catalogued, &c.

In 3 Vols. Post 8vo.,
MR. DISRAELI'S NEW WORK.
TANCRED;
Or, THE NEW CRUSADE.
WILL BE READY ON MONDAY, MARCH 15
Henry Colburn, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.
Orders received by all Booksellers, and at all the Libraries.

Now Ready, at all the Libraries, in 3 Vols.,
THE STORY OF PELLY DAWSON.
By Mrs. CROWE,
Authoress of "Susan Hopley"
"A novel of very rare merit."—Messenger.
"Mrs Crowe is the Sapphonista of novelists."—Literary Gazette
"Like Susan is a heroine of quite as interesting a character as Susan Hopley, and her adventures are not less romantic. Mrs. Crowe's style possesses a charm which renders her work irresistible."—Court Journal.
Henry Colburn, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT.
COMPLETE FOR 2s. 6d
ADDRESS.
Notwithstanding the previous attempts to illustrate the New Testament, whether by the [illegible] Who ever practicable, some topographical account of [illegible] sketches is given, as deduced from the most authentic sources. In general, the views of places —such as towns, cities, &c., are not intended to represent what they were in remotemess, but rather as they are at the present time; and where ruins are introduced, they either serve to give some idea of what the place may have been in the days of its ancient splendour, or, if they do not satisfactorily do this, they at least indicate the sites of the respective places of which they all stand the solemn memorials.
With regard to the Notes, as well as the Text, great care has been particularly attended to in their compilation. And it may be necessary to observe, that they are intended to be a kind of an explanatory character, without the introduction of any thing of a theological or dogmatic tendency. The Notes are much more numerous and of greater length in the Gospels than in the succeeding parts of the work. This may be accounted for by various circumstances; in the first place, it must be remarked that the Gospels are the most essential portion of the New Testament, and the world necessarily require a larger measure of notice; and, secondly, the form and position of the Illustrations sometimes precluded, and at others, the nature and import of the text itself did not seem to demand, on the plan pursued, anything additional in the way of annotations
For the descriptive matter and other information contained in the Notes, the Editor is mainly indebted to the works of Dr. Kitto, particularly his "Biblical Cyclopædia," to the "Archæologia Biblica" of Dr. Jahn, the "Researches" of Dr. Robinson, and some other travellers of note and authority. The first-mentioned of these works is a storehouse of facts of orientalism and historical fact: from its pages, as also from the work of Professor Robinson, may be gathered all that would seem necessary for a work of this kind, or its accompanying history, strictly so called, of the districts and localities into which the Holy Land was divided, as well as the political and physical changes which have taken place in those regions by the lapse of time or the overwhelming events. Hence, there seems no room for a repetition of this useful statistical condition to the present moment.
To the learned work of Dr. Jahn we are under considerable obligations in respect to Jewish Rites, Ceremonies, and Sects without some attention to which, many facts of the New Testament are left without inducement. Nor have the manners and customs of the ancient Greeks and Romans been over looked, wherever an acquaintance with them might tend to throw light on the interpretation, or assist the reader in comprehending the spirit of the passage And to render such book the more intelligible, we have prefixed, in general, a short account of the nation, the time when, and the circumstances under which it was written.
With the aids thus afforded, it is presumed the reading of the New Testament may be rendered attractive as well as advantageous to the youthful mind, inasmuch as there is furnished to the right understanding and due appreciation of it. The same may be said with respect to the reader of more advanced age. The original and bulky concealed dogma of the talented author of "Modern Judaism"—evident enough, indeed, to the discerning feature of the work and the series of cuts dispersed throughout, together with the body of merely anecdotary matter, have rendered an undertaking the present undertaking of the kind, and the acquisition, not only to those younger students who have a classical taste, but to the reader in general.
The work still more valuable and attractive, a third eye V e of the Holy Land is prefixed, exhibiting the plan of the Sanctuary, as described in the Old and New Testaments
[illegible], Strand, London, 1847
Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and sold by all Booksellers and Newsmen, throughout the Kingdom.

MUSICAL UNION.—Members' Tickets for the Present Season will be sent by post on Saturday, the 13th inst. Candidates desirous of being elected Members are requested to send their names and address to the Director. A limited number of Subscribers' Tickets can be obtained by application to the Secretary, at the Committee, and may be obtained on application to J. ELLA, Director, 201, Regent-street

THE MISSES HEATH'S SEMINARY, HIGH WYCOMBE, BUCKS.—At this Establishment YOUNG LADIES are liberally boarded, and carefully instructed in all the essentials of a good English Education, with Music, Drawing, and French, the latter of which the Misses Heath is prepared to give daily exercise in the open air; and the study of the Holy Scriptures is made an object of the first importance. References are kindly permitted to the Vicar of the Parish, and to other clergymen and friends

PHOTOGRAPHIC MINIATURES.—234, Regent-street.—Mr. KILBURN begs to call the attention of those MINIATURES, which are the most important IMPROVEMENT upon the Daguerreotype Portraits. The likeness taken by the Photographic process serves merely as a sketch for the Miniatures, which is painted by Mr. MANSION, whose productions on ivory are so celebrated in Paris. They have, when finished, all the delicacy of an elaborate Miniature, with the accuracy of expression only obtainable by the Photographic process. Licensed by the Patentee

ST. OSWALD'S WATER CURE ESTABLISHMENT, Grasmere, near Ambleside, Westmoreland.—Under the medical direction of LEOPOLD STUMMES, M.D., Member of the College of Physicians of the University of Vienna, and late Physician to the Right Hon. the Earl of Lichfield, during his Lordship's long residence in Gratefenning.—This lovely spot has been selected for its superior resemblance to Gratefenning, in its mountain scenery, romantic walks and abundant streams of the purest and coldest Water, for which the hills of Westmoreland and Cumberland are famous. The London and Kirkby Westerns, as well as the Carlisle and Lancaster Railway, is complete to Kendal, within two hours' drive to St. Oswalds. For a Prospectus apply to Mr Simmons

PARTIES of undoubted respectability, with good connexions residing in the provincial towns and districts may readily and greatly increase their incomes, by promoting the interests of a highly-responsible and well-established ASSURANCE OFFICE in London, the business of which is greatly increasing. To those parties who will furnish testimony of their capability and respectability, full information will be afforded, on application to A. Grayston, Esq., Mr. Johnson's, Surveyor, 3, Warwick-court, Holborn

EUROPEAN LIFE INSURANCE and ANNUITY COMPANY—Established Jan 1, 1819. Empowered by special Act of Parliament, 7th and 8th Victoria, cap. 48.—Offices, No. 10, Chatham-place, Blackfriars, London; and No. 35, Dame-street, Dublin. ELIXIR OF LIFE DRINK WATER BEYOND, Esq., Chairman. Insurances may be effected daily, by the ascending or descending scale, a limited number of annual payments for the whole period, half yearly, or quarterly payments. Parties effecting Insurances on their lives for £500, or upwards, are privileged to attend and vote at the half-yearly General Courts.

THE PARCEL POST.—The Public are respectfully informed that this Establishment will be transferred to an entirely new Proprietary on Monday, the 15th instant, and will in future be conducted upon a well-organised system of expedition and punctuality, combining the economy of the post-office. The proprietors therefore beg to be aware of the Gen. Swantage under which the concern has commenced its operations, notwithstanding which it has been successful beyond anticipation, considering the very short time it has been established (not five weeks), and which affords the strongest assurance of its future success, under an efficient management, acting upon the system of a division of labour, and exacting strictly, according to the plan recommended by Mr. Rowland Hill in his proposed new postal arrangements. A revised and simplified scale of charges will be immediately issued, with all necessary information The patronage of the public [illegible] confidently solicited, in the entire belief that the future operation [illegible] be found to justify this appeal. By order,
Office of the Company, JOHN SANDELL

ELEGANCE and ECONOMY in PAPER-HANGINGS.—French Satins, 2s. 6d. per piece, Flock, 6d. per yard: Panel Decoratives, 1s. Oak, as cheap as other Papers. Tonns, Cash. Established 20 years. W. CROSBY [illegible] Her Arcade N B. Three doors from the Strand entrance

HARRIS BROTHERS' MARKING INK, used for marking Linen, Silk, Muslin, &c.—that ink is of a Bright Black Colour, will never wash out and can be written with as free a use as common ink. It is decidedly of a superior description, and may be used by any one without the least fear of failure. It is in no regard corrosive to the finest linen, as well as necessary appendage to every family. Sold wholesale by Harris Brothers, 8, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, and Do., Fleet-street; Ackermann and Co., Strand; Barclay and Sons, Farringdon-street, and most stationers

BED FEATHERS PURIFIED BY STEAM WITH PATENT MACHINERY, whereby they are rendered quickly sweet and free from dust.

Mixed	1s. 9d. per lb.	Best Foreign Grey Goose	2s. 6d. per lb.
Grey Goose	2s. 4d.	Best White ditto	3s. 6d.
Foreign ditto	1s. 8d.	Best Dantzic ditto	3s. 6d.

BEDS, and SON's List of Bedding, containing full particulars of weights, sizes, and prices, sent free by post on application to Heal Factory, 196 (opposite the Chapel), Tottenham-court-road

HAVANNAH TOBACCO.—Proud of the supereminence for which his TOBACCO is so deservedly celebrated, JOHN MULLENS begs to inform the Public he has entered into arrangements for the regular importation from Cuba of this rare and delicious Tobacco His Friends are advised to ask for "Mullens's Havannah Mixture," at 5d. per ounce, or 6s. per pound, to be had at his Warehouse, 34, Fore-street, London; or of his Agents in all Towns in the Kingdom

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE-GRATES, kitchen-ranges, fenders, and fire-irons generally, furnishing from cagery, in tinned copper, iron and block-tin cooking vessels, best buffets & plate, and table cutlery, japanned, paper and iron trays, tea-urns, tea-trays, ornamental iron and wirework for verandahs, lawns, &c.; brass and iron bedsteads; patent table lamps for candle or oil. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash —Adjoining the Royal Bazaar, 58, Baker-street, Portman-square

FOUR FIRES FOR ONE PENNY!!! by EDWARDS's [illegible] portable stoves and grates. Families in the country supplied with 500 delivered to the carrier, on receipt of a post-office order for 10s., payable to Thomas Stevenson, No. 18, Wharf-road, City-road.

MESSRS. MOSELEY, SURGEON DENTISTS, 61, Gros-venor-street, Bond-street; removed from 32, Haymarket.

STAMMERING.—Mr. HUNT begs to announce the commencement of the Twentieth Year of his successful experience in the correction of the above [illegible] system, according to his system, which never renders surgical operation necessary for the use of [illegible] but is based on sound physiological and rational principles. Mr. H. purposes visiting the town until the end of June next. 324, Regent-street, corner of Argyll-street.

ORNAMENTS for the DRAWING-ROOM, LIBRARY, and DINING-ROOM, consisting of a new and elegant assortment of Vases, Figures, Clocks, and Candelabra, in Parian, Statuary, and Ormolu, Tessellated and Malachite Tables, Chimney Glasses, &c., now on Sale at the Show-rooms of T. TENNANT, late Mawe, 149, Strand, London

TEA and PERRINS' highly-esteemed WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE.—Gravies, Meat and Game Soups, Hashes, Stews, and Soup, may be obtained universally from the most respectable dealers, every bottle [illegible] and PERRINS upon the wrapper and label, without which it cannot be genuine. [illegible] Row, retail and for exportation, by the Proprietors, Lea and Perrins, 6, Vere-street, Oxford-street. London, and 68, Broad-street, Worcester; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, Messrs. Crosse and Blackwell, London; and generally by the principal Oilmen and Dealers in Sauces

ELEGANT PICTURE FRAMES, LOOKING GLASSES, CORNICES, &c.—WM. FOLLIT, 68, Fleet-street, is acknowledged by all who have honoured him with commands, to be the cheapest known Manufacturing Carver and Gilder, and the superiority of his materials and workmanship cannot be impeached. The most Liberal Terms to Decorators, Artists, and the Trade. Prized Sheets of Chrisso Designs on receipt of six stamps. The Art-Union Engravings framed and glazed, from 5s to 30s. FOLLITT'S Old-established Composition, Ornament, and Moulding Manufactory, 63, Fleet-street.—(Observe) Corner of Bouverie-street.

THE attention of Ladies is respectfully requested to the NORWICH COTTON COMPANY'S (J. and L. BARBER and CO.) 3 and 6 Cord Sewing, Knitting, and Crochet Cotton, as being of the most beautiful texture it may be produced. It is wound on reels in 100, 200, and 300 yards; and can be had at all the most respectable Mercers, Drapers, and Haberdashers; and wholesale only of the Agents in London, Mr. W. Hall, 33, Friday-street, Cheapside, and of J. and L. Barber and Co., Norwich.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. HOWELL, of 304, Regent-street, two doors from Maygard-street, Sole Inventress of Teaching the Art of Dress-making by a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey in course of the smallest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most Finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The courses are of the made on the fully substantiated by reference to Pupils —Apprentices and Improvers Wanted. Millinery Rooms —Paper Models.

BRIGHTS' MAGAZIN DE MODES, No. 86, Regent-street. Importers of French Millinery. Ladies' Satin and Glacé Bonnets, from 21s. Very fine Leghorns, from 10s. 6d. Gala Hats, Feathers, Flowers, Lappets, Hats, from 5s. 6d. from all French Straw Bonnets of every description. Every article marked at the lowest scale of profit, from which no deviation will be made 86, Quadrant, Regent-street. Right-hand side from Circus, Piccadilly

THE SALE AT GEORGE SMITH'S.—During the progress of ALTERATIONS, the remains of the Stock of India, French, and British Shawls; silks, velvets, mantles, Cashmere and Lambswool Scarfs, Opera Cloaks, Fancy goods, [illegible] shoes, table-linen, sheeting, Swiss curtains, &c., will be SOLD OFF at extremely low prices, in the Back Shop, particularly adapted for that purpose; and the entrance shifted from the court yard at the side of the premises, 32, Ludgate-hill, late Rundell and Bridge's

BLACK FRENCH-LACE HALF SHAWLS, at 16s. 6d. and 21s. 6d. each, worth double those prices; Black French Veils, 6s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. each; White and Black Plumules, 16s. 6d. and 18s. 6d. the full Plumes Valenciennes Lappets, 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. the full Lappets made; Lace Dresses, Black and White, extraordinarily cheap; Scarfs, Capes, Pelerines, Collars, Habit shirts, Infants' Robes, Cambric Handkerchiefs are among the wonders of HYSON'S STOCK, SELLING OFF for positively the LAST WEEK, at the Shop next to the KING and SHIRT, No. 324, Regent-street, London.
No. 327, Regent-street

For the Convenience of Ladies residing in the Country, KING and SHEATH will send Patterns of their Goods, Post Free, on Application

NEW FANCY FRENCH SILKS, FREE OF EXPENSE.
Very Rich Fancy Baroges, 2s. 6d. per French Yard.
The Richest Qualities from 3s 6d. to 4s. 6d.
The Richest Black and Fancy Glacés, from 2s. 6d. to 3s. 6d.
The Richest Black Watered Silks, 4s. 6d.
Patterns Sent Free to the Country KING and SHEATH, 264, Regent-street, London.

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and PELISSES; Infants' Cloaks, Hoods, Hats, and Bonnets; Long and Short Robes, French Cambric Caps, Day and Night Dresses, Robe Blanche, Layette Baskets, with every other requisite in Baby Linen, at SUSANNAH'S, 5 FINSBURY PAVEMENT. Several hundreds of Children's Dresses, &c., on Sale from the smallest infant at 1s. 11d., medium 3s. 6d. to 10s. 6d., up to the rich embroidered Silk Velvets, &c., with every size and description for a Prince to Peer, thus obviating the trouble and inconvenience so long complained of in going from shop to shop when juvenile clothing is required An Illustrated Pamphlet, affording additional information, will be sent free, on receiving a paid letter

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN.—The Thorn that veils the Primrose Beauty, and the Down that overhangs the Peach, are surpassed in the Bloom, Grace, and Aroma of Rimmel. For its removal, RUBBEL'S ROSEATE POWDER stands pre-eminent for its purity, efficacy, and delightful fragrance. Sold by Rimmel, 96, Strand, the last forty years Sold for the Proprietor by Hooper, Chemist, 24, Russell-street, Covent Garden, and by most Perfumers. Price 4s. per box; or two in one parcel, 7s.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE.—White Powder for the Teeth, compounded of the choicest and most recherche ingredients of the Oriental Herbal, of inestimable value for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, and strengthening the Gums. Its truly efficacious and fragrant properties are established its esteem by the queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Nobility of Europe. It lasts during years in any climate. Sold in pots, at 2s. 9d. each, by Piesse from Rimmel, the Government Stamp, with the words "A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden," engraved thereon, is affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by all Chemists and Perfumers BERDOE'S WATERPROOF PALLIUM, a Light Over-Coat for General Use at All Seasons. Guaranteed to exclude any rain whatever. An extensive assortment of the above well-known and universally approved Garments, combined by its neat, quiet, gentlemanly appearance, and superior claims to the attention of the fashionable portion of the community, at the Manufactory of the first inventor, Berdoe, 96, Bunhill Row, and Over-Coat Maker, 96, New Bond-street (near Oxford-street), and 69, Cornhill (corner of Birchin-lane).

THE REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH, the most fashionable coat for both the present and approaching seasons, still retains the same moderate price, which, with its usefulness and gentlemanly appearance, has secured such general favour, and is sold at the Manufactory of the Inventor, Berdoe, 96, Bunhill Row. Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, and his several Royal Visitors to the British Court. To be had only be purchased of the patentee, H. J. and D. Nicoll, Court Tailors, 114, Regent-street, 22, Cornhill, and 10, Regent-street, Cambridge. Also at 50, Sackville-street, Dublin, and 142, George Macklons, Molesworth-street; for Birmingham, Warwick; and Son, Bye-street; and the petit cape, the most large to wear

HYDROPHOBIC HATS.—JOHNSON and Co., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street, Hatters to her Majesty and the Royal Family, Patentees for the application of Valves and Air Conductors to Hats.—This invention consists of a Valve which is placed in the crown of the Hat, admitting free air to the head and perspiration, and of a grooved apparatus, forming a series of small channels in the back part of the leather lining, by which air is admitted. The Hydrophobic Hat possesses the following advantages, viz. regulation of the amount of air admitted into the crown of the hat by the opening and closing of the valve at the pleasure of the wearer.—An impossibility of an accumulation of heated air and perspiration impermeability to grease around the head.—Its coolness, lightness, elegance, form, and durability,—and, lastly, the acknowledged comfort to all who suffer from headache, or who are in the habit of taking cold.—Johnson and Co., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street; and Griffiths and Johnson 7 Old Bond street, Piccadil

INVALUABLE IN EVERY LAUNDRY.—ROBINSON'S DERYN MACHINE nicely acclimates the destructive system of washing, and greatly facilitates the drying of all articles of apparel, blankets, counterpanes, &c., in either an impressment saving of time and fuel. It has been adopted in her Majesty's Laundry, Windsor, and in many public and private establishments throughout the Kingdom. Printing for a Royal Warrant, as Purveyor to Her Majesty and Royal Family, Patentee for the Baths and Washhouses, St. Pancras and Marylebone, Operator for preventing the pressure or friction, and cannot possibly injure the most delicate fabrics. Copies of testimonials and Warrant, may be obtained on application to W. T. JENKINS Director of the Patent, and sole Manufacturer, 37, Charles-street, Berners-street. Orders are also made of sizes suitable for Dyers, Manufacturers &c. &c

CLARKE'S PATENT MORTAR LAMPS and LAMP MOTARS. These incomparable Night Lamps are now manufactured in beautiful plain, ornamental, and richly-chased and gilt moulds, which, with the great improvements that have been made in the lamp Mortars, render them, without exception, the most elegant and perfect lamps ever invented. Lamps, 1s. 6d., and upwards. Mortars, 7d [illegible] double lamps, 1s. 6d. each. CLARKE'S PATENT INSECT LAMP.—This Lamp, with the Patent Lamp Mortars, and will be found invaluable not only in the Nursery but in the Sick Room, as it will keep the latter quite free of insects, by the use of a plate of water and a pint of food, at a consumption of one half-penny for six hours, besides serving as an excellent night lamp, as it [illegible] from smells or smoke, and may be carried about with perfect safety. Sold by every retail town most respectable ironmongers, Oilmen, and Grocers, in the Kingdom, and wholesale at the Patentee's Lamp Manufactory, 85, Albany-street, Regent's-park.

WINDOW BLINDS.—The Venetian Blinds manufactured by TYLOR and PACE can be confidently recommended as being made in the best manner, and of thoroughly well seasoned materials. Prices painted of any colour, 6d. per square foot. T. and P. have completed a most extensive assortment of transparent blinds comprising landscape scenery, imitation stained glass, birds, flowers, and ornaments, after Boys, and other first rate artists, which are always kept on view, ranging in price from 1s. and upwards to Two, Five, and Ten Guineas —TYLOR and PACE Patentees of the Parisian Sun Blinds, and Manufacturers of Genuine Wyvern Spring Rollers, Venetians, and every description of linable and outside Window Blinds, 3, Queen-street, three doors from Cheapside.—Detailed lists of prices forwarded on application; post free

NUMBER ONE, SAINT PAUL'S CHURCH-YARD.—The best COFFEE, whether Choice old Mountain Mocha or Jamaica, 2s. per lb. Coffee mellow in ripeness and richness of flavour, 1s. 8d and 1s. 10d Inferior Kinds, 1s. upwards

The best a 2s. per lb., and the best is the best, if people can only get hold of it. But how few can find it! Because they are always being told that the best can be bought at 1s. or 1s. 8d. per lb. Now the best cannot be sold at that price. Our best is 2s. per lb., and that is, in reality, the very best and cheapest coffee imported; it is far better than the best of the busts frequently spoken of DARIN and COMPANY, Tea Merchants, Number One, Saint Paul's Church-yard.

SALE OF FIRST-CLASS JEWELLERY, PLATE, and WATCHES, at 56, CHEAPSIDE, adjoining Bow Church.—ABRAHAM BARBER begs to inform his patrons and the Public generally, that being about to make extensive alterations in his Retail Premises, No. 56, Cheapside, adjoining Bow Church, he has determined to SELL OFF the whole of his well-known Superior Stock, which will be offered at prices that will ensure its immediate sale, as the workmen to be cleared off by the 25th of March. An early view and comparison of prices will at once prove the genuine nature of this announcement, as A. B. is anxious to avoid any identity with the numerous fictitious sales now at SELLING OFF now being made, where goods of an inferior quality are foisted upon the Public at unfair prices.—Every article warranted, and will be sold at the marked price, without abatement or misrepresentation.—56, Cheapside, adjoining Bow Church

BRITISH COLLEGE of HEALTH, New-road, London.—DR. MORRISON begs to inform the NEW LIST for 1847 of all the Medicines [illegible] hath chosen to vend MORRISON'S VEGETABLE UNIVERSAL MEDICINE throughout the world is now ready, and may be had on application at any of the Agents. N.B. No Chymists or Druggists is allowed to vend the Vegetable Universal Medicine, the British College of Health, reserving that all persons who dispose of it should have a practical knowledge of its virtues, by which alone can the safety of the people be insured.—March 1, 1847.

CURRALL and SON, importers of COGNAC BRANDY of the highest quality.—Cheese old pale at 60s., and brown at 48s. per dozen. Bottles, 8s per dozen; hampers, 1s. Brandies at 24s. and 24s. per gallon. Rhubarb-grate-street Within [illegible] Superior Draught Port at 28s and 32s. per dozen

PURE ST. JULIEN CLARET, 28s. per Dozen; Pints, 18s.; imported direct by HEDGES and BUTLER Wine Merchants, &c., 155, Regent-street, pass the sublimity recommended. Also some superior Gordon's claret at 36s per [illegible] On the receipt of a Post-office Order, or reference, will be immediately forwarded

TONIC ALE.—This splendid description of Bottled Beer is now to perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar medicinal properties, promoting appetite, &c. Sold in pints and pint bottles, securely by Botts's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, Stores, No 1, John-s-mews, Bedford-row

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by MR. WILLIAMS, 11, Brewer-street, Golden-square. Private Lessons in the Polka, Cellarius Valse, and Valse à Deux Temps, at all hours, to Ladies and Gentlemen of any age, wishing private or public instruction. An Evening Class on Monday and Friday. Terms may be had, on applicati n as above

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase these first-rate instruments is at H. TOLKIEN'S, manufacturer, 78, King William-street, London-bridge. H. T., having completed his extensive alterations, begs his friends to view his splendid stock of PIANOS, which is not to be equalled by any maker, and at about half the prices usually charged. Cottage Pianos, from 16 guineas; Cabinet ditto, from 22 guineas; Grand ditto, 45 guineas. Old instruments taken in exchange. TOLKIEN, 78, King William-street, London-bridge

HARP and PIANOFORTE.—An Elegant Double-Action Harp, equal to new—brilliant tone—beautifully decorated—made by Schwieso (Foreman to Erard), Number 1, Price, 45 Guineas, including Cover, Tuning Hammer, Packing Case, &c.—cost 120 Guineas.—Splendid Rosewood Cottage Pianoforte, 6½ octaves; 20 Guineas, the property of a Lady of Title going immediately to India.
Address, A. B., 61, London-road, Southwark.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. For a neat richly-chased pair of stout gold watches, with the same warranty, either of the Swiss manufacturers, or any other London maker, at a Pure-office Order payable to John Jones for £4 4s., one will be sent free —Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp

SECOND-HAND SILVER.—The Seller or Purchaser may receive every information on application to T. COX SAVORY & Co., Silversmiths, 47, Cornhill, seven doors from Gracechurch-street. London.

SHEFFIELD PLATE FOR THE DINNER TABLE.—The Cata.ogue of Prices, with Drawings of Silver-plated Dish Covers, Vegetables, or Curry Dishes, and every requisite for the Dinner Table, is Published, and may be had GRATIS or will be sent Postage Free to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies
T. COX SAVORY and Co., 47, Cornhill, London, seven doors from Gracechurch-street.

SILVER SPOONS and FORKS, 7s. per ounce.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank. A Pamphlet containing Drawings and data of prices of silver spoons and forks, tea and coffee services, and all the articles of silver required in family use, is now ready, and will be sent, postage free, to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, or the Colonies.

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of London-made PATENT LEVER WATCHES, which are manufactured by themselves under their own brand. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled; the prices are four guineas and a half, six, and eight guineas each; or in gold cases, 16, 18, and 20 guineas each The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his wishes.

ORNAMENTAL CLOCKS.—Recently received from Paris, an unusually large variety of FOURTEEN-DAY CLOCKS, to strike the hours and half-hours, in Ormolu, Marble, and China. The designs are Pastoral and Historical, and include a few of great merit in the style of Louis XIV. The price is four, five, and seven guineas each, and upwards
T. COX SAVORY and CO., No. 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch street) London.

SILVER TEA SERVICES of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, respectfully inform their customers that they have recently finished a few new designs in accordance with the present improved taste, and that they are sold at moderate prices from those customary in the trade.

Ushridge Pattern.				Thalia Pattern.
Strong Silver Tea-pot	£	s.	d.	Strong Silver Tea-pot	£	s.	d.
Sugar Basin	0	12	0	Sugar Basin	1	0	0
Cream-jug	0	10	6	Ditto Cream	0	7	0
Coffee-pot	1	0	0	Coffee-pot	1	17	6
Complete	£3	10	6	Complete	£4	14	0

A Pamphlet containing 50 Silver Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the Show Rooms, and a reduction the illustrated price current, containing drawings, with the weights and present prices, will be forwarded to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, India, or the Colonies on receipt of a Pure-office Order payable to A. B. Savory

TORTOISESHELL COMBS. PROUT'S BRUSH and COMB MAKER, 229, Strand, has just manufactured for the prevailing fashion a superb collection of ornaments. Combs, which, for brilliancy of colour, sharpness of design, and beauty of finish, surpass anything yet seen in the metropolis, and are well-contrasted in size. The largest and most complete stock of Brushes and Combs are always to be found ready at this House, of a superior quality and very moderate prices —229, Strand, London; seventh house from Temple-bar

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH, and SMYRNA SPONGES.—Useful Inquiry —For preserving the extreme durability, power of cleaning, and beauty of the teeth, in all who have used Metcalfe's Brushes. The Tooth Brush possesses the highly-important office of searching thoroughly into the divisions, and cleansing in the most effectual manner; hardness never can be found in the bristles composing the Brushes, with the durable unbleached Russia bristles, which will not soften like common bleached Imported Bristles, that cleanse tenderness, and [illegible] the teeth. The new Velvet brush, and immense Stock of genuine unbleached Smyrna Sponges, at METCALFE at 131, Oxford-street, 1266, Oxford-street, one door from Holles street

GIBBINS' ROSES and ROSEMARY.—This esteemed and elegant article is most respectfully offered to the Public, by GIBBINS Court Hairdresser and Perfumer (from Paris), 7, King-street, St. James's-square, as the most reliable and effectual Preservative of the Hair, Being a cosmetic, it will be successfully applied in promoting its growth and luxuriance
GIBBINS' ESSENCE of ROSES and ROSEMARY is a Liquid made from the above-name plants, and when applied in Washing the Hair, renders it soft and glossy; or, after the fatigues its astringent properties restore the tone of the skin
No. 7, King-street, St. James's-square, London.

CAUTION.—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London, beg to caution the Nobility and Gentry against being misled by the attempts of some Shopkeepers, who to compound sale of their own manufacture give the titles of "MACASSAR," "KALYDOR," and "ODONTO," —some under the implied sanction of Royalty and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at Deception, others impose by the Labels, Bills, Advertisements, and Testimonials (substituting fictitious Names and Addresses for the Genuine) of Forged Documents. The only genuine "MACASSAR," "KALYDOR," and "ODONTO," are "ROWLANDS," and the Wrapper of each bears the Name of "ROWLAND, 20," printed in Red Ink at the Article, with their Signature at the foot in Red Ink thus—'A. ROWLAND & SON.' Read by them, at 20, Hatton-garden, London; and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

LAUNCH OF THE GRAND SULTAN'S YACHT AT COWES.

Last week, Cowes, thus early in the season, commenced wearing her usual garb of gaiety, if the display of flags and colours of every tint and hue be any criterion of the equable temperature.
As regards this queen of watering-places, it may be truly said that the season had commenced a whole solstice earlier; for the present month of March was ushered in by the arrival of our gracious Sovereign and her royal family on the 3rd, to again take up her Court at Osborne This enabled her subjects, "the islanders," to testify their loyalty with their accustomed manifestations, which has called forth the admiration of the surrounding country.
Next day, (Thursday,) was fixed for performing the interesting ceremony of naming the Yacht of the Sultan Abd-ul Medjid Khan, by the Princess Caliphski, the lady of the Turkish Consul General in London, and others of the attachés, arrived from Southampton, at a few minutes past noon, and landed at the Sefton Arms-gardens, where they were kindly landed at the Medina Steam-Frigate Dock; the Turkish ensign (red, with the crescent and star) being hoisted on the flag-staff, complimentary to the visitors. The illustrious party were received by Mr. Thomas Brown, Boatbuilder, and John White, and were conducted to the adjoining residence of the latter. After a short interval, they proceeded to the capacious platform abreast the Yacht prepared for their reception.
Everything being in readiness, her Highness Princess Caliphski advanced, and according to the prevailing time-honoured custom, dashed a bottle of Jackrymm christi against the port-bow of the steamer, and named her the Vanuet Feyberi, which she interpreted "The Maiden of Constantinople." The band, which attended on the occasion, struck up a Turkish March; and at twenty minutes past twelve, the beautiful model was freed from her dog-shores, and glided majestically away her way until was fairly afloat on the waters of the Medina, amidst the deafening hurras of the assembled thousands
The Vanuet Feyberi was pronounced before launching to be, by naval and scientific men, a perfect model of naval architecture, and when afloat, her beautiful and graceful appearance fully maintained the encomiums which had previously been passed upon her. She was launched with her lower masts stepped; and, from the top to the deck, floated in the air the national colours of the Ottoman Porte, intermingled with those of other nations. The signing in the harbour, too, were equally gay, so far as a display of their bunting would admit. The keel of the splendid steamer was laid on the 4th of July last, and consequently has been eight months under construction She is a strong and faithful built vessel, so far as a combination of wood and metal would allow. She is to have a spacious saloon of 40 feet in length, to be fitted with 36 state rooms; the internal decorations to consist of bird's-eye maple, rosewood, and mahogany. Her figure head is a fiery dragon—a favourite emblem of the East. On the stern is emblazoned, in gilt letters, the crescent and star; on either side, and in the centre, naval and military trophies; over which is the archboard formed as a cable
Although the steamer has been expressly built for the Turkish Government she is intended occasionally to be employed in carrying the mails between Constantinople and Trebizonde, in the Black Sea; and also as a yacht, whenever the Sultan pleases to go afloat. Her dimensions are as follow.

Extreme length,	2.0 feet.
Length on deck,	200
Length of keel for tonnage,
Breadth extreme, over all,	5 in.
Depth in hold,
Burthen in tons,

The engines are being constructed by Messrs. Maudslay, Sons, and Field, of London, and are to be of 340 horse-power.

LAUNCH OF THE SULTAN'S STEAMER, AT COWES.

After the ceremony, the Yazeitet Tidjaret was taken into the Medina Dock, to be coppered, and completed in her internal fitment. The distinguished party repaired to the residence of Mr. John White, and partook of a splendid collation; upwards of fifty of the élite being present. The Consul-General proposed "The Health of Mr. White and his Sons," and in a neat speech eulogised the manner in which the steamer had been constructed. Mr. White, sen., returned the compliment by proposing "The Healths of the Princess and Prince Callimaki, who had so kindly honoured him with their presence." The Prince replied through his interpreter, acknowledging the warm reception he had met; adding, that the vessel which he had seen launched that day, if it met the same opinion of his illustrious Sovereign, whom he had the honour to serve, it would be a stepping-stone for numbers of others to be constructed for the Ottoman Empire. His Highness concluded by drinking the healths of the company present.

SOUP STORE AT CORK.

THE benevolent attempts to alleviate the present scarcity are specially worthy of illustration in our pages; since they, doubtless, in many instances, prompt the reader to aid directly or indirectly in the good work, "all mankind's concern" charity. The annexed Illustration is of this class of subjects; it represents the Soup Depôt, in Barrack-street, Cork, stated to be the first establishment of the kind opened in Ireland for the distribution of food to the poor, gratuitously. Our artist (Mr. James Mahony) assures us that 1300 poor persons are thus relieved daily; and that the establishment has effected more good among the wretched than any other means of relief yet suggested. The rush to obtain a place in one of the partitions (eight in number), so as to be in time for the distribution, is surprising; as is, also, the quiet, peaceable demeanour of the poor people.

The spot where this large Depôt has been fitted up was, until this year, one of the principal potato markets, and is, therefore, well calculated for the purpose; it being well walled in, and surrounded with sheds, which afford shelter to the poor applicants. The food is cooked in an upper building, and handed down for distribution, as shown by our artist. Previously to this, an equally large quantity of capital meal-soup is distributed at one halfpenny per quart, to such as choose to purchase it. It is worthy of remark, that, from the opening of this Depôt to the present time, not an act of dishonesty has been known to take place; Alderman Roche stating that not a spoon or vessel to be missing.

We quote these additional details of the mode of distribution, from the Southern Reporter:

"It is impossible to overrate the valuable services rendered by the gentlemen who attend here, and undertake the arduous duty of administering the daily rations of food to the famishing and clamorous crowds who beset the gates. The average number supplied every day at this establishment for the past week has been 1800, and many hundreds more apply, whom it is impossible at present to accommodate. The upper gate is opened at twelve o'clock, and eight hundred are admitted, when the tremendous rush which takes place presents fearful evidence of the hunger and misery which the crowd are enduring; on entering, they are classified, and stationed in the order in which it is intended to serve them, in a row of pens or enclosed places under the range of sheds at the right hand, each lot of 100 being in charge of a policeman, to see that each is properly attended to: there is then a communication from the kitchen in the rear, through which the hominy is handed in tins, containing a quart each, with great rapidity, to each person, who then crosses the yard to the sheds at the other side, and there eats his food. The whole 800 are served in about three hours, and are then let out by the lower gate, and a fresh batch of 5 to 600 admitted as before, and fed in the same way. We tasted the food they receive, which is most carefully prepared from rice and Indian meal, well boiled and seasoned, and can safely declare that it is excellent. We would, however, earnestly appeal to the ever active benevolence of the charitable, by suggesting the immense advantage the poor would derive from the addition of a little bread to this description of soup. Even a two-penny loaf per day from one half of the respectable families in Cork, who would not miss ten times its cost, sent to this Depôt, would be of incalculable assistance, and greatly aid the noble exertions of the Committee."

MAJOR PLAYFAIR, OF ST. ANDREW'S.

AMONG the great social reforms of the day, "the Health of Towns" is entitled to prominent rank; inasmuch as the improved sanatory condition of the people must prevent many evils, which is, in all cases, better than their cure. A very active and successful agent in this great measure is now on a visit to the metropolis. Such is Major Playfair, remarkable for having renovated the ancient city of St. Andrew's, over which he has presided only six years; yet, within that short time, the town has, through his exertions, assumed a changed aspect; elegance and convenience having everywhere replaced rudeness and ruin. That such measures must conduce to the physical and moral improvement of the people, no one will be inclined to gainsay: the example set by the Major is so important that it is worth while to glance at the means by which he effected those great changes; and this we do solely with the view of extending their beneficial influence.

Major Playfair, we learn, spent the early part of his life in the service of the Hon. East India Company, in the Bengal Artillery; and after 23 years active service, in 1832 he returned to his native place, St. Andrew's, an ancient city on the coast of Fifeshire, 39 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh. In 1842, he was elected Mayor, or Provost, and he has been continued in the office to the present time by the voice of the people. Soon after his accession to office, he began to brighten up the venerable city, and this at a period when her municipal revenue was so crippled as hitherto to have made her condition hopeless. The Major commenced by obtaining one hundred pounds from the impoverished burghal funds; he then collected a few more hundreds by subscription among the inhabitants and neighbouring gentry; and with this money, the principal street was paved and lighted with gas. Great, however, as was this improvement, it was rivalled by sundry others: old obstructions and eyesores were removed, venerable ruins propped up, and new beauties and conveniences created. While other men planned, pondered, and hesitated, the Major acted: he pulled down unsightly street projections, rounded acute corners, walled up unseemly gaps, removed obstructing houses; and, in short, by his activity, falsified the old proverb "what is everybody's business, is nobody's."

We have not room to detail a tithe of his good works: how he widened, built, and paved the town in every direction; how he improved and revived Madras College, where first-rate elementary education may be obtained for one shilling a quarter! how he built a handsome infant school-house; how he swept away miserable tenements, and erected a terrace in their place; changed wynds, or alleys, into streets; and, in short, effected numberless improvements, which have led to a great influx of inhabitants.

We agree with the writer of a paper in Chambers's Edinburgh Journal—"That the Provost of a Scottish country town, without the aid of either act of Parliament or tax, should have been able to plan and carry forward renovations so extensive and beneficial, may well excite surprise; and one can very easily imagine that, without a great degree of sagacity, and the most masterly financering, nothing could have been done. Perhaps, however, his greatest act of generalship has been that of stilling down opposition in the municipal body of which he is the head. By the reasonableness of his propositions, his impartial distribution of patronage, and treating the predilections of all men with liberality, being, at the same time, frank and affable in his demeanour, and ever ready to be consulted by every one, he has introduced the most perfect harmony into his little senate; and it is a fact equally new and gratifying, that no time is ever now consumed in wrangling on general abstractions. This change is not less grateful than it is beneficial to the people generally, and we may be assured that it is no small element in the list of means by which our friend the Major has been able to carry on so many useful reforms. It is a lesson most devoutly to be commended to all municipal bodies throughout the empire."

MAJOR PLAYFAIR.

The gratitude of the Major's fellow citizens has been lately evinced by subscribing a sum of money, to have his portrait painted by Mr. Watson Gordon, of Edinburgh. The picture is finished; and, we hear, will shortly be hung up in the town-hall of St. Andrew's.

THE CENTRAL SOUP DEPOT, BARRACK-STREET, CORK.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 13, 1847.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 255.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1847. [Sixpence.

THE DEBT, AND ITS PAYMENT.

DURING the space of one week to deliver a clever speech and publish a striking novel, are feats accomplished by few even of our literary legislators; but they have both been accomplished by Mr. Disraeli. And in both speech and novel he maintains that all the problems of History are to be solved by applying the principle of "race." The decay of the Polish nation, he says, is an instance; they were twenty millions, and they produced no men or man, but, "light and frivolous," did nothing but cut each other's throats in feudal broils till, for the preservation of peace and a quiet neighbourhood, "the Powers" were compelled to step in and govern those who were unable to govern themselves. We have touched on this side of the question on a former occasion (No. 245), as we fear there is too much truth in the assertion; it is also true that the History of Poland is rather that of a class than a people, of an aristocracy than a nation. There was no community; only two castes—the Lords and their serfs. Political greatness is only found among a people, though the Government of Venice seems to be an exception. But, constituted as the Kingdom of Poland was, it was capable of military greatness; on this rests its claim to the gratitude of Europe, for there can be no question it was the active agent in the union of Powers that arrested the progress of the Turks westward. And very opportunely to assist the effect of the recent debates on the suppression of the State of Cracow, has appeared the "Sieges of Vienna by the Turks," in Murray's Colonial Library, compiled from various German sources. The full extent of the debt of Europe is there brought before us; and, now that nothing but traditions are left, it is well that they should not be forgotten. Poets have not been wanting to embalm them in verse, one of the chances, at least, if a slight one, of immortality. And some of the details of the narrative so exactly agree with a poem on the subject, by a popular German writer, that we venture, before the echoes of the Polish debates die away, to give the poet's record of Austria's debt to Poland, and how it was paid! It was written some years ago, but recent events make it as applicable as if penned but yesterday. The reader will, therefore, allow Anastatius Grün to tell an OLD STORY.

Come, the Arsenal is open! Shall we see it; it is stor'd
With weapons of all times and ages, that our battles past record;
With blade and spear the walls are cover'd: 'tis a curious tapestry—
Gun and sword deck roof and pillar—strange enough, they say, to see.

Many a hero's empty armour, coats of mail of Count and Prince—
Empty houses, whence the dwellers pass'd away long ages since;
Many a warrior's sabre rusting—spear and axe for thrust and blow—
Oars of Battle's bloody ocean—masterless and peaceful now!

Clusters there of musquet barrels spring aloft to columns drest—
Ah! tottering is the strength of States that on such pillars only rest;
There hangs blazon'd Austria's Eagle! swords and bayonets for its frame;
Ah! thou symbol, sad in meaning, would 'twere nowhere else the same.

If the rights of Kings can only be in war by weapons tried,
If the trumpet is their Pleader, where Battalions must decide,
If their only pleas are Bayonets, and the Sword their only proof,
A faculty of Regal law is gathered 'neath this single roof!

See a knot of strangers coming! o'er the pavement rings their tread,
A little man, of fluent speech, walks, like an usher, at their head;
With his stock of old traditions, legends for each coat of mail,
For each sword or spear its battle, for each dusty flag its tale.

From a niche he lifts a casket; at a touch, is open flies,
And it reveals a human skull, that looks at us with hollow eyes;
A crimson ring beneath it drawn denotes where swept the Headsman's blade,
Our guide then took the relic forth, and holding it aloft, he said,—

"Know'st thou not this skull, Vienna? once you trembled at its frown;
When yet it held the spirit long from forth the hollow mansion flown—
'Tis Kara Mustapha's—the Vizier! can darkness o'er his memory flow?
Ah! yes; two hundred years have passed—and 'tis a tale of long ago!

"Know'st thou not how once he shook thy ramparts with the cannon's blast,
And how he swore to know no peace till through thy gate his Turban pass'd?
The oath he swore, it found fulfilment—but man is mock'd by fate below—
Behold! 'twas even thus he enter'd—it is a tale of long ago.

"All thy fields the Turk was Lord of—soon his sickle swept them bare,
And the turban'd wine-despiser trampled down thy vineyards fair;
Thanks be to God, our corn and wine no more for such possessors grow!
Our scant would be the people's meal—as in that Siege of long ago.

"Vienna! thou art lost Vienna! so then thy sons in terror cried,
The forest oak is strong, but yet the tempest bows its crest of pride;
Firm stands the rock against the wave, but mightier yet is Ocean's flow;
Vienna! thou art lost—art lost! so rose the cry of long ago!

"But see! a signal rocket soars, beams like a star upon the night,
Spreads as it were a flaming sword above the Moslem's host of might,
Shines to the leaguer'd city's eyes, as welcome as Heaven's sun-lit bow;
Vienna, joy! thy walls are safe!—it is a tale of long ago!

"And on the hills, when morning broke, its rays flash'd back from spear and sword;
And rushing down the squadrons came, bursting upon the Turkish horde,
That, broken, flies like dust and chaff when northern whirlwinds sweeping blow;
And thus Vienna's walls were freed—so records tell us, long ago.

"And who were they, the men who sav'd thee—the strong of hand and brave of mood?
From Poland, it is said, they came, who for us fought through fire and blood;
And 'twas a certain John Sobieski that nation led against our foe,
But names are easily forgotten—and 'tis a tale of long ago!

"He pass'd as victor through thy gates; the streets were filled with old and young,
Who kiss'd his hand, his garment's hem, his name in hymn and chorus sung;

GREAT FIRE NEAR BATTERSEA.—SKETCHED FROM VAUXHALL-BRIDGE.—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

[COUNTRY EDITION.]

'POLAND! through every age to come, our sons to thee their love shall owe!'
'Twas thus Vienna once could speak—but truly it was long ago.

"SOBIESKI to our city gave, in memory of the deed he wrought,
The Banner that for Austria wav'd, the Sword that thus for Austria fought.
'Come! let our Eagles join,' he said 'nor ever more a hatred know.'
See! Sword and Banner hang there still just as he left them long ago!

"'And Austria's Monarch at the feast grasp'd fervently SOBIESKI'S hand:
'Thou hast preserved to me,' he said, 'my crown, my people, and my land;
That Austria yet remains our own, to bloom and flourish fair and free,
Strong to defend its children's hearths, we owe it only unto thee.

"'And we must thank thy hand and sword, which through the night of armies broke,
That we are not the Pagan's slaves, and bow'd beneath the Moslem's yoke;
That o'er our church the Cross yet shines—that 'neath its roof are anthems sung—
That still our Eagle spreads its wings—that still we speak our native tongue.

"'That wine, instead of water, yet is for us poured at every meal,
As in this gold and jewell'd cup, in which I pledge thy nation's weal—
POLAND! for now and evermore, may'st thou in Power and Freedom grow!'
So spake the Austrian Monarch once,—but truly it was long ago!"

Here our Usher's voice was silenced. As he turn'd, and went his way,
We marvelled where he learn'd the tale of Austria's danger-darken'd day.
See! as if some thought displeasing cross'd a living human brain,
The Vizier's skull a moment shake—but quickly it is still again!

As if 'twould leap to battle forth, SOBIESKI'S sword imprison'd rings;
His banner waves, as if again the Eagle white would spread its wings,
And rise once more above the earth, in pride and glory all its own,
As once it soar'd amid the fight, FREE, STRONG, UNDAUNTED, and ALONE!

The following extracts from the "Sieges of Vienna by the Turks" will explain some of the allusions in the above verses:—

On the evening of the 6th, five rockets were observed to rise from the Kahlenberg. That short-lived apparition was sufficient to scatter the clouds of despondency which had so long been gathering over the city. The Lighthouse which identifies the promontory, or the star which marks the Pole, never sparkled with [illegible] the anxious mariner with more of comfort and assurance than did [illegible] sign conveyed to the watchman on the rampart, or the Jesuit on the spire. It indicated not only that the Imperial army had crossed the river, but that its outposts had crowned the heights and occupied the passes which commanded only access to the relief of the city.

The issue of the struggle was evidently at hand, but that issue was still uncertain, and the night was one of agonising suspense. The population not immediately employed in military duty was divided: [illegible]ough the day between the churches and the roofs of towers and houses: the first engaged in earnest supplication to Heaven, the latter in surveying the movements of the Turkish camp, and watching for the first gleam of the Christian weapons, as they issued from the wooded heights. The commandant, as evening closed in, despatched a messenger, who swam the Danube, with a letter for the Duke of Lorraine. Its words were few. "No time to be lost!—no time indeed to be lost!" This message was acknowledged by a cluster of rockets from Hermansdorf.

The Turks now gave way at every point, and burned into their camp in the wildest confusion. The Margrave Louis, at the head of a squadron of dragoons, was the first to open a communication with the [illegible]n the anniversary of the Scottish Gate. Stahrenberg ordered an immediate sally against the approaches of the enemy, from which they had maintained through the day as heavy a fire as on any previous day of the siege, though no assault had been attempted by the strong body of Janissaries left in them for that purpose.

It may have been some satisfaction to Sobieski, it almost becomes one to his admirers now, to find that the Austrian Government was impartial in its ingratitude, and exercised on others, besides the Poles, its singular talent for disgusting and offending those who had done it service.

At length the vacillation of the Sultan was overcome, and a chamberlain of the court rode out from Adrianople, with the simple order to return as soon as possible with the head of Cara Mustapha. The officer, on approaching Belgrade, communicated his mission to the Aga of the Janissaries, who gave his prompt acquiescence and ready assistance to the object of the mission. The transaction was conducted on the part of the servants of the Crown, with that decent privacy and convenient expedition which usually attend the execution of Turkish justice, and submitted to by the patient with the quiet dignity with which the predestinarian doctrine of Islam arms its votaries against all accidents. The carpet was spread, the short prayer uttered, the bowstring adjusted. In a few moments the late dispenser of life and of [illegible] commanded [illegible] of 200,000 men, was a corpse, and his head on the road to Adrianople. It met with some subsequent adventures; for, having been returned to Belgrade by the Sultan, and deposited in a mosque, it was dragged out of the sanctuary of that city to the Christians, and forwarded by them to the Bishop Kollonitsch. The prelate made over the grisly memorial of the man, who had threatened to send his own head on a lance's point to the Sultan, to the people of Vienna, where it still keeps its place among the other trophies of a long struggle of race and religion.

CONFLAGRATION AT BATTERSEA.

LAST Sunday morning, about one o'clock, an explosion, which led to much destruction of property, took place near Nine Elms, Battersea, and created much alarm in the neighbourhood. The explosion was caused by the outburst of a fire in the lighting premises of Mr. Bethell, on the banks of the Thames. At that hour all the inhabitants were fast asleep; and, therefore, upon being thus aroused it is easy to conceive that much alarm was excited.

It is stated that some difficulty always when the engines arrived, as some of the firemen, when urged to take steps in order to bring their engines into play, said that it was utterly impossible for them to do so. Several engines were driven home notwithstanding the fire was raging in all its fury, and in spite of Mr. Hinton, the proprietor of some large corn-mills, and Mr. Carne, an extensive timber-dealer, both of whose premises were threatened with extreme danger. The only cause Mr. Hinton could get was that there was no water, that the side was too low, and that they did not choose to run the risk of breaking their engines in getting them down to the water's edge. There was, however, one engine which arrived at the scene of the conflagration later than the others, and which, in a few minutes was, without the slightest injury, drawn to the water's edge, [illegible] ple induced two others of the four engines still r[illegible] [illegible]one's request, so that within half an hour there were three engines playing with all their force upon the threatening body. And a providential circumstance it was that this step was taken; for at the moment the first of these machines was brought into operation, the flakes of fire, by the aid of the wind, were being carried over to Carne's timber-stacks, and soon towards Mr. Hinton's mills. Had these places ignited, the whole of the factories and houses between Battersea-fields and the railway terminus must have been destroyed.

The fire, it appears, broke out at Mr. Bethell's. Upon that gentleman's premises were numerous casks of tar, pitch, and some persons also said of naphtha, from a combination of which he obtained a certain solution, which had been found to be a preserver of wood by the process of saturation. There were, too, several large tanks filled with this inflammable solution, and it was the explosion of one of them that it is imagined gave warning to the neighbourhood of what was going on. The banks and yards of these premises were covered with railway [illegible] piled up to a considerable height, some of which had undergone the process of saturation, while others, which had been but recently landed from barges, had not been submitted as yet to the treatment. Every stick of these which had been stacked between the boiling-house and Mr. Hinton's mills, was at one and the same time, and for hours, in one general blaze, the brilliancy of the picture being frequently enhanced by the ignition of a stray barrel of pitch, of tar, or of the Kyanizing combination. Shortly after the outbreak, the flames communicated themselves to the limeworks of Mr. Pass, and from them to some barges, which were aground off the wharf. In a few minutes there were two extensive lengths of wharfs and barges in a fierce blaze, and it was calculated that there were two and barges, and the burning mass at the eastern end of Mr. Pass's wharf, that the engines which Mr. Hutton had got down upon the water's edge directed their attacks. This proceeding, accomplished by a temporary hulling of the wind, was attended with the happiest effects; for at five o'clock all danger of a further extension was at an end.

The extent of the loss is very considerable

The sky was illuminated over the whole of the western part of the metropolis, whilst the opposite side of the river, along Millbank and Cheyne-walk, Chelsea, and Vauxhall and Battersea bridges, were crowded by spectators. The latter two, too, was thronged with boats filled with spectators, and such had been the arrival of company that by three o'clock there was a double row of cabs reaching for upwards of a quarter of a mile along Battersea-fields.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE

PARISIANA

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

We have now in Paris all the actors in the Tragedie-Comedie of the Spanish marriages that conjured that union which threatened the dissolution of the greatest powers in Europe. They now surround the grand playwright and dramatist, Louis Philippe. No one is wanting of all the performers, except—that unfortunate dupe Queen Isabella, who throughout was but a nonentity. First arrived en avant courrier, the Secretary of the French Embassy at Madrid, your witty and stylish London acquaintance, little Baron Tallegrand, whose breast is now resplendently covered with Spanish Orders. Count de Bresson came next, and, although his infant son has come into the world a Duke and a Spanish Grandee, never had any man a greater horror of Spain. His utmost efforts are directed towards preventing the necessity of his returning there. He hopes to go forth to Vienna in lieu of Count Flahaut, who has been so cruelly out-jockeyed and absolutely hoodwinked by Prince Metternich in the Polish affair, and from thence he trusts he will grasp the Embassy to the Court of St James.

Not less delighted are Queen Christina and Munoz her husband to escape to Paris, so the luxurious voyage from Madrid to Paris and Malmaison is the only one sentiment can equal in intensity the delight of the Spanish couple—it is the [illegible]nce of the Court and Ministers at their arrival for with them they bring a flock of children whose growth is scarcely to be defined, only their privilege is to call Queens, Kings, Princes, and Princesses—mother, uncle, sisters, brothers. The evil of this visit is increased by the present Labels of the orders of the regime, 1830. Marshal Molitor, who died at 94, and had lived under three sovereigns, was wont to say "That under Louis XIV, people at Court said nothing; under Louis XV, they opened their mouths but a very little, but that under Louis XVI, none could refrain what they pleased." At present the Courtiers would appear to consider it a want of dignity and independence [illegible]. All that Kings, Princes, Princesses, and Ministers say and do, is known; and the family of Christina is one of the choice subjects of conversation of which, as regards them, you may imagine what is the ridicule and the [illegible].

Ill-[illegible]dress [illegible] inclusible; trade lingers; the present is bad—the future prospects worse worse still. Charity, however, has once more assumed successfully the garb of pleasure. The Ball given by the Artists, for the poor, was one of the most brilliant and exhilarating sights, and the number of the guests may be imagined when I state that, by it, 30,000f. was cleared a very large sum for Paris. All the greatest and the loveliest actresses in Paris were there—from Mdlle. Rachel, looking, in her Mantilla, like the "Duquerita de Alba y de Penafiel," the fashionable heroine of the Spanish Espluniata, to Mmes. Doche and Funkolt, and the beautiful Mdlle. Wilmen, wearing on her head a helmet made of gold sequins.

All semi-dramatic toilette of the fun mummers preserved them in their proper picturesque and artistic light, in which you seldom behold them in private, and without which, they appear unnatural, affected, and stilted. All the gayest and most fashionable cavaliers in Paris were, of course, present, as likewise the elite of foreigners, Earl Pembroke, Lord Ward, Prince Gagarin, Prince de Ligne, &c. &c. At Madame Padre Lucare's there has been likewise a Bal Costume, in which figured principally a quadrille of Fancy Indians. Had they been dressed by the "medicine man" of the tribe they could not have been more correct; and the contrast betwixt their wild costume and the rood looks and fine forms of the wearers was as amusing as it was certainly startling. At another ball, given at Madame F[illegible]s, in the Rue Bergere, the fair hostess had hired the whole contents of one of the finest horticultural establishments of Paris. So numerous were the flowers that barrowfuls were carried off before the dancers began their revels. Those who were artificial flowers were naturally the victims of this device, and looked remarkably cross, whilst great was the good luck and triumph of ladies who, like Madame Sontag, are fond of the natural (and fair writer), wore as ornament on their dresses Merlin lace a yard and a half deep.

There has been likewise no little masquerading and tomfoolery in the Chamber of Deputies, but to more serious matters either of the decencies or charities of life. The motion of M. L'Herbette to prevent Ministers being called Excellency, and the question of a tax on dogs gave rise to the most absurd displays of garrulity. As to the dog-tax learned men's heads ridiculed it as nearly a subject which is no joke. Every Frenchman that can procure one keeps a dog of some kind. There are 2,490,000 dogs in France, and it is calculated that on an average each consumes half-a-pound of bread per diem.

As regards literary news, it is confidently reported by all his friends that the poet Beranger, whose songs subverted the old dynasty of the Bourbons, has resumed his pen. Who will be his prey, or his victim, no one can say, but 1830 gave power already trembles. In the meantime historical literature is triumphant. Thiers got half a million of francs for his "History of the Revolution," which has not yet reached the middle of the Consulate, and Lamartine one for his history published; whilst Mignet, for the worst of his writings on the same subject, gets 600f. per volume only for the first edition. For his "History of the Girondins," now publishing, Lamartine received 1,200f. for each volume he has

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

PURCHASE OF FIRE-ARMS IN IRELAND.—Lord STANLEY presented three petitions. The first was from the southern Riding of Tipperary, and complained of the unrestricted sale of fire-arms. The petitioners stated that they, in common with Mr. Justice Jackson, the going Judge of Assize, viewed, with unaffected alarm, the unprecedented sale of arms in the towns of Clonmel and Thurles. They introduced into their petition the report of the constable of the district to his inspector, in which it was stated that fire-arms were sold, on market and fair-days, in those towns, by dealers, at prices varying from 2s. 6d. to 30s.; that so great was the demand, that the manufacturers in Birmingham were unable to make guns and pistols quickly enough, and that a very large proportion of those sold in the county Tipperary were second-hand fire-arms, which were procured at the pawn-offices in London. It was also stated, on the same authority, that the purchasers were, in a vast number of cases, of the very lowest class, and that, in some instances, they were servant boys and peasants employed on the public works. Private advices which he (Lord Stanley) had received from unquestionable sources fully bore out those statements. One fathworthy correspondent assured him that, at an auction of fire-arms which took place in a market-day, in the open street, at Clonmel, the auctioneer handed out the arms as receipts in full for the last November sale, and warranted them to bring down an agent at 150 yards. (Laughter.) Lord Stanley further said, he was credibly informed that, in a district with which he was very well acquainted, and where men were employed on the public works, some of the persons who were usually so engaged were found in the middle of a field, practising with balls at a hat on the top of a spade-handle. Every hit they made was received with loud cheers. (A laugh.) It should be remembered that the persons who were thus engaged were men who were receiving public pay upon the public works. (Hear, hear.) The second petition presented by Lord Stanley was in favour of the construction of railways in Ireland; and the third, in favour of extensive emigration. The latter petition led to a very discursive conversation upon the subject of emigration. It had, however, no practical result. The petitions were received, and the House adjourned at a quarter past seven.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. MONDAY.

THE WELLINGTON STATUE.—In answer to some questions from Mr. C. BERESFORD, Lord MORPETH said it was the intention of her Majesty's Government that the Wellington Statue should be removed from the arch, and men were employed, he believed, that day in removing it. He understood from the sub-committee that they concurred, and the Government carefully conceived, they were bound to take it down at their own expense.

ETON MONTEM.—Some questions were put by Mr. JAMES respecting the continuance of the ceremony of Eton Montem, and Lord RUSSELL said he should not advise her Majesty to interfere with any arrangements made by the Provost and head master for the discontinuance of the ceremony.

THE POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

The adjourned debate on this bill was resumed by Sir W. CLAY, who did not think the bill a perfect measure for the relief of the poor of Ireland, but he believed it to be the best submitted to the House, and that in the present state of Ireland could be devised, and he would therefore give it his support.

Captain JONES thought it was necessary to give an extension to the POOR-LAW in Ireland.

Mr. HAMILTON feared the effect of the principle of out-door relief, and wished a more cautious experiment had been tried.

Mr. J. O'CONNELL supported the bill, although adverse to its principle. He accepted it only as a means of saving the Irish people from starvation.

Lord COURTENAY spoke in favour of the bill, which he accepted as a useful auxiliary of the measures proposed by the Government.

Sir D. NORREYS and Major LAYARD supported the bill.

Mr. VESEY objected to it.

Lord J. RUSSELL was thought it quite impossible by means of any POOR-LAW whatever to maintain three millions of the Irish people, that being about the number exposed to the risk of famine by the failure of the potato crop. Some other very comprehensive measure must be associated with that before the House, or it would prove a decided failure. Such was the measure proposed by Lord G Bentinck, which would have given employment to heads of families in the construction of railways; but the House had thought proper to reject it in order to save the Government, though his noble friend neither wished nor sought for a change in the Administration. He objected to that portion of the bill before the House which tended to cramp the energies of the Irish proprietors by placing a burden of taxation upon them greater than that which was borne by the English landlords. He approved, however, of the principle of out-door relief, without which no Poor-Law system could be efficient

Mr. LABOUCHERE contended that without the principle of out-door relief the bill would be utterly inefficient. The House was that night called upon to affirm the principle that the poor of Ireland must be supported by the property and soil of Ireland; and in carrying out this principle in the measure before them they would be giving a stimulus to Irish proprietors to make increased exertions, from which the happiest effects might be anticipated.

Mr. W. S. O'BRIEN asserted that none of his countrymen would have died of starvation had Ireland had a domestic Legislature. The honourable gentleman condemned almost every thing which had been done by the Government with respect to Ireland since its accession to power

Mr. ROEBUCK vindicated himself from certain charges which had been made against him. The hon. gentleman accused him of split towards the Irish landlords. But he never could ascertain exactly who the Irish landlords were. He believed that the rea. landlords of Ireland were the tax-gatherer and the rent-collector, against whom he constantly had never-ceasing war in the House or elsewhere. Hon. gentlemen opposite, in ostensibly attacking the principle of out-door relief, in reality attempted to impugn everything in the shape of a Poor-Law. The law had not been introduced in favour of the lowest order in Ireland. The possession of a small portion of land was absolutely necessary for the support of a family in that country, and, as it was upon land alone, and not upon funds, that the Irish landlord had to perpetuate himself for the sustenance of himself and family, it was no wonder that the agrarian outrages existed in Ireland of which they had heard so much. What was now wanted was to introduce into the country the habits of industry, and to teach the Irish peasant to look to that for support in the days of his destitution, instead of exclusively depending upon the possession of a small patch of land, of which he found that he had to possess himself at all hazards. And who was opposed this righteous wish? Who but the Irish landlords? What the gentlemen of England now wanted was to extend to their Irish fellow-subjects that which they had already granted to their fellow-subjects here, and no more. Ireland, in the months of Irish landlords, meant nothing but themselves; and when they said that Ireland was going to be ruined by a Poor-Law, all that they meant was, that they were now going to be compelled to do their duty. The bill before them was a great act of justice due from England to Ireland, which, through the Irish landlords, had long done wrong to Ireland; and, if the wrong came from her, he saw no reason why she should not now be the source of justice to that country. He would give the bill a cordial support, although he believed it to be inadequate to meet the evil which it was intended to remedy

An extended debate ensued. In the course of it,

Lord J. RUSSELL made an explanation with respect to his interview with the Irish landlords who had waited upon him to oppose this bill. The noble Lord said, "In a former speech I stated that, in my interview with the deputation of Irish landlords, headed by Lord Monteagle, I asked them what measures they would propose to substitute for the Government proposal, and that there was no alternative suggested by them, except the old one of relief from private charity in Ireland. I have received a letter from Lord Monteagle, stating that I omitted to say that one of the deputation referred, in answer to my question, to the willingness of the landed gentry in Ireland to bear any charge that might be necessary for an extension of the workhouse system for that object. The point did not make much impression on my mind at the time; but, if I recollected it, I certainly would have referred to it, and have added my impression of the necessity of such a course."

The House then went into committee, pro formâ, and the bill was ordered to be re-committed on Friday.

The Lunacy Bill was read a third time, and passed.

The House sat till one o'clock in the morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE OXFORD AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—Lord LYNDHURST, according to notice, proposed a Select Committee to inquire into the circumstances attending the proposed amalgamation of the Oxford and Birmingham Railway with one or either of the great rivals, the North-Western and Great Western Railway Companies. There was a full attendance of Peers, and the motion led to some animated strictures upon the alleged shrewdness and cupidity of rival Railway Companies. The discussion was also seasoned with some commentaries by Lord Redesdale upon the Railway speculations of some of the members of the House of Commons, which afforded much amusement. Lord Lyndhurst's motion was agreed to.

THE POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.—Lord MONTEAGLE gave notice of his intention to move, that day week, for the appointment of a Select Committee to consider the subject of Relief to the Poor, especially Out-Door Relief.

The House adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

NEW MEMBER.—Lord A. CONINGHAM took the oaths and his seat as member for the city of Canterbury.

NEW WRIT FOR BEDFORDSHIRE.—A new writ was ordered to be issued for the election of a member for Bedfordshire, in the room of Mr. W. Astell, deceased.

THE WELLINGTON STATUE AND THE NELSON COLUMN.—In answer to some questions from Mr. W. COLLIER, Lord MORPETH stated that the Statue of the Duke of Wellington would be erected in Waterloo place, and said he conceived that the sub-committee were to bear the expense of its removal. As to the Nelson Column, he had very recently been making some inquiries respecting it, with a view to the completion of the base of that Column The Earl of LINCOLN asked if the opinions of competent persons had been taken as to Waterloo-place being the most suitable site for the Wellington Statue?—Lord MORPETH believed the opinions of competent persons had been taken, and were favourable to that

THE NEW PALACE AT WESTMINSTER.—Sir DE LACY EVANS put some questions respecting the admission of the public to the new House of Lords. Lord MORPETH said that after Saturday next (to-day) no person whatever would be admitted within the precincts of the new Palace until it was opened after Easter, and the exclusion would extend to members of both Houses of Parliament But he hoped, and he thought it probable, that, at the end of the present session, he should be able, in concurrence with the authorities of the House of Lords, to make arrangements for giving the public an opportunity of seeing the new palace

THE GENERAL FAST.—It was ordered that the Venerable William Dealtry, D.D., Archdeacon of Surrey, be desired to preach before this House at Saint Margaret's, Westminster, on Wednesday, the 24th day of this instant March, being the day appointed by the Proclamation of Her Majesty for a General Fast; and that Lord John Russell and Sir George Grey do acquaint him therewith.

CONCLUSION OF THE DEBATE ON CRACOW.

The adjourned debate on Mr. Rume's resolutions was resumed by Sir J. WALSH, who said he should vote with the Government for the previous question

Lord H. VANE did not think it advisable under existing circumstances to agree to the resolutions of Mr. Hume, though he quite agreed that the annexation of Cracow was contrary to just and severe aninadversion.

Mr J. S. WORTLEY, whilst he approved of the substance of the first resolution, felt a difficulty in affirming these resolutions, unless the House were prepared to act upon them.

Mr CHRISTIE said that if he were asked to express sympathy for the wrongs of Poland and disapproval of the annexation of Cracow, he should have no hesitation in doing so. But he did not think the violation of a treaty by one party was a justification for another party to absolve itself from its engagement.

Mr. SMITH O'BRIEN supported the resolutions, applauded the French Chamber of Deputies for annually invoking the spirit of the Poles, and uttered a fervent aspiration that the nationality of Poland might be imperishable.

Mr. B. ESCOTT objected to the continued payment by England of the interest on the Russo-Dutch Loan, as he could only regard it as blush-money given to Russia to bribe her not to go to war with us

Mr DISRAELI lamented as deeply as any man the partition of Poland, but that was no longer the question, for the existence of Poland as a nation was now a matter of bygone history, and Cracow was now an Austrian province. He was prepared to contend that the violation of any particular treaty inserted in a general treaty was not to be considered as a violation of the general treaty. The hon. gentleman cited various precedents in support of this proposition, and subsequently deprecated the mistaken sympathy which was indulged in towards Poland, which had been itself the arch conspirator against Austria, when it was sought to partition that empire, and drive Maria Theresa from her Throne. Why had Austria not been then dismembered? It was because of the greatness, the valour, and the fidelity of her population, which had defended it against that very Poland which was afterwards partitioned, owing to the baseness of its own [illegible] by which it had been betrayed. It was a spurious sympathy to make [illegible] speeches and [illegible] Hall, over a people whom they would unanimously consign back as absolute serfs to the aristocratic tyrants by whom they were held in thraldom. It was absurd to suppose that the Poles, now so much better off now having something of the advantages of personal freedom would rise as a man to struggle for a return to the state of slavery they had previously been compelled to submit to. The hon. member taunted some gentlemen with having made Hudibrastic speeches, and resorted to superfluous rhetoric in that House; and, in conclusion, reminded hon. members that it was upon this occasion of the Russo-Dutch Loan that Mr. Hume had once voted that black was white, and said he understood that he was that night about to do penance for his former error by showing the white feather, and shrinking from a division.

Lord PALMERSTON said the discussion divided itself into two parts, whether the suppression of the city of Cracow was a violation of the Treaty of Vienna, and whether the extinction of that free territory absolved Great Britain from the continuance of the payment of the Russo-Dutch Loan. Notwithstanding the ingenious arguments of Mr. Disraeli, he insisted that the annexation of Cracow was a manifest violation of the Treaty of Vienna. As to the argument founded on the case of Belgium, he maintained that it was not valid, because the separation of Belgium from Holland was agreed to by all the five great Powers, who signed the convention of November, 1831, to that effect. But while persuaded that the extinction of Cracow was a violation of the Treaty of Vienna, he objected to the declaration of that opinion by a resolution of the House of Commons. Therefore, as he could not give the first resolution proposed by Mr. Hume a direct negative, he would meet it by moving the previous question. With respect to the resolution to withhold payment for the future of the Russo-Dutch Loan, he could not assent to it, because he believed that in honour we could not release ourselves from our obligations. The moral strength which the country derived from its strict adherence, not only to the letter, but to the spirit of treaties, was incalculable, and therefore nothing should be done that could possibly impair that moral power. The noble Lord having moved the "previous question," appealed to the "Parliamentary judgment" of Mr. Hume not to press the resolutions to a division.

Mr. J. O'CONNELL denounced the "blood-stained Mattornich," and "the exercrable monster Nicholas."

Mr. HUME confessed that in this instance discretion was the better part of valour, and withdrew his motion.

The House sat till a quarter past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE FACTORY BILL.

On the motion to go into Committee on the Factory Bill, Mr. DENNISTOUN explained the proposition which he was empowered to make to the advocates of the bill on the part of three of the principal firms in Scotland. The proposition was that a period of ten hours should be adopted, by means of which the operatives should work twelve hours and eight hours on alternate days of the week, which would be only an average of ten hours per day. He hoped that the further progress of the bill would be stayed until the manufacturers of Scotland had had time to form an opportunity of considering this proposition, which emanated from three of the most extensive millowners in Scotland. The hon. member then moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on the bill for the purpose.

Mr. Finch, Mr. Aglionby, and Lord John Russell severally advocated the necessity of at once proceeding with the bill in Committee, in which the proposition of the hon. gentleman might be advantageously discussed. The result was that Mr. Dennistoun withdrew his amendment.

Before the House went into Committee on the bill,

Lord J. RUSSELL, at the instigation of Mr. Bright, stated his reasons for supporting the bill, and said he would have done so on one of the former discussions, but that they were prolonged until nearly six o'clock, so that no time remained for him to enter into the question. He thought it was a little too late to pass bills for the education of the people, if they did not take care that they should have some time to profit by the exertions making in their behalf. By the change in the Corn-Laws and the repeal of the duty on cotton a great benefit was conferred on the manufacturers, and it was a duty they owed to the rising generation of operatives to rescue them, if possible, from the infliction of such an oppressive system as the present. He would vote for going into Committee, with the intention of there supporting the limitation of labour in factories to eleven hours.

The House then went into Committee, and the first clause, limiting the hours of labour to eleven per diem, was agreed to without a division.

On the second clause, which proposes to limit the hours of labour to ten after the first day of May, 1848

Lord MORPETH moved that the clause should be expunged from the bill, in order to reduce to the least possible amount the risk to be run by its adoption

The Committee divided upon the clause.

For the clause	144
Against it	66
Majority for the clause ..	78

This division was hailed with loud cheers.

The Bill passed through the Committee, and was reported, with amendments, to the House.

The report was ordered to be received on the 21st of April.

The House adjourned at a quarter to six.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

ROYAL ASSENT.—The Royal Assent was given by commission to the following bills:—The Eight Millions Loan Bill, the Exchequer Bills, the Destitute Poor Relief Indemnity Bill (Ireland), and the General Fire and Life Assurance Bill.

THE WELLINGTON STATUE

The Marquis of LONDONDERRY said he had been requested by the sub-committee of the subscribers to the Wellington Statue, to state that they had no power or means to remove the Statue from Hyde Park-corner to any other site; that it could not properly be fixed upon any pedestal not corresponding in dimensions and style to that for which the Statue was modelled, and that this would require an expenditure that could not be incurred without rendering it the subject of contentious discussion in Parliament and elsewhere, which would be unworthy of the country and veneration in which the illustrious Duke was held by the people of this nation.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that the only contention which had taken place in Parliament or in the country on the subject was by reference to the best mode of placing the statue on the best site, and in the best manner suited to do honour to the illustrious Duke, and to express the feelings of honour and admiration in which he was held by his fellow-countrymen. (Hear, hear.)

The Marquis of LONDONDERRY replied that he was instructed to say that the sub-committee ought not, and could not do more, than take the steps down it they were compelled, and leave it at the foot of the present pedestal. (A laugh.)

THE GENERAL FAST.—On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, it was ordered that the Bishop of St. Asaph be requested to preach before their Lordships in Westminster Abbey, on Wednesday, the 24th inst., being the day appointed for a General Fast

After the presentation of some petitions, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY

THE QUARANTINE LAWS.—Dr. BOWRING moved for a continuation of the correspondence on the subject of the Quarantine-laws. The hon. member drew the attention of the House to the causes of fevers and plagues, and the efforts which were made by former governments to prevent them by marshes, swamps, and other sources of contagious diseases, with a view to limit the dangerous effects of such diseases, and to prevent their progress, and called on the Government to adopt efficient measures for the ventilation, drainage, and promotion of the sanatory condition of the towns and large cities of England. Mr HUME seconded the motion. The return was ordered.

Mr. SMITH O'BRIEN proposed a resolution for placing a local rate on proprietors of land not residing in Ireland, which, after some discussion, was negatived on a division, the numbers being Ayes, 19; Noes, 70.

On the motion of Mr. OSWALD GORE, a Select Committee was appointed to enquire into the necessity of removing Smithfield Market, as a nuisance, from the centre of the metropolis, and the establishment of abattoirs in the vicinity of London

The Earl of LINCOLN moved for correspondence connected with the removal of Mr. Mara from an office held by him under the Attorney-General for Ireland.—The papers were ordered, and the House adjourned.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A Correspondent mentions rather a singular circumstance. A Bank of England note for £20, dated 1736, was paid into that Establishment a few days ago. Supposing that the amount had been invested at interest for the same period, viz. 111 years, the security would have been worth, at compound interest, upwards of £6000.

A letter from Darmstadt states that, on the 17th ult., a robbery of a considerable amount was effected in the Palace of Prince Charles in that town. The objects stolen were six gold candlesticks, a large gold goblet, a coffee service in silver, and a gold basket, ornamented with precious stones. The value of these articles is estimated at 700,000f. The police discovered two of the candlesticks and the goblet at the residence of a Jew pedlar.

The American papers mention a machine, invented by one Elias Howe, which sews "beautiful and strong seams in cloth as rapidly as nine tailors!" [It is equal to a man.]

A Vienna letter states that the most active measures are being taken for laying down the electric telegraph on the lines from Vienna to Milan, from Vienna to Prague, and from Vienna to Perth.

Cape papers to the 10th January have reached us. No important incident had occurred, but matters were rather in an unsettled state. The expedition under Colonel Somerset against Pato, the only remaining refractory chief, had advanced to within fourteen miles of the west bank of the river Kei, from whence it was to proceed to Kreili for conference, for the recovery of colonial cattle, contrary to his assertions, harboured there. The papers mention the indisposition of Colonel Somerset, and the appearance of dysentery among the troops, who have suffered greatly from the fatigues of the late campaign on the frontier.

The barque Stephani, which sailed from Hamburgh on the 28th of October last, was lost on the 18th December in the Gulf Stream, while on her way to Canada, by which upwards of one hundred and sixty emigrants, with a portion of the crew, perished.

The Council of the British Archæological Association have decided upon holding the fourth annual Congress at Warwick, during the last week in July.

The Kendal and Windermere Railway will be ready for opening throughout on the 15th of next month.

Hughenden House and estate, in Bucks, late the property of John Norris, Esq., has been purchased for £35,000, by B. Disraeli, Esq., M.P. Baron M. de Rothschild is said to be in treaty with the Earl of Buckinghamshire, for the purchase of the Earl's estate at Hampden, Bucks.

The Herald and Pandora, surveying vessels, now at Panama, are to proceed, in the course of next month, to the northward, to endeavour to meet Captain Sir J. Franklin, with the Erebus and Terror discovery ships, who may be expected about the end of the year

The misery which prevails in Hungary is such, that several acts of horror have been committed. A workman at Pesth, being no longer able to provide for his numerous family, walked with two of his children to the banks of the Danube, and threw the youngest into the stream; but his strength at seeing it struggle for its life in the waters, impelled him to jump in to endeavour to save it. The child that was left on the bank uttered cries of distress, and said that he would not ask again for bread if they would but save his father. The man was saved, but the child he had thrown in was drowned.

The Great Western Railway has made a very good regulation in respect to passengers' luggage. In addition to the label showing the destination of the luggage, a ticket with the initial letter of the passenger's name is also pasted on it, and the luggage is sorted alphabetically, so that when a passenger goes to Paddington, supposing his name is Brown, he has only to go to a bin marked B, and find his luggage at once.

The Belgian papers contain a decree of King Leopold, dated the 13th instant, to the effect, by which dry provisions of all kinds, whether salted or smoked, are declared free of duty until next October 1. A charge of ten centimes per 1000 kilogrammes only will be imposed upon importations of this description for statistical purposes.

Letters from Leghorn, of the 8th instant, state that some riotous proceedings had taken place at Pisa, and on the occasion of the visit of the Archduke Rainer and the Duke of Modena. A petard was exploded under the walls of the Palace, breaking windows, and the whole military force of the place was put in requisition to keep the people in awe. The ringleaders had not been detected.

It appears by the accounts from Constantinople to the 27th ult., that the dispute between the Greek and Turkish Governments has not yet been settled, but that it is probable it will not be terminated without the intervention of the Ambassadors of the European Powers. The French Ambassador at Athens encouraged the King of Greece not to yield to the just demands of the Porte. One of the letters announces that a conspiracy had just been discovered, in which Hafiz Pacha, lately Minister of Justice, and a great many influential Pachas, were compromised. Numerous arrests had been made, but no particulars had transpired. Great excitement pervaded all classes.

A letter from Hamburg states that, on the 6th inst., there arrived in that town the first train on the Hamburg to Hanover Railway, coming from the latter city. The train contained a number of high functionaries and persons of the Hanoverian party. The line will not, however, it is said, be opened to the public before May 14.

The Overland India Mail by way of France, will positively be despatched on the evening of the 25th instant, on the occasion which should be indicted, as otherwise many persons might delay their correspondence under the idea that the general fast having been appointed for that day, a detention would take place until the 26th.

On Thursday morning, one of the Hastings fishing luggers enclosed so large a quantity of mackerel, near Devonport, that in order to prevent the nets being dragged away, the crew were obliged to have the assistance of several boats, and that is men of which were placed so as to surround the others, and by this means the two strings succeeded in securing upwards of 40,000 mackerel, besides a large number which escaped prior to the assistance of the second boat. The fish realized about £200.

The Augsburg Gazette announces that the northern powers have just addressed to the various Governments in Italy a collective note, calling on them to exercise a more active surveillance over the press, as for some time past the European journals have been putting forth doctrines calculated to undermine social order

The Munich Gazette of the 8th states that the King of Bavaria had appeared on the previous day at the theatre, and was received with loud acclamations from the whole audience. His Majesty was agreeably surprised and warmly affected by these tokens. The King has ordered the discharge or all the persons who were imprisoned for participating in the disturbances on the late change of Ministers.

A letter from Nice states that great agitation prevails amongst the peasantry of Lombardy, owing to the dearness of provisions, and that disturbances were apprehended. Two regiments had arrived in the neighbourhood of Milan, and artillery were on their march.

A Vienna journal states the total amount of the expenditure already incurred by the Austrian Government for railroads at 50 millions of florins (125 millions of francs). The sum apportioned for 1847 is 10 millions of florins.

A letter from Cairo, of the 16th ult., states that the corn crops of Egypt for the present year are of the most promising appearance. In some parts of Lower Egypt the sear is beginning to turn, and the harvest will be got in by the end of the next month.

A settler at Darling Downs, Australia, has sent a letter to The Times, in which he gives a favourable account of that colony. The writer says:—"Labour is very scarce here, and it is hard to get a man at any price. Any common fellow now wants 12s. a week for shepherding, and every man here has a hut provided for him to live in, of course rent free, and abundance to eat, the usual allowance for each person being 12lb. of meat, 8lb. of flour, 2lb. of sugar, and 2lb. of tea per week. I wish they would send out some hundreds of the poor people of England. We could give employment in this district alone to 400 or 500 people at wages from £16 to £24 per annum, and rations of meat as above."

Letters from the seat of war in Circassia mention a dreadful massacre by the Circassians of 5000 men, women, and children, of the Achenes, who had treacherously betrayed the former people to Russia.

The result of the state of the vote on the Sabbath trains question in Scotland, was a majority of 152 in favour of the resolution of the directors to discontinue Sunday trains.

The auxiliary screw steamer, the Sarah Sands, arrived at Liverpool, on Wednesday, in 21 days from New York, which is considered a good passage, particularly as the vessel met with several casualties on her return.

The Cologne Gazette states that a Jew merchant has been at his own expense in England to search for the forgers of notes for ten florins of the Austrian Bank. He succeeded in discovering the forgers at Rochester, and having them arrested. On his return to Vienna, he asked as a recompense for letters of nobleness, which confer valuable privileges upon the Jews in the Austrian monarchy.

The Moniteur Algérien, of the 10th, announces that Marshal Bugeaud, who had been for some time indisposed with a cold, had become so ill, in consequence of being exposed to rain and snow during his journey to Aumale, that, on his return to Algiers, he was compelled to take to his bed. The Moniteur adds, that his illness is not of an alarming character, but that it will detain him for some days.

Repeated trials of the atmospheric system, on the South Devon Railway, between Exeter and Turf, have been made during the past week, and with an invariable success.

During the week ending the 14th instant there were 799 passengers to Boulogne, and 257 to Calais. The account of the corresponding week last year gives 334 passengers to Boulogne and 250 to Calais.

A very curious fossil was last week discovered in a solid bed of dark sandstone, at the base of the cliffs between Luccombe and Shanklin, (Isle of Wight). It consists of the trunk of a cherry-tree, and two limbs or branches, the bark on which is well preserved. The trunk measured 24 inches in circumference, and four feet in length.

LOLA MONTEZ.

LOLA MONTEZ.

THE character of the Spanish dancer, whose pas and poses have been more than a match for a Ministry, upheld by all the influence of the Jesuits, is better known than her history. As she has enough of literary ability to be a prominent correspondent of the Times, and as her recent feats have given her a political importance, she will doubtless favour the world with her memoirs; but till she does, the only things that can be gathered concerning her, are a few particulars floating on the surface of conversation and rumour. She is said to be a daughter of Montez, the celebrated Torrero of Spain, the Prince of Bullfighters, the Master in the school of Tauromachia; but he denies the impeachment. Again, there is a whisper of her having British, or at least Hibernian, blood in her veins. Perhaps both suspicions are true, her extreme combativeness seeming to confirm them. One thing alone is certain, that she is very beautiful, has much talent, joined with a violent and most ungovernable temper. Wherever she appears, she is in the midst of an imbroglio. Managers, Gendarmes, Ministers, and Monarchs, all succumb to her: pride, obstinacy, passion, talent, and beauty, make her one of those women who are just what they please to be. Lola has chosen to be a Countess, and she is one. She danced once or twice in London, and in former reigns might have shaken a Cabinet here—but she was an age too late. At Paris, she only got into a desperate quarrel with the Manager of the Opera, because she insisted on dancing without certain portions of costume that are de rigueur: even the stage has its laws. At the Porte St. Martin, she danced twice—on the first occasion beating one nymph of the Ballet; on the second, attempting to stab another with a dagger, which, in the Spanish fashion, she always carries about her.

A French authority describes her form as perfection. She has the small foot of the Andalusian, the hand of a Duchess, a profusion of black hair, features of exquisite delicacy, and eyes of fascination, being at once soft and terrible, the orbs that are either veiled with tears, or lanching lightning and poniards!

Is there any wonder in what has happened at Munich? It is a scandal, of course; but the Court of Bavaria was never remarkable for its morality; and the Ministers who now weep over the King's infatuation, never did so till, by some means yet unknown, the Mistress of the hour urged him to carry his disposition to liberal measures into action.

In Charles the Second's time, the mob of London cheered the "Protestant" Sultana, to express their hate of the French one. At Munich, the King has grown quite popular since Lola inspired him with boldness enough to dismiss his Jesuit Ministry. In her letter to the Times, Lola thus explains some recent events in that city:—

"I had not been here a week before I discovered that there was a plot existing in the town to get me out of it, and that the party was the Jesuit party. Of course you are aware that Bavaria has long been their stronghold, and Munich their head-quarters. This naturally to a person brought up and instructed from her earliest youth to detest this party (I think you will say justly), irritated me not a little.

"When they saw that I was not likely to leave them, they commenced on another tack, and tried what bribery would do, and actually offered me 50,000f yearly if I would quit Bavaria and promise never to return. This, as you may imagine, opened my eyes; and, as I indignantly refused their offer, they have since then not left a stone unturned to get rid of me, and have never for an instant ceased persecuting me. I may mention as one instance that within this last week, a Jesuit professor of philosophy, in the University here, of the name of Lassaulx, was removed from his professorship, upon which the party paid and hired a mob to insult me, and break the windows of my house, and also to attack the Palace; but, thanks to the better feeling of the other party, and the devotedness of the soldiers to his Majesty and his authority, this plot likewise failed."

BURNING OF THE CARLSRUHE THEATRE.

IN our Journal of last week, we detailed this lamentable catastrophe. We now annex a Sketch of the Theatre: it was attached to the Ducal Palace, and was open three times a week. The building was plain in its exterior, but was well fitted up within. The central lower range of building in the Sketch consisted of the Painting-Rooms; the entrance to the Vestibule or Hall of the Theatre being midway in the range. To the right and left is the conservatory and the orangery. In front is a path and roadway, and in the immediate foreground is a shrubbery and grove of trees, leading to the Palace.

BURNING OF THE CARLSRUHE THEATRE.

RELICS OF BRIDEWELL HOSPITAL.

AT the last meeting of the Architectural College of the Freemasons of the Church, Messrs. Arding and Son presented a Norman pellet moulding, and a cherub's head, both, during last week, dug out of the foundations of some buildings adjoining Bridewell Hospital.

CHERUB'S HEAD, FROM BRIDEWELL HOSPITAL.

The ancient Palace of Bridewell was founded upon the remains of a building, supposed to be Roman; and inhabited by the Kings of England previous to the Conquest. It afterwards became a residence of Henry VIII., and was converted by Edward VI., at the entreaty of Bishop Ridley, into a House of Correction for vagabonds. Of the objects here represented, the architectural fragment is, apparently, a relic of the time of Henry I., who gave stone towards the re-edification of the building. The Head refers to a later period.

Bridewell is a name frequently given to Houses of Correction, from the Hospital in Blackfriars—the first place of confinement in which penitentiary amendment was a leading object—being situate near St. Bride's Well, one of the ancient holy wells of London. The boys of Bridewell were originally distinguished by a particular dress, and were in the habit of attending fires with an engine belonging to the Hospital. In 1755, a report was made to the Governors respecting the unruly conduct of the Bridewell boys: their turbulence in the streets having become a great annoyance to peaceable citizens. From the time their peculiar costume was laid aside, their general conduct underwent an improvement.

AT the meeting whereat the above relics were exhibited, the principal paper read, which, from the nature of its subject, proved of great interest to a crowded audience, was entitled "A Discourse on the Architectural Remains of Ancient London." It was delivered by the Recorder of the College, Mr. J. W. Archer; it embraced the localities of the Tower, with some dissertation on the Wall of London, and the question of a Roman edifice having occupied some part of the Tower enclosure; some description of the subterranean Chapel of St. Michael, at Aldgate, with a suggestion for its restoration; a notice of the Fishmongers' Almshouses or Hospital of St. Peter, in Southwark, about to be demolished; an account of some of the old signs and street monuments still existing; a notice of Temple-bar and the old Bulk Shop, lately adjoining; fragments of the Savoy Palace and of Southampton House; and a notice of the monastic custom of St. Giles's Bowl.

NORMAN PELLET MOULDING, FROM BRIDEWELL HOSPITAL.

This Institution, although founded in 1842, never came into actual operation until 1845, since which it has gradually increased in efficiency, and in the number of its members; it now has among them Professor Cockerell, R.A.; J. D. Papworth, Esq.; Mr. George Godwin, F.R.S., F.S.A., &c.

LINES, WRITTEN ON THE GENERAL FAST

ORDERED BY HER MAJESTY TO BE KEPT MARCH 24TH, 1847, ON OCCASION OF THE FAMINE WITH WHICH IT HAS PLEASED GOD TO VISIT THESE COUNTRIES.

In Holy Writ there is heard a warning voice,
And they who list it well
Will find a golden spell
To guide their path and rejoice
In Prosperity's high
To joy is good,
But in Sorrow's night
Wear ye the hood.

There are who deem it worse than weak and vain
To let a brother's eye,
Read the heart's mystery,
And scan its joy, or sorrow, pleasure, pain.
Alas! that self and pride,
Some breasts should steel,
Till we have learned to hide
Both woe and weal.

But 'tis by no means thus with all; for still,
Some gentler hearts attend
The law that bids us lend
True love to fallen man, in deed and will.
And should our fellow-man
Refuse to hear,
Vainly we never can
Address God's ear.

High as the boundless arch of glorious Heaven
Above this earth ascends,
So far His love extends
O'er contrite souls that pray to be forgiven.
When sorrow doth o'ertake
He bids us pause,
Observe and then forsake
Our sorrow's cause.

And now upon thy once most favoured land
O Britain timely see,
In dearth and misery,
The inflictions of His chastening heavy hand.
Go, lift thy voice and weep,
Let all lament
The ills that o'er thee sweep,
And each repent.

Now with clean hands and humble fervent zeal,
Priests of the Holy One,
Before His awful Throne
In intercession supplication kneel,
It may be He will turn
His wrath away,
Who never yet did spurn
Sinners that pray.

Then let us keep our sad and solemn fast,
And search our breasts within,
For every ruling sin,
And every sin and error of the past.
The hand of love to all
Whilst we extend,
O Father hear our call,
And succour send!

G. E. ALSTON.

a Ecclesiastes, VII. v. 14.

THE LATE MR. CRIPPS.—The late Member for Cirencester, Joseph Cripps, Esq., banker, Gloucester, has bequeathed to his twelve children specific pecuniary legacies to the amount of upwards of £80,000, and the residue amongst five of them. He directed that his freeholds should be sold, and added to his personalty, which was valued at £40,000. His eldest son takes nearly a fourth of the property.

MR. BURFORD'S NEW PANORAMA OF CAIRO.

PANORAMA OF CAIRO.

Mr. Burford has just opened, in the larger circle of his establishment at Leicester-square, a very finely painted panoramic view of the City of Cairo, and the surrounding country. The picture has some peculiar artistic advantages: it has been painted from drawings made for the purpose by Mr. David Roberts, R.A., during his late journey in the East; and the costumes of the various figures have been principally taken from a collection of dresses in the possession of that gentleman. From such sources Mr. Burford, assisted by Mr. H. C. Selous, has produced a picture of superior pretensions as a work of art. The architectural drawing is minute yet picturesque, as might be expected from the exhibition of the results of Mr Roberts's tour, a few years since—one of the most beautiful sets of drawings ever executed. By the vigour of Mr. Roberts's pencil, the large assemblage of buildings has been admirably relieved of monotonous character; at the same time that the minarets of the several mosques present some fine specimens of eastern architecture, as they rise from the mass of flat-roofed houses, against the bright blue sky; the whole surrounded by luxuriant groves and gardens, some of the trees and plants of which are new to the eyes of Europeans.

The Panorama has been taken from a mound nearly 150 feet high, commanding a complete view of the city and suburbs, and of the surrounding country to a vast extent. Immediately in front of the spectator, westward, lies the city, scarcely traceable in its plan, from the overhanging houses obscuring the narrow streets; but, as we have already intimated, hundreds of proudly swelling domes and slender minarets, rich in ornament, break the flat outline of the house roofs. Beyond the city, to the left, lies Old Cairo, and the richly wooded island of Rhoda; to the right, the port of Boulak, and the palaces and groves of Shoobra. The eye then rests on the Nile, flowing between its verdant banks; and thence to the horizon extends the great Lybian desert, in some parts bounded by the mountains of Lybia and Upper Egypt; the low line from south to west, broken by the majestic pyramids of Dachour, Sakkarah, and Geezeh. Northward extend the fertile Delta and Goshen; to the east is a very city of magnificent tombs of the Memlook Caliphs, mosques, minarets, and sepulchres, with golden sand of the Desert stretching to Suez. To the right, the immense citadel frowns from its rocky crest; and the circle is completed by the fine back-ground of the black Mokkattam mountains.

We have engraved a portion of the Panorama, showing some of the principal features of the city—viz., the minarets and domes of three of the most important mosques, in the foreground; with the Pyramids, Old Cairo, the town of Geezeh, and the Lybian mountains in the far-off distance.

Cairo is comparatively a modern city (tenth century). It was the emporium of at least two quarters of the globe so late as the fifteenth century; but the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, and the reduction of Egypt by the Ottomans, transferred to other states the trade it had so long monopolised. Nevertheless, the advantages of its geographical position, and the extreme fertility of the soil, have enabled Cairo to regain much of its commerce, by becoming the point of contact between Europe and Asia.

"The immense importance of the overland passage through Cairo, established mainly by the energy of Lieutenant Waghorn, is sufficiently obvious, in the rapid communication with our Eastern possessions. The effects of this intercourse are also very visible in the city, in the changes that have taken place during the last few years in the manners and customs of the inhabitants, especially in their treatment of foreigners. Order and security of property have been established, the laws have been more equitably administered, manufactories of all kinds have risen, and more useful institutions have been called into existence by the Pasha, than by any other Sovereign of Egypt, or, perhaps, of the whole world. A system of education and schools has also been formed, of which not the slightest conception existed in the East. In Cairo and its immediate vicinity, there are no less than ninety-five public schools, where at least 11,000 children and young persons are educated, and the greater proportion fed, lodged, and even paid by the Pasha; from amongst whom are selected the pupils for the military, naval, and medical colleges."

Cairo is a city of curiosities: it has nearly 400 mosques, some of them fioridly decorated; and a few of the minarets resemble finely chased candelabra, or carvings in ivory. There are many handsome baths, well-stocked bazaars, vast inns; and coffee-houses, crowded with story-tellers, and listeners, and jugglers. The houses are of stone, bricks, or clay, have terraced roofs, but no chimneys. The fronts are painted in stripes of red, green, &c.; and the narrow, crooked streets are mostly crowded with a motley throng of Turks, Copts, Armenians, Arabs, Franks, and Jews, in every variety of costume and completely emnodying some of the vivid descriptions of the Arabian Nights.

The improved means of transit have made "A Journey from Cornhill to Cairo" (as Tinmarsh phrases it) a very pleasurable affair in this age of locomotive facility. The traveller lands at Alexandria, sends his luggage on by camels to the point on the Mahmoudie Canal, about three miles off, where the track-boats for Atfeh are stationed. Thither he proceeds himself on foot, on horseback, on donkey, or in a carriage, visiting Cleopatra's Needle, and Pompey's Pillar in his way; and, on arriving at the banks of the canal, near Meharem Bey's Palace, he finds track-boats, in one of which, and a Nile steamer, he proceeds to Cairo, in about twenty-four hours.

The late Mr. William Clowes.—The stock-in-trade and personal property of this eminent printer has been valued at £90,000. With the exception of a few bequests, viz., to his executors, and to his friend and old assistant, Mr. D. Phipps, and to his servants, he disposes of the whole of his property amongst his eight children in certain proportions, and the residue equally amongst them.

The Coinage.—The Lords of the Privy Council held a meeting on Tuesday, when a Jury of Goldsmiths were sworn and were charged by the Lord Chancellor to make the assay of the coins deposited as specimens from the different coinages in the Pix of the Royal Mint, between the 13th February, 1845, and the 13th July, 1846, in order to ascertain whether they were of the requisite fineness and weight, according to the standard of the currency. The monies had been coined and delivered by the Right Hon. Sir George Clerk, Bart., the then Master and Worker. The Jury having received a portion of the ancient trial plate, retired to make the assay of the coins set apart and kept in the Pix. The official account stated that, during the period above named, there had been coined (pursuant to Mint indenture, dated Feb. 5, 1817) after the rate of 46 20-40 sovereigns to the pound weight troy, of the standard of 22 carats of fine gold and 2 carats of alloy, 153,617lbs. 4oz. 2dwt 14g troy of gold; that the sovereigns put into the Pix amounted to 8849; the half-sovereigns, to 1393. Total value of the gold coinage, £7,177,770 8s. The silver monies coined during the same period, after the rate of 66 shillings to the pound weight troy, of the standard of 11oz 2dwts. fine silver, and 18dwts. of alloy, 236,960lbs troy of silver. Crowns put into the Pix, 324; half crowns, 1836; shillings, 1591; sixpences, 729; groats, 118; Maundy and Colonial monies, 110. Total value of silver coinage, £947,034.

NEW (INDEPENDENT) CHAPEL, AT MANCHESTER.

On Wednesday, the first stone of this handsome edifice for the accommodation of the Independents of Manchester, was laid with due ceremony, in Cavendish-street.

The Plan consists of a nave and side-aisles, with transepts, and apse, for organ gallery, at the east end. The nave, nine feet in length, is divided from the aisles by five lofty arches, on clustered columns, supporting a clerestory of coupled lights under one arch, with side panels in each bay. The west front consists of a principal entrance, deeply recessed, with columns, and enriched arch moulds; a lofty window over, with a continued arcade across the entire front, connecting the tower at the south-west angle with the general design. In the gable is a five light window, and a canopied niche, with octagonal pinnacle over, separating the north aisle from the nave. The tower is in four stages, flanked with bold buttresses in four offsets, and terminating with canopies under the corbel tables of the spire, which is broached. The upper stage of the tower is arcaded, and pierced for two lights. The total height of the tower and spire is 165 feet. The four canopied niches terminate the tabling of the broach, with three heights of storm-lights in the cardinal sides of the spire; and the storm-lights on the broach are coupled with crocketed canopies over, springing from side pinnacles resting on carved figures. A deeply-recessed porch, two stages in height, is formed between the buttresses of the south side of the tower: in the gable and above is an enriched three-light window under one arch. The aisles are flanked with boldly-projecting buttresses, terminating in canopied heads above the moulded and enriched parapets. The windows are coupled under one arch with foliated circles in four cusps over. The transepts are arcaded with five arches, three pierced for lights; and all the arches are dog-toothed. In the several gables are coupled windows, under one arch, with side panels; and the angles are flanked with buttresses, crowned by octagonal pierced pinnacles. The east end of the Chapel is lighted by a large wheel window, in ten lights, over the organ gallery. The roofs are open, carried by carved brackets, springing from enriched corbels; and an ornamental screen terminates the east end.

The building is calculated to seat from 1400 to 1500 people.

NEW (INDEPENDENT) CHAPEL, CAVENDISH-STREET, MANCHESTER.

The style is the Early Transition to Decorated; and the whole of the work will be externally executed in stone.

The first stone of the edifice was laid by Mr. Alderman Kershaw, on Wednesday, at twelve o'clock, in the presence of a large and attentive auditory.

After singing, the Rev. James Griffin engaged in prayer. The Rev. Dr. Halley then stepped forward, and, presenting a handsome silver trowel, referred to Mr. Kershaw's munificent contributions towards the erection, and his untiring exertions in the promotion of the object.

Mr. Alderman Kershaw, after spreading the mortar, and adjusting the stone, with the plummet and mallet, pronounced it to be "all right;" and then, mounting on the top, said that the edifice, when reared, would be a monument of the religious freedom of this country; and the services therein would be one means of the perpetuity of Congregational principles.

The Rev. Dr. Vaughan, in an eloquent speech, congratulated the Rev. Dr. Halley and the congregation on the contemplated erection; and, after prayer by the Rev. James Gwyther, the assemblage separated.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 21. Fifth Sunday in Lent—St. Benedict—Vernal Equinox
Spring Quarter commences
MONDAY, 22.—The Sun rises due E., and sets W. Length of Day, 12h. 13m.
TUESDAY, 23.—The Moon enters her first quarter at 5h. 41m., p.m.
WEDNESDAY, 24.—The day has increased 4h. 32m. since the Shortest Day—Day breaks at 3h. 59m., a.m.; Twilight ends at 8h. 14m., p.m.
THURSDAY, 25. Annunciation—Lady Day.
FRIDAY, 26.—Cambridge Term ends.
SATURDAY, 27.—Oxford Term ends.

On March 21st, the Moon and Jupiter will be near together. During the week, no particular astronomical phenomena will take place, except that of an occultation of a star of the fifth magnitude on the 22nd, and another of the fifth magnitude on the 24th. (See "Illustrated London Almanack.") Next week, an Eclipse of the Moon takes place; and we beg to say, in answer to the many letters we have received relative to it, since the beginning of the year, that the times stated in the "Illustrated London Almanack," of its successive phases, are correct, although about twenty minutes later than they are in the Almanacks referred to by our Correspondents.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 27.

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. h. m. 0 0	A. h. m. 0 25	M. h. m. 0 50	A. h. m. 1 15	M. h. m. 1 42	A. h. m. 2 6	M. h. m. 2 31
M. h. m. 0 30	A. h. m. 0 55	M. h. m. 1 20	A. h. m. 1 46	M. h. m. 2 12	A. h. m. 2 36	M. h. m. 3 0
M. h. m. 5 5	A. h. m. 5 30	M. h. m. 5 55	A. h. m. 6 20	M. h. m. 6 47	A. h. m. 7 11	M. h. m. 7 36
M. h. m. 5 35	A. h. m. 6 0	M. h. m. 6 25	A. h. m. 6 51	M. h. m. 7 17	A. h. m. 7 41	M. h. m. 8 5

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Rose" There was a General Fast on account of the Cholera, just fifteen years since, on March 21, 1832

"A Reader." Liverpool, is thanked for the Sketches.

"Numismatist."—The Coins of which impressions have been received are—1 and 2 of Alexander the Great; 3 of Rhodes; 4 of Cos; 5 of Heraea, in Eubœa. Stephen, King of England, only coined Pennies. Send a wax impression to Mr. Webster, 17, Great Russell-street, Covent Garden.

"Z."—We do not interfere in disputes at Cards.

"R. L.," Islington, must be mistaken; perhaps, he will state the No.

"E. S." Corsham, can recover the Debt, under the circumstances stated.

"E. D. L."—The best of recently published Works on Canada is that by Sir Richard Bonnycastle, which contains much valuable information for Emigrants: the book is, however, somewhat costly.

"B. Y.," Southampton.—Apply to an Army Agent.

"F. S.," Edinburgh, will find in No. 89 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS an Engraving of the Façade of the New British Museum, from Sir Robert Smirke's design. It is grand, but severe, in style

"A Constant Reader."—See "A Manual of Oil-Painting," to be published on the 31st inst. There have been several works published under the other title named.

"J. J." Clapham.—The boy must be very difficult to "settle."

"A Subscriber from No. 1," Gainsborough, will find the colours of Mulready's "Choosing the Wedding Gown," at Page 54, No. 247, of our Journal

"Inquisitor."—See the article on Public Education, in the present Number. The Duke of Enghien was born in 1772, and was the son of the Duke of Bourbon, and grandson of the Prince of Condé, being a lateral branch of the then-reigning family of France

"B."—We do not see how the giving up of interest can invalidate a claim for the principal; although it may favour the assumption that the latter has been "paid off."

"H. H.," Walsall.—Received.

"J. W. P.," Rusholme, will find an excellent Memoir of the second Earl of Orrery, (to whom our Correspondent probably refers), in the "Penny Cyclopædia," under "Boyle, Charles"

"H. L. G." We shall be glad to have more of the proceedings before we can take upon us to recommend the measure

"M."—We regret that we have not room for the Lines.

"M. C."—If the Sketches be forwarded, we will decide at once

"A Reader."—"Richardson's English Dictionary;" a work of sound research.

"W.," Pershore We do not recommend the method referred to; though it would, doubtless, answer the purpose.

"M. L." is recommended to read Locke's "On the Lost Senses," in Knight's Shilling Volumes

"J. B. C." can recover to the amount incurred, without reference to the proportion it bears to the entire value of the property.

"K. G.," Brighton.—The Wills of deceased persons may be inspected at the Prerogative Will Office, Doctors' Commons, open from 9 to 3, except on Sundays and holidays

"E. T.," Windsor.—The amount of the Civil List, for the past year, was £393,051 4s. 8d.

"A. M. C.," Barnwham, under the circumstances, had better adhere to the Statute.

"R. J. A."—The impressions of Monumental Brasses are technically termed "Rubbings."

"A Constant Subscriber" will, perhaps, favour us with a Sketch of the old Building about to be demolished at Marlborough.

"An Old Exhibitor at the Royal Academy" is assured that we shall not relax in our Illustrations of the Art-Exhibitions of the Season. We shall commence when it opens

"J. P.," Kingsland.—Declined.

"A Correspondent," Eton College.—The Montem will not be repeated. A Series of Illustrations of the last celebration of this Festival, (in 1844), will be found in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 104. See the Statue of George III. at the end of the Long Walk, in Windsor Great Park, is by Westmacott.

"R. G. L.," Lakenham.—Apply to Mr. Landells, Engraver, 14, Holford-square, Pentonville. The Population Question was replied to in our last

"A Subscriber" is thanked; but we have not room for the Cornish Church. The word is "Sonnambula."

"A Poor Country Subscriber." Probably, a Jeweller.

"Senex" is thanked for his note, though we have not room to print it. Our Correspondent recommends for the Relief of the Irish Poor, the exportation of Goats to Ireland; the return of the Genius, to "dwell in the land;" and fears that the English poor, as well as manufactures, will be the sufferers from the present really needful expenditure on Ireland.

"A Constant Subscriber." We cannot explain the non-engagement of Formosari.

"Lemuel."—Probably, next week

"J. W.," New York, is thanked; but we cannot spare room.

"Pulka."—The dimensions of Almack's Grand Ball-room are about 100 ft. by 40 ft. The greatest number of persons ever present here, upon one occasion, is stated at 1700

"A Subscriber" should read the Royal Proclamation for the Fast to be observed on Wednesday next

"Ex." who is intending to publish," should address his inquiry to the Editors of the Periodicals to which he wishes to contribute

"T. W.," who is anxious to purchase a copy of the "Encyclopædia Britannica," may hear of one by addressing "J. G.," Post-office, Macclesfield, near Chippenham.

"A Constant Subscriber," Lewes.—We believe the "Pennanular Medals" to be in progress

"R. W. M.," Ramsgate, who has an Income of £150 per annum, is liable to the income tax

"A. C." and "R. D.," Newcastle, are recommended to consult the last annotated edition of "Rob Roy."

"A Student of History."—Crowe's "History of France," in the "Cabinet Cyclopædia," is an accredited work

"Snob," Edinburgh.—See "Parlour Magic," for Sympathetic Inks, et id genus omne

"B. P." We cannot give the names of the authors of the three Novels published anonymously.

"Bath Punch" may obtain both the works in question.

"H. M. H." recommends that, to prevent mistakes in administering medicine, all embrocations should be put into green bottles, and draughts into white ones.

"W. B." Midhurst.—Application for a Congregation to turn to the Eastern portion of a Church, while they recite the Apostles' Creed, (though there is no direction given in our Church to that effect); but, there is a Canon (18th of 1604), ordering reverence to be made at the name of Jesus, as is generally done at this part of the Service, whenever it occurs during Public Worship. (See Philip iv. 10.)

"A Gloucester Subscriber."—The Carlton Club House is situated at about the middle of the south side of Pall Mall. We do not remember the Club to have been located in Waterloo-place.

"B. B."—The cost of Rubbings of ancient Monumental Brasses varies from 3s. or 4s. upwards

"M. C.," Ashburton.—The Post-office reply is from the accredited party.

"A Constant Reader," Ipswich. The Camden Society has been established about seven years: it was named after the great "nourrice of antiquitie—Camden." Mr. Darwin has written "The Young Duke."

"Lancastrian." Apply to Mr. Andreaes, 11, Old Compton-street, Soho.

"A Governess" is recommended to apply to a respectable Broker.

"L. N. L.," Calderstone. The published List of Foreign Consuls does not include one for Mecklenburg Strelitz

"Helen," "An Old Subscriber," Exeter, and "M. L." had better consult a Solicitor

"Sam Sleaf" "Felix on the Bat." Address to the Secretary of the Club, Lord's Ground.

"Y. Z." should consult a work on the Legal Point, just published by Saunders and Benning.

"L. Pendico."—The red hand is the badge of a Baronetcy.

"An Old Subscriber," Derby.—The speculation is a combination, chiefly of foreigners, against English enterprise

"——ley, Chertsey, should consult the Municipal Corporations Act.

"H. L.," Liverpool.—The first treaty and diplomatic named.

"H. ——" Consult "The Stammerer's Hand-book."

"W. ——" is thanked for his letter; but we cannot print it.

"——" For the residences of the English Bishops, see the "Court Guide."

"L. L." Next week

"Phalo-Phano" is thanked; but we have not room.

"Louis S." "Ramsay's Italian Grammar," price 5s

"O." The party should apply to the Hackney Carriage Office, Somerset House. The tonnage of the Sidon steamer is 1328. The spoiled Postage Stamps are useless

"Blackburn."—Darley's "Familiar Astronomy."

"S. J. G."—The transactions would, we believe, be a Partnership.

"A. M. Y."—The Farmer's Series of the "Library of Useful Knowledge."

"An Amateur Turner," Chirk.—The price of the "Hand-book of Turning" is 7s. 6d.

"J. C. H.," Chatham.—Received

"A Knitter."—In a week or two

"F. B.," St. James's.—Lord Cottenham was born 29th April, 1781; Earl Stanhope, 7th Dec., 1781; the Earl of Gainsborough, 2nd Oct., 1781; Lord Scarsdale, 3rd Jan., 1781; Sir John Hope, Bart., of Craighall, 13th April, 1781; and Sir Charles Knightley, Bart., 30th Jan., 1781

"A Correspondent," Clifton, near Bristol.—No son is entitled to bear his mother's crest, or adopt her surname, unless authorised by special grant.

"Kenigern."—We will make enquiry.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 20, 1847.

THE debates on Ireland continue; and continue, also, to present their usual characteristics; they are political and social Jeremiads, and the journals that publish them bear no small resemblance to the prophet's scroll "written within and without with lamentations, mourning, and woe."

The debate of Monday was another sad repetition of facts that all knew before; of propositions made with a full knowledge that they cannot be adopted; of reproaches now useless, since they amend nothing; and, perhaps, of repentance that comes too late, and is not the less keenly felt because it is not avowed. But in the midst of the tumult, it is easy to perceive the direction legislation is taking. The whole force and influence of public opinion in England is compelling the landlords, or it is better to say the property of Ireland, to receive a Poor Law. It is two centuries and a half behind England in its enactment, and, even now, is resisted with all the power that property has of defending itself; but resistance is useless. It is no credit to the wisdom or forethought of statesmen that the obvious expedient was not adopted long ago. The same necessity was always hanging over us. Ireland, in the best of times, was always on the brink of the abyss; but the former visitations were partial, and but little regarded, and we are now paying the penalty of our apathy. The first passing symptoms of the disease were neglected, and we are now in the agony of the crisis, with no small danger of social dissolution.

The property of Ireland, through its representatives, resists the extension of a Poor Law as if it were quite a novel experiment in our social system; it exclaims against it, and cries out confiscation—paying meanwhile about five-pence in the pound on its rental by law, and, where there is no compulsion, giving little or nothing. Mr. Labouchere openly stated on Monday evening that the classes who had most failed in their duty at the present juncture, were precisely those who were best able to discharge it. Another Member, Major Layard, stated that, in the city of Dublin, the houses that did not contribute to the Mendicity Fund (a kind of voluntary Poor-Rate), were very often those of the richest. The rates of ejectments, clearings, and all the long list of legal but heartless practices that reach England from the other side of the Channel, have hardened Englishmen against those who have for centuries held the fate of Ireland in their hands. The plain fact is before us, too dreadfully evident to be overlooked: with the possession of all things—almost exclusive possession of the property of the island—an absolute monopoly of political power, patronage, and place—the command of the Government, and, through that Government, the making of the laws—the dominant class in Ireland have reduced both England and Ireland to this. We cannot accept the plea that is so often alleged, that the famine is a special visitation of Providence. When effects can be clearly traced to causes, human sufferings are brought down on us by our own misconduct, it is ourselves we should accuse, not the Creator. Never were there more frequent or more unmistakeable warnings given to a blind and deaf generation than the rulers of this land have received of the social condition of the Sister Kingdom. Our present state is but a repetition, with an increase of intensity, of what has often been seen before—and disregarded. But the consequences did not fall so heavily on the Exchequer as at present; a season passed away; one famine was forgotten till another came. This one we cannot forget or neglect, for it threatens our own existence. So we begin, at last, to give Ireland the same laws as England; the 43rd of Elizabeth was passed under very similar circumstances; it was not dictated by charity or benevolence, for in the same age paupers were not been punished as a capital crime; and thousands of men, guilty only of want and its consequence, were hanged without the slightest scruple. But that did not effect the purpose, and at last a Poor Law was given as a measure of social safety; such it has ever since been, and such it will prove in Ireland; the greatest danger of its failure will be found in the disposition of those who will be called on to administer it; it is forced on them, and they are not likely to give it the full and fair trial it deserves.

THE Wellington Statue has again appeared above the surface in the not very smooth waters of public discussion. The Government, or at least the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, are still at variance with the Committee; and the unfortunate statue, having got on to the Arch, is left there, because a dispute exists as to who ought to be at the expense of taking it down again. The whole affair is unfortunate in itself; but, from the revelation it furnishes of the mode in which all things connected with the Fine Arts are dealt with among us, it may prove a useful lesson. A tithe of the practicality exhibited by the Committee of a Railway Company would save us from casting a colossal statue without knowing where it is to be placed; it would prevent all the cabals and intrigues that make our "testimonials" little better, in too many cases, than jobs, in which art and the person who is to be honoured are the lightest considerations. Those things render us the laughing-stock of Europe, and, among ourselves, "make the judicious grieve."

Whatever becomes of the Statue, the discredit of the proceedings cannot be got rid of. The last quarrels are as bad as the first. The Committee "conceives" that the Government is bound to take down the Statue; the Government "conceives" the very reverse; so the parties have evidently not come to a clear understanding with each other. There is a dissension, too, concerning the scaffold poles: all very petty and miserable indeed.

The very Statue seems to look down upon the world in scorn, with true military tact, holding its position by the disputes of those who are to dislodge it, in the full enjoyment of that advantage well known to every old campaigner—that "possession is nine points" in his favour.

THE foreign intelligence of the week contains subject matter enough for reflection. The game of Civil War is being played out in most dilatory style in Portugal—it is whispered with loaded dice. France is troubled, like England, with dearth within her borders; so is Belgium; in Flanders, indeed, richly cultivated as the land is, the visitation seems to have fallen on the people more heavily than anywhere else, except Ireland. The scene that was witnessed at Brussels the other day, cannot have been exceeded during the middle ages—whose spirit still lingers, indeed, over the soil that bears such cities as Bruges and Ghent. The police of Brussels, alarmed at the influx of mendicants into the city, gathered them together in a body, and escorted them with soldiery out of the gates, to the number of twelve hundred, of every variety of wretchedness. A dismal procession it must have been; the sight of so much destitution massed together was a lesson not to be lightly forgotten; it is added that the inhabitants distributed to them bread and money as the pale and tattered line moved feebly along. Fine pictures have been painted from scenes and events of far less pathos.

From Russia there are rumours of revolts of peasants, in which they have massacred their Lords. What happens in the interior of Russia is as much a mystery as ever; all we know is, vague reports are all that travel into the world beyond its frontiers; but these massacres are not rare in the History of Russia: the Serfs, when treated more like demons than men; and, being fanatically attached to the Czar, who has, by freeing them, sought to reduce the power of the Nobles, they are easily excited to fury against their proprietors; they have but to be told that their Lords are thwarting the good designs of their great father the Emperor, and they do all that can be imagined from the frenzy of men, as a class, oppressed and plundered, maddened with the threefold intoxication of brandy, fanaticism, and revenge.

At Rome, the work of improvement "goes bravely on." The disabilities of the Jews have been lessened; municipal institutions are being organised, and the laity are called in to take a share in the civil Government of the State, hitherto exclusively in the hands of the clergy. But one measure of Pope Pius might be with great advantage imitated by a Government with which we are better acquainted. The Correspondent of the Daily News at Rome says:—

He has called together at the Quirinal Palace a numerous assembly of the principal landowners of the Roman territory, and, in a vigorous allocution, plainly told them that he would no longer tolerate individual neglect in allowing so many broad acres to remain unproductive, and so many of his faithful peasantry to remain unemployed. He gave them notice that a vigilant eye would be kept on the management of the gigantic territorial districts confided to their care; denied that they might do as they pleased with their own, while their content hands unemployed and mouths unfed within the boundary of their estates; told them that if he found labourers in want of work on their properties, he would himself find occupation for them at the proprietors' expense; and finally, dismissed the astonished feudal lords with a new, but firm, impression that duties as well as rights formed part of their landed inheritance. What he said, he is the man to do.

He adds:—

To understand the full value of this bold step on the part of PIUS IX., besides exhibiting him as seeking the support of the people alone, without reference to the suffrages of an effete aristocracy, it is necessary to know that five-sevenths of the whole population depend on agriculture, which forms the real resources of the kingdom.

The preponderance of agriculture in the social system of Ireland, the neglect of cultivation for the ensuing year, and the gloomy prospect it holds outs, render this proceeding of the Roman Pontiff of more than a distant interest to us.

THE WEATHER.

THE weather during the past week has been very remarkable, on account of the great difference of temperature during the week, and the very unusual degree of dryness in the atmosphere. In a postscript to my report of last week I mentioned that, on the morning of Thursday, March 11, the thermometer reading had been as low as 17°. It rose during the day to 37½°: but it continued at this point a short time, and fell to 25° before midnight: the average temperature of this day was only 27½°, being about 14° below that of the season. Remarkable as this day was with respect to its low temperature, it was much more so on account of the dryness of the air. At times during the day the temperature of the dew-point was 18° below that of the air, the latter being at the time 28°, and consequently, if at this time all the vapour then mixed with the atmosphere had been precipitated, it would have produced less than one inch in depth of water. The weight of vapour in a cubic foot of air was but little more than one grain; usually, at this season of the year, there are three or four grains in the same mass of air. The barometer reading at the time was high; and this circumstance, together with the unusual dryness, caused the weight of air to be unusually heavy. The weight of a cubic foot of it during this day was about 671 grains: at this season of the year its weight is generally from 530 to 560 grains. Altogether, the weather during this day was quite unprecedented, so far as my experience has extended; and I feel pretty certain that no evidence can be given of any day having been similar to it.

I may add, too, that the lowest reading of a thermometer placed on flat grass was 9°; that of one placed on long grass was 9°; and that of one on short grass was 14°; these three instruments were fully exposed to the sky. From these readings we learn that vegetation was subjected to a very low temperature, as well as to the loss of much moisture, through the exceeding dryness of the air; the difference of readings of the thermometer on flat from those on grass shows that the amount of heat conducted from beneath the ground is very small, and to which loss of heat the roots of the plants were subjected, in consequence of not being covered by a non-conducting substance, as straw or flax, in the case of short grass this amounting to 7°, and in that of long short to 12°. The day was, in appearance, fine, till night, when it became cloudy, and after midnight snow began to fall, and the air at this time received a due quantity of water. To the senses, this day was exceedingly painful, owing to the rapid evaporation of all moisture from the lips and skin. Friday was a cloudy day, and its average temperature was 36°. Saturday was a cloudy day, and its average temperature was 41°, and the dryness was but little less than that of Thursday. Sunday was fine, and bright, the nights have been very fine, the sky having been nearly cloudless and Mercury shining with unusual brightness; the planet Mercury having been visible to the naked eye, each night, near to the planet Venus. The average temperature of Sunday was 41°; that of Monday was 49°; of Tuesday was 54°; and of Wednesday was 53°. The average temperature of Tuesday was higher than that of any day since 1846, November the 24th. On Wednesday, the thermometer reading rose to 64°, being 47° higher than it was on the previous Thursday morning. The average temperature of March 11 was 27° less than that of March 16th. The reading of a thermometer on grass rose to 80° both on Tuesday and on Wednesday. On Tuesday and Wednesday there was about three grains of water in a cubic foot of air, whose whole weight was about 530 grains.

The following are the extreme thermometrical readings taken each day:

Thursday,	March 11, the highest during the day was 37½ deg., and the lowest was 17		deg.
Friday,	March 12	47½	30
Saturday,	March 13	47½	37
Sunday,	March 14	50½	36
Monday,	March 15	57	39
Tuesday,	March 16	57	41
Wednesday,	March 17	66½	48½
Blackheath, Thursday, March 18, 1847.		64½	41½

J. G.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE ROYAL FAMILY TO BUCKINGHAM PALACE.—The Queen and Prince Albert, and the Royal children, left Osborne at 24 minutes before two o'clock on Wednesday afternoon, crossed in the Fairy to Gosport, and proceeded to town by special train on the South Western Railway. The august party arrived at Buckingham Palace 20 minutes before six o'clock.

ARISTOCRATIC MARRIAGE.—Viscount Elrington, eldest son of the Earl of Forteseue, was last week united at Corfe, Dorsetshire, to Miss Damer, eldest daughter of the Hon. Col and Mrs. Dawson Damer

HER MAJESTY'S PALACE IN THE ISLE OF WIGHT. We hear that, by express command of her Majesty's mother, the so-called Osborne House, is henceforth to be called Osborne; and Barton Manor Farm is in future to be termed Barton House.

PECUNIOUS MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.—There is a talk of the Marquis of Salisbury following the example of Earl Howe, by entering the holy state of matrimony with a lady younger than his daughters.

DINNER PARTY AT LORD CAMPBELL'S.—Last Saturday Lord Campbell gave a dinner, at Strathedon House, to Lord John Russell, the Earl of Lincoln, the Earl of Hardwicke, the Earl of Clarendon, Earl Granville, Lord Stanley, Lord Lyndhurst, Lord Cranworth, Sir James Graham, General Fox, Mr. Lockhart, Mr. Twiss, and Mr. Dunvers.

INTENDED VISIT OF THE DUCHESS OF KENT TO THE CONTINENT.—The Duchess of Kent is expected to leave England shortly after Easter for the Continent, proceeding first to Brussels, upon a visit to her brother the King of the Belgians, and thence to Germany, to pay a visit of two or three months' duration to her Royal Highness' relations at Saxe-Coburg and Saxe-Gotha, and in some other of the German States, previously to returning to England. It is stated that her Royal Highness will probably take Paris en route to this country from Germany, and will be the guest of Louis Philippe, at the Tuileries, during her short stay in the French capital

THE FAST DAY.—The public should be aware that by the 1st and 2d George IV., cap. 78, all bills due and payable on Wednesday next, being a solemn Fast-day, become due and payable on Tuesday preceding; and in case of non-payment, may be noted and protested on such preceding day, and it is not necessary to give notice of dishonour to parties until the day after the Fast-day. The Act, however, does not extend to Scotland.

THE LATE DUKE OF NORTHUMBERLAND.—A hatchment, or escutcheon for the dead, has been placed on the pulpit of St. Martin-in-the-Fields Church, and various parts of the edifice have been hung with black, in memory of this late Duke

THE EARLY CLOSING MOVEMENT.—The fifth annual meeting of the Metropolitan Early Closing Association was held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday evening; the Marquis of Westminster in the chair. A numerous audience assembled. The Report stated, amongst other things, that a manifest improvement had taken place within the past year in the hours of closing shops generally, and that Associations to promote the object had been formed in Liverpool, Manchester, &c.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE GOVERNMENT PLAN OF EDUCATION.

On Monday evening a public meeting was held at the Tabernacle, Shoreditch, to [illegible] Mr. D. W. Wire presided, and was supported by Thomas Cooper, Esq., W. L. Langton, Esq.; Dr. Price, Dr. Carlile, the Rev. J. Howard Hinton, M.A.; the Rev. Henry Richards, the Rev. Dr. Campbell, the Rev. R. Parsons, and other gentlemen and ministers of various religious denominations.

Mr Josiah Conder alluded to the success which had attended the exertions of the Dissenters when Sir James Graham introduced his education scheme, and moved the following resolution: "That this meeting, while anxious to promote [illegible] view with serious alarm the scheme developed in the minutes of council communicated to Parliament by her Majesty's Ministers, from the belief that it will diminish, and ultimately extinguish all voluntary efforts for the support of education [illegible] connected with the Church of England."

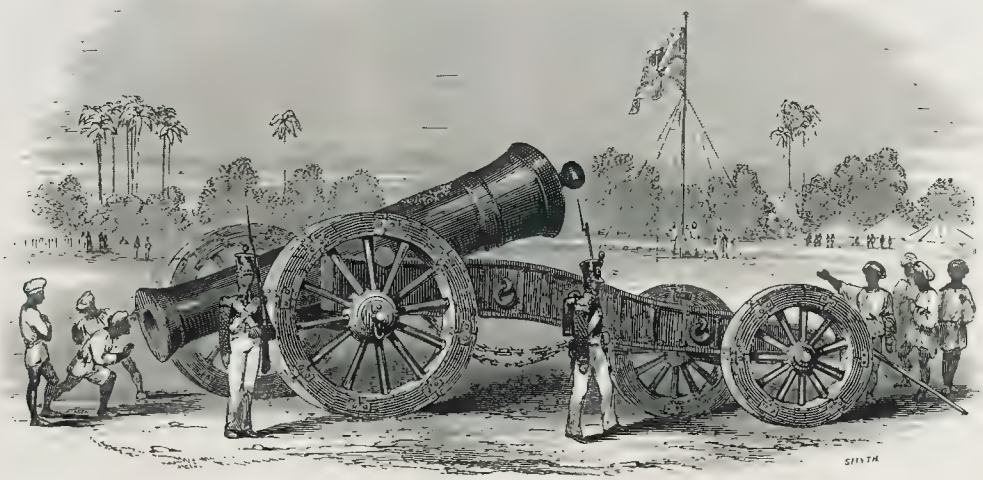
The Rev. J. Burnet, M.A., in seconding the resolution, referred to the [illegible] scheme would produce on Sunday Schools belonging to Dissenters.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Dr. Davis, the Rev. Dr. Campbell, the Rev. H. Richards, the Rev. R. Parsons, and other gentlemen, severally moved the following resolutions, which were carried unanimously:—"That the [illegible] Government Plan, if carried into effect, would be a stranger to the laws of England, or he would not have given the description of amusement which had proved objectionable.

HOTELS AND TAVERN-KEEPERS' PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.—The eighth annual meeting of this institution was held on Monday, at Craven Hotel, Craven-street, Strand. Mr. T. Clark, late of Windsor, presided. From the report read by Mr. Strand. Mr. T. Clark, late of Windsor, presided. From the report read by Mr. [illegible] the [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

THE LATE INDIAN WAR.



"FUTTEH JUNG—THE CONQUEROR."

We have been favoured, by "an Old Correspondent," at Monghyr-on-Ganges, with the accompanying pair of "Field Sketches" of the Sikh Trophy Guns, 262 in number, which marched into Monghyr a few days prior to the date of our Correspondent's letter (Jan. 1), on their way to Calcutta, from the battle-fields of Ferozeshuhur, Moodkee, and Sobraon. They are, with few exceptions, about to be broken up, to form a monumental column to the memory of those who fell in the late War.

The lower Sketch represents the guns "forming up," after the march. In the upper Sketch is seen "Futteh Jung," the monster cannon, taken, we believe, on the field of Ferozeshuhur ,where it did most awful execution. Many of the guns, (adds our Correspondent), are still stained with large blotches of blood.

The scene of this triumphal array is within the Fort of Monghyr. The smaller guns, it will be seen, are brought up by oxen; the larger by an elephant. The accessories of the pictures, too, convey a minute idea of an encampment in India: they are from the sketch-book of an officer of Native Infantry, to whom our especial thanks are due for these Illustrations of our national trophies.

SPAIN.

Our letters from Madrid of the 11th inst., state that the Ministers had been questioned in the Cortes relative to the high price of provisions in that city, as well as to the scarcity felt in certain provinces. In reply, they observed that Government could not take upon itself to prohibit exportation, although in certain places the local authorities had done so. They mentioned that while Alicante and Murcia were complaining of the high price of corn, in La Mancha and Castile the complaint was, that corn was not bringing a sufficiently high price. Immense exportations of corn for France are made at Santander, and it is hinted that the Duc de Rianzares, Queen Christina's husband, is concerned in the speculation.

There has been another resignation of the Ministry, but the crisis appears soon to have passed away. It was said that the cause of this step on the part of the Ministry was the removal or resignation of General Breton as Captain-General of Catalonia. The Ministry desired his removal, but the Queen refused at first to sign the order. On further persuasion she appeared disposed to yield, but when the Ministry proposed for the vacant post General Don Manuel Concha, a leader of the Puritan party, the Queen peremptorily refused. The Ministry having persisted, her Majesty said she would take time to consider of it. The result appears to have been that the Queen, having refused to accept the resignation tendered by the Ministers, they still continued to retain office. General Pavia had been appointed to supersede General Breton in the command of the province of Catalonia. General Manuel de la Concha had received his appointment as Captain-General of Old Castile, and was to assume the command of the army of observation on the frontiers of Portugal.

El Heraldo publishes a communication, addressed to the Cortes by Don Enrique, dated Toulon. In this document the Prince complains bitterly of the undue severity with which he has been treated, in being compelled to leave Spain, and of the opposition which has been made to his marriage

The Montemolinist leader, Benet Tristany, made an attack upon the town of Terrasa on the 6th inst. A column of infantry and cavalry, which the Captain-General had hastened from Barcelona, succeeded in driving Tristany out of the place, but was unable to pursue the Montemolinists beyond half a league of it. The Queen's troops had, on the occasion, an officer and twelve men killed, and a large number of wounded. The Montemolinist band amounted to about 400 men.

A letter from Saragossa of the 9th states that some riotous assemblages had taken place there on that day, and revolutionary cries were uttered, but the rioters after some time dispersed of themselves, without its being considered necessary to use any force. A judicial inquiry had been ordered. Accounts from Cervera state, some Montemolinist bands were at Bellepuig, where they had demanded all the arms and ammunition in the place. These bands are with the greatest hardihood. They remained some hours at Bellepuig. On the same day they advanced to Manresom.

PORTUGAL.

By the Montrose steamer, we have accounts from Lisbon to the 10th instant, but they add little to the previous information from Portugal. Marshal Saldanha as usual, was in an inactive state, and had not reached beyond Oliveira de Azemeis, five leagues south of Oporto.

The insurgents had surrendered the fortress of Almeida, their last stronghold in the province of Beira.

There is no truth in the rumour that dissensions prevailed in Oporto. Gens Povoas was received by Conde das Antas, Visconnt Sa da Bandeira, the Junta and people, with great demonstrations of admiration and cordiality.

The liberty of the press had again been suspended at Lisbon for a month. Monetary and commercial affairs were very bad; discount on bank paper 40 per cent. A meeting of the principal people, merchants, and others, had taken place to hear some proposition of the Conde de Tojal on monetary affairs. The meeting ended in tumult and confusion, and was adjourned to the next day. The Queen was said to be very unpopular. General Guedes had an affair on the 8th at Regoa, in which twenty prisoners, mostly officers of the 9th Infantry of the Queen, had been taken prisoners. The Castle at Oporto had fired a shot at one of the blockading ships, which returned the fire, and one of her shot entered the room of an English merchant, residing, for security, near the sea.

General Schwalbach was supposed to be pursuing Conde de Mello, who had retired on Portalegre, in Alemtejo.

One of the letters mentions that, on the 2nd of March, a tremendous gale had wrecked many vessels, and destroyed much property on shore, at Cadiz. Two small vessels had gone down, and on shore, outside the bay.

THE SIKH TROPHY GUNS "FORMING UP," IN THE FORT OF MONGHYR.

FOREIGN CORN PORTS.—NEW ORLEANS.—FROM AN ORIGINAL SKETCH.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—THE POULTRY-YARD.

Here is another of Mr. Duncan's life-like Pictures of the minor business of the Farm-yard—the Feeding of Poultry and Pigs. The employment has an interest for all classes; since we have known the lady dressed "in silken sheen," take as much concern in the rearing of poultry as in the most beautiful pet birds.

The busy group in the Illustration need not be individualized. Nor need we inquire how many of the pure Dorking breed there may be among them, or if the hand which scatters the food be that of a Dorking housewife. Nor need we insist on the greediness of the hen in picking up food, her fondness for gadding about, and her timidity before she attains her matronly character; when she becomes generous, self-denying, and intrepid, assuming the fiery temper of the cock, and becoming a virago in defence of her helpless brood.

Gilbert White calls attention to the language of the fowl, from a pleased twittering to a scream. A laying pullet utters a complacent soft note, but, when she has deposited an egg, her sharp cackle of delight and importance is loud enough to excite the sympathetic voices of all her companions; when her chickens are hatched, she has a different language, which is intelligible to her little ones. The crested cock has various notes, his tone and language, for such it is in effect, as he calls his favourites to partake of the food which he gallantly scrapes for them, is of a very peculiar kind, and very different from his ordinary voice that is familiar to us.

Nor, need we describe the other members of the group; or the little episodal touches of the artist's skill and feeling in various parts of the picture the amused child; the boy and the pig family, characteristically busy; the action at the gate; and the distant brood seen through its bars. All these accessories combine in a very pleasing scene, not a painter's composition, but a picture of actual life.

FOREIGN CORN PORTS.—NEW ORLEANS.

By the latest advices from the United States, we have the following important intelligence with regard to bread-stuffs and provisions at this port:—

"The New Orleans market now labours under great disadvantage arising from high and increasing rates of freight, and the difficulty of shipping, as well as the reduced figures of foreign exchange, and the increased demand for money arising from large speculative transactions in our products, at greatly enhanced values.

AGRICULTURAL PICTURES.—THE POULTRY-YARD.—DRAWN BY DUNCAN.

"As regards Indian corn, the prices have been firmly maintained, in spite of the high freights demanded and obtained by shipmasters; this firmness being mainly owing to the very large orders for the article as compared with the supplies, which latter have been inadequate to the demand for European export. There has been no corn meal in market for some time, but moderate supplies are soon expected. The stock of wheat is trifling, and the rates have also advanced from the causes above stated. Supplies cannot be looked for until the Upper Mississippi and other rivers are free from ice, which may be some two weeks hence. The supplies and anticipated receipts of flour being considered rather better than those of Indian corn, there has been a decline on the rates current immediately after the date of the receipt of the steamer's advices, which were then 6 dol. 50 c. to 6 dol. 75 c. It has been influenced, likewise, by the constant advances in the freight market.

"The various descriptions of provisions have partaken in a corresponding degree of this excitement. The present rates are generally beyond the limits for satisfactory operations for European account. The advance is aided by authentic information from the west of a great deficit in the production of stock, as compared with last season. It is, therefore, presumable that present rates are not likely to give way to any extent."

Nevertheless, it is gratifying to read elsewhere, that "from Maine to New Orleans the whole country is aroused for famishing Ireland, and the contributions will be large and continued throughout the spring;" let us hope that the evil of the want of vessels may speedily be provided for.

New Orleans is the capital of Louisiana, and lies on the eastern bank of the Mississippi, about 105 miles from its mouth. It is the grand emporium of all the vast tracts traversed by the Mississippi, the Missouri, and their tributary streams, enjoying a greater command of internal navigation than any other city, either of the Old or New World. "Civilization," says Mr. Macculloch, "has hitherto struck its roots, and begun to flourish only in some comparatively small portions of the immense territories of which New Orleans is the sea-port; yet its progress has been rapid beyond all precedent; and, it is believed by many, seeing how rapidly settlements are forming in the West, that New Orleans must, at no very distant period, exceed every other city of America, as well in the magnitude of its imports, as of its exports." Steam navigation has been of incalculable service to the port: it is not uncommon to see fifty steam-vessels lying together in the harbour, and 1500 flat-boats and barges arriving from 5000 to 6000 boatmen from the upper country here at a time; and there have been thirty vessels advertised together for Liverpool and Havre.

The new-built streets are broad; but the site is low and marshy, being under the level of the Mississippi, from which it is protected by an artificial levée, or mound.

Vessels of the largest burthen may navigate the river several hundreds of miles above New Orleans. As a shipping port, she ranks third in the Union; being, in this respect, only inferior to New York and Boston. Her preponderance in the shipment of cotton is quite as decided as the preponderance of Manchester in its manufacture.

MUSIC.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The new theatre will open on Tuesday, the 6th of April. The rehearsals for opera and ballet are continued daily. Rossini's "Semiramide," the heroine by Grisi, Assur by Tamburini, Arsace by the new Contralto, Mademoiselle Alboni, has been selected for the opening opera. The ballet will be in two tableaux, called "Les Odalesques," and M. Albert is now superintending the rehearsals. The cleansing of the outer edifice has commenced, and nothing now remains to be done in the interior, but the labours of the decorator and upholsterer. Mr. Albano has achieved wonders, and the splendid temple of Art he has created will be a lasting monument of his genius, as he has completely surmounted the most difficult problem in the construction of the interior of a theatre, that of enabling the audience at the extreme end of the pit to command the greater portion of the stage. Next to the exquisite form of the house, the roof or cupola, 70 feet by 52 transversely, is most admired—its adaptation as a sounding board having been quite successful. The royal boxes and the apparent, and saloons for her Majesty are nearly ready. The tram road under the portico is also in progress for the carriages.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE

The musical attractions at Mr. Bunn's benefit, on Monday last, were manifold. M. Stevenieres, the Belgian violinist, played admirably a fantasia on themes from Auber's "Syren," despite of the buzzing of the gentlemen in the galleries. Braham sang the "Death of Nelson" with immense energy. He was warmly greeted. Henry Phillips gave Rooke's "My boy hoot's home," with great expression. Miss Hawtorn, Mr. Harley, the Ethiopian Serenaders, &c., completed the strength of the entertainment. Balfe's "Bondman" restored Miss Romer to the boards; and, in the "Waterman," Braham sang his "Farewell the trim built wherry," with his usual skill.

On Friday night her Majesty and Prince Albert honoured Mr. Balfe's opera with their presence.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The season commenced brilliantly on Monday last at the Hanover Square Rooms. The Duke of Cambridge, the Earl of Falmouth, Lord Cawdor, and a host of amateurs and artists of distinction, native and foreign, were present. Costa's reception was worthy of his genius as a conductor. He is now the greatest of musical directors, and every performance under the magic spell of his baton receives a force of colouring and a fiery impulse, yielding not even to the famed Conservatoire in Paris, or the Viennese and Leipsic bands. Beethoven's "Leonora" never went with greater spirit—the effect of the violins in the coda was electrical, and the encore, tardily granted by the conductor, insisted upon with furore. Of the four overtures composed by Beethoven for the opera of "Fidelio," the "Leonora" is the finest, and we hope when this work is again given in London that it will be played, instead of the usual one in E major. The symphonies were Haydn's "Surprise in Pranza," dedicated to the unfortunate Marie Antoinette, with its exquisite romance, "Allegretto," and Beethoven's No. 1 in C, both magnificently interpreted and immensely applauded. Sainton executed Mendelssohn's violin concerto, played last season by Sivori, and admirably did he achieve his task—the cadenza particularly was given with marked delicacy and precision—the tutti were finely rendered by the orchestra, and these are of immense importance. Miss Kate Loder, who, although so young, is one of the leading professors of Harmony in the Royal Academy of Music, and has composed quartets, overtures, &c. made a decided hit in her début, by her masterly performance of Weber's Pianoforte Concerto in E flat. She has a delicate touch and a nimbleness of finger that can accomplish every difficulty. She was a pupil of Mrs. Anderson, the pianiste to her Majesty, and teacher of the Royal Family. Madame Caradori sang Crescentini's "Sento moncai m'l'anima," and Meyerbeer's "Vi, dit elle," but was suffering from cold. The singing of Henry Phillips was worthy of his best days, but we do not consider the choice of the pieces felicitous. Marschner's "Hah! what delight," from the "Vampyr," with its Weberian orchestration, is only fit for the stage; and Mendelssohn's Oedipic song, "the Lcua's gloomy realm," is also very dramatic in style the concert-room especially. The programme was, however, on the whole, a grand one, and began the series of concerts triumphantly. The Second Concert will be on Monday, the 19th of March, when Beethoven's Choral Symphony, No. 9, and his Mass in C (the first), and Spohr's Sinfonia in C minor, from the "Last Judgment," and gleanings from Mendelssohn's "Paul," will be given, making a glorious programme.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

THE LATE MR. KEARNS.—We are happy to announce that the Concert on Wednesday night was successful beyond the most sanguine expectations, thanks to the great exertions of Sir George Smart, the Chairman of the Committee, and of Mr. Macfarren, the Secretary, Mr. T. Chappell, the Treasurer, Mr. Ribus, Mr. H. Oliver, &c. Mr. Martin kindly gave the Hanover-square Rooms, the firm of Broadwood the use of three Grand Pianofortes, and Messrs. Cocks and Hedgley the loan of the music for the Concert. Mr. Costa gave his valuable services as Conductor, and secured an encore for the "Oberon" overture. Beethoven's symphony in D, No. 2, was finely rendered. Mrs. Anderson, Bennett, and Sterndale Bennett, in Bach's Triple Pianoforte Concerto; Sainton, Blagrove, Wiby, and C. Patey, in Mazurer's Concertante for Four Violins; and Lucas, W. L. Phillips, and Howell, in Spohr's Trio, all played with great spirit and effect. Wilbye's madrigal, "Flora gave me fairest Flowers," was sung by the members of the Choral Fund. We record with pleasure the names of the vocalists who aided in the good cause:—Misses Caradori Allan, Mrs. A. Tolmain, the Misses Rainforth, Birch, Bassano, Williams (the sisters), Lockey, Lincoln, Dolby, Hawes, S. Fowler, and Mdme. G. Macfarren; Messrs. Harrison, Travers, Allen, Manvers, Hobbs, Lockey, Machin, H. Phillips, J. A. Novello, J. L. Hatton, Bennett, and Labiache. In the orchestra we noticed Messrs. T. Cooke, Griesbach, Guynemer, E. Thomas, W. Thomas, Hill, Thirlwall, Wagstaff, Paxton, Gattie, W. L. Phillips, Lucas, Severn, Card, Macfarlane, Blewitt, De Folly, G. Cooke, Mather, Williams, Lazarus, Baumann, Keating, Platt, Rea, Jarrett, Hooper, Harper, Irwin, Chipp, Prospere, Smithies, Cioffi, Stephens, Watkins, Perry, Westrop, &c.

MR. N. J. SPORLE.—This tenor singer gave his Annual Concert, at the London Tavern, on Tuesday evening, and had a good attendance. He sang several of his own compositions, and was encored in "The Wishing Gate." The other vocalists were Messrs. Bransford, Gouge, Turner, Shoubridge, Robinson, F. Smith, and John Parry; Miss Dolby, Miss M. O'Connor, Miss Thornton, Miss Mary Rose (a promising debutante), and Mrs. A. Newton. The solo instrumentalists were Miss Bushell Williams (piano), Mr. Carte (flute), Mr. A. Sedgwick (concertina), and Mr. F. Chatterton (harp).

MR. BEULER.—This, celebrated comic song writer and singer, who has contributed so largely to the amusement of the public, had his Annual Concert on Monday, at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, and afforded his friends an amusing programme.

CLASSICAL MUSIC.—On Tuesday the fourth Concert of instrumental music by the Blagrove party, was given at the Horn Tavern, Doctors Commons.

On Thursday, Mr. Lindsay Sloper had his third and last Pianoforte Soirée at the Beethoven Rooms, and on the same night Mr. Lucas gave his fourth and last Musical Evening in Berners-street. The programme of the latter comprised Quartets No. 3 by Mozart, No. 78 by Haydn; No. 5 by Beethoven; and the Pianoforte Trio by the latter in D, played by Madame Dulcken, Sainton, and Lucas. Mr. Hill was the tenor, and Mr. Blagrove first and second violin alternately.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Handel's oratorio of "Belshazzar" was performed for the first time at Exeter Hall, on Friday night, but we must defer our notice until the ensuing week.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

The fourth performance of the Amateur Musical Society was on Friday night, and this morning is the first Concert of the Royal Academy of Music.

On Monday is the second meeting of the Beethoven Quintet Society.

Tuesday morning, at Willis's Rooms, will be the first meeting of the Musical Union, of which Mr. Ella is the able and indefatigable director. The executants will be Sainton, Dehaffre, Goffre, Hill, Blagrove, Piatti, Thirlwall, Howell, and Benedict. On Tuesday evening, Mr. S. Bennett gives his third and last Pianoforte Performance, at the Hanover-square Rooms; Mr. Dando his fifth Quartet Concert, at Crosby Hall; and Messrs. H. and C. Braham (sons of the Braham) a Concert, at the St. James's Theatre.

On Thursday night Mdlle. Rosalie Thémar has a soirée, at the Hanover-square Rooms.

On Saturday Mr. F. Chatterton's Concert will take place, at Sadler's Wells Theatre.

Mr. Henry Russell, at the Strand Theatre; the Ethiopian Serenaders, at the St. James's; and the Distin Family, in the vicinity of London, have given their Entertainments.

Mr. Reeves, the celebrated player on the harp, gives a Soirée Musicale, on Monday night, at 37, Howland-street, in aid of the fund for the distressed Irish.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Here's flowers for you

Of wills.
That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty; violets, dim,
But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes,
Or Cytherea's breath. Winter's Tale

Such is the tale we told of our winter—past, with a hop, skip, and jump, from the icy shores of hoary Hyems to sunny hills and dales as fair and fragrant as that wherein Dis surprised Proserpina. Wednesday week was the most intensely severe cold of the season; Wednesday last the most delicious occasion of genial springtide that even the muse of Shakspeare could imagine. And in this time of transition from dusky dulness to sparkling sunlight, come we to speak of the sports that call forth hasty life to scenes of pleasant health and befitting excitement. The horn of chase discourses most eloquent music—strains that find passage to the manly heart as stirringly as Praschitt's passion, mingled with the music of the song-birds that woo the ear; sweetly as Gardom's melody. Diana shares the season with Dian and Apollo. That there's steeple-chasing almost everywhere. Why is this sport becoming so generally popular as it is? For this reason:—

That when a passion's dangerous know
The danger's self—is lure alone

as Scott sings of the natural instinct for getting into scrapes. Next follows the leash-coursing prevails: as Byron says, "March hath its furze" in the present instance my sporting ones, for the intermittent character of the weather just suited the peculiarities of those persecuted little colonists. The turf fast assumes its holiday aspect—soon we shall lead the way with moss-cheerful viewand blithesome festivals '47 will be mighty in Olympics. But, forgive the soft allurement—for that nature, plain and unsophisticated, is so bewitching, we cannot choose but pass one day with her—on her own account. Make fleeting your excuse if there be need of any plea for taking your pleasure—but no furze—whatever the apology, and come abroad with us. We are an atom of the vast Babylon—so we assume is our companion:

Arcades ambo: id est rascallery both—

None of your sneers about synonymes.

Taking your rod with you, or leaving it behind, as the case may be, you seek the glorious Babylon of the town—you turn your hopes and footsteps towards the silver Thames. Ay! there's a stream with all the pride ye take in it—and a thousand times more! Pactolus! a pinchbeck puddle in comparison. Well, then! flows and sparkles, and on its pleasant surface, or by its winding banks ye trace its upward course. Passing from the east we encounter as proud a moiety of the modern world as man has created, and soon arrive at scenes as goodly as any of which history tells.

The hand that made them was divine.

Small need and little boot that we prate about the sights in store for those who pass from the Palace of Westminster to that of the imperious priest of Hampton. Only we would say, let your journey be short of the latter place. And, being disposed to fish or feast, or both, tarry for a space at the Swan, at Ditton—the reality of a rural hostel, such as the beau idéale of your painters of the picturesque fail villainously short of. There—if in the humour or feast or fish, or dread of our friend Tagg shal. fulfil your heart's desire. An ancient mariner is he—cognisant of every piscatory haunt in his parish. If you must punt and patience—he will sit by your side, and nearly your companion without smiling at your grief. If you would feast, a dish of his spitched eels, served as the Swan at Ditton sends them to table, will enable you to await your roast chicken with considerable philosophy. If you dine at a rural inn, and find a good one, with a good appetite to run into it, let us tell you, is not the most despicable of our National Sports.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—Business continues as dull at "The Corner" as in the City, with this difference, that although backers are scarce, prices are tolerably well sustained. Our quotations take a wide range, but do not show any alteration of the slightest consequence.

LEAMINGTON STEEPLE CHASE.
9 to 2 agst Forester	8 to 1 agst Rentaile
POTENTIARY STAKES HANDICAP
8 to 1 agst Haiti (t)	100 to 12 agst Euclid colt (t)	20 to 1 agst Magnet
8 to 1 —— Doleful (t)	10 to 1 —— Queen Mary	25 to 1 agst Watch-dog (t)
NEWMARKET HANDICAP
9 to 1 agst Lysosus	12 to 1 agst Sting (t)	16 to 1 agst Humdrum.
METROPOLITAN HANDICAP
6 to 1 agst Sheraton		25 to 1 agst Pine Apple (t)
20 to 1 —— Euclid colt (t)		25 to 1 Phadit (t)
THE POST.
2 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes.
TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKE.
8 to 1 agst Liberator (t)	25 to 1 agst Sister to Cobweb a (t)
10 to 1 —— Christopher (t)	500 even between Conyngham and Liberator
CHESTER CUP.
17 to 1 agst Antler	40 to 1 agst Ireton (t)	66 to 1 agst Phadit (t)
25 to 1 —— Camera Obscura	40 to 1 —— Newcourt (taken	66 to 1 —— Chanticleer
	66 to 1)	66 to 1 —— Jonathan Wild
25 to 1 —— Punch (t)	40 to 1 —— Libertines	66 to 1 —— Q. n Mab
25 to 1 —— Mickey Free (t)	50 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes	66 to 1 —— Maid of Lyons
30 to 1 —— The Lamb (t)
DERBY.
6 to 1 agst Van Tromp	20 to 1 agst the Liberator (t)	50 to 1 agst Will o' the Wisp
10 to 1 —— Planet	20 to 1 —— Lancelot	50 to 1 —— Christopher (t)
12 to 1 —— Faugh a Ballagh	25 to 1 —— Sir Tatton Sykes	50 to 1 —— Chanticleer
20 to 1 —— Gladiat	33 to 1 —— H. Hart	66 to 1 —— Oxonian
	66 to 1 agst Sir Paul, a
OAKS.
8 to 1 agst Clementina.

THURSDAY.—Some trifling changes will be found in the Northamptonshire Handicap, and some dozen were added to the Liberator and Pavilion for the Derby, who, we are told, are in high favour at Warwick, but the attendance was small, and the betting flat.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE HANDICAP.
	7 to 1 agst Doleful
6 to 1 agst Euclid colt (t)	12 to 1 —— Queen Mary	15 to 1 agst Wolf dog (t)
6 to 1 —— Halo		30 to 1 —— Lord Saltoun
TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKE.
	7 to 1 agst The Liberator
CHESTER CUP.
16 to 1 agst Antler (t)	30 to 1 agst Mickey Free (t)	66 to 1 agst Queen Mab (t)
METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.
	20 to 1 agst Brandon (t)	25 to 1 agst Pine Apple (t)
DERBY.
12 to 1 agst Ireton (t)	30 to 1 agst the Liberator (t)	50 to 1 agst Black Dwarf (t)
25 to 1 —— Conyngham (t)	50 to 1 —— Pavilion	55 to 1 —— Oxonian (t)

17 to Duke of Richmond and Mr. Gratwicke are declared to be confederates on the Turf.

WARWICK SPRING MEETING.—WEDNESDAY.

The Debdale Stakes of 5 sovs each, and 25 added. Two miles.

Mr. E. H. Clarke's Leo, 1st 7lb	.. ..	(Captain Little) 1
Mr. J. Saunders's The Miller, 1st 7lb	.. ..	(Mr. Beauchamp) 2
Mr. C. Brookes's Eagle, 1st 11lb	.. ..	(Owner) 3

Several others started. Won by two lengths.

The Warwick Handicap of 10 sovs each, h. ft, and 40 added. Two miles.

Sir C. Cockerell's Congress, aged, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(Lewis) 1
Mr. Whites's Infringe, 3 yrs, 8st 4lb	.. ..	2
Mr. Meldrum's Godfrey, 6 yrs, 8st	.. ..	3

Idolator, 7st 12lb; Redstreak, 7st 10lb; and Trifle, 7st 4lb; also ran. Won by a head. The same distance between second and third.—Run in 3 min. 17 sec

The Trial Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added.

Lord Warwick's Aliwal, 3 yrs, 6st 12lb	.. ..	(Crouch) 1
Mr. White's Infringe, 3 yrs, 7st 12lb	.. ..	2
Mr. Bowes's Rainbow, 3 yrs, 6st 1lb	.. ..	3

Won by a head. Run in 1 min. 55 secs.

The Willoughby Handicap of 25 sovs each, and 50 added

Mr. W. H. Johnstone's b. g. by Young Cadland, 10st 10lb (Mr. Brook)		1
Mr. Parr's Trojan, 6 yrs, 11st 2lb	.. ..	(Captain Little) 2
Lord Strathmore's Satyr, 6 yrs, 11st 4lb	.. ..	(Owner) 3

Won by a head. Run in 3 min. 49 secs.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.

LORD BROUGHAM, in his recently published "Letter to Lord Lyndhurst, on Criminal Police and National Education," laments, in characteristic style, the little progress that has been made during the last thirty years, or, rather, from the date of the noble and learned Lord's exertions in the cause, towards establishing a system of National Education. "It is really melancholy for me," says he, "to reflect that thirty years have revolved since, in union with my lamented friend, the late Duke of Bedford, I devoted myself, more exclusively than before, to the great cause of popular improvement—and to see how small the progress is which we have made towards establishing a system of National Education." He proceeds to describe the formation of the British and Foreign School Society, in 1810; to which succeeded the Education Committee of 1816 and 1818, over which his Lordship had the honour to preside. This Committee, it appears, recommended the plan adopted in 1833, "which, without any addition," he goes on to observe, "is all that has ever been carried into execution, which consists of a most trifling aid, given by the State, to the instruction of the people, which does not, in any one particular, pretend to be a system of National Education; and which, to my extreme disappointment, is all that the Government has now ventured to propound, after thirty years have elapsed, and after that same Government had publicly announced, on taking office, that they were resolved to bring forward a great measure for this most great purpose. Such has been my extreme disappointment, almost sufficient to extinguish all hope, and make me entirely despair."

Notwithstanding these lamentations of Lord Brougham, it is evident that the cause of popular Education has not languished. Nay, we think we shall be able to show that, even in the absence of any regularly organised system, the public mind is fully awakening to the necessity and importance of educating the people. Government, by the production of the Minutes of the Committee of Council, laid upon the table of the House of Lords by the Marquis of Lansdowne, is content to contribute to the promotion of popular Education through the medium of the two great Associations, which are the organs respectively of the Church and the Dissenters. These are the National Society and the British and Foreign School Society. The efforts of these Societies, although exerted on a limited scale hitherto, have given a great impulse to the progress of Education throughout the Kingdom. Finding, however, means for its support scanty, when it is necessary to widen the basis, and to enlarge the field, of their operations.

According to Dr. Hook, the Parliamentary grants, for the purposes of Education, from 1833 to 1839, were £30,000 a-year; from 1839 to 1842, inclusive, they were £90,000; in 1843 and 1844, they were £40,000; and, in 1845, they were £75,000. The grant now proposed is £100,000. According to the returns moved for by Lord Ashley, in 1833, the number of children in attendance at infant and daily schools, where the instruction was wholly or in part gratuitous, amounted to 544,498. But we are justified in assuming, according to the Rev Mr. Hamilton, that the schools were capable of accommodating, in 1833, as many as 676,747. From that time to 1846, additional school-accommodation has been furnished from two or three joint sources. The number of schools already built, or in progress of building, since the time, however, when the returns were moved for, is necessary to widen the basis, and to enlarge the field, of their operations.

From Pa. liamentary Grants	 493,650
From assisted Private Means	 130,000
Children in Workhouses	 50,000
Total	 673,650
School-accommodation in 1833, shown to be	 818,747
Hence, in 1846, we have School-accommodation for	.. 1,490,397 Scholars.

Moreover, by applying the principle laid down by Dr. Vaughan and others, we shall find that if the average term of attendance be six years, schools would be needed for 2,652,264 scholars. According to the Rev. Mr. Hamilton's calculation, is the greatest number of primary scholars whom we could expect, even in a very different state of things from the present, to find under instruction at the same time.

But the great drawback to the full realisation of the blessings of primary Education are the deficiencies in regard to its quality. To what is this to be attributed? Undoubtedly to the want of competent teachers. What is needed, then, is a supply of persons, intellectually and morally qualified to conduct the schools for the poorer classes.

If it is calculated that, taking the term of instruction at six years, the number of principal teachers required would be 22,060, and the annual supply 3,600. What means does the country possess for meeting this extraordinary demand? The only provision at present made for this purpose is by the Normal Schools. What, it may be asked, is a Normal School? The derivation of the word from the Latin Normâ—a square or rule and defines it as "relating to, or teaching rudiments or first principles." Of these training Schools in connection with the Church, there are seventeen, under the superintendence of different Diocesan Boards, and three under that of the National Society, exclusive of its establishment at Westminster, viz.—1st, St. Mark's College, Chelsea, for masters. This Normal School may be considered as a model to which other establishments ought to be. 2nd, Whitelands, for mistresses. 3rd, Battersea Training School, for teachers, in the manufacturing and mining districts. The present Normal Institutions in England and Wales may be shown from the following, we believe, pretty accurate list, for which we are indebted to the Rev. H. Parr Hamilton. The figures with asterisks denote the number of schoolmistresses:—

1. UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE NATIONAL SOCIETY.	No. in Training.	Accommodation
St. Mark's, Chelsea	.. ..	79	75
Whitelands	.. ..	54	74
Battersea	.. ..	72	82 about
Westminster	.. ..	146	146
2. IN CONNECTION WITH THE CHURCH.
Canterbury	.. ..	{ 4	6
		{ 49	68
York and Ripon	.. ..	{ 39	36
		{ 38	30*
Durham	.. ..	15	30
Winchester	.. ..	12	12
Chichester	.. ..	10	13
Brighton	.. ..	18	18*
Exeter	.. ..	19	20
Gloucester and Bristol	.. ..	8	12
Lichfield	.. ..	26	26
Lincoln	.. ..	1	No limit.
Llandaff	.. ..	{ 2*	No fixed
		{ 1	number.
Norwich	.. ..	{ 2	3
		{ 7*	7
Oxford	.. ..	14	28
Kidlington	.. ..	16*	40*
Salisbury	.. ..	38	70
Chester	.. ..	41	70
Worcester	.. ..	30*	30*
3.—NO. IN CONNECTION WITH THE CHURCH
British and Foreign Society	.. ..	103	103
Broom National School	.. ..	24	24
Home and Colonial Infant School Society	.. ..	156	156
Total	.. ..	910	1067

Among the general designs of the measures received upon by the present Government may be described as being, first, to make a gradual increase in the number of Government inspectors, so as to admit, hereafter, of every school being visited at least once a year; secondly, to train up, and adequately remunerate, a superior class of teachers for the service, so to promote the union of works of industry with the ordinary course of school instruction. For these purposes, the expedients proposed to be employed may be thus briefly gathered from the minutes of the Committee of Council, brought forward by the Marquis of Lansdowne:—

1. In order to ensure a supply of skilful teachers, a succession of suitable candidates must be provided; the Normal Schools, where they are to be trained, must be supported; and a just reward must be allotted for their services. It is intended, therefore, to choose from among the elementary scholars a certain number of the cleverest and most industrious, and to apprentice them to teachers duly qualified to instruct them. When their apprenticeship is completed, a certain number will be annually selected, according to merit, and as many of these as the Lord President may think fit will be sent to the Establishments to Normal Schools, under the denomination of Queen's Scholars. (An Echolarship is one who has a pension or allowance granted for the encouragement of learning.) These apprentices who evince an aptitude for teaching, but who are of approved conduct and respectable attainments, will receive employment in the revenue departments.

As to providing support for the Normal Schools, the cost of the maintenance of each Queen's scholar will be defrayed by his exhibition. The further expense to the same amount, which the institution incurs, will be met by granting, not only for every Queen's scholar, but for every pupil-teacher reported by the end of £20, £25, and £30, at the close of the first, second, and third years respectively.

The requital of the teachers' services is thus to be provided for:—First, by an annual grant in aid of salary; the sum to be apportioned to each teacher according to the length of time he has been under training. This grant is to be bestowed only under certain conditions. Secondly, by a retiring pension, in the case of age or infirmity, which is to be allowed after fifteen years' service. Thirdly, by small annual gratuities to such teachers as are well reported of. Fourthly, a certain annual allowance, in proportion to the number, is to be granted for the instruction of apprentices and monitors.

2 The beneficial effects accruing from blending with the customary instruction of children industrial instruction in the pursuit of the parent, have been strikingly manifested in the case of schools among the general adoption of this practice, the Committee propose, under certain conditions, to make the following grants, in aid—first, towards the rent of school fied-gardens, and the purchase of tools in the first year; secondly, for the erection of workshops, and towards the purchase of tools in the first year; thirdly, towards the erection of school kitchens and washhouses. Gratuities are to be annually awarded, under certain conditions, to those masters and mistresses of whom the Inspectors shall make a favourable report.

The Minutes of Council, of which the above is a very brief and imperfect analysis, embrace two separate objects Primary Education, and Pauper and Penal Education. It will be seen that to the former alone we have confined our observations. "From measures framed in so cautious yet liberal a spirit, and susceptible of such wide application," concludes Mr. Hamilton, "we may reasonably augur the happiest results for the steady advancement, and the progressive improvement, of Popular Education."

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"J. B."—Right with respect to 169, but you have missed the modus operandi in 163 You will find the Evans' Gambit attack and defence fully treated of in Mr. Lewis's last Treatise, and in the forthcoming "Chess-players' Handbook."

"C. J. L."—You may claim a Queen for every Pawn advanced to the 8th sq of the board, and thus may have two or more Queens on the field at once. A "doubled Pawn" is one of two of the same colour which are on the same file. Two, three, or more Pawns on your King's file, and another on any square of the King's file, are called "doubled" Pawns.

"A Great Gamester."—Back Numbers and Volumes of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle" are to be had of Bohn, Publisher, Carey-street

"Nauvep."—You are quite in error respecting Enigma 128, as you will find on looking at it with attention. The Problem you have forwarded is incorrectly described, and cannot be solved as you suppose

"Amicus."—When, in a Problem, it is stipulated that White is to checkmate in a given number of moves, it is understood that, play as Black can, with the best possible defence, he cannot postpone the mate a single move beyond the number mentioned. See the Solution of 168, in this day's Paper.

"C. E. R."—They shall be reported on next week. With regard to the other solved of your note, a line addressed to the Publisher will meet with immediate attention.

"J. A."—The Problem for examination this week, but they shall be looked over immediately

"T. L."—The Problem, as the Knight's Tour, is not to be found in any of our Chess-books or Annuals. Apply to the Honorary Secretary.

Solutions by "M. D.," "Alpha," "Gamma," "Skyb," "Phil," "R. S. C," "A. A." and "B. P." are correct.

 An Amateur of some standing is desirous of playing a few Games by Correspondence Address "B. H. R.," Post-office, Blackwater, Hants.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 161.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K 3rd (ch)	K to B 3rd	4. Kt to K B 4th (ch)	K to Q B 3rd
2. Kt to K 5th (ch)	K to his 3rd	P to Q 8th, becoming a Kt—(at.)	Double Check, and Mate
3. R to K 2nd (ch)	K to Q 4th

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 162.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Q to Q R 8th (ch)	K takes Q	3. R to K 8th (ch)	K to B 2nd
2. B to Q B 6th (ch)	K to Kt sq (best)	4 Ks Mates

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 163.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to B 7th (ch)	K to B 4th.	4. R takes K P (double check)	K takes R
2. Kt to K R 6th (ch)	K to his 4th
3. P to Q B 4th	R to K sq, or K B P one (c)	5. K B P one mate

(c) If Q P one, then ♔ R takes Q P (ch) and Mate

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 164.

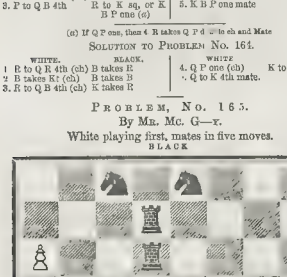
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK
1. R to Q R 4th (ch)	B takes R	4. Q P one (ch)	K to Q 4th
2. B takes Kt (ch)	B takes B	5. Q to K 4th mate.
3. R to Q B 4th (ch)	K takes R

PROBLEM, NO. 165.

By MR. MR. C—R.

White playing first, mates in five moves.

BLACK



WHITE.

CHESS IN AMERICA.

Played at New Orleans. Messrs. H. and R. consulting against Messrs. F. and M.

WHITE (H. and R.)	BLACK (F. and M.)	WHITE (H. and R.)	BLACK (F. and M.)
1. K P one	K P one	17. K B to Q Kt 3rd	Q Kt to Q sq (d)
2. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	18. K Kt P two (c)	P takes K P
3. Q to K 2nd	Q to h. 2d (a)	19. P takes P	Q Kt to Q 3rd
4. K B P one	Q P one	20. K B to Q B 2nd	K Kt takes K P
5. K Kt to B 3d	Q B to K Kt 5th		(d)
6. Q B P one	Q Kt to B 3d	21. K R P one	K Kt to K B 7th
7. Q Kt P two	K B to Q Kt 3d	22. K B to K 3rd	K P one
8. Q R P two	Q R P one	23. Q to K 3rd	K P one
9. Q Kt to R 3d	K Kt to B 3d	24. K Kt P one	Q Kt to K 5th
10. Q Kt P one	P takes P	25. K B P one	K B P one
11. K B takes P	Castles on K side	26. K B takes Kt	Q R to Q 8th (ch)
12. K B P one	Q Kt to Q R 3d	27. K to B 3rd	Q takes K B
13. K B to Q B 4th	Q B P one	28. Q to K R 3rd	K P one (ch)
14. Q P one	Q Kt to Q sq	29. K to B 3rd	K P one (ch)
15. K R P one	B takes Kt	30. K to K B 4th	K B to Q B 2nd
16. Q takes B	Q P one		Checkmate

(a) The best defence to the Lopez Gambit is ♕ Q Kt to B 3rd.
(b) Black play this game with a good deal of coolness and skill.
(c) This looks promising, but it turns out badly for White's game in the end
(d) The proper play. If White try to win a piece, they are mated in two moves.

GAME PLAYED ALSO AT NEW ORLEANS, BETWEEN MESSRS. M. AND F., CONSULTING AGAINST MR. E. ROUSSEAU.

WHITE (The Allies.)	BLACK (Mr. E. R.)	WHITE (The Allies.)	BLACK (Mr. E. R.)
1. K P two	K P two	23. Q Kt P one	Q to Q sq
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	24. Q R P two (c)	Q to Q 2nd
3. K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	25. Q B P one	Q takes K R P
4. Q P two	Q Kt to B 3rd	26. Q to K Kt sq (d)	Q to Q B 2nd
5. K R P one	Q P one	27. Kt takes Q	Q P one
6. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q B to K 3rd	28. K R to K B sq	R to K B 4th
7. K B to K Kt 5th	Q P one	29. K R to Q B sq	Q to K 3rd
8. [illegible]	K Kt takes P	30. P takes K B P	Kt P takes P
9. Kt takes Kt P	Q to K 2nd	31. Q R P one	Q R to K 2nd
10. Castles	K B to Q Kt 3rd	32. Q R P one	K Q checks
11. Q B to K 3rd	K B P one	33. K to R 2nd	Q R to K Kt 2nd
12. Q to K 2nd	K B P two	34. Kt to Q 3rd	Q R to K Kt 7th (ch)
13. Q B takes B (ch)	P takes B	35. K to R sq	Kt to Q B 3rd
14. K R to K sq	K Kt P two	36. Kt to Q B 4th	P takes Kt
15. Kt to K R 2nd	K R P one	37. Q P one	Kt P takes P (e)
16. B takes Kt	B takes B	38. P takes Kt	Q R to Kt 3rd
17. Q B P two	B to K B 2nd	39. Q Kt P one (ch)	K to Q 1
18. K Kt P one	K B P one	40. B to K 5th (ch)	K takes doubled P
19. B to K 3rd	B to K R 3rd (a)	41. P one, becoming a Queen
20. Q B to his 3rd	Castles on Q side		R takes Q
21. Q Kt P two	Q R to K sq	42. B takes R	K P one
22. Q P one	K P one (b)	43. K K takes Q B P, and wins

(a) Something like lost time. Kt to Q 5th, or B to K 3rd, would have been of infinitely more service
(b) He would have lost a Pawn, apparently, by taking P with P.
(c) Taking a lesson from the other side.
(d) Q one, or P take Q P, must have been ventured first, we believe.
(e) Q B P takes P looks better.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

No. 130.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Kt 4th	K at his Kt 2nd	Kt at K 5th	Kt at K 7th sq
Q at her Rs 3rd	Ps at her 5th and K B P	Ps at her 5th and K B P	Ps at Q Kt 2nd, Q B 3rd and 6th, and K R 4th
Q R at his sq	Rs at Q Bs sq and Q Kt sq	B's 4th
Bs at K Kt sq and K R 5th	B 7th
Kt 8th	B at K sq

White to play and mate in four moves

(HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.)

No. 131. By Mr. CLARE.

BLACK.	WHITE
K at Q 4th	Kt at K 4th
	Ps at K 4th, Q 6th, and Q B 5th

White to play, and mate in two moves.

No. 132.—By Mr. CLARE.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK
K at Q 5th	K at Q 4th	Kt at K B 7th	Ps at Q B 3rd and 4th
Kt at K R 4th	Ps at K 5th, Q 6th, and Q B 5th
B at Q R 6th

White to play, and mate in two moves.

No. 133.—By M. S. B. of Hull.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE
K at Q Kt 7th	K at K B 4th	Kt at Q B 3rd and 5th
R at K Kt 8th		B at Q R 3rd

White playing first mates in three moves.

LITERATURE.

TANCRED; OR, THE NEW CRUSADE. By B. DISRAELI, M.P.

"Tancred" is the young heir of an English Dukedom, enthusiastic and discontented with society and the age; he mourns over the decay of faith, the want of a sense of duty, the coldness of hearts, and the dearth of ideas and men. He is, in fact, an expression of religious, as Coningsby is of political dissatisfaction. The New Crusade" is a voyage to the Holy Land, which he undertakes as a pilgrimage to the source and fountain of inspiration, where his earnest and impassioned spirit may receive an answer to its prayers and a solution of his doubts, that can be found on no soil but that once trod by the feet of the Redeemed. Such is the groundwork or idea of the tale; in its development it includes other themes, and characters and purposes more worldly: ranging from Belgrave-square to Jerusalem and Syria, there is ample opportunity for those sketches of places and persons, epigrammatic or glowing, which are the best portions of all Disraeli's works; as may be expected, his theory of "race," and his eulogies of the Eastern and Hebrew family of man, take a prominent place; it is curious as a physiological question, and his illustrations are eloquently and forcibly detailed; but his zeal leads him at times to speak in a tone liable to misconception. There are themes that among all Christians are treated with a pious and reverent reserve; and some passages will be read by many with dubious approbation.

The tale opens with the preparations in the Ducal domain of Bellamont for celebrating the coming of age of Tancred, the heir of the old rides, which have been acquired by a new family, the founder of which was the sagacious father in the troubled waters of English politics in the American war and the French revolution; the gradual ascent of the family through all the grades of the peerage is cleverly sketched in the first book. Tancred has some of the qualities of his father; he is shy, proud, a genius, and enthusiastic; a dreamer of dreams, ... quite misunderstood by all around him. So when his father is arranging everything for his coming before him in Parliament for the county, he startles the family with a refusal to take any part in public life, and a determination to go to Jerusalem; in Palestine, if anywhere on earth, he thinks God yet com munes with his creatures, man, and there he will refresh his soul, sickened and dissatisfied with the old and effete civilization of Europe, with the sordid toil and splendid misery of England more especially The Duke is alarmed, the Duchess terrorstricken, for Syria she believes is a nest of fevers and plagues, and she is an only child. She sends him to a Bishop to correct his delusions; but the prelate is a man of expedient and compromise, and his advice has no effect. The scene of this Dignitary's from the life, and will be instantly recognised. The spiritual teacher failing, the aid of the shrewd man of the world is called in ... and Lord Eskdale, the easy, careless, clever Peer we remember so well in "Coningsby," reappears. He advises delay, and a London season; and sets Tancred hunting for a yacht of sufficient burden for the voyage, ... launching him, meanwhile, into Almack's, the opera, and dejeuners at Richmond Villas. A certain Lady Constance nearly supersedes Jerusalem in the heart of Tancred; but she is too clever and too well read, particularly in geology, and disgusts Tancred with the fashionable "theory of development," by which it appears we have all been fishes, and shall, gradually, in the course of time, attain to wings. So he prepares again for his pilgrimage, but is again delayed by the sympathy of another beauty Lady Bertie and Bellair, who affects entire sympathy with his opinions, and has nearly secured him in his nets when sectional and Sidonia, that mercantile Monte Christo—discover her to him, as deep in railway speculations, and one of the keenest female gamblers of the age! The second disenchantment is too much for Tancred, who buys a yacht forthwith, and sets sail with the family friend, the family doctor, a servant chosen by Sidonia, and a letter of unlimited credit on Besso, a Syrian banker; at the beginning of the second volume he is on the Holy Land, endeavouring to penetrate "the great Asian mystery" whatever that may mean. But he is kidnapped by a Bedouin Arab for the sake of a ransom, and becomes the pivot of a mass of Syrian politics ... he has a midnight visitor in Sinai, and a brain on fever, he recovers gradually, because the family doctor is not at hand, and because Eva, the daughter of Besso, besides being a great beauty, is a little of a leech. His adventures in the Desert and an episode, the history of Baroth's family which illustrates the superiority of the Jewish race in all the arts—music, dancing, painting, and song—furnish the second volume. The third takes us to Lebanon, where Tancred is the guest of the scheming young Emir, Fakredine, and where his progress is influenced among the Maronite chiefs. The jealousies and intrigues of the Syrian sects, the life of the mountains, the mingling of the patriarchal age with the fierce struggle of Eastern warfare, bring us upon new ground; but no analysis would take more space than we could spare. Tancred and Berenl find their way to Antioch, the country of the Assasres, a race who are neither Jews, Christians, nor Moslems, but, from what Tancred there sees, preserve the relics of old Greece in all their beauty, ready to come forth and possess the world again! He is here involved in a labyrinth of intrigue and mysticism, relieved by a little fighting; escapes, returns to Jerusalem with Eva, declares his love to the Fowlers, at the very moment the Duke and Duchess arrive—we presume to break the sun-ch—and the tale closes. It is evidently a fragment, and awaits development in a second part.

The above is a mere outline of the plot. The merit of the work is not its story. It is the digressions, the sketches of life, the reflections, that will command attention. The work abounds in passages that may be separated from the text without injury. From them we take the following, as having a general interest:—

"What is most striking in London is its vastness. It is the illimitable feeling that gives it a special character. London is not grand It possesses only one of the qualifications of a grand city, size; but it wants the equally important one, beauty. It is the union of these two qualities that produced the grand cities—the Romes, the Babylons, the hundred portals of the Pharaohs; multitudes and magnificence; the millions influenced by art Grand cities are unknown since the beautiful has ceased to be the principle of invention. Paris, of modern capitals, has aspired to this character; but, if Paris be a beautiful city, it certainly is not a grand one; its population is too limited, and, from the nature of their dwellings, they cover a comparatively small space. Constantinople is picturesque; nature has furnished a sublime site, but it has little architectural splendour, and you reach the environs with a fatal facility. London overpowers you with its vastness. Place a Forum or an Acropolis in its centre, and the effect of the metropolitan mass, which now has neither head nor heart, instead of being stupifying, would be ennobling. Nothing more completely represents a nation than a public building. A member of Parliament only represents a district, but the united constituencies; but the Palace of the Sovereign, a National Gallery, or a Museum baptised with the name of the country, these are monuments to which all should be able to look up with pride, and which should exercise the elevating influence upon the spirit of the humblest. What is their influence in London? Let us not criticise what all condemn But how remedy the evil? What is wanted is architecture, as in so many things, in our time. Shall we find a refuge in a Committee of Taste? Escape from the mediocrity of one to the mediocrity of many? We only multiply our feebleness, and aggravate our deficiencies. But one suggestion might be made. No profession in England has done its duty until it has furnished its victim. The pure administration of justice dates from the deposition of Macclesfield. Even our boasted navy never achieved a great victory until we shot an Admiral. Suppose an architect were hanged? Terror is inspiriting, as well as compatible.

Here is one of many illustrations of the supremacy of "race

"Yes, but what is progressive development? said Sidonia, 'and what are the faculties of man? If development be progressive, how do you account for the state of Italy? One will tell you it is superstition, indulgence, and the Lady of Loretto; yet three centuries ago, when all these influences were much more powerful, Italy was the soul of Europe. The less prejudiced a Pope'to, for example, like our friend Varaszdin—will answer us that the state of Italy has nothing to do with the spirit of its religion, but that it is entirely an affair of commerce; a revolution of commerce has convulsed its destinies. I cannot forget that the world was once conquered by Italians who had no commerce. Has the development of Western Asia been progressive? It is a land of tombs and ruins. Is China progressive, the most ancient and numerous of existing societies? Is Europe itself progressive? Is Spain a tithe as great as she shall, perhaps, follow the example of the desolate countries. All is race; there is no other truth.'—'Civilization was more advanced in ancient than modern times; then what becomes of the progressive principle? Look at the great countries of the Roman Empire! You had two hundred millions of human beings ... Jurisprudence so philosophical, that we have been obliged to adopt its laws and living in perpetual peace. The means of communication, of which we now make such a boast, were far more vast and extensive in those days. What were the Great Western and the London and Birmingham to the Appian and Flaminian roads? After two thousand five hundred years, parts of these are still used. A man under the Antonines might travel from Paris to Antioch with as much ease and security as we go from London to York. As for Free-Trade, there never was a really unshackled commerce, except in the days when the whole of the Mediterranean coasts belonged to one Power. What a chatter there is now about the towns, and how their development is cited as the peculiarity of the age, and the great security for public improvement. Why, the [illegible] Manchester [illegible] capital.'"

There is a touch of humour in the following dialogue between the Arab Sheikh and the leader of the party who takes Tancred prisoner, after some fighting:

"Salaam, Sheikh of Sheikhs, it is done; the brother of the Queen of the English is your slave.' 'Good!' said Sheikh Amalek, very gravely, and taking a pipe from his mouth. 'May your mother eat the bump of a young camel, when will they be here?' 'They will be the first sundown of the morn.' 'Good, is the brother of the Queen with Sheikh Salem?' 'There is only one God: Sheikh Salem will never drink leban again unless he drink it in Paradise.' 'Certainly, there is only one God. What! has he fallen asleep into the well of Nummuls?' 'No; but we have seen many evil eyes. Four tares crossed our path this morning. Our salaam to the English Prince was not a salaam of peace. The brother of the Queen of the English is no less than an Amir. He will ... yea or nay; and he has shot Sheikh Salem through the head.' 'There is but one God, and his will be done. I have lost the apple of mine eye. The Prince of the English is alive?' 'He is alive.' 'Good! camels shall be given to the widow of Sheikh Salem, and she shall be married to a new husband. Are there other deeds of Gin?' 'One grape will not make a bunch, even though it be a great one.' 'Certain words always be spoken. Let your words flow as the brook of Moses.' 'There is only one God: if you call to Ibrahim-ben-Hassan, to Mokrah Tenba, and Taubs-ben-Amin they will not be roused from their sleep: there are no wounds.' 'Tell all the people there is only one God: let the Sheikh of the Jebaleens that has done these deeds of Gin?' 'Let truth always be spoken; my words shall flow as the rock of Moses. The Sheikh of the Jebaleens considered his young man not to fight, but the young man is a very Zazazal. Certainly there are many devi ... but there is no devil like a Frank in a round hat.'"

Besso's idea of "Young England" is peculiar:

"You know little of the world, Eva, and nothing of young Englishmen. There is not a race so proud, so wilful, so rash, and so obedient. They live in a misty clime, on raw meats, and wines of fire They laugh at their fathers, and never say a prayer. They pass their days in the chase, gaming, and all violent pursuits. They have all the power of the State and all its wealth; and, when ... a wring no more from their peasants, they pander the Kings of India."

Our last extract is a speculation on the more than Egyptian antiquity of Damascus:

"London is a modern Babylon; Paris has aped imperial Rome, and may share its catastrophe. But what do the sages say to Damascus? It had municipal rights in the days when God conversed with Abraham. Since then, the kings of the great monarchies have swept over it; and the Greek and the Roman, the Tatar, the Arab, and the Turk, have passed through its walls; yet it still exists and still flourishes, is full of life, wealth, and enjoyment. Here is a city that has quaffed the magical elixir, and secured the philosopher's stone—that is always young and always rich. As yet, the disciples of progress have not been able exactly to match this instance of Damascus, but, it is said that they have great faith in the future of Birkenhead. We moralise among ruins: it is always when the game is played that we discover the cause of the result. It is a fashion intensely European, the habit of an organization that, having little imagination, reasons by reason, and carefully locks the door when the steed is stolen. A community has crumbled to pieces, and it is always accounted for by its political forms or its religious modes. There has been a deficiency in what is called checks in the machinery of government; the definition of the suffrage has not been correct; what is styled responsibility, has, by some means or other, not answered; or, on the other hand, people have believed too much or too little in their wants, have been too much engrossed by the present, or too much absorbed in that which was to come. But there is not a form of Government which Damascus has not experienced, excepting the representative, and not a creed which it has not acknowledged, excepting the Protestant. Yet, deprived of the only rule and the only religion that are right, it is still justly described by the Arabian poets as a pearl surrounded by emeralds."

RUFF'S GUIDE TO THE TURF; or, Pocket Racing Companion, for 1847. R. Ackermann

[illegible] "Companion" for the [illegible] ... [illegible] ... [illegible] ...

INTERIOR OF A BARRACK CANTEEN.

CANTEENS IN BARRACKS.

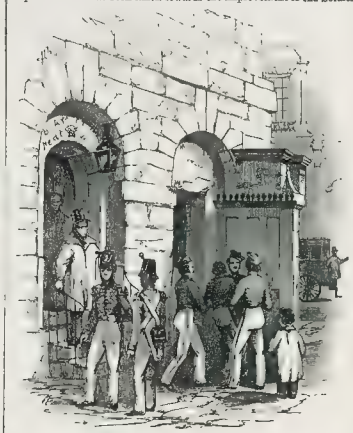
We are glad to perceive that the moral condition of the Soldier is beginning to receive that attention to which it is entitled. We hear of normal schools, and savings' banks, for the army; and of reading-rooms being attached to Barracks for their intellectual improvement; and the salutary effects of the latter measure are extensively acknowledged. This success has, doubtless, led to other efforts for moral improvement, such as that made in the House of Commons, on the evening of the 5th instant, on the House going into a Committee on the Ordnance Estimates. Colonel Lindsay then moved for a direct inquiry into the Canteen System in the army; adding whether it would not be advantageous to discipline, and the moral improvement of her Majesty's troops, to prevent the sale of spirituous liquors in Canteens within the precincts or proximity of Barracks.

It may be as well to explain that a Canteen is a place in Barrack where a licensed sutler is allowed to sell provisions, liquors, coffee, &c., to non-commissioned officers, and privates, and the quartermaster of the regiment is responsible that no irregularity occurs; the sale of wine, beer, or spirits, is not allowed, except at the Canteen.

The honourable member, as grounds for his motion, stated that the Canteens in our different Barracks were let by the Government for the large sum of £65,000 a year, that the mode of letting them was very injurious, and that it led to the renters exacting from the Soldiers exorbitant prices for the bread, beer, cheese, and spirits which they furnished. His object in bringing forward his motion was to get rid of the sale of spirits, because the young Recruit, as soon as he reached his Barrack, was seduced by the old Soldier into the Canteen, and there laid the foundations of those habits of irregular excitement which soon reduced him to the melancholy state of a confirmed drunkard, and rendered him liable to the severest penalties inflicted in the army.

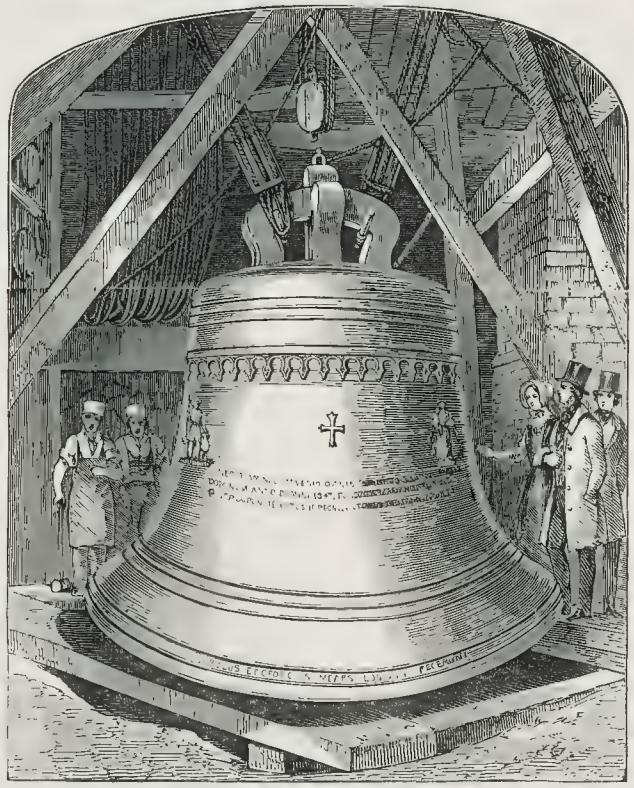
Colonel Lindsay adduced much frightful evidence of the prevalence of drunkenness in the army, which he maintained to be greatly encouraged by the facilities of Canteens. Thus, Dr. Ferguson, late Inspector-General of Military Hospitals, has asserted that "the Army Canteens have ever been institutions of drunkenness; and it is difficult to believe how an abuse so monstrous, and a nuisance so palpable, could have been tolerated so long and to such an extent. It shows the difficulty, in our service, of carrying even the most obvious reforms into effect, when anything in the shape of improvement comes to be proposed to the disturbance of existing interests, or even bad habits of any kind. If kept up at all, it must have been from the high rent that was paid to the barrack department. But how these authorities could reconcile the gains thus obtained at so much deadly cost to their consciences, must remain a problem."

Mr. Fox Maule (the Secretary at War), in reply, defended Canteens, when applied to the legitimate use of Soldiers in Barracks; at the same time, it was allowed that certain evils had grown up with the system, the whole of which, it was promised, should undergo the most careful revision; and, upon this assurance, Colonel Lindsay's motion was withdrawn. It will thus be seen that another step—and a very important one—has been taken towards the improvement of the Soldier



EXTERIOR OF BARRACK CANTEEN.

To this evidence of the evils of Canteens we append two graphic examples, sketched from the life, in the precincts of the Horse Guards; presenting the abuse of the system with unexaggerated detail.



GREAT BELL FOR MONTREAL CATHEDRAL, CAST BY MESSRS. MEARS

GREAT BELL FOR MONTREAL CATHEDRAL.

This, the largest Bell in the British empire, has just been completed by Messrs. Mears, of Whitechapel—the founders, inter alia, of the great Bells of Lincoln and York. The casting of this Bell was completed on Saturday, the 20th February. It was necessary for the purpose to fuse about twenty-five tons of metal; which, at the proper heat, was let loose from the furnaces, and thence safely lodged in the mould in twelve minutes from the time of "tapping." After a few days being allowed for the cooling of the casting, it was raised from the pit, and the mould detached from the metal. When freed from its earthy incumbrance, the soundnes of the casting, and the quality of the tone, proved perfectly satisfactory to the founders.

The weight of the Bell may be taken at 18½ tons. Its dimensions are as follows:—

Diameter at mouth	.. .. ..	8 ft. 7 inches.
Height to shoulder	.. .. ..	5 11
Diameter at shoulder	.. .. ..	4 8

The thickest part, or sound bow, is 8 inches.

The tone of the Bell, which is grand, deep, round, and sonorous, is upon the key F below the line—bass clef of the pianoforte scale.

The inscription is in Roman capitals:—

NEGOTIAMINI. DUM VENIO. OMNES SPIRITUS. LAUDET
DOMINUM· ANNO DOMINI 1847 FUNDATÆ. MARIANOPOLIS 202°
PII. P.P. IX. PONTIFICATUS 1° REGNI VICTORIÆ. BRITANNIARUM 10°
EX. PIISSIMO. MERCATORUM
AGRICOLARUM. ARTIFICUMQUE
MARIANOPOLITANENSIUM: DONO.

And, upon the lip:—

CAROLUS. ET. GEORGIUS MEARS. LONDINI. FECERUNT.

The Bell is ornamented, and has cast upon it the effigies of the Virgin and St. John the Baptist; besides a Medallion, illustrative of Agriculture, Manufactures, and Commerce.

It is the intention of the founders to give the public an opportunity of seeing the Bell, of which due notice will be given previous to its shipment for Canada.

At the foundry of Messrs. Mears (an old establishment, which has existed since 1738), besides the large Bells of York and Lincoln, St. Paul's and Canterbury, were cast the celebrated peals of Bow and Cripplegate, York, Shrewsbury, Norwich, Coventry, Leeds, Liverpool, Wakefield, and Birmingham; together with several hundred sets, and thousands of chimes and single bells, as may be seen from their list. Here, the whole of the operation connected with the founding, trimming, tuning; the making of the equipment for the erecting and ringing of the Bells in the Tower; are carried on, and completed.

It may be interesting to state the comparative sizes and weights of the Great Bell for Montreal, with some other large Bells:—

	Diameter. ft. in.	Weight. ton. cwt.		Diameter. ft. in.	Weight. ton. cwt.
Montreal ..	8 7	18½ 0	Oxford ..	7 2	8 0
Paris ..	8 6½	13 0	Lincoln ..	6 10	5 8
York ..	8 2	11 0	Ghent ..	6 10	5 0
Malines ..	7 9	9 0	St. Paul's ..	6 9	5 0
Cologne ..	7 6	8½ 0

Inauguration of Prince Albert.—The inauguration of Prince Albert, as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, will take place on Thursday next, the 25th of March. The deputation from the University will consist of the Vice-Chancellor, the Heads of Colleges, the Caput, the Proctors, Registrary, and the Esquire Bedel. The deputation will proceed to Buckingham Palace at the hour appointed. At the ceremony, the Vice-Chancellor will address the Chancellor in an English speech; he will then deliver him the letters patent, sealed with the University seal, and also the book of the University statutes. The Chancellor will then take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy and then the oath of office, after which the Vice-Chancellor, taking him by the right hand, places the Chancellor in the chair; the Public Orator will then advance and make a Latin speech, after which the Chancellor will reply in English. The Chancellor will entertain the deputation at dinner in the evening.

Funeral of a Sister of the Holy Guild.—On Monday afternoon, a funeral of rather an extraordinary kind in this country, although of frequent occurrence in France and on the Continent, took place at the Roman Catholic Church at Islington. The deceased, Mdlle Smith, a native of France, resided at No. 32, Clarendon-square, Somers-town, and was a member of the "Holy Guild," a benevolent society bearing that name, and to which she has bequeathed all her property. Being the first of the order who has died in this country, the sisterhood and brotherhood, on account of her benevolence, determined on paying a last tribute to her remains by a "state funeral." Shortly after two o'clock, the coffin was brought out and placed on a litter with handles, over which a pall was spread. A magnificent canopy, surmounted with plumes, relieved with white satin, was fitted on the litter, which was carried by six men, habited in blue cloaks. Immediately preceding the corpse was carried a black banner, with white edges, upon which was emblazoned the cross, supported by the emblems of the order, with the words "Holy Guild—Jesu Mercy." Following immediately behind the corpse, were eight sisters of the order, wearing blue cloaks, and carrying wands, surmounted with crosses. From their waists were suspended, by blue ribbons, large crucifixes. In this order they passed the Roman Catholic Chapel in Clarendon-square, through Chalton-street, the New-road, &c., to the place of sepulture, where the funeral rites, according to the Romish Church, were performed. A large crowd followed the procession.

MRS. BUTLER.

This highly-gifted actress has been performing in her most celebrated characters at Manchester; and latterly, at the Theatre Royal, Liverpool. A Correspondent has sketched the lady in the two opposite walks of tragedy and comedy—as Lady Macbeth and Lady Teazle; and these performances are spoken of in the highest terms of eulogy.

MRS. BUTLER, AS LADY MACBETH.

We are happy to learn that, very shortly, Mrs. Butler will appear in London; we believe, at the St. James's Theatre. Her engagement at the Princess' Theatre will commence early in May.

Mrs. Butler made her début on the stage in the autumn of 1829, in the character of Juliet, ("Romeo and Juliet"); her father, Mr. Charles Kemble, performing Mercutio; and her mother, Lady Capulet. The Nurse was the inimitable Mrs. Davenport. The entire representation was novel, gratifying, and affecting. Miss Kemble was then scarcely eighteen: her success was almost electric; and her admirable performance of the leading Shakspearean characters aided in propping up the falling fortunes of Covent Garden Theatre until Miss Kemble visited the United States, and was there received with enthusiasm akin to that displayed in the mother-country. The publication of her Tour, and her subsequent marriage to Mr. Butler, are, most probably, in the recollection of the reader.

Death of Hervey Leach.—The mortal career of this remarkable individual, who earned for himself considerable reputation both in this country and abroad, for his clever personifications of the habits and eccentricities of the monkey race under the assumed name of Signor Hervio Nano, terminated, after a short illness, on Tuesday evening, at his residence, George-street, Shoreditch. A short time ago deceased exhibited himself at the Egyptian Hall, disguised as an extraordinary animal captured at the Cape of Good Hope, "supposed to be the link between the human race and the ourang-outang," and called "What is it?" The last place deceased performed at was the Standard Theatre, in December last, where, notwithstanding the deception having been discovered and made public, he continued to represent "What is it?" He was about to start for Lisbon when he was taken ill. His was a native of America, and in his forty-sixth year. The last request of the deceased was, that his body should be presented to Dr. Liston, the eminent surgeon, not to be buried, but embalmed and kept in a glass case, as the doctor had been a particular friend to him.

Mr. O'Connell's Health.—We have been informed (says the Globe) that the health of the hon. and learned Member for Cork has not much improved, if at all, since his arrival at Hastings: the only benefit which the change of air has produced is, that he seems in somewhat better spirits. With this exception, however, he is in much the same state of health that he was in before he left town. Although there are other accounts given of the hon. gentleman's health, we have reason to believe that this is the true one. It is said that his medical advisers have recommended his immediate removal to the south of Europe.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—SELECT SPECIMENS OF BRITISH DECORATIVE ART.

We resume our Illustrations of this very interesting Exhibition with a fine specimen of Iron Casting—a Stag—executed by the Coalbrook Dale Iron Works, and exhibited by Messrs. Cottam and Hallen. We agree with the "Introductory" remark, that the specimens in Metal "do not equal similar productions of France and Germany. We can beat our continental neighbours in making steam-engines and casting iron beams, but we have not yet approached them in ornamental metal work. The Coalbrook Dale Iron Works are making a good beginning in the finer kinds of work; and a creditable specimen is shown in the Illustration: but we have as yet no such establishment in England as that of M. Deniere in Paris. Excepting the bronze lately produced after Mr. Bell's 'Eagle Slayer,' for the Art-Union, it was absolutely impossible to find a satisfactory specimen of a recent English bronze of high art. But we may console ourselves with remembering, that, so recently as 1834, it was complained that there was little or no trade in Paris for bronzes. There are now six thousand personsemployed in this ornamental art."

POMPEIAN VASES.

Next are two Pompeian Vases, of exquisite design. One is a small Vase, of great elegance, modelled in Parian, from a cast brought from Italy, by his Grace the Duke of Sutherland; the original being in silver. The other is, also, from a silver original, at Naples; it was modeled from a cast brought by the Duke of Sutherland, lent to Messrs. Minton and Co., and manufactured by them.

CAST, FROM THE COALBROOK DALE IRON WORKS.

In our Report, last week, were two or three mis-statements, which we are anxious to correct. Thus, we have engraved but one of the Statuettes; and the Black Marble Lotus Cup and Tazza were not executed by Irving's Patent Machine, but sculptured by Mr. Hall. The Wood Carving engraved is chiefly by Jordan's, and not Irving's Machine.

We are happy to learn that the above Exhibition has already had the good effect of adding largely to the member-roll of the Society of Arts. It is, certainly, only a beginning; but, as we have already said, "a move in the right direction." It is an effort to elevate national taste, which merits the warmest encouragement; and we cannot too strongly impress on our manufacturers, for their own sake, in these days of Free Trade, to do their best to promote it.

MRS. BUTLER, AS LADY TEAZLE.

ASTLEY'S:—MR. PABLO FANQUE, AND HIS TRAINED STEED.

This extraordinary feat of the manège has proved very attractive, as we anticipated in our Journal of last week; and we have judged the success worthy of graphic commemoration. As we have already described, the steed dances to the air, and the band has not to accommodate itself to the action of the horse, as in previous performances of this kind. The grace and facility in shifting time and pace with the change of the air, is truly surprising.

The skilful rider, Mr. William Darby, or, as he is professionally known, Mr. Pablo Fanque, is a native of Norwich, and is about 35 years of age. He was apprenticed to Mr. Batty, the present proprietor of "Astley's Amphitheatre," and remained in his company several years. He is proficient in rope-dancing, posturing, tumbling, &c.; and is also considered a very good equestrian. After leaving Mr. Batty, he joined the establishment of the late Mr. Ducrow, and remained with him for some time. He again joined Mr. Batty; in 1841, he began business on his own account, with two horses, and has assembled a fine stud of horses and ponies at his establishment at Wigan, in Lancashire, in which county Mr. Pablo is well known, and a great favourite. The black mare, with which he is at present performing, was purchased by him of Mr. Batty about three years since, who had previously obtained her from the Queen's Mews. Mr. Pablo has trained her to do the most extraordinary feats of the manège, an art hitherto considered to belong only to the French and German professors of equitation, and her style certainly far exceeds anything that has ever yet been brought from the Continent.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

"Lucia di Lammermoor" is one of those operas which never tires. It may be heard again and again, and still the splendid morceaux it contains, time after time, make the deepest impression on the ear and on the mind. While listening to such music as this how much are we led to regret that Donizetti has caused his name to be associated in our mind with those scores of insipid, senseless bravuras and duos, the production of an over-exhausted brain—(in which modern amateurs delight) It is difficult to believe that the same hand was at work in such flimsy compositions as these, and in such productions as the two last finales for example, of Lucia. Unfortunately, works similar to the latter, which procured to Donizetti this wide-spread popularity, at the same time obtained, by giving a prestige to his name, success for compositions which otherwise would have been buried in oblivion; and, besides, gave currency to imitations of these on the part of composers incapable of copying his higher efforts. We have, therefore, unrelated reason to wish that Donizetti had contented himself with writing half the number, at most, of the operas he has actually produced, "Lucia" is perhaps the chef d'œuvre of this master; while there are charming scenes of melody interspersed throughout, there are morceaux such as the "Ah mi frena," and the "Fra Poco," which he has never equalled elsewhere, and the first displays that genius for concerted music, which some have almost denied him, but which he has also indisputably shown in the quartet of "Don Pasquale, the trio of Lucrezia Borgia, and some of his other operas. It is true that few composers have been so favoured by the subject they worked upon, as Donizetti. In "Lucia," the dramatic situations can be more striking and effective than the appearance of Edgar of Ravenswood, in the midst of the bridal party; his demand for the ring of betrothal, and his malediction of the weak and unhappy Lucy; and how beautifully does the music, throughout, portray each variation and shade of feeling. For an artist possessed of dramatic power, no scene could be more advantageous than this, and certainly Frezzolini makes the most of it, both as an actor and a singer. In the concluding part his voice is really superb, and towers above those of the chorus, with a force and power truly terrific. The artist possesses a fund of energy and passion, which would make him equal to the greatest parts; the only danger is that of its abuse. This we remarked in the concluding scene; he is sometimes too fond to alter the "Fra Poco" from the flowing tender character with which he gave it on the first night, and to throw into it one of those bursts of voice, which never fail to call down applause, but which here is not in place. In this, however, perhaps he could not find fault here for the "Fra Poco" is exquisitely sung by this artist; he has improved greatly in the rendering of the opening due, with Castellan, the latter part of which he gives with much delicacy and expression, but his voice requires to recover its bringing out before the listener can attain any idea of its real quality and power.

ASTLEY'S.—MR. PABLO FANQUE, AND HIS TRAINED STEED.

Castellan sings, acts, and looks the part of Lucia admirably. The singing of this delightful artist has improved since last year. When she first appeared, tempted by the wonderful flexibility of her organ, she indulged in too great a luxuriance of fioriture, to give to the music its full value; now it is rare that she exercises a roulade which does not seem to flow naturally from the sentiment of the music; and of the exquisite sweetness and delicacy with which she executes the passages, it is impossible to give an idea. In the part of Ashton, not by any means a favourite one with baritones, the effect of Coletti's noble voice strikes us with renewed force every time we hear him; in the allegro of the duet with Castellan, in the second act, as in the "Chi mi frena," he is, above all, highly effective.

Besides the "Sonnambula," which was given on Thursday, with Gardoni and Castellan, a new ballet was produced, entitled "Thea; or, La Fée aux Fleurs." The subject turns on the fanciful creation of a fairy who presides over flowers, which absorb his eyes and thoughts to the exclusion of all other favourites; Thea, a young and lovely slave, is, by the intervention of her godmother, La Fée aux Fleurs, transforming into a rose, as the only means of preserving her affections. The stratagem succeeds, and the whole winds up with their union. Such is the plot, which, by its fanciful character, and its combination of Eastern scenery, dresses, and dancers, the introduction of the palanquin, &c., on the stage, gives full scope to the imagination of the ballet-master and the scenic decorator.

The present week has been a tolerably quiet one in the dramatic world, all the pieces we noticed last week having proved attractive enough to warrant their continuance in the bills. A new comedietta is announced at the HAYMARKET this evening, to be called "The Light Troop of St. James," which, it is not improbable, may turn out to be an adaptation of a French vaudeville "L'Escadron Volante de la Reine."

The only other novelties of the week are, a two act piece—"Dreams of the Night" at the PRINCESS', and a clever farce at the ST. JAMES's theatre. The first of these narrowly escaped condemnation: the most charitable fine we can take is to say very little about it, more than that it is a bad translation of a mesmeric vaudeville, in which, we think, Rose Mori played the principal character. The "Dreams of the Heart" are evidently disturbed by the loss of the audience, —at least those whom the dullness of the piece did not mesmerize into dreams of their own—that we do not think we shall long see the name in the bills. Messrs. Ryder, J. Vining, and Mrs. Stirling made the most of what they had to do, and certainly succeeded in catching the want of spirit of the author. The plot somewhat resembled that of "La Sonnambula," with the exception that the heroine gets into various unpleasant predicaments through her unconsciousness in a mesmeric state instead of whilst asleep

At the ST. JAMES'S, M. Lafont's benefit was attended by a full audience, and Adelia Toussez appeared for the first time, and was received by the audience as finding the manager of the Marseilles theatre in great distress from the non-arrival of the "eminent tragedian," Lebrun, announces himself as that person, and appears in his place. The farce, called "Sir Stirling" is the following day the real Simon Pure arrives: and this leads the wretched imposter into all kinds of troubles and predicaments, which, however, at last terminates to his satisfaction. The theatre was honoured with the presence of her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Duchess of Kent, with their suites.

At the ADELPHI, "The Flowers of the Forest" is drawing money: so much so, that we hear Mr. Webster will not care particularly to bring forward any other novelty for Easter, reserving his forces until the attraction of the drama begins to flag. Some curtailments have been made since the first representation, but we scarcely think with a sufficiently unsparing hand. On the second representation, Madame Celeste was absolutely forced from independent and probably induced by her exertions on the first night: and we hear that Miss Woolgar fainted after leaving the stage in one of the scenes, and was only enabled to go through the performance of the next piece by the kindness of Mrs. Keeley. We regret exceedingly unfortunate, with respect to the health of the principal members of its corps

The LYCEUM management has revived "Marvin Chuzzlewit," with its original cast; and Mrs Gamp and Young Bailey provoke the same laughter as of old. Three or four novelties are in active preparation against the holidays, one of them being a melo drama by Shirley Brookes

Mr. Love, the polyphonist, is to be heard in great force at CROSBY HALL, where his new entertainment of "Christmas in the Olden Time," has proved a hit. Indeed, simple-minded as this gentleman is, he has a considerable knowledge of public whether the various fictitious characters of his monodrama are not, after all, real personages cunningly placed about—under the floor, and up the chimney, and on the roof, and behind the scenes—for the purpose of creating the sound of rushing almost marvellous in the rapidity with which Mr. Love changes his costumes and general make-up. His little table is a perfect hotel, in which all sorts of strange characters appear to be staying, and making a night of it; and the entire entertainment is to be commended, as keeping the audience in a continuous roar of laughter by the most harmless humour imaginable, perfectly free from consciousness or vulgarity. Mr. Love is the author of the summer season of entertainments always appearing about the same time of year, and always welcome.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE.—Upto our market, this week, the arrivals of English wheat have been on a very moderate scale; yet the show of samples has been by no means large. Owing to the favourable change in the weather, the demand for all descriptions of both new and old wheat has been very inactive; but, in prices, we have no alteration to notice. A few parcels of foreign wheat have been taken off our quays, and forwarded to Ireland, as the improvement in value noticed on the 11th instant. Barley has been in moderate supply, and fair request, at fully late rates. All kinds of malt have proved a dull inquiry, and must be considered somewhat lower. In oats, a full average business has been done, at extreme prices. Beans and peas quite as dear; but flour continues to sell on the same terms as last week.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 72s to 76s ; ditto white, 74s to 80s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 70s to 75s; ditto white 75s to 80s; rye, 44s to 46s; grinding barley, 31s to 33s; distilling ditto, 34s to 36s; Norfolk malt, 72s to 75s, brown ditto, 67s to 69s; Kingston and Ware, 77s to 79s; Cheveriot, 76s to 80s; Yorkshire ditto, 70s; Lincolnshire feed oats, 20s to 24s; potato ditto, 25s to 26s; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s to 23s; ditto white, 24s to 26s; tick beans, new, 40s to 42s; ditto old, 44s to 46s; grey peas, 34s to 36s; maple, 42s to 44s; white, —s to —s, boilers, 34s to 38s, per quarter. Irish—wheat, 68s to 70s; oats, 20s to 24s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 40s to 43s, per 280 lbs. Foreign. Wheat, 70s to 80s, barley, 28s to 32s; oats 22s to 24s; beans, 40s to 42s; peas, 42s to 44s, per quarter. Flour, American, 41s to 42s, Baltic, —s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market—The business in cloverseed and hops continues to increase, the demand is heavy, and prices are well difficultly supported. In all other seeds, comparatively little is doing LINSEED, English, sowing, 48s to 52s; Baltic crushing, 45s to 47s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 45s to 48s. Hempseed, 32s to 38s per quarter. Coriander, 10s to 12s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 8s to 10s; white ditto, 6s to 8s; Tares, 10s to 12s per bushel. Carraway-seed, Regpseed, (new) £22 to £25 per last of ten quarters Linseed cakes, English, £13 0s to £13 12s; Foreign, £11 0s to £12 0s per 1000. Rapeseed cakes, £5 5s to £5 7s 6d per ton Canary, 70s to 77s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, —s to —s; ditto, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 10d to 10½d per quartern loaf of household ditto, 8d to 9½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 74s 2d; barley, 33s 10d; oats, 21s 2d, rye, 45s 10d; beans 35s 7d; peas, 34s 11d.

The Last Week's Average.—Wheat, 73s 4d; barley, 33s 7d; oats, 21s 3d, rye, 45s 1d; beans, 35s 6d; peas, 36s 0d

Sugar.—Hands of new sugar are in good request, at the improvement in value noticed in our last, for every instance. Refined goods are selling at the following rates:—Lumps, 45s 6d for standard quality.

Coffee.—Fine is quite as dear; but other kinds are nominally the same.

Rice.—Prices are extreme each, and price—are barely supported

Provisions.—The demand for all kinds of Dutch butter—very sluggish state, and prices have, in some instances, a downward tendency. The best qualities are selling at 104s to 108s, and middling sorts ditto to 100s per cwt. Irish—are in limited request, at 94s to 102s per cwt for Carlow; 94s to 98s for Cork; 92s to 96s for Clonmel; 92s to 96s for Waterford; and 90s to 92s for Limerick. Fine Belfast butter is at 94s, and 96s to 102s per cwt for Dorset, and 10s to 14s per dozen the for fresh. The bacon market is in a very excited state and the quotations have advanced 4s per cwt. Hams are in full request, at 70s to 80s for Irish, 70s to 80s, and hoxey, 74s to 77s per cwt. On board very little is doing, but prices may be quoted from 70s to 80s per cwt. Hereford—s to 5s per cwt. dearer Lard is held at higher rates. English cheese is dull, but American cheese are quite—

Tallow.—This market is not so—as last week, on the spot is quoted at 51s to 51s 6d; and for forward delivery 49s 9d to 49s 6d per cwt

Hay and Straw.—Meadow—ditto, £3 5s to 5s; and straw, £1 0s to £1 5s; Ball, 12s 9d; new Tunfield, 14s 9d; Ord's Redheugh, 14s 9d; Scotch—sold Moor, 15s per ton.

Potatoes.—Supply of Rnsh—in heavy request, at—somewhat lower. Prof Fast Indian, and Leeward Island, 9s 9d per gallon

Hops.—On the whole, we have to report a slow inquiry—all kinds of Lops, at almost last week's quotations.

Potatoes.—The supply of potatoes is somewhat on the increase, hence the sale is heavy, at late's stationary prices. They may be quoted at 160s to 230s per ton.

Smithfield.—Rather a dull market has been experienced this week, on the following terms:—Beef, from 2s 8d to 4s 2d; mutton, 3s 4d to 5s 0d; veal, 4s 4d to 5s 4d; and pork, 3s 10d to 4s 8d per 8lbs, to sink the offals

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Prices mutton is held as full prices; but all other kinds are a slow inquiry.

Beef, from 2s 6d to 3s 6d; mutton, 3s 4d to 4s 6d; veal, 4s 0d to 5s 0d; and pork 3s 4d to 4s 10d, per 8lbs, by the carcase.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

A general Court of the Proprietors of the Bank of England was held on Thursday. The increase of the Rest on the half-year stated at £35,465, and the Directors advised the payment of a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent, free of Income Tax. This was, however, met by an amendment, that an addition of 1 per cent. bonus should be added; which was carried by a show of hands. A general court, however, to confirm this amendment will be held on Thursday next Consols on Monday touched a lower quotation than had previously occurred, —, having been the opening price, which basis—ruled. Some large purchases, however, by parties who had been large seller—produced a reaction, and 88¼ to ⅞, and 88⅜ ⅝ were the closing prices The Market was very animated on Tuesday, and 88⅝ ⅞ for the Account were the highest prices to 88⅝. A purchase of 150,000 for Account checked this tendency to decline, and the closing price was 88⅝ ⅞ for the Account Wednesday's Market was flat; a belief that the Government would become still more—ous—ers—ed from India Boards receding to 4s. 6d. A notice has, however, since appeared, raising the interest to 3¾ per Cent. New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents receded to 88⅜ ⅝ ⅜ ⅝ having been the opening price, which basis—ruled. Some large purchases, however, by parties who had been large seller—produced a reaction, and 88⅛ to ⅞, and 88⅜ ⅝ were the closing prices The Market was very animated on Tuesday, and 88⅝ ⅞ for the Account were the highest prices to 88⅝. A purchase of 150,000 for Account checked this tendency to decline, and the closing price was 88⅝ ⅞ for the Account Wednesday's Market was flat; a belief that the Government would become still more—ous—ers—ed from India Boards receding to 4s. 6d. A notice has, however, since appeared, raising the interest to 3¾ per Cent. New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents receded to 88⅜ ⅝ ⅜ ⅝ on Monday: at present the nominal price is 88⅝ ⅞ to 89⅛. Three per Cents 34 to 36. This latter quotation is merely nominal, as business—transacted—Tuesday. Exchequer Bills have been done at par to 2s. pm; and the Consol Scrip has been as low as 1¼ discount Business—towards the close of the week, was rather limited, and prices leaving off at— Cons. 88⅝; New Three-and-a-quarter per Cents Annuities, 88⅜; Long Annuities, 9 ⅛; Ditto, 30 years, 9 5-16; India Stock, 247; Consols for Account, 88⅝; Consols, Scrip, ⅞ dis.; Exchequer Bills, 3 pm.

In the Foreign House, Monday was principally occupied in preparing for the settlement, little disposition to deal being evinced, from the state of affairs in the English House. Mexican, for money, was 21⅞, for account 21⅛; and on Tuesday, in advance, 21⅜ for money; Portuguese, Four per Cents, have fluctuated between 33 and 34 Spanish Five per Cents were on Monday: at present the nominal price is 22½ to 23¾, Three per Cents 24 to 26. This latter quotation is merely nominal, as business—transacted—Tuesday. Dutch Two-and-a-half per Cents stock is heavy, and Belgian has not been much dealt in The few quotations of real transactions at the close of the week are—Brazilian Bonds, five per Cent, 86; Ditto, Small, 85; Chilian, 15 per Cent, 97½; Columbian Bonds, 24; Grenada, One per Cent, 19; Ditto, Deferred, 3½; Mexican Bonds, 21½; Spanish Bonds, Three per Cent, 34; Dutch Two-and-a Half per Cent, 58; Ditto, Four per Cent, Certificates, 97.

Business in the Share Market has been very limited The settlement, however, passed off without any difficulty. Sales—in only be effected at a decline, and the best of the transactions—were—ed at—ow rates. There has no improvement can be anticipated at present, the provincial market being full of orders for sales. The dispute between the Birmingham and Oxford Junction has led to many consultations between the parties interested, but—ed—ions to establish compromises. If a liability is constantly to be apprehended that, after all arrangements are completed, a new opening of the question is to be permitted, and purchasers of the shares of the liability of the party to the original

THE MAN IN THE MOON,
EDITED BY ALBERT SMITH AND ANGUS B. REACH.
"This is an admirable expensive worth of fun. The illustrations, by Phiz, Maclise, Leech, Thomas, &c., are capital."—Sun
"This is a very delightful addition to our serious periodical literature; and we have been richly amused while reading and laughing over its bright and facetious pages. There is not only excellence in quality, but liberality in quantity. The 'Panoramic Tragedy of the Life and Death of Sixteen String Jack' is a complete farce."—Morning Advertiser.
No 3 is Now Ready. Nos. 1 and 2 have been REPRINTED, and may be had of all Booksellers. Office, 17, Warwick-lane, Paternoster-row.
Just Published, 8vo, sewed,

THE POTATO DISEASE, its Cause, Prevention, and Treatment. By JOHN PARKIN, M.D. [In the author's recommendations are among the most judicious we have seen."—Gardeners' Chronicle.
London: W. WOOD, 39, Taviton-street, Covent-garden

On the 1st of March, to be completed in Ten Monthly Parts, Price 2s. each,

GREECE—PICTORIAL, DESCRIPTIVE, & HISTORICAL. By CHRISTOPHER WORDSWORTH, D.D., Prebendary of Westminster, Author of "Athens and Attica." &c., with upwards of Three Hundred and Fifty Illustrations, Maps, Plans, Views, and Costumes, and Geography of that Country. London: W. S. ORR and Co. Amen-corner, and 147 Strand

On the 1st of March, to be completed in Nine Monthly Parts, Price 2s. each,

THE GALLERY OF NATURE.
A Pictorial and Descriptive Tour through Creation, Illustrative of the Wonders of Astronomy, Physical Geography, and Geology. By the Rev THOMAS MILNER, M.A., Author of "Astronomy and Scripture," &c. Illustrated by Maps, Diagrams, Portraits, [illegible] Engravings and [illegible]
JAENISCH AND WALKER ON CHESS OPENINGS.
This Day is Published, in one thick volume, 8vo, price 15s., cloth,
JAENISCH'S CHESS PRECEPTOR; a New Analysis of the Openings of Games. By C. F. De JAENISCH, of St. Petersburgh. Translated from the French, by GEORGE WALKER, Author of "Chess Studies," and various other works on the Game of Chess
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMANS
Now Ready, the sixth edition, with considerable additions, post-8vo, cloth, 9s.
VESTIGES of the NATURAL HISTORY of CREATION.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.
Just Published, with Four Plates, 8vo, cloth 2s. 6d.,
ON CATARACT, Artificial Pupil, and Strabismus. By F. H. BRETT, M.D., F.R.C.S., late Surgeon to the Government Opthalmic Hospital, Calcutta.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.
Just Published, 8vo., cloth, 2s. 6d.,
ON INDIGESTION and certain BILIOUS DISORDERS of the Stomach and Liver. By the Author of "Practical Observations on Diet. By G. C. CHILD, M.D., Physician to the Westminster General Dispensary.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho.
DR ROWS [illegible]
Just Published, Ninth Edition, price 2s. 6d.,
NERVOUS DISEASES, LIVER, and STOMACH COMPLAINTS, LOW SPIRITS, INDIGESTION, GOUT, ASTHMA, and DISEASES of WARM CLIMATES By G. ROBERT ROWE, M.D., F.S.A.
By the Same Author, Fifth Edition, price 2s. 6d.,
On SOME of the MOST IMPORTANT DISEASES of FEMALES
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Princes-street, Soho, and all Booksellers.
Just Published, Illustrated with Engravings on Wood, post 8vo., cloth, 10s 6d.,
CHEMISTRY of the FOUR SEASONS—Spring, Summer, Autumn, Winter. By THOMAS GRIFFITHS, Professor of Chemistry in the Medical College of St. Bartholomew's Hospital.
"Two volume illustrates, in a simple, popular, and amusing manner, the chemical physiology of plants, and communicates the more important facts of agricultural chemistry in an agreeable manner. The laws and properties of these wonderful and mysterious agents—heat, light, electricity, galvanism, and magnetism, are appropriately discussed, and their influence on vegetation noticed."—British and Foreign Medical Review.
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Prince-street, Soho.
Just Published, post 8vo., cloth, 7s.,
ON NEAR SIGHT, AGED SIGHT, and IMPAIRED VISION, with Observations on the Use of Glasses By W. WHITE COOPER, F.R.C.S., Surgeon to the North London Ophthalmic Infirmary.
"Truly practical, and consequently truly valuable, we recommend this volume to all eyes. There is nothing connected with the sight upon which its advice is not minutely considered and valuable. Further than this, we must through scientific knowledge of his subject, Mr Cooper goes into details of forms to improve the vision, to choose glasses and adopt every course which can strengthen or preserve the most precious of our senses."—Literary Gazette
London: JOHN CHURCHILL, Prince-street, Soho.
The Art of Health, Happiness, and Long Life, in Two Numbers, 1s. each; by post, in stamps

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; (with Diet Tables for Families). 2. HOW TO BE HAPPY: or, Physical, Moral, and Social Enjoyment, Exhilarating Agents, Government, Sleep, Exercise, Air, Water, Baths, Dress, Cleanliness, Expedients, and Wealth. By Physician-extraordinary to the Author (M. A.) 2nd edition. Regent-street and Hatchard's, Piccadilly.

ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT
COMPLETE FOR 2s. 6d.
ADDRESS.
Notwithstanding the previous attempts to illustrate the NEW TESTAMENT, whether by the skill of the artist as exhibited in copying from designs supplied to him by the old masters of the pictorial school, or from the efforts of the engraver to produce a cheap publication, by substituting before the reader accurate views of the more striking scenes, and interesting localities and objects connected with the sacred narrative, the present publication, while embodying such a perfectly novel series of pictorial illustrations, from designs by a very eminent Artist, will not prove unacceptable to the public. Nor is it confined to these alone, inasmuch as the volume is also adorned with various Woodcuts, faithfully exhibiting, it is believed, some of the most remarkable, most cities, and ruins, now existing in Palestine, which have engaged the art either ancient or modern. Wherever practicable, some topographical accuracy has been studied; and these sketches is given, as deduced from the most authentic sources. In general, the views of places —such as Jerusalem, &c., are not intended to represent what they were in remote ages, but rather to exhibit them as they exist at the present time; and where ruins are introduced, they either serve to point out what the place was, or else form the most suitable subjects for picturesque splendour; or, if they do not satisfactorily do this, they at most indicate the sites of the respective cities of which they were the splendid monuments.
With regard to the NOTES, it will be perceived that novelty has been particularly attended to in their compilation; and it may be necessary to observe, that they are intended to be merely of an explanatory character, without the introduction of any thing of a theological or dogmatic tendency. The Notes are much more numerous and of greater length in the Gospels than in the concluding parts of the work, in consequence of Dr Scott's not having entered into the same extensive manner in the latter, as he did in the former portion of his valuable Commentary. In the first place, it must be admitted that the former is the more important portion of the Sacred Volume, and this would naturally lead to a more full and copious exposition of it; secondly, the form and position of the Illustrations sometimes precluded, and at others, the nature and character of the subject itself did not seem to demand, on the plan pursued, any additional in the way of annotations.
In the descriptive matter and the information contained in the Notes, the Editor is mainly indebted to the works of Dr Kitto, particularly his "Biblical Cyclopædia," to the Rev. Archibald Jones, of Dowlis, to Mr. Stephens' "Travels," and to various other travellers of note authority. The first-mentioned of these works is a storehouse of learned criticism and historical fact: from its pages, as also from the work of Professor Robinson, may be gathered all that would seem necessary for a work of this kind, of the ancient history, strictly so called, of the districts and localities into which the Holy Land was divided, as well as of the political and physical changes which have taken place in those regions since the age of those or the result of conquest. Hence, however, some account is derived of the social and statistics, of the present moment.
To the learned work of Dr Jahn we are under considerable obligations in regard to the Rites, Ceremonies, and Sects, which existed among the Jews, during the time of which the Old Testament would remain inexplicable. Nor have the manners and customs of Greeks and Romans been overlooked, wherever an acquaintance with them was found to throw light on the interpretation, or assist the reader in comprehending the spirit, of the passage under which they were introduced. Many have been pointed out, in general, a short account of its author, the time when, and the circumstances under which it was written.
With the aids thus afforded, it is presumed the reader of the New Testament may be ordered attentive as well as delighted to the youthful mind, inasmuch as some close is attended to the right understanding and due appreciation of it. The same may be said with respect to the reader of more advanced age, for original and boldly conceived designs of the talented artist (Mr. K. Meadows)—which constitute, indeed, the distinguishing feature of the work—and the series of neat engravings executed by the best hands of the day, of many of history notes, may be considered as removing the present undertaking a useful and acceptable acquisition, not only to younger students who have a classical taste, but to the public in general.
To render the work still more valuable [illegible] attractive a bird's-eye View of the Holy Land is prefixed, exhibiting the places and cities [illegible] mentioned in the Old [illegible] New Testament.
198, Strand, London, 1847
Published on the 1st of each Month, price 2s. 6d.,
Part 1 of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, and sold by all Booksellers and Newsmen throughout the Kingdom.

TONIC ALE.—This splendid description of Bottled Beer is now in prime condition, and may be had in any quantity, of the Proprietors, at the Albion Brewery, Aldersgate-street. Also, Pale Ale, of the finest quality, and Brown Stout, of the celebrated Burton brewage, in prime condition, and guaranteed sound. Families supplied. Orders addressed to the Proprietors, Messrs. ALLSOPP and SONS, Albion Brewery, Aldersgate-street, will be punctually attended to.

AMERICAN SODA BISCUITS.—The only shop in England where they can be had Genuine is WEBBER'S, 81, Lombard-street, near the Mansion House. Also, his new Valentia at 1s. 6d.; Brighton Captain, 1s.; Ginger Wafers, 1s.; Honey Cakes, 1s. per lb. Sponge Cakes, Mock Turtle, Oil Cake, Gibbs, &c., 2s. 6d. a Quart.

BEST COALS, 26s. 6d. per Ton.—THE METROPOLITAN COAL COMPANY deliver a very superior article at the above price. Second quality 24s. 6d. per Ton. Coke, 17s. 6d. Office, 179 High Holborn, opposite Red Lion street.

SHIRTS.—Youths' and Gentlemen's Shirts made to superior fit to order by a practical hand in the neatest style, at 10s. 6d. each. A large assortment kept ready made. ALE I NORTON'S [illegible] Linen and Cutting Warehouse, 72, Strand Arcade. An extensive variety of Tweeds at 1 Guinea, with every description of Hosiery and Under-Clothing.

BERDOE'S LIGHT OVER-COAT, for the SPRING and SUMMER (intended also, in warm weather, to Hen of an under-coat). The WATERPROOF PALLIUM combines especial claims to the attention of the respectable public. The superior cut fit, gentlemanly appearance, well-known efficiency and moderate charge of the Established Waterproof Coat, are universally admitted, while the popular garment ever invented. An extensive assortment kept to select from, or made to order at a day's notice.—W. BERDOE, Tailor and Over-Coat Maker, 96, New Bond-street (near Oxford-street), and 69, Cornhill (north side).

THE REGISTERED PALETOT OF LLAMA CLOTH
the most fashionable coat for both the present and approaching [illegible] same moderate prices, which, with its neatness and [illegible] [illegible] such general popularity. It has been made, by especial command, for Her Royal Highness Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, his Grace the Duke of Wellington, and the several Royal Visitors to the British Court. In London it can be had only of the Registered Proprietor, JOHN HEATH, Court Tailor, 114, Regent-street, and 22, Cornhill. Agents for Liverpool, Dawbarn and Son. Bath—Gresswell. Dublin, George Mackenzie. Melbourne—Lewis and Co. Birmingham, Warning and Son, New-street; and the principal tailors in other large towns

INVALUABLE IN EVERY LAUNDRY.—ROBINSON'S DRYING MACHINE entirely abolishes the destructive system of wringing, and is greatly facilitates the drying of all articles of apparel, blankets, counterpanes, &c., as to effect an important saving of time and fuel. It has been adopted in her Majesty's Laundry, Windsor, and in many public and private establishments throughout the Kingdom, including the Royal Naval Hospitals at Plymouth and Haslar, the Royal Marine Infirmary, Chatham, and the Baths and Washhouses, St. Pancras and Bethnal. The operation is performed without pressure or friction, and cannot possibly injure the most delicate fabrics. Copies of testimonials, and all further particulars, may be obtained on application to W. E. JENKINS, Proprietor of the Patent, and sole Manufacturer, 27, Charles-street, Berners-street, London.—Machines are also made of sizes suitable for Dyers, Manufacturers, &c. &c.

ART-UNION OF LONDON: incorporated by Royal Charter.
President H. R. H. the Duke of CAMBRIDGE
The LIST for the CURRENT YEAR WILL CLOSE on the 31st inst. Subscribers [illegible] twelve for such guinea pair, besides the chance of obtaining a work of art as the [illegible] a pair of prints, the "Last Embrace," and the "Neapolitan Wedding," engraved by Mr. Charles Rolls and Mr. F. A. Heath respectively, after T. Uwins, R.A., and the set of engravings in outline from seven of the Cartoons submitted in competition for the premium of £10 offered by the Society for an historical picture.
GEORGE GODWIN, } Hon
LEWIS POCOCK, } Secs.
1, Prafalgar-square, March 1, 1847.

BEARDS COLOURED PHOTOGRAPHIC PORTRAITS,
AT 34, PARLIAMENT-STREET, WESTMINSTER;
ALSO, KING WILLIAM-STREET, CITY, and 123,
H. FAY, POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION, REGENT-STREET.
"A great improvement has been effected by the patentee."—

CLAUDET'S DAGUERREOTYPES.—"On one of the tables (at the last Soirée of the Marquis of Northampton) were some Daguerreotype specimens, the productions of Mr. Claudet, being Portraits made on a larger scale than any we have yet seen. The expression of the Portraits was much superior to those of the ordinary size; and, when it is considered that, without adding or even modifying any of the minute detail, which is preserved by the Photographic Art, they can now be coloured in the most exquisite manner, it is impossible to avoid congratulating Mr. Claudet on the success which has attended his researches and discoveries in that branch of science."—Morning Post, 15th March, 1847

PHOTOGRAPHIC MINIATURES.—234, Regent-street.—Mr. BEARD begs to inform the nobility and gentry that he has REMOVED to the above address, where an IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT upon the Daguerreotype Portraits. The likenesses taken by the Photographic process serves merely as a sketch for the Miniature, which is painted by Mr. MAN (late Beard), whose productions on ivory are so celebrated in Paris. They have, by this process, all the delicacy and elaborate Miniature, with the infallible accuracy of expression only attainable by the Photographic process. Licensed by the Patentee.

NO. 61, GROSVENOR-STREET, BOND-STREET.—Messrs. [illegible] GILEY, Surgeon-Dentists, have REMOVED from 22, Haymarket. Their system of supplying artificial teeth, ensures the power to masticate without lessening the taste of the palate by artificial covering, or injuring the adjoining teeth by use of clasps. The gums are unchangeable in colour, and perfectly resemble the original. Decayed teeth permanently filled and rendered to use. Advice gratuitous.

A HIGHLY-RESPECTABLE and EDUCATED PERSON age 40, a Widow, who has filled the situation of Companion, Attendants, and Housekeeper to an Invalid Lady for some years, would be happy to meet with a similar situation. The most unexceptionable References given and would not object to travel. The highest testimonials can be obtained. Address, post paid, to E. A., Mr. Hunter's, Church-street, Hackney.

ELEGANCE and ECONOMY in PAPER-HANGINGS.—[illegible] Proprietors, at the Old Establishment, 29, Fleet-street, Temple Bar, and 310, Regent-street, Hyde-park Corner, beg to call the attention of the Nobility, Gentry, Builders, Upholsterers, and Decorators to their extensive and unrivalled STOCK of PAPER-HANGINGS, which, for Elegance or Oak, as cheap as other Papers. Terms, Cash. Established 50 years. W. CROSBY, 22, Lower-third Arcade, N.B.—Three doors from the Strand entrance

PARIS PLAYS, at LA REINE DES FLEURS, 27, Ludgate-street. Abrahams, HEAT and EVANS invite the attention of Ladies to their extensive assortment of wove and stitched Paris Stays of the most elegant shape, and at very reduced prices. Also, a large stock of English Stays of the best description. Depôt for the above, Mrs FLANAGAN'S, 35, Bishop-street, Londonderry

BRIGHT'S MAGAZIN DE MODES, 86, QUADRANT, Regent-street, and 12, LUDGATE-STREET, City, next Everington's. Importers of French Millinery, Ladies' Satin, or Cloth Dress Caps for Evening Parties, from 8s., usually sold at 20s. Children's fine Leghorn Hats, 4s. 6d. Foreign and British Straw Bonnets of every description. Every article marked at the lowest scale of profit, from which no deviation will be made

FRESH ARRIVAL of NOVELTIES for DRESSES.—KING and SHEATH have just received from Paris several Cases of the Newest Productions, being of Grand Assortment of Fancy Dress Goods at very low as at the lowest rate. Striped and Checked Llama Cloths, very beautiful Cassimeres and De Laines, Fil de Chevenes, in stripes and Checks, best quality 1s. 3d. per yard; 20,000 yards of RICH FRENCH CHINTZES, [illegible] a fresh assortment of Real Valenciennes Lace, from 4½d. to 14s. per yard. KING and SHEATH, 264, Regent-street, London

LADIES' READY-MADE LINEN AND INFANTS, UNDER-CLOTHING. Mrs NORTON'S Show-Rooms, 72, Strand, is now replete with an extensive Assortment of Ladies' Linen and Under-Clothing Flannel Wrappers, Muslin Dressing Jackets, Night Dresses, Caps, Collars, Sleeves, Handkerchiefs, Gloves, Hosiery, and Baby Linen of every description. Wedding orders executed with punctual attention. Outfits for Ships or Foreign Climates furnished on the most reasonable terms, and at the shortest possible notice. 72, Strand, Adelphi

THE NEW MANTLES, from PARIS. SEWELL and CO., of Compton House, are NOW SHOWING, for the Spring, all the Newest Shapes in MANTLES; the most prominent for the season will be the "Irene," "Marie," "Isabelle de Montpensier," "Pelisse," the "Creole," and "Pilgrim" with various other novelties for Evening and Dinner Dress, in Silk, Satin, Velvet, Embroidered Muslin, Crapes, embroidery, new cambrics, Irish shirts, lace bertha, and embroidered cambric handkerchiefs, gold and silver Hand-dresses, Flowers, ribbons, &c.—44, 45, and 54, Old Compton-street, and 46 and 47, Princes-street, Soho-square.

MOURNING COSTUME for LADIES.—Ladies or Families requiring any description of MOURNING—whether a complete outfit or single garment—may be suited to the most perfect manner, with the best materials and most modern designs daily 30 per cent. below the exorbitant prices usually charged. A most descriptive [illegible] containing [illegible] and every requisite for Servants' Mourning, forwarded free of any part of the Metropolis or suburbs, or, preferred, families may be waited on by a competent person, who is prepared with patterns, &c. Observe the Warehouse, 247, Regent-street, facing, in the most varied and novel designs. The Mourning Warehouse, No. 53, Edgware-road. HUNT and WALLIS.

SADDLERY and HARNESS.—[illegible] and Co., Saddlers and Harness Makers, to the Queen and Royal Family, and Coach Builders, 34, Cockspur-street, Charing-cross, and their Agent in London, Mr. W. W. Greener, 4, Gunsmith's-street, Chee-side.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. [illegible] of DOWELL, of No. 38, Regent-street, Swallow-street, from Margaret-street, Cavendish-square, begs to inform the Nobility and Gentry that she has REMOVED to the above Establishment, where she will continue to give Lessons in the Millinery and Dress-making in the Art of Dress-making in a Series of Lessons, undertakes to convey to persons of the meanest capacity a correct knowledge of Cutting, Fitting, and Dressing. Ladies waited on at their own residences, for the Lessons, for One Guinea. The correspondence of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.—Paper Models.

FINE FLOWING RINGLETS.—The care of the Hair in Infancy and Childhood.—Ladies are requested to read the following letter from Mrs. Little Bentley, Lane with Impunity. The seeds of strength or weakness are laid in the nursery, and the stability of the fine flowing ringlets, or bald heads, of after years, are traceable to this early period. OLDRIDGE'S BALM of COLUMBIA, long celebrated for its peculiar and invigorating qualities, for promoting and restoring the growth of the hair, is peculiarly fitted for application during the tender years of infancy and childhood; and no nursery where personal advantages are held in any estimation, should be without it. Price 3s. 6d., 6s., 9s., and 11s. per Bottle. No other prices.—Oldridge's Balm, 1, Wellington-street, the second house from the Strand, London.

OWLANDS' LOTION.—The Toilet of Beauty furnishes [illegible] grounds of distinction to those who use ROWLANDS' LOTION, which is sold by the most distinguished possessors of brilliant complexions. This exquisite preparation combines the properties of the most refined emollients, with those of a powerful astringent, and the operation of variable temperature, by refreshing its delicacy, and sustaining the brightness with which it beauty is adorned. "ROBERT SHAW, LONDON," is engraved on the Government Stamp. Prices, 3s. 6d., 7s., and 14s. per Bottle. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists

ROWLANDS' ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE. A Bright White Powder for the Teeth, compounded from the most rare and most exquisite produce of the Orient. Purchase of inestimable value for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, and strengthening the Gums. Its truly efficient and fragrant ancient properties have obtained for it the patronage of the Queen, [illegible]
[illegible] Price 2s. 9d. per box. CAUTION.—Be sure to ask for "ROWLANDS' ODONTO." Public [illegible] the Government Stamp, with the words "A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden," engraved thereon, is affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

HAVANNAH TOBACCO.—Proud of the supereminence for which his TOBACCO is so deservedly celebrated, JOHN MULLENS begs to inform the Public that he has just received from Havannah, by his own Agent, a large importation from Cuba of the rare and delicious Tobacco. His Friends are advised to ask for "Mullens's Havannah Tobacco," at 8d. per ounce, or 6s. per pound, to be had at his Warehouse, 24, Fore-street, London; or of his Agents in most towns in the Kingdom

DEANE'S IMPROVED PORTABLE GARDEN PUMP.—This novel, but most simple, and inexpensive invention is admirably adapted for Gardens containing a pond. The Pump has a very neat appearance, cannot get out of order, is readily lifted with one hand, and is extensively patronised by eminent practical gardeners to be had at Deane's Horticultural and Sanitary Depôt, opening to 46, King-William-street, London-bridge. Deane's Illustrated Horticultural Implement Catalogue forwarded free to all parts of the United Kingdom

THE [illegible] IRON WORKS AND GREAT [illegible] and table cutlery, [illegible] verandahs, lawns, &c. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

"THE BATTLE OF LIFE."

WORDS BY O'C. LYNN. MUSIC BY R. GUYLOTT.

Maestoso e con espressione.

f fz

Tromba obligato e pia. e poco cres.

With energy and expression.

The Bat - tle of Life is not fought on the field, Where con - querors mar-shall their war - like ar - ray, The ban - ner that guides it ne'er p

ad lib. dolce

waves o'er the shield, Whose mot - to is might, and whose em - - - blem is sway; Oh, no! there's a bat - tle more glo - ri - ous far Than pp pp

ad lib. affettuoso ad lib.

war - riors' fight on the land or the main; 'Tis the bat - tle where peace wages ho - li - est war, And the soul's pure af - fec-tions may vic - - - to-ries gain.

lento fz p fz ff

colla parte.

fz

Tromba obligato e pia.—e poco cres.

II.

The Battle of Life is to save, not to slay,
Its trophies are hallowed by freedom and love;
There hope bears the banner, illum'd by the ray
That springs from the fountain of mercy above.
There our triumph o'er self is our title to fame;
There our toil is to better the lot of mankind,
Till the slayer shall turn from his havoc, in shame,
And fling down his sword at the altar of mind.

III.

Then peace shall hallow the old church-tower,
Whence the tocsin no more to the conflict shall call;
Then peace shall descend upon homestead and bower,
And, with love, be the guest of the palace and hall.
Ay, this is the battle where man can control
His fate, though the struggle with danger be rife:
Still cheerily onward! the earnest of soul
Shall conquer at last in the Battle of Life!

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—Saturday, March 20, 1847.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 256.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1847. [Sixpence.

ENLISTMENT.

ALL human things are strangely mingled, and the affairs of the world present in their progress a series of startling contrasts. On the very eve of the day of National Humiliation the Legislature was engrossed by a scheme for improving one of the great instruments of our national supremacy and pride; and the Government that set apart a day for the acknowledgment of human weakness devoted a night to consider how it could best increase our human strength among the nations. Such a reliance upon the "arm of flesh" at the moment we are confessing its weakness and insufficiency is curious; but the explanation is not a difficult one. Men are bound to use all human efforts in their continual struggle with the elements and each other: they must not presumptuously expect miracles to be wrought in their behalf. We may not leave the field unsown while praying to Heaven for abundance; the blessing is reserved as the reward of human exertion; the seed must be cast by the hand of man; the result is beyond his influence. "God giveth the increase."

It is the same with what affects our national existence. If we neglected the means of defence we should cease to be a people; and though there are many who question the lawfulness of war, and denounce it altogether as unchristian, we must, in the present state of the world at least, be prepared for it. We are commanded to watch as well as pray, and there is nothing inconsistent, though it seems incongruous in the abstract, for the same Government, at almost the same moment, to be drawing up a form of prayer for penitence and abasement, and regulations expressly framed to induce men more readily to take up the profession of a soldier. We allude to the bill introduced by Mr. Fox Maule for shortening the term of Enlistment in the Army. It is a very important step; one that will alter materially the character of our military force; but only gradually and with time: old impressions are long in wearing out, especially bad ones. In the discussion raised upon it some points occurred worth a little attention. First, the extent to which one class of wrongs make another necessary was never more completely illustrated than by the speech of Mr. Fox Maule himself on Tuesday evening. He announced with perfect coolness that the English Government has hitherto raised its levies for the most part by a regular system of falsehood and fraud! It, of course, had but one mode of repressing the murmurs of the cheated—violence. In fact, the system of flogging was necessary to keep up an authority over men deceived and robbed, and therefore despising its plunderer. All this is clearly established by the present Secretary at War, with a degree of candour quite "refreshing." He admits the most glaring dishonesty as the rule of conduct at the Horse Guards, seemingly without the least sense of shame at it. His speech in this respect is a perfect curiosity of official confession. The satirist and the dramatic writer are more than rivalled by the functionary, who cannot be supposed to draw on his imagination, and speaks as one having authority. The truth of the character of Sergeant Kite is fully confirmed by Mr. Fox Maule; the feeling that generations ago prompted the attack of Farquhar on the recruiting system has at last travelled upwards, through the almost impenetrable circle of prejudice and routine that surrounds all the departments of a Government, to the War Office. The progress of common sense and common justice is almost as slow as the motion of the new planet which turns on its axis once in some two hundred years. A disposition to describe things as they really are cannot be too much encouraged in official quarters, and we, therefore, quote the following account of the process by which the ranks of our army are filled from the speech of the gentleman who is the organ of the military authority in Parliament.

> The idle and the prodigal resorted to the army as something which would provide the one with the means of living in congenial indolence, and the other of escaping from the results of his improvidence. A wild lad enlisted to avoid some temporary disgrace. But with these classes voluntary enlistment ended. All other enlistment was brought about either by bribery or the cajolery of recruiting sergeants, or when the recruits were in a state to be hardly responsible for their actions. The bounty was a delusion; it was scarcely ever received by the recruits; and not being received, it more than anything tended to disgust the soldiers with the service. Finding himself in the situation of having, in a moment of irresponsibility, disposed of his liberty for life, the young soldier too frequently deserted, only to be brought back again in custody.

The great deluder, through all this shameful scene of profligacy and fraud, is—the English Government! Admitting that it is not to be blamed for taking the services of the most depraved and reckless, since no other class will engage with it, it cannot be acquitted of the charge of making the bad still worse by its mode of dealing with them. The thief, the idler, and the fugitive are welcomed as they plunge into the soldier's career to escape toil or punishment, committing a grievous error as to the avoidance of both; but the honest, the merely ignorant, and the hesitating, are deprived of the few faculties they may possess by liquor paid for by the most moral Government in the world, and then dazzled with the promise of a sum of money, which the agent of that same moral Government knows to be in effect a lie, and which that agent's chief can dis ribe in Parliament by the softer title of "a delusion." The bounty promised to the drunken recruit was never given him; the "State" shrunk from it in payment for the soldier's arms and uniform. By a piece of chicanery, the recruit found that all his "bounty" was a debt to his employers, for his state livery and the weapons he was to bear. The consequences are just as truly described by Mr. Fox Maule. Discontent, the slightest expression of which, by word or gesture, formed the military crime of "insubordination" was punished by flogging; disappointment leading to desertion, also punished by flogging; or despair leading to the canteen and drunkenness, again a crime visited with flogging. Thus the system of recruiting was at the root of half the evils of our military system, and made that "necessity" which was so long and so successfully pleaded against the limitation of corporal punishment. We have seen it as an established fact that men are very much what laws and systems make them; and that if a Government gains servants by lies and drunkenness, and then completes the transaction by robbery, it cannot expect those it thus treats to be models of honesty, sobriety, or high moral feeling. Yet, with a perverseness not uncommon among mankind, a high degree of virtue was expected from those who, in their treatment by their superiors, had seen nothing but the active operation of every vice. The Duke of Wellington's dispatches are full of denunciations and complaints of the detestable moral character of the English soldiery; these passages are not often quoted, they are not flattering to our national pride. But they have only to be referred to, to prove that the universal belief in Spain is not altogether unfounded. Spaniards to this day declare that the plunderings, outrages, and atrocities committed by the English army fully equalled those of the French, and that of the two they would rather have been left to the mercy of their enemies than their allies. The Duke speaks of his troops repeatedly in terms more applicable to a band of robbers than the army of a civilised nation; and to keep up discipline, he was compelled to be a very "vigorous" commander indeed.

FESTIVAL OF THE HIGHLAND SOCIETY OF LONDON.—THE HEALTH OF THE QUEEN, WITH "HIGHLAND HONOURS."—(SEE NEXT PAGE.)

We are now going to attempt an improvement; and it were to be wished that the greatest military name of our age and country was a more active agent in it. But the Duke of Wellington seems to have been always content to use an existing system, without attempting to improve it. He was never the promoter of measures for raising the status of the army. Strict attention to its physical and material efficiency seems to have bounded his concern for it, both in war and peace. He opposed the claim of his comrades of the Peninsula to a decoration till public opinion shamed the Government into granting it, a generation too late to be welcomed. He never interfered by word or deed to moderate the severity of corporal punishment, till public opinion again drove the Government to act; and he only suggested the new regulation for shortening the term of enlistment, when it is proposed by civilians, acted on again by the pressure from without. It is difficult to imagine how, with such a name, such a mind, and such a position, he has never originated any one change for the better, but always silently assented to anything proposed by men, whose opinion, in military matters, he probably holds in the greatest contempt.

The speech of the Secretary at War is a curious proof of how official life deadens men's sense of what is honourable and just. A Government will do things unabashed, and find men proud to be its instruments, that would drive an individual ignominiously from society. Mr. Fox Maule, for instance, looks on his position as an honourable one; it is so regarded by all around him. Yet he openly avows he is the chief agent in a system of fraud, delusion, and theft! Suppose the chief clerk of a London mercantile house confessing to a public meeting that "his post" carried with their business by intoxication, lies, and robbery! What a storm of hisses and execrations would greet him, and how he would be hunted from all social circles! A Government does the same thing, avows it, and those engaged with it are "all honourable men."

FESTIVAL OF THE HIGHLAND SOCIETY OF LONDON.

ON Monday, a General Court of this Corporation was held at Freemasons' Tavern, to celebrate the anniversary of the Battle of Alexandria; his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge in the chair. Dinner was served in the superb Hall of the Tavern; there were about 200 present, and the room was filled with ladies in nearly the whole of the company were in the Highland garb, in uniform, or in Court dress; and the scene was a very splendid one. Much of its brilliancy is attributable to his Royal Highness Prince Albert honouring the Corporation with his presence: the Prince having just accepted the office of Chief, and this being his first attendance at the Society

On the right of the Duke of Cambridge were Prince Albert, Sir John Macdonald, Sir Harry Nicholas, [illegible] and Mr. Hart, M.P. On the left the Duke of Wellington, Marquis Lansdowne, General Sir James Macdonell, Sir John Wilson, and Sir F. Kelly. At other tables were Sir W. C. Ross, Sir Jarvis Rosenbeke, General Sir D. Leighton, Mr. C. Fraser Mackintosh, Major Hutt, Major Macdonald, Captain Maitland, Mr. Musgrave (of the Board of Trade), Dr. Cumming, Mr. Duff Gordon, Mr. H. J. Cameron, Mr. C. A. Mackenzie, Mr. James Matheson, Capt. Charles Forbes, Capt. Lamont, R.N., Capt. Jay, R.N., Lieut. Rouse, R.N., &c.

The Rev. J. Tod Brown said grace, and the cloth having been removed,

The Chairman successively proposed the healths of "Her Majesty the Queen," "the Queen Dowager," "the Duke of Rothesay, and the rest of the Royal Family," which were toasted with "Highland honours."

The Duke of Cambridge next gave the health of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, the Chief of the Highland Society. (Loud cheers.) The toast was drunk with "Highland honours," amidst great enthusiasm.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert, in rising to acknowledge it, was again loudly cheered. He said "Allow me to thank you for the very kind manner in which you have received this toast. I am very glad to have had the opportunity [illegible] meeting me your Chief (loud cheers)—the Chief of a Society whose object is to preserve the nationality of the Highlands (cheers), their national spirit, and their national habits. (Cheers.) I am happy to have had the pleasure of visiting [illegible] several times in company with her Majesty the Queen (loud cheers) and I can assure you that the impressions those visits left on our minds have been most gratifying. (Loud cheers.) It is impossible for any one to go to that [illegible] to breathe its fresh and bracing air, to see its beautiful scenery, [illegible] hospitable, hearty, and kind people of Scotland, without receiving the most favourable impressions (Loud cheers.) I beg to propose as a toast, 'Prosperity to this Society and the Highlands of Scotland. (Loud and continued cheering.

Song, by Miss P. Horton, "Prince Charlie."

The Chairman next proposed the health of the illustrious man on his left, the Duke of Wellington. (Cheers. Drank with three times three and one cheer more.)

The Duke of Wellington, in acknowledging the compliment, said: "Having had the satisfaction of being long acquainted with many of you, gentlemen having the highest respect for your countrymen of all classes and descriptions, [illegible] very fond of the profession to which I have the honour to belong (cheers), it is highly satisfactory to me to have it in my power to meet on here this day (cheers); and I can assure you that upon all occasions on which you do me the honour to invite me to be present at this celebration, I shall be most happy, when my other avocations will permit me, to pay you my respects. (Cheers.) It is with the utmost satisfaction that I have witnessed the expressions of your attachment to the illustrious Prince who has honoured you with his presence here this day. (Loud cheers.) I am sure you will fell proud of his attachment to you and your country, and the country I know will be benefited by it. I request you to drink to the health of the Prince who has done us this honour. [illegible] His Grace immediately afterwards again rose, and proposed "the health of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge," the noble Duke observing "A soldier, many of us, his Royal Highness has gained the greatest respect for your country, not by witnessing their gallant achievements in the field. (Cheers.) He has the highest respect for the Highland soldier, and for all your countrymen. (Cheers.) I need not, therefore, say more to induce you to pay your respects to [illegible] Highness by drinking his health."

The toast was drunk with all the honours

[illegible] rose and returned thanks, observed that he greatly [illegible] and he alluded with pleasure to the time a time before most of the gentlemen present were born when he had served in a Highland Regiment. His Royal Highness then proposed "the health of the army" (loud cheers); "the memory of Sir Ralph Abercrombie, and the heroes that fell with him in Egypt;" and "the [illegible]

After which his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by [illegible] the Duke of Wellington, and the principal guests, quitted the [illegible] chair was subsequently resumed by Sir [illegible]acdonald, and the [illegible] prolonged till after midnight.

Several pipers paraded the room at intervals, and a Highland toastmaster was peculiarly energetic, brandishing overhead a veritable claymore—an essential accompaniment to the "Highland honours." A military band was also in attendance; and a company of vocalists sang Scotch songs during the evening.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

It is the characteristic of children never to know who are their real friends. We Parisians, with all the coldness of a blazer, growth of our climate, are in the same predicament. It happens with Russia now what has happened more than once before with England. Lo! and behold the Czar—the autocrat—the detestable and detested autocrat, for whom ministers are nothing, the Chamber of Deputies every year; and every species of anathems hurled constantly by the journals—not excepting the Court creole, the Débats—is now become the [illegible] friend of the country. For the advance of two millions, he has [illegible] hoarded gold of the close-fisted capitalists, awaiting the increase of the distresses of the land, to speculate upon them; and already is the price of corn fallen, so hopeless seem the speculations on human misery. However the pecuniary advances made to France, towards England courteous advances will not [illegible] I can have announce to you most positively that the Grand Duke Constantine of Russia will go to London in a month hence, and remain nine [illegible] It will be an immense acquisition to your season, which I know, like [illegible] looks all its past gale.

If you consider how few are great artists during their lifetimes, and how much fewer are really found to be such when they are at the end of their career, or are dead, you may imagine how deep a sensation has been awakened by the death just ocurred—of Mdlle. Mars. With her departed from the stage, after a few struggles, the glorious era of French high comedy; and almost simultaneously the works of Congreve and Cumberland were abandoned on your own stage. No one possessed so consummate an art—it had all the forms of impulsive, instructive nature; her voice was so tuneful, that it had the effect of music, and you listened entranced to its magic; the more so, as it possessed by its timbre a peculiar penetrating, so that her very whisper reached the most remote corners of the theatre.

The example of the Czar has acted upon the treasure-holders here. Baron Rothschild has offered £250,000 on loan to the Municipality of Paris; and that if they will employ it in giving bread orders he will bear the loss of any rise in price that may occur. With such liberality, and the return of fine weather, things are assuming a different aspect; and, if it were not for Lent, no doubt pleasure would revive. But now it is no late. Our season will only last three weeks more. The English and other foreign visitors are only coming to contemplate the fashionable exemption of Longchamps on Friday, and the inauguration of the fashions of the season, which then takes place. Amongst the persons of fashion now announced as immediately arriving from England I may mention the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Earl of Liverpool, and Lady Wilton, &c. The Italians, the greatest resort of Fashion, will close at the end of the week, and, except at Lord Normanby's, and the Bois de Boulogne, there will be no place of resort for the ladies of London. On a winter evening and fashionable hero every impulse of pleasure depends as much as it does in England; as a wit lately very justly observed, "French society is now reduced to a house with [illegible]ches, in which every one is struggling to occupy the first place."

What was once called scandal is now receiving the sanction of public opinion in Paris. All the feuilletonists in Paris are engaged in operating this change, of which no one can predict the effect upon society. Dumas, in his correspondence in the Presse, leads the van: he mentions everything that relates to private life, sparing not the real names of his protagonistes. His own son he tells you is always looking after his father's cash-box, and with a view of scattering its contents. One of his intimate friends he tells you has but two teeth, and "these are of doubtful ivory," whilst he relates to you the supposed bonnes fortunes of little Baron de Talleyrand, with the matrimonial dissensions they have occasioned (a doubtful compliment), and the Don Giovanni looks they have given the young diplomatist. Thus is a son, an intimate friend, and this young nobleman [illegible] to public observation, because M. Dumas says it is a feuilleton. The effect of this new style of writing, in taking from society its decencies, its charities, and its dignity, is inestimable.

The part which Count d'Appony, the Austrian Ambassador in Paris, has played in bringing about a reconciliation between Lord Normanby and M. Guizot, has led to overtures between France and Austria. M. Guizot it is currently reported will, at the end of the season, go to Hombourg, and Prince Metternich to Johannisberg—with so short a distance between these two places of residence they can easily meet, and combine peacefully their operations. Looking at it ings in general in Europe, in whatever direction, we see the spirit of peace pervading. It is not the wisdom of men, but palpably of a far higher power, which has of late signally conveyed its lessons in the most serious of forms of distress that can visit Europe at large

FRANCE.

The great event of the week was a defeat of the Ministry, in the Chamber of Deputies, last Monday. Their candidate, M. Dupratt, for the Vice-Presidency of the Chamber, left vacant by the elevation of M. Hebert to a seat in the Council, was defeated by M. Leon de Malleville, one of the most talented of the supporters [illegible] This disappointment was caused by a majority of one only, the votes being

For M. Leon de Malleville	.. ..	179
[illegible]	.. ..	178

This check was as unexpected as it seems to have been annoying. It is said to have arisen from over-confidence on the part of the Government; but even the Débats admits that the circumstance is rather a serious one to the Conservatives. It has caused considerable sensation in Paris, and is discussed with great animation by the journals of all shades of opinion

The King, Queen, and Princes Adelaide left Paris on Monday morning for Fontainebleau, where they were to remain two or three days.

M. Dulangis has been named Attorney-General of the Royal Court of Paris, in the place of M. Hebe

The Paris papers naturally attach considerable importance to the purchase of £2,000,000 of French Stock by the Emperor of Russia. The Presse contends that same deep political design is in contemplation, an idea which is extensively shared both in this country and France. On the other hand, the Times Chronicle affirms that the proposition was first made to the Russian Chargé d'Affaires, by a third party, unconnected with the Cabinet; and, having been submitted, and unanimously rejected, it was urged upon the assumption that it should be considered simply a financial affair, totally unconnected with politics.

The Presse, a Ministerial paper, contains a remarkable article upon the recent [illegible] according to which France has to choose between four situations—first, an alliance with England, which, according to that journal, can only be maintained by constant humiliation and the entire sacrifice of the national interests; secondly, an alliance with the secondary states, which, in the best view of it, would place France as a secondary European power, secondary in its maritime rank to England, and in its continental rank to Russia; thirdly, isolation, which would in fact be an armed peace, and ultimately lead to decadence; fourthly, an alliance with Russia, which, according to the Presse, would be attended with every conceivable national advantage, placing France on the very first rank of European powers, both as a maritime and a continental state, and leading, even to the reconstruction of Polish nationality

Yesterday week, being the evening of M. Guizot's private reception, the salons of the Hotel des Affaires Etrangeres were unusually crowded with fashion and rank. Among the visitors were the Duke of Montpensier and Lord Normanby. This was the first occasion on which the British Ambassador had presented himself at the hotel of M. Guizot since the reconciliation. All the members of the corps diplomatique were present, with the exception of the Chargé d'Affaires of Russia.

On the 17th inst., a fire broke out in a new building in Cherbourg Dock-yard, called "La Garnilure." It took place in one of the upper rooms, and was [illegible] It is supposed, by a workman who had been smoking. Luckily there was [illegible] wind, or the ships in the basin and the whole building must have been destroyed; as it was, only one-third of the building was consumed. The walls only remain. No lives were lost, and but three or four men wounded. The loss is estimated from 75,000f. to 80,000f.

Sinister reports are in circulation in France as to the progress of famine Serious outrages have taken place in the department of the Loiret. Plunder has been perpetrated in the presence of the troops sent for the protection of property In one hundred, 100 sellers have been condemned, 50 fined, and [illegible] 35 Hussars were called by the populace, pressed upon and hemmed in so completely, as to be incapable of moving, while boat-loads of grain were carried off by the thousands of peasantry assembled

An idea of the state of the department of the Loiret may be formed from the following placard, which was posted on the gate of the Town-hall of Saint-Ay on the 18th inst.

"The day of vengeance is arrived—we must have bread, pillage, or death. You have no want of rich men kill them if they refuse to give you their money. Burn their houses, and murder their wives. Leave the inhabited houses only to have sold their wine. You must go to their houses. Pillage the cellars of the others—fear not the gendarmes, you shall be supported. Moreover, as a choice of deaths, it is better to die fighting than to die of hunger. Courage—forward—pillage, blood, and death for ever!"

At Orleans there has been considerable excitement, and in Paris there have been exaggerated reports of serious disturbances in the former town.

The papers afford ample evidence of deep distress and discontent, and of the probable recurrence of disorder in many districts—those on the Loire particularly. During the armed force of the Government, troops have been stationed to guard the boats laden with grain and flour which passed from different points. Disorders, more or less grave, have occurred at Montarges, Bellegarde, Rovin, Vernon, Asnieres, Bourg-la-Reine, &c.

The Courrier Français announces that M. Guizot is about to visit the baths of Homburg. This journey is to coincide with the arrival of Prince Metternich at Johannisberg.

SPAIN

Another strange Ministerial rupture has taken place at Madrid [illegible] wishing to remove General Narvaez, who stands high in the Queen's favour, from Madrid, appointed him to the military command of Navarre. This he refused, on the ground that his duties as a senator prevented his leaving the capital. The Duke and Count Cleonard then resigned, and could only now form a [illegible] next applied to the Queen, and wanted her to sign the appointment, but she, it is said, was unwilling to do so, [illegible] dered their resignation. An [illegible] decided that the General should be brought to trial for having refused obedience to the orders of his superiors. The proposal was submitted to the Senate, which body, after some discussion, authorised the Government to try the General. M. Lizuraga was the only senator who opposed the measure, and General Concha refused to vote. The Duke of Sotomayor proceeded after the sitting to the Palace to transact business with the Queen, but her Majesty made no allusion to the affair of General Serrano.

Extraordinary incidents are said to have occurred at the Palace. The young Queen is said to have told Lord Minsters that they did not yet know whom they have to deal with. General Cabrera, the Minister at War, (who required to be bled in consequence of the excitement he had endured), requested her Majesty to look at his grey hair, and to remember that he had spilt his blood in defence of her cause; to which she replied, "so has he," meaning Serrano.

It was generally believed at Madrid that M. Pacheco had been requested by the Queen to form a Cabinet, and that the Queen had accepted the list of persons he named as his colleagues. In consequence of this the Moderado party deemed it right to make a demonstration in the Chamber of Deputies in favour of the Ministry. M. Martinez de la Rosa, M. Gonzales Bravo, and some other of the principal members of that party, submitted a motion calling upon the Chamber to declare that the political principles of the present Ministry merited the approbation of the Chamber, and that it would give it its support as long as it should deserve the confidence of the Crown. A long discussion took place, in the course of which the Ministry was warmly attacked and defended. Eventually the motion was carried by a majority of 144 votes against 60.

The principal Cabinet of M. Pacheco was said to be thus composed:—The Marquis Miraflores, President of the Council and Minister of Foreign Affairs; M. Pacheco, Minister of Justice; M. Arrazola, of the Interior; M. Manuel Bertran de Lis, of Finance; M. Reynoso, or Salamanca, of Commerce; General José de la Concha, of War; and General Ros de Olano, of Marine.

A decree has been published forbidding the exportation of all kinds of grain, flour, potatoes, &c.

PORTUGAL.

We have letters from Lisbon to the 16th inst. Nothing of importance had taken place since the last advices, but there had been a few trifling skirmishes, in which the Queen's forces appear to be the gainers, or had the advantage.

Saldanha had not yet proceeded to invest Oporto, but the junction of a portion of his forces with those of Casal had at last been effected.

General Povoas had been appointed to the command of a division at Amarante. Saldanha had raised some volunteer battalions between Oporto and Coimbra. The forces of the insurgents, after a delay into the province of Minho, had again retired into Oporto. An action was expected to take between the Queen's troops and those of the Conde de Mello, near Portalegre.

The force at present in Oporto is various; estimated: some limit it to 9000, others enhance it to 14,000 men.

Two vessels lately effected an entrance, in spite of the blockading squadron, into Oporto. They were fired at, but escaped without injury. The blockading squadron consists, according to the latest accounts, of the Queen's ship of war, three British vessels of war were anchored off the Bar—the Superb, 80 guns, America, and Pluto

The insurrection is entirely still subsisted, and the probability remained unchanged that the Queen would be obliged to accept British mediation.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

We have received Cape of Good Hope papers, [illegible]ve accounts from the eastern province of that colony to the 12th of January.

The information from the frontier is calculated to cause uneasiness. The Kaffirs continue their depredations, and have succeeded in more than one instance in getting clear off with their booty. In an attempt to recover stolen cattle by a party of the Cape Mounted Rifles, under Lieutenant Gilstein, had been roughly handled, and one of the men killed by a shot. Immediately the poor fellow fell; several of the Kaffirs made a desperate rush to stab the dying man, but a well-directed fire speedily threw the Kaffirs into confusion, and enabled the party to carry off the corpse.

Four thousand five hundred cattle have been recaptured from the people of Cobus Congo and of his brother Pato. His engagement with these people was [illegible]ver, and it is stated that forty Kaffirs were killed, whilst the troops had one man killed and two wounded; these men belonged to the rifle corps.

Sir Peregrine Maitland, on the 8th inst. had taken out half rations of biscuit, in consequence of no store-waggons having arrived there. This produced much dissatisfaction.

UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

By the Montezuma, we have received New York papers to the 6th inst. They state that the sittings of Congress terminated on the 4th.

The Sub-Treasury Act had been defeated.

The Military Bill was passed, omitting the appointment of a Lieutenant-General

The Navy Bill, providing for the construction of additional war-steamers, was also passed.

The news from Mexico is of a very warlike complexion While the army of Generals Scott was preparing to march upon Vera Cruz, the Mexicans suddenly appeared before Saltillo, and drove in the outposts of General Taylor. General Taylor was, however, exceedingly strong there, having with him 6,000 men, who had consulted with him from Monterey. Many believed that when the Mexicans discovered its strength, they would not attack it; and in the army it was generally considered that Santa Anna meditated no serious blow in that quarter, the movement being a feint to mask his intentions of marching his main body to Vera Cru

In the meantime General Urrea had crossed the mountain to threaten Matamoras. He had with him 4000 men, one-half of whom were the best soldiers of Mexico. Colonel Drake, commanding at Matamoras, had provided muskets and ammunition for citizens in case of an attack, and has sent to Point Isabel for several pieces of ordnance. Notwithstanding these warlike demonstrations the New York Sun says it has good reasons for believing that the Mexican Government will soon sue for peace.

THE OVERLAND MAIL.

The Overland Mail has arrived, with dates from Calcutta, Feb. 9; Madras, Feb. 14; Bombay, Feb. 16; Delhi, Feb. 6; Hong Kong, Jan. 31; and Ceylon, Feb. 15

We gather from the Summary of the Bombay Times of the 16th Feb., that no important event had transpire since the last Mail. There was about to be a reduction in the army, and a great reduction in the general expenditure.

The Governor-General has directed that labour at public works shall be suspended on Sundays throughout India. A similar measure, three years since introduced by Sir George Arthur into Bombay, has been eminently successful. A general order to the above effect has been published by Sir Charles Napier, in which is embodied a defence of the conquest. His Excellency left Kurrachee for Hyderabad on the 4th, to take a parting look of the fields of Meanee and Dubba. The rumours of his immediate retirement from the Government of the country have, in some measure, ceased.

Everything was tranquil in the Punjaub. The Rajah Lall Singh, ex-Minister, has reached Agra, and has been conducted in the form. His family have accompanied him into exile, but, for the present, are kept apart from him, till the pleasure of the Governor-General shall be known. The state of affairs in Afghanistan would seem to be improving. Akbhar Khan had removed to Cabool from Candahar, accompanied by one of its sirdars. The Wuzzeer's visit was one of friendship to his relatives, and not a hostile one. The report that he had captured the Queen and taken her prisoner has been found out to have been false. The king of Burmah has been assassinated by one of his Woongyees, who has usurped the throne of Ava. The murdered Prince was made Regent on the deposition of his Brother-in-law, and succeeded him on his demise.

The disturbances in the Goomsoor district still continue, and reinforcements of troops from the neighbouring cantonments are being poured into the country Contradictory accounts prevails amongst those already located in the district.

The only daughter of the late Nawab of Bhopal has been placed on the throne of her ancestors by our Resident at Indore, Mr. Hamilton. The ceremony was an imposing one, and, at its conclusion, a Khlut was conferred on the Sovereign Begum from the Governor-General.

Lord Hardinge was expected to reach Meerut about the middle of February Lord Gough was, at latest dates, at Karnaul, and the Lieut.-Governor North-west Provinces at Hansi.

Sir George Pollock, Military Member of the Council of India, has been compelled to retire from India in consequence of bad health; he returns to England by the Cape.

A sword, value 300 guineas, has been voted to Sir Harry Smith by the community of Calcutta, in token of their estimation of the services rendered the country by him in the late Sikh campaign. The gallant General quit India for England immediately.

The weather continued extremely cold. Theatricals dull: the late opium gambling transactions have been pronounced illegal.

MISS HERSCHEL.—The Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Hanover, accompanied by the Hereditary Prince, left the Royal residence at Hanover on the 16th inst., to pay a visit to Miss Caroline Herschel (sister to the celebrated astronomer, Dr. Herschel), who resides at Hanover, and who on that day attained her 96th year. This venerable lady is still in full possession of her mental faculties, and continues to take the liveliest interest in science. The Crown Princess, who greatly venerates this interesting old lady, has been pleased to present her with a most splendid arm chair, as a birthday present.

FRIGHTFUL MURDER IN BELGIUM.—The Brussels papers state that on Saturday week the young Count de Looz-Corswarem, the representative of one of the noblest families of Belgium, entered a small chapel, contiguous to his chateau, in the neighbourhood of Namur, and, without any notice, fired at his two sisters, who were engaged in their devotions. The eldest sister fell dead on the spot. The Count then fired twice at the survivor, and the second shot wounded her mortally. The miserable perpetrator of this double deed then hurried away, vowing vengeance against other members of his family. It is supposed that he has destroyed himself, as he has not yet been found, and as his dog returned late at night to the chateau without him. The bodies of the young Countesses were conveyed by the peasants to the chateau. It is asserted that the Count was subject to fits of insanity, which had become more violent since the recent death of his parents

THE LATE MURDER IN SHOREDITCH. On Monday an inquest was held before Mr. William Payne, the coroner for the city-and-Tower-hamlets district, concerning the death of William Gubart, aged nineteen years, an umbrella-[illegible] selling in Hare-alley, Shoreditch, who was shot by a young man named [illegible] brookes, as stated in our paper last week. Mr. James Hancock, a surgeon, stated that he had made a post mortem examination of the body of the deceased. There was a small hole on the right side of the neck, about three inches deep and about an inch in circumference. A quantity of small shots were discovered closely lodged on the spinal bone. He had no doubt but that the shot had struck the spinal bone, and caused instantaneous death. The Jury unanimously returned a verdict of "Wilful murder against Thomas Brookes," and the Coroner issued his warrant for his committal to Newgate.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS. MONDAY.

LORD BROUGHAM'S BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY BILL, Lord BROUGHAM moved the second reading of his Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill, and explained the chief provisions of it. He said there was a great objection to the mixed jurisdiction of a court of bankruptcy in the City, the ordinary mass of insolvents not suiting the respectable notions of the merchants of London. He proposed, therefore, to give greater powers to the Insolvent Courts out of the City, so as to enable them to deal with bankruptcy also. In the City, as it would reduce the number of the Commissioners (each of whom received £2000 a year) from six to three, and abolish the Court of Review altogether—the business of that court to be in future performed by the Commissioners themselves, with an appeal on matters of law to the Lord Chancellor. The Insolvent Court consisted of two branches that transacting the business of London, and that which performed the business on circuit. It so happened that on circuit there was very little business, and the circuits were very expensive, as a proof of which he stated that Mr. Commissioner Phillips had to go to Caernarvon in a day or two on circuit, and there was only one insolvent to be liberated. He, therefore, proposed to abolish the circuits, and to vest the jurisdiction in insolvency in the local judges appointed under the act of last session. He also proposed to vest in the Commissioners a discretion, to protect the future gains of an insolvent from his former creditors, in the same way as the bankrupt was protected when he received his certificate. If the bill should be read a second time, he would move that its further progress should stand over until after Easter, when the bill which his noble and learned friend on the woolsack had in preparation, would be brought forward; and then he would suggest that both bills should be referred to a Select Committee.—The LORD CHANCELLOR concurred in the propriety of sending both bills to a Committee up-stairs; but, as regarded the proposition for handing the provincial bankruptcy and insolvency business over to the local courts, he thought some time must necessarily elapse before it could be adopted, as it would be necessary to ascertain whether the judges would have sufficient time to discharge this extra duty.—Lord ASHBURTON stated that he should have to present an important petition in reference to the subject, from the merchants and citizens of the City of London, in which it was stated that the trade of England suffered annually to the amount of £24,000,000 by bad debts. He saw no way of administering justice between debtor and creditor without going to a distance, between bankruptcy and insolvency. The bill was read a second time, and the House adjourned soon after seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

NEW MEMBER FOR LEWES.—Mr. PEREZET took the oaths and his seat as Member for Lewes.

NEW WRIT.—A new writ was ordered for the Eastern Division of Somersetshire, in the room of Colonel Gore Langton, deceased.

SECOND BILL.—Mr. F. MAUL, in answer to Mr. PEARCE, intimated that the Lord Advocate would postpone the Committees on the Registration of Births, &c., and Scotch Marriages Bills, until after Easter.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.—Lord J. RUSSELL stated, in reply to a question from Mr. G. BERKELEY, that it was the intention of the Government to persevere in the plan of education set forth in the Minute of the Council; and that the education vote would be brought forward on the 19th of April.

EXPORTATION OF CORN FROM RUSSIA. Lord J. RUSSELL replied to a question put to him some days previous, and stated that the Government had received a letter from Lord Bloomfield, from which it appeared that, so far from the exportation of grain from St. Petersburgh having been prohibited as was reported, the Russian Government were affording every possible facility for the exportation of grain from all the Russian ports.

ENLISTMENT IN THE ARMY. Mr. F. MAULE moved the second reading of the Army Service Bill, and explained the reasons which led the Government to the adoption of a system of limited enlistment for the future, as well as the several provisions of the bill. It was proposed to alter the period of enlistment, in the first instance, to ten years for an infantry soldier, and twelve years for a cavalry and ordnance soldier. After the expiration of that first service, it was proposed to have an option of re-enlisting the men for a further period of eleven years for the infantry, and of twelve years for the cavalry and artillery; thus making altogether twenty-one years for the infantry, and twenty-four years for the cavalry, the same time as in the present service. It was further proposed, for the first ten or twelve years of every enlistment, that when the regiment should be abroad, that the commanding officer should have the power to retain the soldier for an additional year; and in case the regiment was engaged in actual warfare, to retain the soldier for two years. The right hon. gentleman went through the details of the bill, the operation of which he proposed should be prospective, and not retrospective The bill excited opposition from Sir H. Douglas, Colonel Reid, Colonel Thomas Wood, Captain Lindsay, and Colonel Sibthorp, but it was read a second time.

THE POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.—On the question for going into Committee on this bill, a general conversation arose upon the condition of Ireland. Lord J. RUSSELL read the opportunity of reading a letter which he had just received from Cork, stating that since the 12th inst. the arrival of vessels laden with Indian corn had been perfectly stopped, so that 20,000 tons were now afloat, and that the price of that grain had greatly fallen, so that it was quite apparent that the speculators had overshot the mark. The postscript to the above letter stated that the arrivals on the day of its date were more numerous than had been anticipated. The noble Lord remarked that this circumstance must not have been obtained had the Government undertaken the task of importing Indian corn for the use of the whole people. Mr. DISRAELI considered that this arrival of corn after the report was like shutting the stable door after the steed had been stolen. The House having resolved into Committee, clauses up to 9 were agreed to, after discussion, and the further progress was postponed till Tuesday.

The Prisoners Bill and the Security of Offenders Bill was committed pro forma.

The House sat till past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE SPANISH BONDHOLDERS. LORD BROUGHAM presented a petition from the Spanish bondholders, complaining of the non-payment of the interest of the loans advanced to them in the hour of difficulty by the people of this country. Since then loan was contracted by means of which the holders of Spanish bonds, twelve millions sterling, and yet no symptom was exhibited on the part of the Spanish Government of a desire to act with justice or honour. The noble and learned Lord stated at length the claims of these British holders of Spanish bonds, and urged upon the Government to interfere in their behalf, although he dissented so far from the petitioners as to declare his opinion to be that the non-payment of this debt being contrary to the guarantee of the British Government, [illegible] such. It might suit some of her Ministers to make the assertion, because, if her finances were conducted with prudence and economy, and if the country was not assailed by foreign intrigue and domestic corruption, she would be one of the richest and most prosperous countries in the world. While, however, he condemned the conduct of Spain, he reminded those who lend money to foreign States, that when they do so without the sanction of their own Government they have no claim on their own Government for redress in case their debts be disregarded. With this view, he of course did not consider that the present instance formed a case de fœdere. The Government, however, had instructed the British Minister at Madrid, to give every assistance to the agent of the bondholders, who had been sent to that capital.

THE EASTER RECESS.—It was intimated that the adjournment for the Easter recess would be until Tuesday, April 13, but if any noble Lord should require a further adjournment, the time would be extended till the 15th, should the state of public business permit.

Nothing else occurred requiring notice, and the House adjourned till Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

TRADE WITH CHINA. Lord SANDON, after having presented a petition from 7000 bankers, merchants, and traders of Liverpool, for a repeal of the duty on tea, moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the present state of our commercial relations with China. No opposition was made on the part of the Government, and the motion was agreed to.

RAILWAYS.—In answer to questions from Major Layard, Mr. STRUTT said that under the new Act for the Regulation of Railways, no such officer as an Inspector-General was required. By the authority of the existing law Inspectors, not Inspectors-General, were required, and two gentlemen had been appointed to those situations, who were efficiently discharging their duties. No change had been preferred; and, on the subject of salaries, the Railway Commissioners would take care that the public interest was in no respect disregarded.

FEVER IN IRELAND. Mr. LABOUCHERE obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend and continue the act of last session relative to the treatment of persons suffering from fever in Ireland.

THE POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

The House having resolved into Committee on this Bill,

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL proposed an amendment, upon clause 10, the object of which was to provide for a maximum rating for the support of the poor, instead of a rating by electoral districts.

The proposal elicited a debate, and, on a division, the amendment was negatived by a vote of 190 to 26.

Mr. STAFFORD O'BRIEN then moved as an amendment that the clause be omitted from the bill, his object being to retain the present electoral divisions, for the purpose of rating, instead of the Union rating proposed by the Government.

The Committee divided, and the amendment was negatived by a vote of 118 to 57.

The clause was then adopted; the further consideration of the measure was postponed; and shortly before midnight the House adjourned till twelve o'clock on Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The sitting to-day was a short one, and the business was of a miscellaneous and unimportant character. Some bills passed through Committee. The Drainage of Lands bill was read a third time, and passed.

Lord STANLEY moved for a copy of the correspondence between the Colonial Office and the Governor of Van Diemen's Land, respecting the personal conduct of Sir E. Wilmot.

Earl GREY did not object to the return, which was accordingly ordered.

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. THURSDAY.

The House met this morning at twelve o'clock.

THE FAST DAY.—On the motion of Sir G. STRICKLAND, the thanks of the House were voted to the Rev. Dr. DEALTRY, for the excellent sermon preached to the members of the House at St. Margaret's Church on Wednesday.

CLAIMS ON SPAIN.—Lord G. BENTINCK gave notice that early after Easter, he should move an Address to the Crown, praying that it may please her Majesty to give instructions for a full and stringent inquiry into the claims of British subjects on the Government of Spain, and to take measures to obtain a redress of the grievances of which the claimants complained.

POOR RELIEF (IR. LAND) BILL.

On the order of the day being read for going into Committee on the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill being read,

Mr. J. O'CONNELL moved several amendments which had appeared in some Irish newspapers, respecting the distress and misery which prevailed in Ireland, and called upon the Government to adopt effectual means to relieve those who were starving. The House would do sadly if steps were not immediately taken to assemble boards and provide for the starving poor.

Mr. S. O'BRIEN fully concurred with the hon. member for Kilkenny, that it was absolutely necessary for the Government to extend further relief to Ireland.

Mr. LABOUCHERE was as anxious as any man possibly could be to alleviate the dreadful distress which existed in Ireland, and the Government were doing all in their power to accomplish so desirable an object. He would take that opportunity of expressing his heartfelt thanks and satisfaction at the immense supplies of provisions which were now flowing into Ireland from all parts. And he was certain the House would be happy to hear that all accounts agreed in representing that the quantity and quality of the corn imported into Ireland was most satisfactory. (Hear.)

After some discussion, in the course of which Lord G. BENTINCK condemned the policy of the Government towards Ireland, the House went into Committee on the bill.

The House discussions arose upon some of the clauses, and amendments were proposed, but the movers of them were unsuccessful in their attempt to change the details of the bill. The clauses having all been disposed of, Mr. SHAW moved a clause, "That the sums which shall be paid by the Poor-Law Commissioners shall be repaid to the members of the Board of Guardians of such Unions." Ultimately, however, it was arranged that the clause should be moved when the report was brought up.

The House adjourned at a quarter to seven.

[RAILWAY COMMITTEES.—The first decision of the session was given on Tuesday in Group 19. It was pronounced, as some may have expected, in favour of the lines that have occupied the district longest, and whose lines are in full operation, but of a line now only in course of construction. The Committee resolved, "That the Bills of the Newmarket and Chesterford (Extension to Thetford), Newmarket and Chesterford (Extension to Bury St. Edmund's, &c.), and Newmarket and Chesterford Railway Act Amendment, &c., were proved; and that the preamble of the Lynn and Ely (Extension to Bu-y St. Edmunds), Ipswich and Bury St. Edmund's (No. 2) (Newmarket and Fly), and Ipswich and Bury St. Edmund's (No. 3) (Bury to Thetford), were not proved.]

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

MURDER AND MUTILATION AT CHESTERFIELD.

At Derby, yesterday week, the trial of John Platts, for the inhuman murder and mutilation of George Collis, in the Butchers'-shambles at Chesterfield, in the month of December, 1845, commenced, in the Crown Court, before Mr. Justice Patteson. The court was crowded at great excess, the case creating the deepest interest throughout the county. The prisoner is not more than twenty years of age.

It appeared from the evidence that, early on the morning of the last Friday in August last year (1846), some men were employed on the premises of Mr. Bunting, a flour dealer, living in Low-pavement, in the town of Chesterfield, when their attention was drawn to what seemed to be the remains of the carcase of a sheep; a further search showed the mass to consist of two leg and thigh bones, and a quantity of entrails. Part of a coat, trousers, hat, two silk handkerchiefs, and the remains of a brass, and stockings, were also discovered. One of the handkerchiefs was marked "G. C.," and, when found, was tied as if for the neck; and on the leg bones were garters—apparently odd ones—one red and the other white. This led to a more minute inspection, and a skull, with a large fracture over the right eye, was found. The examination of the bones by a surgeon satisfying all doubts as to the remains, and the finding of male attire with them, soon gave some strong grounds for supposing that a murder had been committed. The wearing apparel being publicly exhibited, the handkerchief bearing the initials "G. C." was identified by a young female, named Ellen Beresford, as having belonged to George Collis. That individual, in the course of the preceding year (1845), went into partnership with the prisoner, John Platts, as butcher, and conducted their business in a miserable place called the "Shambles," adjacent to the Market-place in Chesterfield. From Sunday night, the 7th of December in that year (1845), Collis had not been seen, and the belief gained ground that it was his remains that were discovered; suspicions, at the same time, being entertained that the prisoner was the party to have killed him. In his life, it being traced by the Chesterfield police that he had got a man named Knight to pledge a watch belonging to the deceased a few days after Collis's sudden disappearance. When interrogated as to how he got possession of it, he said he had won it at a raffle, while to others he told them he had bought it of a man known in the neighbourhood as "Lankey." These statements being ascertained to be untrue, led to his apprehension.

One of the witnesses stated that, on the night of the 7th of December, 1845, he was standing near Platts's shop, and heard two or three blows struck as if with a cleaver. After the first blow the witness distinctly heard groaning, followed by a human being, and he made all haste to his friends at home, and told them he was sure some murder was going on in Platts's shop. His wife and sister returned with him to the "shambles," and finding the door secured, they knocked, and asked Platts what he was doing, and who he had in the shop. The prisoner immediately answered "Nobody," he had been taking some rum, which had made him exceedingly sick, and that he was going to lie down. He was asked to open it, and they would give him some water, but he would not. Shortly after the witness and his friends left the premises, and returned with a constable, who was also refused admittance. The door was then broken open, and the prisoner was discovered with blood. He said he wanted to wash his hands, as he had killed a bullock.

The trial was resumed on Saturday morning, when some additional evidence (evidentiary of the prisoner was given. The Jury, found him Guilty, and Mr. Justice Patteson sentenced him to death

[It is stated that Platts has since confessed the crime, and has implicated two other persons in it.]

RECOVERY OF DEPOSIT MONEY BY AN ALLOTTEE.

At Exeter, on Monday, a case was tried, Sercombe v. Ashpital, in which an allottee obtained a verdict for the recovery of deposit money. It was an action of assumpsit, brought by the plaintiff, an allottee of shares in the "Metropolitan Bridgwater Junction Railway," against the defendant, who was a Managing Director in the Company, to recover back £262 10s., paid by the plaintiff as a deposit on 100 shares which had been allotted to him in the said Company.

For the defence it was contended that the whole scheme was a bona fide one, and that, although it might not be strictly correct to buy up shares, with a view to raise the market, yet that was done with a view to the benefit of the Company, and not the individual Directors. That the plaintiff had no right to object, for, when he applied for shares, he undertook, by his letter of application, to sign the subscribers' agreement, and be bound by it.

The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

A bill of exceptions was tendered to Mr. Justice Cresswell's ruling upon some of the points.

POLICE.

THE MAN CHARGED WITH FORGERY UPON HIS BROTHER.—Last Saturday, Samuel King was re-examined at GUILDHALL, on the charge of uttering two forged bills of £300 each. Mr. J. W. King, the brother of the prisoner, who is a solicitor at Wickham-on-Wolves, near Bury St. Edmunds, was called to the bills, and deposed to their being forgeries. Mr. Alderman Farebrother said he was bound to commit the prisoner for trial on a charge of knowingly uttering the forged orders.

THE MURDER IN SHOREDITCH.—On Tuesday Thomas Brooks, was re-examined at WORSHIP-STREET, charged with the murder of William Gibert, by shooting him with a gun, in Hare-court, Shoreditch. In addition to the previous evidence, it was sworn by two witnesses that in the altercation which preceded the fatal event the prisoner was struck by the deceased. The prisoner, throughout the whole proceedings, looked stupified, almost unconscious of what was passing, and appeared so prostrated by a sense of the awful situation in which he had placed himself, that he could hardly support himself without assistance, and walked with tottering steps to be was led in and out of the Court. He was committed upon the charge of wilful murder.

THE LORD RECTOR OF GLASGOW UNIVERSITY. Lord John Russell, who was recently elected Lord Rector of the University of Glasgow, has intimated that, in consequence of the pressure of business, he cannot visit that city until the end of the Session. The installation, therefore, will not take place until November.

DEATH OF COLONEL LINDSAY, LATE OF THE 78TH HIGHLANDERS.—Intelligence has been received of the death of this distinguished officer, which took place at Jerusalem before the departure of the last mail, on Sunday, on the Island of Ceylon.

SHERIFF OF LONDON FOR THE ENSUING YEAR. At a recent live dinner, the Lord Mayor drank to Mr. William Cubitt, the eminent [illegible] of Gray's-inn-road, being the ancient mode of putting in nomination for the office of one of the Sheriffs of London, and joint Sheriff of Middlesex.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.—Last Saturday morning a fatal accident occurred at Burnedi Colliery, by the bursting of one of the boilers used in working the engine of the pit, by which three persons were killed, viz., a man, a woman, and a boy. The colliery is situated about six miles north of Newcastle, and the blowing to Lord Ravensworth and partners. The engine is of 90 horse power, and three boilers of large dimensions and of an oval shape are used to work it; but on the morning of the accident only two were in operation. The boiler was torn into large pieces, and parts of it were blown a considerable distance into an adjoining field. The stoker was found almost buried in the ruins, dreadfully scalded and to all appearance dead; and a female named Margaret Proctor, wife of one of the miners, who was at the place getting water, was struck a few yards from him. The other sufferer was a boy of about eleven years of age, named Thomas Gordon, employed at the bank. The engine-man escaped, though much scalded on the face and injured in the head. Several of the workmen were also seriously injured by the flying bricks, &c., but all are expected to recover. Monday an inquest was held, and the Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death."

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Quæ cura mutantes
Pascere equos.

THE Racing Season has commenced; and while the early buds are before us, it is pleasant, and may be profitable, to speculate upon its blossom and fruit. No year in the annals of the Turf ever put forth such promise: if the harvest of four hundred and forty-four horses engaged for a three quarters of a mile race? For an epithet, Dominie Sampson to the rescue—PROMISCUOUS. In a manner, the whole auree ea somes is upon a wholesale plan. The [illegible] tered, and impressed: so is the every code of new rules—all "in a concate nation accordingly." Thus our Olympic revels promise to be a passage of most strange action; with what results for the catastrophe we will examine.

Since the Beacon Course were the fashion, and a dozen coursers at the post considered a crowd—what would the Queensburys and Malmsbes, for instance, have thought of such a Pet as a chicken handicap in the last Calendar puts forth four hundred and forty-four horses engaged for a three quarters of a mile race? For an epithet, Dominie Sampson to the rescue—PROMISCUOUS. In a manner, the whole auree ea somes is upon a wholesale plan. The [illegible] tered, and impressed: so is the every code of new rules—all "in a concate nation accordingly." Thus our Olympic revels promise to be a passage of most strange action; with what results for the catastrophe we will examine.

Ever since the Hopton Meeting brought the racing year of 1845 to a close, [illegible] official returns from Tattersall's, and all the regular marts for betting, implied something very like a panic in the market. Week after week you read nothing was doing, or apparently in a way to be done—not even the public; how was such a miracle to be accounted for? There are no backers of horses—why or wherefore?

Everybody you met, and canvassed the question with, had a different cause to assign, while all were agreed as to the effect. "Money was not as plenty as it used to be!" When was that golden age? Not since any of the present gamesters saw the light. "Lotteries and sweeps would supersede the ring." "There was too much custom for the supply." "Betting had outgrown its resources." Probably a little of every one of these reasons had something to do with it; but the main influence was experience. The Turf has become a profession, and all who now traffic in its merchandise know a great deal of their craft. The day has gone by, probably for ever, in which horses will be backed, as we have known them, and in recent memory. All attempts to get up a coup since Christmas to make a "pot" for one of the popular handicaps, of an animal at the moment actual s in the straw-yard. But it was a signal failure; "it was the tout that did it all." The vast extent of racing matériel now available for the purposes of the betting round must secure him a considerable trade—none the worse that his customers are careful how they get into the books. Legitimate betting must increase as horses multiply, and it will be the fault of the profession if they have not a brilliant season in the present. Let Running Rein robberies be renewed, and honest men, with their senses about them, will be scared out of the ring. Let there only prevail a business will and it will be sure to reap the long profits that the trader in the odds is understood to need and to exact. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the opening meetings of the year—albeit the weather was in proportions to the first. Nothing can be more favourable to the hopes of the trainer than the genial spring his team is now profiting by. But caution must be the watchword with the backers of horses. It is an old axiom of the old men that "a near horse always looks fit with the sunshine on his back." Nevertheless, without good work all his polish is moonshine. The starters are all backward some more, some less. Till the true forms of horses are better known, the professor will have the best of the speculation. This makes the supply of betters round so greatly to exceed the demands of backers.

TATTERSALL'S.

On Monday there was "no house," and on Thursday, owing to the departure of several of the members for Croxton Park, very little was done. The chief outlay was on the Euclid colt and Sting for the Newmarket Handicap, and on Dulcet for the Chester Cup; in other respects the prices were downwards.

NEWMARKET HANDICAP.
7 to 2 agst Euclid colt (400 to 1 taken)	10 to 1 agst Forester (t)	20 to 1 agst Mr. Sykes (t)
5 to 1 — Sting (t)	12 to 1 — Vanish (t)	20 to 1 — Clarionet
	18 to 1 — Lysander (t)	25 to 1 — Cadmazine
	Fitzwragh is scratched.

THE PORT
2 to 1 agst Sting (t)

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKE.
7 to 1 agst Liberator — 8 to 1 agst Chesnopher (t)

	CHESTER CUP
33 to 1 agst Punch	28 to 1 agst Newcourt	50 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
35 to 1 — Amber	30 to 1 — Master Tyrer	50 to 1 — Faudit
35 to 1 — Lamb	30 to 1 — Bridegroom	50 to 1 — Pink Bonnet
35 to 1 — Dulcet	40 to 1 — Intrepid	66 to 1 — Banaza
4 to 1 agst Kent's lot (t)	33 to 1 agst Conyngham (t)	50 to 1 agst Christopher
13 to 2 — Scott's lot (t)	33 to 1 — Horn of Chase	50 to 1 — Lord Lyndhurst (t)
9 to 1 — Van Tromp	33 to 1 — Lord Exeter	50 to 1 — Davidson
10 to 1 — Planet (t)	40 to 1 — Sir. to Oshweb o	66 to 1 — Lonedale
10 to 1 — Gabrielle (t)	40 to 1 — Red Hart	66 to 1 — Fullcopter (t)
10 to 1 — Glenville (t)	50 to 1 — Mr. Martin (t)

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each, h.ft.; for two-year-olds. Last half-mile.

Mr. Payne's Glendower, 8st 4lb	.. .. ..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Watson's Tin Sheriff, 8st 4lb	.. .. ..	(Bryce) 2
Duke of Richmond's Nancy, 8st 4lb	.. .. ..	(Wyatt) 3

Glendower made all the running and won by half a length.

The Great Northamptonshire Stakes of 100 sovs, added to a handicap sweepstakes of [illegible] each, 15 ft, and 5 only if declared; the second to receive 2 sovs. Two miles.

Lord Waterford's Wolf-dog, 5st 11lb	.. .. ..	(Bartholomew) 1
Mr. Gregory's ch c, 3 yrs, 4st 7lb	.. .. ..	(Jackson) 2
Duke of Richmond's Halo, 3 yrs, 4st 10lb	.. .. ..	(Nat) 3

The Farmers' and Tradesmen's Cup of 80 sovs. About 3 miles.

Mr. G. Cowley's The Hackney, aged, 12st	.. .. ..	(—) 1
Mr. J. K. Cowley's Britannus, 5 yrs, 11st 4lb	.. .. ..	(—) 2

Won easy. Several others ran.

The Open Stakes of 10 sovs each, at 1 25 added. One round and a distance.

Mr. Payne's Icicle, 4 yrs, 10st 5lb	.. .. ..	(T. Parr) 1
Mr. Ekin's Salopian, 5 yrs, 10st 12lb	.. .. ..	(Frisby) 2
Mr. W. Sadler's Fugitive, 4 yrs, 10st 3lb	.. .. ..	(A. Day) 3

Won by a length.

The Queen's Plate of 100 Guineas. Two miles.

Mr. Moore's Wolf-dog, 5 yrs, 9st 12lb	.. .. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Sir C. Cockerell's Duke of Richmond, 4 yrs	.. .. ..	(H. Darling) 2
Mr. Chandler's Rhadamanthus, 3 yrs, 8st 5lb	.. .. ..	(Bell) 3
Mr. Wreford's Wife-end, 4 yrs, 8st 2lb	.. .. ..	(A. Day) 4
Mr. Pettifer's by Epirus, 3 yrs, 8st 10lb	.. .. ..	(A Lad) 5

Won by three lengths. Run in 3 min 44 sec.

TUESDAY.

The Talyho Stakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, and 25 added. Two miles.

Sir C. Cockerell's Congress, 3 yrs, 8st 2lb (5 lb over)	.. .. ..	(H. Darling) 1
Mr. P. P. Rolt's Spectator, 5 yrs, 11st 7lb	.. .. ..	(Owner) 2
Mr. Ekin's Ongley's Vue Boy, 3 yrs, 8st 5lb	.. .. ..	(Whitehouse) 3

7 to 2 on Congress, who won by 6 lengths. Run in 4 min. 13 sec.

The Althorp Park Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added, for two-year-old colts, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 4lb. About half a mile.

Mr. Sandford's The Sheriff	.. .. ..	(W. Boyce) 1
Mr. Payne's Woodcraft	.. .. ..	(Nat) 2
Mr. Bristow's Perahlil	.. .. ..	(Denman) 3

Won by a head, Woodcraft beating Perahlil by half a length; Nectar and Old Brompton well up.

The Northamptonshire Cup Stakes of 10 sovs each. Winner to be sold for £300. Twice round, about three miles

Mr. Wreford's Wilsend, 4 yrs, 8st 9lb	.. .. ..	(A. Day) 1
Mr. Robbins's Reebuck, 5 yrs, 8st 7lb	.. .. ..	(H. Darling) 2
Lord W. Powlett's Fort William, 4 yrs, 8st 9lb	.. .. ..	(Bartholomew) 3

Wilsend made all the running, and won in a canter by four lengths.

The Pytchley Stakes of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 50 added, for three-year-old colts, 8st 9lb; and fillies, 8st 6lb. One mile.

Mr. J. Daley's Brown Bess, 3 yrs	.. .. ..	(C. Daley) 1
Mr. Mostyn's Queen Mary, 3 yrs	.. .. ..	(Nat) 2

Won by a length. Run in 2 minutes 31 seconds

The Beaten Handicap of 5 sovs each and 2 added. Once round and a distance.

Mr. Davis's Princess Royal, 7st 11lb	.. .. ..	(Denman) 1
Mr. [illegible] Game-at-last, 8st	.. .. ..	(— Adcock) 2
Mr. Wesley's Ellmsa, 7st 11lb	.. .. ..	(J. Sharpe) 3

THE LEAMINGTON GRAND ANNUAL STEEPLE-CHASES.—MONDAY

The Free Handicap of 5 sovs each, and 25 added, was won by Lord Strathmore's Sebastazar, 11st 8lb, beating Mr. Parkyn's Wilford, 11st 7lb, and several others.

The Royal Leamington Annual Steeple-Chase, of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and five only, if declared, with 100 added. Four miles.

Mr. C. Bevill's Lablat, 6st 9lb	.. .. ..	(Mr. Bevill) 1
Mr. Preston's Brunette, 6st 9lb	.. .. ..	2
Mr. R. H. Jones's b g by Glaucus, aged, 12st 10lb	.. .. ..	3

Belcher (fell), Dismount, Sam Slick, Grenade, Excle, Pallway, Little John, Golden Hule, Canary, and six others ran. Won easy by three lengths.

The Leamington Hunt Cup Steeple-Chase, of 10 sovs each, 5 ft, 11st 7lb each, three miles, 14 subs, was won by Mr. Ouseley Higgins's Chandler, beating King of the Valley, and eleven others.

THE INAUGURATION OF PRINCE ALBERT AS CHANCELLOR OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

The Inauguration of His Royal Highness the Prince Albert in the office of Chancellor of the University of Cambridge took place on Thursday afternoon, in Buckingham Palace.

The deputation from the University arrived at the Palace at three o'clock and consisted of the following:—

Lord Lyndhurst, High Steward
Henry Philpott, D.D., Vice-Chancellor, and Master of Catherine Hall
Thomas Crick, M.D., Public Orator
Wm. Hodgson, D.D., Master of St. Peter's Coll.
William Webb, D.D., Master of Clare Hall
Gilbert Ainslie, D.D., Master of Pembroke Col.
Benedict Chapman, D.D., Master of Gonvil and Caius Col.
John Lamb, D.D., Master of Corpus Christi Col.
William French, D.D., Master of Jesus Col.
John Graham, D.D., Master of Christ's Col.
Ralph Tatham, D.D., Master of St. John's Col.
Hon. and Rev. G. Neville Grenville, Master of Magdalen Col.
William Wheewell, D.D., Master of Trinity Col.
George Archdall, D.D., Master of Emmanuel Col.
R. Phelps, D.D., Master of Sydney Sussex Col.
Thos. Worsley, M.A., Master of Downing Col.
William J. Kingsley, M.A., Junior Proctor
John Couch Adams, M.A., Senior Moderator (officiating for the Senior Proctor)
John Wolvey Astley, M.A. (Fellow of King's College), Senior Scrutator
Francis Proctor, M.A., Junior Scrutator
Samuel H. Banks, LL.D., Henry J. H. Bond, M.D., G. F. Reyner, M.A., George Maddison, M.A. (non Regent), Members of the Caput
Joseph Romilly, M.A., Registrary.
George Leapingwell, M.A., William Hopkins, M.A., Esquire Bedells

In addition to the deputation, one hundred and thirty members of the University attended to witness the august ceremony. Among those present were the Members of Parliament for the University, the Right Hon. Henry Goulburn and the Hon. Charles E. Law.

The whole of the Members present wore their respective Academic Costumes, and the Vice Chancellor and the deputation were attended by the usual Officers of the University, bearing their appropriate Insigna of Office.

The Deputation was conducted up the Grand Staircase to the Green Drawing-room.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert received the Deputation in the Throne Room. His Royal Highness wore his robe as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge; his train being borne by the Equerries in Waiting, Colonel Bouverie and Lieutenant-Colonel F. H. Seymour. The Prince was attended by Viscount Clifden, Lord in Waiting, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, private secretary, and Captain Francis Seymour, Groom in Waiting.

Prince Albert stood a short distance in front of the throne (which was rolled off) and near his Royal Highness was placed a magnificent Chair of State, of classic design, richly carved and gilt, and supported by sphynxes, the seat being covered with crimson velvet.

Captain G. C. Blake, R.N., and Major-General Godwin, Gentlemen Ushers in Waiting to Prince Albert, received the Vice-Chancellor and deputation, at the entrance to the Throne-room, and conducted them to his Royal Highness.

The Rev. Dr. Philpott, Vice-Chancellor of the University, presented an appropriate address to Prince Albert, to which his Royal Highness returned the following answer:—

"Mr. Vice-Chancellor,

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"Having been installed as your Chancellor, by the ceremony which is just concluded, allow me now to assure you of the sincere gratification which I feel at the honour you have conferred upon me. It must be, indeed, a subject of pride for me to find myself placed at the head of an University like yours, renowned as well for its piety and learning, as for its strong attachment to the institutions of the country; and, gratifying as this mark of your good opinion must be to myself, I can, at the same time, read in it a fresh proof of that devoted attachment to the person and Throne of her Majesty the Queen, which has ever distinguished you.

"This dignity has been bestowed upon me by your spontaneous act, and I cannot but consider the proof of confidence in me, which you have thereby shown, to be the more flattering from my not having been educated at your University.

"If, however, those ties of early associations, and that grateful feeling which attaches a scholar to the place to which he owes his mental development, must be wanting in my case, I hope that this deficiency may be compensated by that interest which I must most strongly feel in the welfare of this country, and in the Institutions to which is committed the important trust of training the rising generation which is in future to serve and adorn her in Church and State.

"I feel that the task I shall have to perform is not rendered more easy by my having to repair the loss you have sustained by the death of that most excellent nobleman who filled the office of Chancellor before me; but you may rest assured that my new duties will engage my constant and earnest attention, and that you will always find me equally ready to co-operate with you in your endeavours to promote the general cause of Religion, Literature, and Science, and to maintain those rights and privileges, the exercise of which is essential to the performance of your duties."

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALBERT IN HIS ROBES AS CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

The Vice-Chancellor presented the principal members of the University to his Royal Highness, after which the whole of the members retired. Before leaving the Palace, the Vice-Chancellor and all the members of the University were ushered to the Library, where a sumptuous déjeuner was served to the distinguished party.

In the evening, his Royal Highness Prince Albert gave a grand dinner to the Members of the Deputation. In addition to the University Deputation, the following illustrious guests were also present at dinner:—The Duke of Wellington, the Marquis of Exeter, the Marquis of Northampton, the Bishop of London, the Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell, the Right Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Right Hon. Henry Goulburn, the Hon. C. E. Law, Mr. G. E. Anson, Col. the Hon. C. B. Phipps, and Lieut.-Col. F. H. Seymour. A band of the Life Guards attended during dinner.

PRESENTATION OF NEW COLOURS TO THE 43RD LIGHT INFANTRY, BY THE HONBLE. LADY PAKENHAM.

On Monday last, this interesting ceremony took place on Southsea Common. It was attended by thousands of spectators, many of whom obtained tickets, and were admitted into the inner square. Towards two o'clock, Lieutenant-General the Honourable Sir Hercules Pakenham, K.C.B., came on the ground; together with Lady Pakenham, and a numerous party of fashionables. After the usual ceremony of presenting arms, the 43rd Regiment formed three sides of a square, and the drum was placed in the centre; the Colonel then requested the Rev. Mr. Madden, Vicar of Fareham, to consecrate the Colours; the Clergyman advanced, placed the Colours in the form of a cross, on the large drum; he then read an appropriate prayer of Consecration, concluding with the Lord's Prayer, on which the Military within hearing stood with heads uncovered. After the prayer, the reverend gentleman alluded to the glorious achievements of "his dear old Regiment." At the age of fourteen he joined it as an Ensign, and went with it all through the Peninsular war; his family had also been in the Regiment, and had shed their blood in its ranks; on the battle-field two of them had shed their best blood: he, therefore, felt that the Regiment whom he now addressed would listen to a few words of exhortation from one who had once served in its ranks. At the end of the war, certain reasons presented themselves, and the rev. gentleman said he changed the garb of a soldier for that of a far higher calling—a Minister of Jesus Christ.

At the conclusion of the rev. gentleman's address, the Hon. Lady Pakenham advanced, and received the new Colours, which her Ladyship, in a short and most impressive address, presented to the 43rd Regiment. The two Majors received the Colours kneeling; behind them were the Ensigns. The General (who is Colonel of the regiment) then made a short address, in which he [illegible] of the ancient practice of consecrating Colours; and highly approved of it, "Because," said Sir Hercules, "It is an acknowledgment of Almighty God, and of course." The General's last wishes were—"May the 43rd, in the hour of danger and battle, like the Crusaders of old, pray for the arm of the Lord and His strength." Lieutenant-Colonel Luring then came forward and thanked the Minister, her Ladyship, and Sir Hercules; and promised, in the name of the officers and men of the 43rd, that they would guard and keep unsullied the Banners now committed to their charge

After this ceremony, the troops again formed line, and passed the General in slow and quick time, their appearance was most soldierly, and their precision was the admiration of all present.

[Our Engraving of the ceremony is from a sketch by R. H. C. Ubsdell, Esq. of Portsmouth.]

PRESENTATION OF NEW COLOURS TO THE 43RD REGIMENT BY THE HON. LADY PAKENHAM, AT PORTSMOUTH.

ANDREA DEL SARTO PAINTING THE FRESCO OF THE MADONNA DEL SACCO."—PAINTED BY BARON.

OPENING OF THE LOUVRE EXHIBITION.

The Annual Exhibition of the Works of Living Artists at the Louvre, was opened to the public on the morning of Tuesday, the 16th inst.

The works exhibited consist of 2321, being something more than half of those understood to have been sent in, the number of which exceeded 4500. They are divided as follows:—Paintings, miniatures, water-coloured drawings, &c., 2010; sculpture, 168; architecture, 29; engravings, 95; and lithographic prints, 21. We find the names of Horace Vernet, Delacroix, Roqueplan, and others of high eminence, in the catalogue; but for those of Ary Scheffer, Decamps, Meissonnier, and some others of distinguished merit, the reader will search in vain; these gentlemen having determined not to submit their productions to the decision of the jury appointed to decide the question of their admission or rejection.

By favour of access to the ateliers of the painters, our artists have been enabled thus early to copy the two annexed specimens.

First, is No 74 (in the Entrance Saloon), by Mr. N. Baron. "Andrea del Sarto painting, in the Cloister of the Annunziata at Florence, the Fresco of the Madonna del Sacco." This is a very charming composition, full of colour and brilliancy, the grouping of the figures is especially happy. The model who is sitting for the Madonna, though somewhat too mundane to represent a Virgin, has all the freshness of early beauty; and the young seignior is a good personification of one of the old families of Italy, who, by their wealth, and power, and enlightened protection of art, at the period of the picture, drew around them a brilliant réunion of artists, whose works are to this day the most splendid treasures in our museums.

The Second Illustration, No. 1643, by M. Armand Leleux, represents "Spanish Beggars relieved by Peasantry," in the environs of Grenada. This picture is remarkable for its brilliant lights, and the breadth of its shadows, for example of its costumes is evidence of the young painter's travels in Spain, of which this picture is the first-fruit.

Among the other noticeable pictures, are:—1141. "Burial of the Conquerer." Marqus. The sombre colouring of this picture is well adapted to the subject. The figures are well brought out from the dark background, and the light of the lantern, cleverly thrown on the corpse, breaks the monotony of tone, and gives force to the principal object in the group.—195. Bouquet. One of the best landscape painters. The colouring of his foliage is good and varied, and his distances are generally prettily put in, though always sufficiently airy.—1630. "A Sunday in the Bois de Boulogne" Wenderoth. This is a picture of merit from its originality. The horses well painted.—88 "Mountain Scenery, with Kabyles in Ambush" Baccuet. This is a well painted landscape of a delightful poetic spot, and would have been better peopled by bards than robbers; the figures, however, are picturesque.—1555. "Peasant's House," department of the Yonne. Vander Burch. It has a good deal of the feeling of Teniers in the colouring and design. There is much fun in the old man's face. The picture is placed in a bad light, but should not be passed over.—744. "Fedore in the Catacombs" Granet. A good specimen of this artist's peculiar style. He stands deservedly high in his profession.—818. "Triumph of Pisani." Hesse. A fine stirring subject, highly coloured; the figures are full of life and character in the picture is bright, and peculiarly Italian.—1398. "The Good Samaritan" Bidaut. This picture is very original in its colouring; although a cold tone is thrown over the rocks and background, it cannot be said to be cold or displeasing to the eye.—1492 "The King and the Princes." Horace Vernet. Here we have another picture of this great artist, which will be handed down to posterity with his name. The likenesses are all perfect, as well as the grouping and painting of the horses.—924. A group of cleverly painted horses. Lalaisse.—462. E. Delacroix. This artist is a great favourite with the generality of his countrymen, and is much esteemed as a colourist; but we have never been able to discover his great merits. There is nothing remarkable in this picture to attract attention to its colouring; and the disagreeable manner of drawing his figures, their ugly, wizened faces and distorted bodies looking like bundles of rags, render many of his works, as this is, rather unpleasing than otherwise.—836. "Youth of the Cardinal Jean de Bragni." Brenung. The light in this picture is admirably arranged and concentrated: this gives force and interest to the figures, which would otherwise be common-place objects.—1022. "Sextus the

PAINTED BY LELEUX.

Fifth, blessing the Pontine Marshes." Lehmann. A fine subject, admirably handled. One's attention is drawn to the principal personages in the picture, although they stand in the second place, by the light and brightness of their colouring, whilst the larger figures in the foreground are kept quiet. The groups are beautifully arranged, the figures well posed and painted, and the whole is warmed by an Italian sky, which throws a glow over the landscape. 400. "A Roman Orgie." Couture. This picture is unanimously the gem of this year's Exhibition, and we think that a finer picture has not been produced in modern times. So grand a work required a bold artist to undertake, and a master-hand to finish it. Much judgment was needed for such a subject, which, instead of pleasing, might have shocked. It is rather cold in colouring, and being, unfortunately, surrounded by warmer toned pictures, is seen to disadvantage. The figures are beautifully drawn; and, although many of them are in unseemly attitudes, they evidently belong to the higher orders, where elegance of figure and fine features are to be found. The grouping is good, and the colouring in keeping. The background and architecture are painted with ease and taste. A little more drapery might, perhaps, have been added without detriment. 1691. "Episode from the History of Venice." Vinchon. A good picture, but too sad and distressing to contemplate. The figure of the principal sufferer, instead of exposing sufficient fear of the torture which threatens her.—614. "Paris. A Common." Hills's landscape, by one of the best painters in this branch. 1011 Leleux (Adolphe). A clever collection of figures. A landing scene in Brittany, the fishers' favourite ground.—864. "Henriette d'France." Jacquard. A clever historical picture. The expression of vulgar pride in the figure and countenance of Joyce is admirably depicted, and forms a striking contrast to the mild dignity of the queen, and the timidity of her children.—1223. "May Day." Miller. A broad and brilliant style of painting; the pretty laughing faces, the bright colours of the dresse, and the lively movement of the figures in this picture, make it a most cheerful and merry days.—233. "A Tale from the Life of St. Laurence." Brasset. A fine picture, quiet in colour, but somewhat wanting in aerial perspective. 1108. Longuet. This is a charming bright picture, but the title does from its value, the figure giving little idea of the Holy Virgin.—493. Duc. This manner of throwing the bright sunbeams across the trees: thick forest scenery, is peculiar to this artist, whose colouring is perfection. Though he seldom produces what can be strictly called a finished picture, one is always interested and pleased by his performances, more especially when figures are introduced. 1653. "Child frightened by a Wasp." Winterhalter. Although simple in composition and colour, this is a very pleasing picture, and could only be produced by a first-rate master of the art.—There are, no doubt, many other pictures in this room worthy of notice, but from the manner in which they are surrounded, and the height they are placed at, it is impossible to be able to judge of their merits. 521 Dubufe (Fils). A first-rate artist and portrait-painter. Will [illegible] pictures is this! How graceful and easy the attitude! how natural the position of the arms and the fall of the drapery, and how well painted in every respect! - Abridged from Galignani's Messenger.

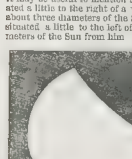
CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, March 28.—Palm Sunday.—First day in Passion Week.
MONDAY, 29.—The Sun rises at 5h. 54m., and is due East at 6h. 16m.
TUESDAY, 30.—The day has increased 5 hours in length.
WEDNESDAY, 31.—Full Moon at 6h. 17m. p.m. The Moon eclipsed.
THURSDAY, April 1.—Lucina Dies Natalis.
FRIDAY, 2.—Good Friday.
SATURDAY, 3.—Rich. Bp. of Chichester.—Game Cart dicates expire

Hindu's Comet is now extremely bright, and will pass its perihelion on March 30. Mr. Hind thinks that it is very possible it will be seen on this day in broad daylight. It places are as follows, for 0h. of each day:—

March 30th:	Right Ascension	.. .. 0h. 29m. 56s.
	North Declination	.. .. 1° 56′
And on March 31st:	Right Ascension	.. .. 0h. 37m. 55s.
	North Declination	.. .. 2° 43′ 22″

Some of our readers in the country may see the Comet under those circumstances: and if so, we should be glad if they would communicate the fact to us. It may be useful to mention that, at noon on March 30, the Comet will be situated a little to the right of the vertical line, at about the distance of two diameters of the Sun from him; and that, on the 31st, at noon, it is situated a little to the left of the vertical line, at about the distance of two diameters of the Sun from him.



On Wednesday, March 31st, the Moon will be partially eclipsed, and visible throughout the British Empire. The Eclipse begins at 3 minutes after 6 in the evening; the middle will be at 27 minutes after 8, at which time about one-third of the Moon will be eclipsed on the north limb: and it will end at 51 minutes past 9. The appearance of the Moon at the middle of the 1 hase is shown in the annexed diagram, extracted from the "Illustrated London Almanack," and it will serve, without perceptible error, for the whole of Great Britain and Ireland.

At Liverpool, the times of the Eclipse will be 12 minutes earlier, and at York about 4 minutes earlier, but the times of

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 3

	Morning		Evening
Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.	h. m.
1 15	1 45	2 15	2 45	3 15	3 45
13 0	13 30	14 0	14 30	15 0	15 30

TO CORRESPONDENTS

"Octavia H." —"Saracen" is the name adopted by the Arabs after their settlement in Europe; the Arabs of Spain are usually called Moors

"C. A. C."—Has our Correspondent consulted "Kelly's Cambist," for the length of a nautical mile, &c? Or, in Falconer's "Marine Dictionary?"

"Helen" is recommended to consult a Solicitor.

"J. T. R." Wordsley.—A good work in English on Dyeing has long been wanted; and we are glad to see a translation of Berthollet's Treatise announced for publication.

"E. T."—We do not know the birthplace of Jonathan Tyers, the originator of Vauxhall Gardens: it should, however, be found in Bradley's rare "History of Surrey."

"Qui," Dublin, has pointed out an error in our Journal for March 13, stating the Royal Depôt at Cork to have been the first established in Ireland, for the sale of printed, and was carried into execution, some 31 years since, with a party of benevolent ladies, four of whom were of the Society of Friends.

"H. P." and "A. J. C."—The three principal ship-building ports in the United Kingdom are, London, Liverpool, and Glasgow.

"M. K."—The bird's-eye View of the Holy Land can only be purchased as the Frontispiece to the "Illustrated New Testament."

"Clericus," Oxford, is thanked for his sensible letter.

"W. S." should address his inquiry to the "Mechanic's Magazine."

"[illegible]" [illegible] can be obtained for rent, unless an agreement

"[illegible]" [illegible] Exeter, may cures some good by writing to the [illegible]

"[illegible]" [illegible] Brassford.—The price of the "Head-book of Thought" is 7s. 6d.

"[illegible]" [illegible] H." Barr-st-on Hamlet, is thanked for his letter of the 8th inst.

"[illegible]" [illegible] Bewick Reader" should apply at the Centenary Anniversary Office, Bury.

"[illegible]" [illegible] Leicester.—We will determine when the articles are exhibited

"[illegible]" [illegible] Dublin.—There was a terrific earthquake at Cape Haut [illegible], St. Domingo, May 7, 1842, which destroyed nearly the whole of the [illegible] of that city. Several lives were lost. In "Miscellany," the accounts of the most [illegible] are given to all our orthopædic, except one.

"Pedlar," Cork, will see by our present Number, that the Exhibition of Pictures by Living Artists, at the Louvre, opened on the 16th inst. During these exhibitions, the works of the Old Masters cannot be seen, as the whole pictures are hung upon or over them. We find the following remarks on this subject in our Correspondent in Galignani's Messenger. "We will not allow ourselves to emit protestations more upraise the unjudicious absurdity of the arrangement by which the pieces, and more particularly the foreigner who may Paris during the period of the Exhibition remaining open, is deprived [illegible] the grand collection [illegible] Louvre, in consequence of the miserable plan by which the works of modern art are forced to the same galleries as those occupied by those immortal [illegible] which form the most instructive objects of attention in the [illegible] in the least pretensions to a cultivated taste.'

"S. B. Aldine."—Subjects, as the [illegible] of Art, as the science [illegible] first principles in all the Arts from the effects which certain combinations [illegible] the mind, as connected with nature and with reason. "Aratra" is a [illegible] signifying ploughs; but in particular is applied to the curved [illegible] Why a finished gentleman is styled an "Amphitryon" [illegible]

"[illegible]" The Beauties of England and Wales" (Yorkshire)

"[illegible]" [illegible] to devote when we see fit. Sketch of [illegible]

"[illegible]" [illegible] Useful Knowledge."

"Journal" [illegible] colours of Pictures as engraved in our Journal

"[illegible]" —The offer of the translation is declined.

"[illegible]" "The lives." "Music hath charms," &c., are from Congreve's "Mourning Bride."

"[illegible]" Yarmouth, is thanked; but we have not space for such an illustration, as suggested

"A Tyro" would apply at Messrs. Newman's, Soho-square.

"Zaugheer."—Two of the brothers Hermann reside at Liverpool; the third at Dublin; and the fourth at Cork

"One of our Sporting Subs." See our Number for the Easter week.

"J. F. B." Manchester.—When the Statue reaches London.

"Treasury."—The patronage of the Treasury belongs to the First Lord; and the appointments are sometimes made on grounds merely personal. The Junior Clerks commence at a salary of £90, increasing, after a certain period, up to £300 per annum.

"M. A. S." Consult Bechstein's work on Cage Birds

"H. R." Exeter.—0—would be a "consorted Joe."

"H. G. J. C."—The lines are misplaced—we have not room for them.

"J. B." Brighton, will find a Portrait of the present Pope in a late No. of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

"B. M." Bandon, is thanked; but the Sketch did not reach us in time for engraving.

"D. V. S." Manchester.—We cannot undertake the task of private criticism on musical productions.

"G. H."—Cramer, Beale, and Co. are the publishers of Wallace's operas. A letter addressed to Mr. Balfe, at Her Majesty's Theatre, will reach him. P. Auber's opera, "La Muette de Portici," was never in England. "Masaniello." It is the same story and music, but, in the London version, Mr. T. Cooke, the adapter, introduced some of his own composition.

"Terpsichore." The Country Dance is an original English Dance, and not Contre-Danse Anglaise.

"A. W." Purchase Davidson's cheap "Singing Book," and study Albrechtsberger, Woizy, &c.

"Cork Subscriber." —Mr. Reeves, the tenor, is now singing in Italy, and was recently engaged at the Scala, in Milan. Our Correspondent had better apply to some Dublin Agent, who will undertake to teach him, if his voice be "full, strong, and sweet," as he alleges

"A Tyro."—For the beginning, study Davidson's "Flute Instruction-Book;" and, at the same time, procure Clinton's work—a first-rate Instruction-book.

"W. C. O." We cannot give the information you require.

"[illegible]" There are English arrangements of Donizetti's "Anna Bolena," to be obtained of any Music Publisher.

"W. T." Arrochar.—Napier's "History of the Peninsular War" is a good and accessible author.

"R. B. R." Wisbeach.—For an account of the Russo-Dutch Loan, see the No. of our Journal of March 6th, p. 171.

"F. H. K."—The young Pretender left no children, and the direct line of the Stuarts became extinct on the death of his brother, Cardinal York, in 1807. The second question is quite unintelligible.

"E. S. S." We have repeatedly answered the same query. The French had a universal superiority at Waterloo, but not a great one, up to the junction of the Prussians under Blucher, in the evening, when the Allies far outnumbered their enemy.

"Rosebery."—A married lady should bear the exact arms of her husband.

"F. L. Z."—A letter was left for our Correspondent at our office. The charge for the Sketch would be less than £1.

"A Constant Reader."—We do not think there are any emoluments attached to the office of Chancellor of the University of Cambridge.

"Marcus"—The ex-Empress Marie Louise is still alive. The King of Rome born, after the fall of Napoleon, the title of Duke of Reichstad.

"Inquirer."—England has no such exclusive privilege of Fishing as our Correspondents suppose, except within a certain distance of her own shores.

"A. B." should send his Tragedy to a Manager at whose theatre such productions are represented. Perhaps, the highest non-paid, of late, for a play was £300; yet this was "damned" the first night. "A. B." will have to contend with the cliques of Managers and their "Readers," and more than all, with the apathy of the public, too surfeited with burlesque and buffoonery to enjoy the sterling drama.

"H. C."—The price of "The Stammerer's Hand-book" is 4s. 6d.

"G. H." For notices of the Comet, see the "Calendar for the Week," in our present Number

"R. B." Bradford.—The method of finding the Mean Time at a place whose Latitude and Longitude are known, the sun's dec. of a known star being given, is too long for insertion here; but it will be found in most works on Astronomy. See "Wood house's Astronomy," vol. II., page 796; or, "Maddy's Astronomy," page 144, et seq.

"P." and "A. A. F." are thanked; but, we have not room for their Lines.

"E. A." "Les Adrets" is the name of a Forest in the Vosges.

"A Father." Mr. Charles Guthrie, of the Ophthalmic Hospital, is the best Surgeon, in this town, to apply to.

"Peach" may learn at any Fancy Station [illegible].

"C. J. F." Temple.—The postage of a letter to Sydney may be paid in stamps or money

"Omicron." We will inquire.

"R. F. G." must have seen the Country and not the latest Editions of our Journal.

"Friday Gazette" is wrong, the thermometer read 49°. Monday was generally cloudy, and its average temperature was 45½° Tuesday was fine but became [illegible] during the afternoon, and the average temperature of the day was 50°. Wednesday was fine, with a decided approach of summer, but windy. Its [illegible] was 54°; Wednesday [illegible] was considerably [illegible] rather midnight, to 22°.

"Thursday was a very fine day, the thermometer rose very rapidly during the morning, and reached 63½° by 2h. p.m., being no less than 37° higher than it was early in the morning. The average temperature of Thursday was 45°. The thermometer in [illegible] was [illegible] on the 31st inst. of Thursday.

The extreme therm[illegible] [illegible] by were

Thursday, March 18, [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	and the lowest was 29° deg.
Friday, " 19	[illegible]	60	 29
Saturday, " 20	[illegible]	58	 45
Sunday, " 21	[illegible]	58	 40
Monday, " 22	[illegible]	62½	 39
Tuesday, " 23	[illegible]	63	 36
Wednesday, March 24	[illegible]	61	 31
Thursday, March 25	[illegible]	63½	 28

"Jack-tath, in Italy, March 24, 1847." J. G.

"Zaugheer."—Two of the brothers Hermann reside at Liverpool; the third at Dublin; and the fourth at Cork

"One of our Sporting Subs." See our Number for the Easter week.

"J. F. B." Manchester. When the Statue reaches London.

"Treasury."—The patronage of the Treasury belongs to the First Lord; and the appointments are sometimes made on grounds merely personal. The Junior Clerks commence at a salary of £90, increasing, after a certain period, up to £300 per annum.

"M. A. S." Consult Bechstein's work on Cage Birds

"H. R." Exeter.—0—would be a "consorted Joe."

"H. G. J. C."—The lines are misplaced—we have not room for them.

"J. B." Brighton, will find a Portrait of the present Pope in a late No. of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

"B. M." Bandon, is thanked; but the Sketch did not reach us in time for engraving.

"D. V. S." Manchester.—We cannot undertake the task of private criticism on musical productions.

"G. H."—Cramer, Beale, and Co. are the publishers of Wallace's operas. A letter addressed to Mr. Balfe, at Her Majesty's Theatre, will reach him. P. Auber's opera, "La Muette de Portici," was never in England. "Masaniello." It is the same story and music, but, in the London version, Mr. T. Cooke, the adapter, introduced some of his own composition.

"Terpsichore." The Country Dance is an original English Dance, and not Contre-Danse Anglaise.

"A. W." Purchase Davidson's cheap "Singing Book," and study Albrechtsberger, Woizy, &c.

"Cork Subscriber." —Mr. Reeves, the tenor, is now singing in Italy, and was recently engaged at the Scala, in Milan. Our Correspondent had better apply to some Dublin Agent, who will undertake to teach him, if his voice be "full, strong, and sweet," as he alleges

"A Tyro."—For the beginning, study Davidson's "Flute Instruction-Book;" and, at the same time, procure Clinton's work—a first-rate Instruction-book.

"W. C. O." We cannot give the information you require.

"[illegible]" There are English arrangements of Donizetti's "Anna Bolena," to be obtained of any Music Publisher.

"W. T." Arrochar.—Napier's "History of the Peninsular War" is a good and accessible author.

"R. B. R." Wisbeach.—For an account of the Russo-Dutch Loan, see the No. of our Journal of March 6th, p. 171.

"F. H. K."—The young Pretender left no children, and the direct line of the Stuarts became extinct on the death of his brother, Cardinal York, in 1807. The second question is quite unintelligible.

"E. S. S." We have repeatedly answered the same query. The French had a universal superiority at Waterloo, but not a great one, up to the junction of the Prussians under Blucher, in the evening, when the Allies far outnumbered their enemy.

"Rosebery."—A married lady should bear the exact arms of her husband.

"F. L. Z."—A letter was left for our Correspondent at our office. The charge for the Sketch would be less than £1.

"A Constant Reader."—We do not think there are any emoluments attached to the office of Chancellor of the University of Cambridge.

"Marcus"—The ex-Empress Marie Louise is still alive. The King of Rome born, after the fall of Napoleon, the title of Duke of Reichstad.

"Inquirer."—England has no such exclusive privilege of Fishing as our Correspondents suppose, except within a certain distance of her own shores.

"A. B." should send his Tragedy to a Manager at whose theatre such productions are represented. Perhaps, the highest non-paid, of late, for a play was £300; yet this was "damned" the first night. "A. B." will have to contend with the cliques of Managers and their "Readers," and more than all, with the apathy of the public, too surfeited with burlesque and buffoonery to enjoy the sterling drama.

"H. C."—The price of "The Stammerer's Hand-book" is 4s. 6d.

"G. H." For notices of the Comet, see the "Calendar for the Week," in our present Number

"R. B." Bradford.—The method of finding the Mean Time at a place whose Latitude and Longitude are known, the sun's dec. of a known star being given, is too long for insertion here; but it will be found in most works on Astronomy. See "Wood house's Astronomy," vol. II., page 796; or, "Maddy's Astronomy," page 144, et seq.

"P." and "A. A. F." are thanked; but, we have not room for their Lines.

"E. A." "Les Adrets" is the name of a Forest in the Vosges.

"A Father." Mr. Charles Guthrie, of the Ophthalmic Hospital, is the best Surgeon, in this town, to apply to.

"Peach" may learn at any Fancy Station [illegible].

"C. J. F." Temple.—The postage of a letter to Sydney may be paid in stamps or money

"Omicron." We will inquire.

"R. F. G." must have seen the Country and not the latest Editions of our Journal.

"Friday Gazette" is wrong, the thermometer read 49°. Monday was generally cloudy, and its average temperature was 45½° Tuesday was fine but became [illegible] during the afternoon, and the average temperature of the day was 50°. Wednesday was fine, with a decided approach of summer, but windy. Its [illegible] was 54°; Wednesday [illegible] was considerably [illegible] rather midnight, to 22°.

"Thursday was a very fine day, the thermometer rose very rapidly during the morning, and reached 63½° by 2h. p.m., being no less than 37° higher than it was early in the morning. The average temperature of Thursday was 45°. The thermometer in [illegible] was [illegible] on the 31st inst. of Thursday.

The extreme therm[illegible] [illegible] by were

Thursday, March 18, [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	and the lowest was 29° deg.
Friday, " 19	[illegible]	60	 29
Saturday, " 20	[illegible]	58	 45
Sunday, " 21	[illegible]	58	 40
Monday, " 22	[illegible]	62½	 39
Tuesday, " 23	[illegible]	63	 36
Wednesday, March 24	[illegible]	61	 31
Thursday, March 25	[illegible]	63½	 28

"Jack-tath, in Italy, March 24, 1847." J. G.

BOOKS, &c., RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Mons. Secor. No. 4. ——The Whole Truth on the Spanish Marriages.——Ashlead on the Gas System.——Cathedral History of England. Vol. 23.——Dr. Southwood Smith's Philosophy of Health. Parts 2 and 3.——The Boy's Autumn and Winter Books.——Robertson on Diet. Part 1. Pictorial Book of Ballads. British Buddhism, with Notes by the Rev. Dr. Nash.——Burke on the New County Courts. Elihu Burritt's Visit to Skibbereen [illegible] the Colonies. No. 17. Rowland Bradshaw. Parts 4 and 5.——Jasmin's Prophet. By W. Carleton.——Cheerful Views in Rest and Labour. Jasmin's Chess Preceptor.——T. C. Foster on the Law of Marriage.——Memoirs of a Physician. By A. Dumas. Vol. 1. ——Rome on the Game Laws.

Music. Baron Jadin's Instruction.——Songs of the Shareholders.——Goodlton's Elements.——Two American Folkus. By A. Mends.——Six Vocal Duets. By Dr. Schroder.——Eaop's Fables. By Dussek.——Herr Kronm's Ethiopian Quadrilles.——Flood's Gems of the Opera.——Dussek's Fairy Dance.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1847.

Of all the classes who are afflicted with a "grievance," the most to be pitied are the creditors of a State that will not pay its obligations. A Power can enforce its demands against another Power, but individuals have no remedy. The case of the Spanish Bondholders is a sad instance both of the readiness with which Englishmen part with their hard cash, and the bad faith of which a Government can be guilty. Little short of eighty millions sterling have been absorbed by Spain from the accumulation of British industry; payment of the principal is as much out of the question as the settlement of our own National Debt; the interest might have been hoped for; but not a penny is forthcoming. What is to be done? Two or three discussions in Parliament is all the satisfaction the creditors can get; a Railway Bill excites about as much attention. And even those discussions are in no small degree tantalising, since they produce sundry laudations of the high and honourable character of the Spaniards, and proofs of the financial prosperity of the kingdom. Whether that honourable men appear only in the character of swindlers, and the kingdom described as rich is a constant defaulter, the praises of both sound ominous to the defrauded creditor. But there is a strange reluctance in Parliament to speak of things as they really are. It is only necessary to prove some gross case of misconduct against an official, or a man holding some more or less important office, to produce a dozen tributes to the excellence of his character. All the officers of the army and navy who have been charged with extreme harshness and severity in the use of corporal punishment, were, curiously enough, the very mildest and humane of men. Those public Boards who have in happy ignorance suffered their underlings to pillage the public, and defraud the revenue of thousands upon thousands of pounds, were the most zealous and vigilant of officers. If any member of the House of Commons had hinted at Beaumont Smith's enormous frauds on the Exchequer while they were going on, Smith would have been eulogised as a pattern of honesty and all the official virtues. Spain, if a legislator proposes or defends any measure extremely impolitic, impossible, or intolerant, it is sure to call down a shower of praises of the purity of his motives, and the goodness of his heart. It is on the same principle that a complete exposure of the pitiful cheating of the Spanish Government elicits glowing descriptions of the proud and noble character of the people. It is a pity that honest communities so often select the worst characters to govern them, for such seems to be the case. But there is a great deal of what may be called cant in this mode of speaking of men and nations. The tree is known by its fruits, and we ought to judge by actions, not phrases; trusting to the last rather than the first, has cost England dear. We have no doubt that vague ideas of "Castilian honour," and all the other abundant rubbish talked and written about the Spanish character, had no small influence in conveying the gold from the pockets of Englishmen to the treasury of Madrid. The lenders had much better have read history, as it would have corrected many of these delusions. Where are the proofs of wisdom, fair dealing, and uprightness to be met with in the records of Spain? Not among its Kings, for a Spanish Bourbon could seldom be trusted on his word, and never on his oath. As a general rule, neglect and ingratitude were the reward of their best servants. One Ferdinand loaded Columbus with chains in return for the gift of a new world; another Ferdinand hung those who reminded him of the charter to which he had sworn. Of the mass of meanness, profligacy, and cruel falsehood, that now surrounds the throne of Spain, it is merely sickening to speak. As a nation, the Spaniards have lost, by sheer incapacity, their Colonial Empire, and keep up at the present hour a system of commerce that is nothing but fraud and smuggling, a complete system of absurdity. There is not knowledge or public spirit enough in the people to insist on legality of trade even among themselves. Where then is the proof of [illegible] high and honourable" character so much spoken of. The manufactures they have cost only by breaking and defying the law. What hope is there that they will be guided by any higher principles in dealing with their foreign creditors? The only thing that will influence them will be the impossibility of borrowing any more, which may show them that honesty is really the best policy. War is out of the question. The creditors have lent the money, as Lord Clarendon truly says, "on their own risk." Let all who have capital, and who are tempted by foreign loan mongers, note the words. While there is a bog in Ireland, or a railroad unmade, British gold need not go abroad for investment.

THE WEATHER.

THE weather during the past week has been fine; the sky having been frequently cloudless, and the atmosphere very clear of vapour. The following are the particulars of each day

Thursday, March 18, was cloudless all day; the reading of the thermometer, early in the morning, was as low as 29½°; during the day it rose to 63½°; and sank before midnight to 40°; its average temperature was 46½° It is remarkable that, during the whole of the night which was common to March 17th and 18th, a very great difference existed in the temperature at different places. Friday was a cloudless and a fine day; there was an Aurora visible at night, which some of our correspondents mistook for an exhibition of the Zodiacal light. Early in the morning of this day, the reading of the thermometer was 29°; it rose, during the day, to 58°, and sank, before midnight, to 47°; its average temperature was 46°. Saturday was generally cloudy; its average temperature was 51½°. Sunday was a fine day, followed by a clear, bright night; its average temperature was 40½°, and, before midnight to 6th, the thermometer read 29°. Monday was generally cloudy, and its average temperature was 45½° Tuesday was fine but became [illegible] during the afternoon, and the average temperature of the day was 50°. Wednesday was fine, with a decided approach of summer, but windy. Its [illegible] was 54°; Wednesday [illegible] was considerably [illegible] rather midnight, to 22°.

Thursday was a very fine day, the thermometer rose very rapidly during the morning, and reached 63½° by 2h. p.m., being no less than 37° higher than it was early in the morning. The average temperature of Thursday was 45°. The thermometer in [illegible] was [illegible] on the 31st inst. of Thursday.

The extreme therm[illegible] [illegible] by were

Thursday, March 18, [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	and the lowest was 29° deg.
Friday, " 19	[illegible]	60	 29
Saturday, " 20	[illegible]	58	 45
Sunday, " 21	[illegible]	58	 40
Monday, " 22	[illegible]	62½	 39
Tuesday, " 23	[illegible]	63	 36
Wednesday, March 24	[illegible]	61	 31
Thursday, March 25	[illegible]	63½	 28

"Jack-tath, in Italy, March 24, 1847." J. G.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.—Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent dined with the Queen on Monday at Buckingham Palace. On Wednesday the Queen and Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended Divine Service in the private chapel, at Buckingham Palace. The Bishop of Oxford preached the sermon. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated at the service. Her Majesty and her Royal Consort took their usual early walk in the morning.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO WINDSOR.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Monday, Thursday evening.—It was at one time expected, in consequence of [illegible] alterations which were commenced at the Castle immediately upon the departure of the Court on the 9th ult., that her Majesty would spend the Easter holidays at Osborne House, instead of at Windsor Castle, it being feared that the works could not be completed in time for the reception of the Court during the Easter recess. It having, however, been intimated to her Majesty that the Castle would be in a fit state for the reception of the Court during that period, orders were received this morning for the private apartments to be prepared by Wednesday next, on which day the Court is expected to arrive, and to remain until Saturday, the 10th of April. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent is also expected to arrive at Frogmore, from Clarence House, St. James's, on the same day that the Court leaves Buckingham Palace for the Castle.

THE COURT AT MARLBOROUGH HOUSE.—Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, and his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge attended Divine Service on Wednesday morning in the Chapel Royal, St. James's.

MARRIAGE.—On the 16th instant, Miss Hamilton, daughter of Mr Charles Hamilton, M.P., and niece to Sir George Hamilton, British Minister at Florence, was married to Count des Genoys, only son of the late Count des Genoys, Aide-de-Camp to the King of the French.

PARTY AT LORD BROUGHAM'S.—Lord Brougham entertained at dinner on Saturday evening, in Grafton-street, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Viscountess Jocelyn, the Countess of Clarendon and Marchioness of Downs, Lord Lyndhurst, Sir James Graham, Mr. Rogers, Sir Robert and Lady Peel, Viscount Castlerose, the Hon. Colonel Dawson Damer, Mr. Montgomery, and Lady Maid.

FASHIONABLES AT NICE.—The Duke of Devonshire has arrived at Nice, from Rome and Naples. The Earl and Countess of Yarborough and family, Colonel Wood, M.P., and Lady Caroline Wood are also among the English fashionables at present staying at Nice. Lady Caroline Wood continues in delicate health.

ARRIVAL OF THE NEW SPANISH MINISTER.—His Excellency S. Don Francisco [illegible] Istruiz, the Spanish Minister of Foreign Affairs, arrived in London on Wednesday evening.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT THE LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.—A fatal accident took place on Tuesday afternoon, at the Camden Station of the London and North Western Railway, on the premises in the occupation of Messrs. Piper and Co., builders, and by which one man lost his life. For some months past, a number of workmen in the employ of Messrs. Piper and Co., builders, have been engaged [illegible] for Messrs. Pickford, the basement of which is [illegible] Crescent, Camden-road, into stabling. On Tuesday afternoon the [illegible] were employed in finishing the stables, when suddenly [illegible] with a frightful crash, burying the poor fellows who [illegible] considerable time elapsed before they could be extricated, and they were [illegible] dreadfully mutilated and apparently lifeless; but they were at once conveyed to University College Hospital. Every one of the poor fellows was in a state of [illegible] on his arrival, and one of them died in an hour after admission. The others are in a dangerous condition. The accident is accounted for by the breaking of a [illegible], consequent, it is supposed, on the insecurity of the brickwork, occasioned by its being built during the late frost.

FALL OF A VIADUCT ON THE LIVERPOOL AND LEEDS RAILWAY.—An accident [illegible] occasioned by the late [illegible], occurred on this Liverpool and Leeds Railway. On Tuesday 21 arches of the Liverpool Viaduct of this line fell [illegible] with a tremendous crash. The site of this disaster is two miles from the Liverpool Exchange, and the arches on the six northernmost of which were so far completed as to allow of the centreing being withdrawn a few days ago, the others having been completed three months ago—were built of brick. No one has sustained [illegible] personal injury, though the loss of property cannot be less than £7,000 or £8,000. The span of the arch which first gave way was about thirty-five feet: that of the others was thirty.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS,—FRIDAY.

THE IRISH POOR.

Lord Montagle moved that a Select Committee be appointed to consider and to report on the recommendations of the several parliamentary Committees and Commissions on the state of the Irish poor, as relating to the expediency of introducing permanently the system of out-door relief for the able-bodied labourer; and on the effect of such a measure on the well-being [illegible] of enlarging the present electoral divisions, for the purpose of raising and levying the assessments under the Poor Law.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. FRIDAY.

Breweries and Distilleries.—Mr. R. Currie presented a petition from Northampton, praying that a total stop might by put to breweries and distilleries. (Great laughter.)

A number of other petitions on various subjects were presented.

The Irish Church. In answer to a question by Mr S. O'Brien, Lord J. Russell [illegible] that the Government had [illegible] with Dublin [illegible] increase of the number of representatives for Ireland. (Hear.)

The Game Laws.—Mr. Bright gave notice, that shortly after Easter he [illegible] and it was his intention to introduce a bill on the subject.

Enlistment in the Army.—Sir H. Douglas asked whether the measure for limiting the time of service in the army proceeded with the full approbation, sanction, and advice of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, Commander-in-Chief of the British Army. Lord J. Russell said he must decline to give an answer [illegible] satisfactory answer to the question he had asked, he should move, when the order of the day was read for going into Committee on the Army Enlistment Bill, that the bill be committed that day six months.

THE CUSTOMS DUTIES BILL.

On the order of the day being read for going into Committee on the Customs Duties Bill,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, that, in Committee on this bill he should [illegible] of the Sugar Duties, [illegible] report of, as at present [illegible] He would [illegible] the House [illegible] upstairs The noble Lord, at considerable length, stated that the amendment was one of great importance, although of a [illegible] character. For years the Chancellor of the Exchequer the latest credit [illegible] in willing to consult the public interest to the utmost of his power, but he thought the bill would not have the effect he sought to anticipate. He was decidedly of opinion the measure ought to be considered by a Select Committee before the House proceeded to legislate on it.

Her Majesty's Health.—The Morning Post says:—"We have again the gratification to announce the approach of an event calculated to [illegible] the domestic [illegible] of our Sovereign and the Prince Consort. Her Majesty's [illegible] The [illegible] Her Majesty [illegible] at Buckingham Palace, at which his Grace the Duke of Bedford was installed as Knight of the Most Noble the Order of the Garter in the room of the late Duke of Northumberland. The Marquis of Anglesey, Sir George Rugard, and Field Marshal Grosvenor, are, we understand, receives from Lord Melbourne their batons of office, having been promoted from the rank of General to that of Field Marshal Sudden Death of Sir Edward Vavasour. The Hon. Sir Edward Vavasour, Bart., died suddenly on the 10th inst. on his way to Rome.

Arrival of Mr. O'Connell in France. Mr. O'Connell arrived on Monday at Boulogne, from Folkestone, on his way to Italy, for the benefit of his health, accompanied by his eldest son. His other sons accompanied him as far as Folkestone, but returned to London to attend to their duties in Parliament. Mr. O'Connell left Boulogne on Tuesday for Paris.

Observance of the Fast in the Country.—We find from private letters and provincial papers, that Wednesday was observed in various parts of the country with due solemnity and decorum. At Manchester the whole of the public [illegible] were closed, and also the shops. The public places of worship were numerously attended. Collections were made at some of them for the poor. A similar feeling was displayed at Birmingham. At Brighton, the day was religiously observed by all classes. In short, so far as can be yet ascertained, there was a general desire in the country to join in a proper observance of the day.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE NEW HOUSE OF LORDS.

We have already stated that the Peers were expected to occupy their new House after the Easter vacation. A few words descriptive of the general effect of the House may be interesting to those of our readers who have not been fortunate enough to have [illegible] of inspecting it. Unlike [illegible] the apartments, the elaborate carved panels, and the brilliant colouring which meets the eye on every side, contribute to produce a coup d'œil at once striking and beautiful. The ceiling is divided into a series of square compartments, [illegible] richly relieved in blue and red, and the crossbeams forming [illegible] The [illegible] of the House is occupied by the throne, which is already nearly complete. It is a most elaborate piece of work, design of Gothic order, consisting of a grand centre and two wings, the latter [illegible] The [illegible] and the Prince [illegible] especial [illegible] and [illegible] the design [illegible] its tone and produces an admirable result.

In the canopy over the centre of the throne are niches intended for the reception of statues of the patron saints of the three kingdoms, and on the wall immediately [illegible] Peers [illegible] The [illegible] Lobby. It is [illegible] and [illegible] Peers called as arched compartments, three at either end of the House, and to be filled up by frescos. This arrangement will ultimately be carried out, but at present Mr. Dyce is the only artist who has completed his subject. Another important, and interesting material feature in the decoration of the House is the introduction of statues, about half the size of life, of all those Barons who were instrumental in exacting Magna Charta from John. Pedestals, each surmounted by an elegant canopy, are placed at stated intervals on either side the House, immediately above the Peeresses' gallery, the name of each Baron being beautifully emblazoned in colours. The strangers' gallery faces the throne, and is immediately above the Peers' entrance. The reporters' gallery is immediately beneath the strangers' gallery. Both these galleries are exceedingly capacious, and admirably adapted for their respective purposes. There are three rows of seats up each side of the House, one reaching above another. On the panelling round the House are painted the armorial bearings of all the noblemen who have held the office of Lord Chancellor from the earliest date of that office, in the reign of Edward III., up to the present time—the last coming with the arms of the present Lord Chancellor, Lord Cottenham. The floor of the House will be covered with a carpet of very chaste design, the colour being dark blue, with gold spots. The House is entered by a pair of solid brass gates of the most exquisite design and workmanship. The House is nearly twice as large as the present House of Peers, and considerably larger than the new House of Commons will be when completed.

The Bank of England.—A General Court was held at the Bank on Tuesday, for the purpose of determining by ballot whether, in addition to the dividend of £3 10s. per cent. Interest and profits for the half-year ending the 25th of April next, a bonus out of the interest and profits be made of 1 per cent. on the capital stock of the corporation. Shortly after four o'clock it was announced that 3,0[illegible] votes had been given for the payment of the proposed bonus, and 2,[illegible] against it. So that the amendment of Mr. Clarke, which was adopted at the last General Court of the Company, was sustained by a majority of 139 votes

Increase in the Price of Bread. On Thursday morning, nearly all the full-priced bakers at the west-end of the Metropolis made a reduction of one penny and a halfpenny in the price of their bread They are now charging 9½d. [illegible] and [illegible] In the [illegible] and [illegible] neighborhood of Seven Dials, the price of bread of the best quality is 8½d., and seconds, 7½d.; though some few are selling as low as 7d. A still further reduction is expected in a few days.

The New County Courts On Monday the following Courts were opened with the usual proclamation:—The Boroughsey Court at Berners-street, Oxford-street; Westminster, at Castle-street, Leicester-square; and the Chelsea division of the metropolis, at Osborne-street, Whitechapel: the District County Court, of Westminster, which includes the inhabitants west of Temple-bar and Holborn, south of Oxford street, to Bayswater, across Hyde-park to Notting-street, and from thence to the river by Chelsea Hospital. In this Court and the other County Courts just established all actions for debt and damage under £20, that is, for money owing or matters of contract, all cases of assault or injury to the person or goods in which the damages claimed do not exceed £20, all matters in dispute between masters and servants, or masters and workmen under £20, may be tried and disposed of in less than fourteen days. A clerk of the Court will be recovered for less than £2, and smaller sums at a proportionately less expense will the defendant has to pay with the debt.

Thames Tunnel. On Monday, the fourth anniversary of the opening of this thoroughfare beneath the Thames was celebrated by a grand fancy fair. The tunnel was illuminated with 100,000 variegated lamps, and with brilliant devices in gas, and decorated with evergreens and flowers. The visitors were amused with posturers, bands of music (one of females playing sax-horns), and the Wizard of the North.

Births and Deaths in the Metropolis.—The number of births registered in the week ending March 20, was—males, 772; females, 745; total, 1517. The deaths were—males, 547; females, 567; total, 1114.

East India House.—A Quarterly General Court was held at the East India House on Thursday, when Mr. J. A. Lewis, moved resolutions requesting the Court of Proprietors to obtain the sanction of the Board of Control for the Secret Committee of the Court, to lay before the Committee of the Court of Proprietors all correspondence which has passed between the Home authorities and the Government of India, in relation to, or concerning the ex-Raja of Sattara, which arose in consequence of a communication, publicly made to the Court of Proprietors at the Quarterly General Court, held on the 16th of March, 1846, and which has not yet been communicated to this Court. After a long debate the proposition was agreed to by 40 to 38.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Court of Spain has sent an Ambassador to the States of Central America, being their first recognition of these States since they asserted their independence.

Lord J. Browne, brother of the Marquis of Sligo, a passenger by the Forerunner, which brought the last India mail, died on board of that steamer the day before she reached Suez. When Lord Browne embarked on board the Peninsular [illegible] he was [illegible] expressed from dysentery, and was [illegible] the 8th inst.

A box, containing 2000 sovereigns, was recently stolen from the Transit Admiration offices at Cairo. Both the Managing Director of the Transit, and the Cairo agent, were absent from Cairo when the robbery was committed.

Letters from Athens, of the 10th inst., state that the reply of the Sultan to the Letter of King Otho, and a note from the Ottoman Minister for Foreign Affairs to M. Colettl, had been received on the 3rd inst. The Sultan [illegible] that the [illegible] of [illegible] between [illegible] Greek Catholics, and [illegible] which [illegible] to propose [illegible] offered to M. Musurus by M. Colettl, the [illegible] had yet been solved.

The Dowager Baroness of Natorp, Mariana Sessi, who, during upwards of 30 years ruled with undisputed sway the part of [illegible] the theatres of San Carlo, at Naples, of the Scala, at Milan, and the Odeon, at Paris, lately died at Vienna, after a short illness, aged 76.

A letter from Berne, of the 15th, says:—"Misery makes frightful progress in our canton, which was long cited as one of the most opulent and [illegible] in Switzerland. The number of individuals who [illegible] entirely on public or private charity, was calculated, a few days ago, at [illegible] elderly more than a hundred thousand, that is, nearly one-fourth of the whole population."

M. Cochelet, many years the French Consul-General at Alexandria, has been appointed to succeed M. Durant St. Andre as Consul-General, resident in London.

A letter from Constantinople of the 7th, in alluding to the conspiracy [illegible] Beder, states that it was directed against the Grand Vizier, by means of a [illegible] of private charity was calculated, a few days ago, at [illegible] elderly more than a hundred thousand, that is, nearly one-fourth of the whole population."

All the [illegible] of the small town of Lutzelhausen, in the Grand Duchy [illegible] Baden, [illegible] to emigrate to America.

A letter from Timor, dated Nov. 26, 1846, states:—"The captain, officers, and passengers of the Pearl Lass were murdered by the crew, consisting of English and natives, on her way to Sydney. She was recaptured by a whaler, and the crew, having confessed their crime, were brought to justice before the Court of Batavia."

Accounts from Rome of the 9th inst., state that the Pope has determined on creating an order of knighthood for rewarding persons distinguished for virtue or merit, without regard to creed or nation His Holiness has [illegible] depriva- [illegible] time of scarcity. It [illegible] which [illegible] expected.

Mr. Cobden is at present in Naples, where Baron de Rothschild, the head of the house in that city, has given him a banquet, which Prince Oscar of Sweden honoured with his presence.

We learn from Breslau that in consequence of a censure passed [illegible] has sent in his resignation as a Member of the Academy.

The Augsburg Gazette of the 17th inst. announces that the differences so long existing between the King of Naples and his brother the Prince of Capua have been arranged. The King is to open the Prince the six years' arrears due of his annuity. The Princess is to have the title of Duchess of Massali, and to be received at Court.

The General Assembly of Wallachia adopted, on the 23rd ult., a project of law of the highest importance, in virtue of which 14,000 families, and 60,000 Bohemian slaves belonging to the state, to the clergy, and to all the public establishments, have been emancipated. This magnificent act of philanthropy is ascribed to Prince Ribesco, the Hospodar of Wallachia. The only remains of slavery now in Wallachia are about 48,000 individuals, who are private property.

An account has been received by the French Government of the assassination of M. E. D'Ossery, who, in company with M. De Castlenau, was travelling in South America, exploring the hitherto unknown parts of that country. The assassins (four in number) had been arrested.

A Munich letter of the 16th states that the King of Bavaria had not quitted his apartments for several days, from an indisposition, which, however, does not present any dangerous symptoms.

On Tuesday afternoon upwards of 200 pads of mackerel, containing 20,000 fish, caught at Plymouth, were brought into Billingsgate Market through the medium of the Great Western Railway. The sudden glut so reduced the price of these fish that the retail dealers sold them at six and eight for a shilling.

The Spectateur Lapolin of the 25th ult. states, that two days [illegible] Mahmoud, [illegible] Sheik, and which is a descendant of the Prophet's famous Aboubekir, and suffered themselves to be trampled upon by the animal.

Accounts from Turin represent the King of Sardinia to be [illegible] to him twice, and his Majesty has also [illegible] The Duke of Genoa will be obliged to bleed him abundantly with the lancet.

A Mrs. Sarah Brittenden, aged nearly 106 years, died a few days ago at the Cheltenham Union Workhouse. She had been for upwards of 47 years an inmate of that establishment. She was up to nearly the time of her death, always the first in chapel for morning prayers, and, although [illegible] was [illegible] rest, she never did so until after evening prayers were concluded [illegible] married in early life, and had one daughter. Her faculties were good almost to the last.

Mr. Forsyth, of Alton Towers, has succeeded in making bread with farina washed from the rhizomes or branching roots of the common fern, which usually [illegible] the ground on which this plant has long grown. The roots will [illegible] also, he says, make good beer; and as food for pigs, when boiled, they have long been known to be of great value.

A St. Petersburg letter of the 11th says:—"There are still large quantities of corn and flour here, and large supplies are expected for exportation by the White Sea, the Black Sea, and the Sea of Azoff. St. Petersburg alone can furnish 1,600,000 sacks of rye flour for exportation"

The Aix la Chapelle Gazette of the 20th states from Rome, that a conspiracy against the liberal policy of the Pope has been discovered at Ancona, and that several monks were at the head of it. Some arrests have, it is said, taken place.

Accounts from the Faroe Isles state that on the 14th and 15th of January a fall of fine ashes took place there. It was first observed on the wool of the sheep; but was very slight compared with the fall of ashes in 1845. Yet, as the wind was blowing south and south-east at the time, it is supposed that some considerable eruption of Mount Hecla was the cause of the phenomenon.

A Welsh paper announces the death of a woman, named Sarah Jones, and says that if she had lived until the 10th of April, she would have attained her 107th year; and, notwithstanding her great age, she retained her faculties unimpaired, nearly to the last.

The cost of a soldier's ration in Ireland is increased 3d., and in England 1½d., from the scarcity of provisions.

A Bath paper states that the bakers of that city generally have resolved, in consequence of the scarcity and high price of flour this year, not to make cross buns on Good Friday, and they calculate by this means upon a saving in Bath alone of nearly thirty sacks of flour.

During the week ending on Sunday last, the number of persons passing and repassing between England and France at the undermentioned ports, was—At Boulogne, 564; at Calais, 232: total, 1206.

Accounts from Stuttgardt, of the 17th, state that a report had been current there for several days, that the Emperor Nicholas was expected on a visit to the Princess Royal, the Grand Duchess Olga. The King of Wirtemberg had been indisposed for several days.

The Wesleyan Methodists' Conference, for 1847, will be held in Liverpool this year, in June or July. The meetings will take place, as on former occasions of a similar kind, at the Brunswick Chapel, Mess-street, and will be attended by Wesleyan Ministers from all parts of the kingdom.

It results from the account of the famines which have afflicted Europe for nearly a century, that bad harvests have returned in a periodical circle of every ten or twelve years, and that also there is one year in addition more disastrous than the others, at the end of a period calculated at the rate of fifty four years—1709, 1772, 1793-4 (great famine in the time of the French Revolution), 1804, 1818-19, 1828-9, 1838-9, 1846-7, were years of famine. The great famine of 1793-4 appears to correspond with that of the present year.

A respectable auctioneer of Chesterfield was troubled, a short time back, with a dream, which led him to inflict upon himself a serious injury. He dreamt that he was much troubled with a nutshell that had become jammed between his teeth; and, so strong was the impression, that he tugged violently at the supposed shell, to relieve himself from it; awakening with his efforts, he found, to his great consternation, that he had pulled out a sound double tooth, which he then held between his finger and thumb.

The statement made by the French newspapers, that the Grand Duke Michael was about to be nominated Viceroy of Poland, with the same powers and attributions as the Grand Duke Constantine possessed up to 1830, is fully confirmed.

COUNTRY NEWS.

SERIOUS FIRE AT HOWBURY HALL, BEDFORDSHIRE.

On Wednesday afternoon (last week) an extensive and destructive fire broke out at Howbury Hall, the ancient and manorial residence of Frederic Polhill, Esq., M.P., and a few years back the temporary residence of the present Duke of Marlborough, at Ranhold, three miles north-east of Bedford. The conflagration occurred in a remarkable manner. A bricklayer, named Field, who has worked on the premises about forty years, was repairing the roof of the building, and in [illegible] the [illegible] of [illegible] most of [illegible] the material, and, passing it under the lines, applied some [illegible] to suffocate the insects, and then stopped up the place and left it, unapprehensive of the consequences. The laths caught fire, which immediately extended along the roof, and more than half the mansion has been entirely consumed, a portion of the remainder unroofed, and many of the windows nearly demolished.

The house was unoccupied and unfurnished, and the books removed. The housekeeper's room, bachelor's room, and library, with a great number of bedrooms, comprising the left wing, have been burnt to the ground, nothing remaining but the stacks of chimneys, with small portions of wall attached to them. [illegible] the [illegible] offices [illegible] the [illegible] Bedford, and stables, [illegible] and [illegible] damages.

To prevent the extension of the fire to the right wing, the library was left to its fate, and fell by piecemeal, each fall weakening the fresh burst of flame. The anxious object of preserving the eastern part of the mansion were at length realised, but not before the fall of the ceiling of the large entrance-hall, which came down with a tremendous crash about seven o'clock.

The mansion was of very ancient date, the original building having been erected two centuries ago, and received many additions during the life-time of the late T. Polhill, Esq.

Adjoining [illegible] Thomas Polhill, Esq. (brother to Captain Polhill, who died early in life, intended to have built a new mansion on a site nearer the village of Renhold.

Opening of the Port of Birkenhead.—Easter Monday will be a great day at Birkenhead, for from that day the inhabitants may date the commencement of its existence as a port. The Commissioners' Dock, the Birkenhead Dock Company's warehouses, the Chester and Birkenhead Extension Line of Railway to the docks, and the Birkenhead Park will be opened on that day; Lord Morpeth [illegible] the [illegible] of the several [illegible] [illegible] Installation of Newly [illegible] Lord [illegible] will [illegible] Lord [illegible] Lord [illegible] Lord

NEWSPAPER

DESIGNED BY W. HARVEY.

THE NATIONAL FAST

THE FAST DAY IN THE METROPOLIS.

THE BISHOP OF ST. ASAPH PREACHING THE FAST DAY SERMON, IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

THE General Fast, on Wednesday, was observed by the appointed service, followed by sermons, at the various metropolitan churches and chapels, which are stated to have been well attended: and in many of them the congregations were greater than is usually the case either on the Sabbath days or on the customary solemnities of religion. Of a few only of the discourses will our limits enable us to furnish notices.

THE CHAPEL ROYAL.

The Bishop of London preached a sermon at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, in the presence of the Queen Dowager, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, and several members of both Houses of Parliament. The Bishop took for his text the 10th verse of the 3rd chapter of Jonah—"And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way: and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do them, and he did it not." The following is a brief outline of the chief topics of the discourse:

Nineveh, the near neighbour and rival of Babylon—both literally fulfilling in their common ruin the denunciations of the Prophets—is the subject of the text. Steeped in the orgies of idolatry, the people were, however, conscience stricken to hear that a Divine Stranger had arrived in their city, who was proclaiming in a loud and fearless voice that in forty days the city of Nimes, Nimrod, and Baal should be no more. Whereupon the people proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest to the least of them. The word also came to the King, who also covered himself in sackcloth, heaping the ashes of supplication and sorrow on his head; enjoining the people to cry aloud unto God, and forsake the evil of their ways. Thus was the God of Mercy propitiated, and Nineveh redeemed, through the repentance of its people.

Soon, however, the inveterate and general corruption returned, when the prophecy of Nahum announced their final destruction, and Nineveh became an unsightly mass of ruin; the refuge for the wild fox and hyena. From these facts the Apostle Paul derives a fecund theme for rebuking the obstinacy of the Jews—the chosen people—but so often deaf to the warnings of God and his prophets; and although the laws of nature have been wisely ordained as adequate to the carrying on of nature's general machinery, nevertheless, the man must be a bold man who could deny that the finger of God—or Special Providence—is not occasionally almost palpably seen in the destinies of this world. Thus with the famine. What human foresight could have anticipated—or what human prudence could have prevented this terrible visitation? Yet waving the judicial character of the dispensation, most wise will it be to receive it as a salutary lesson

At a period of time not very distant from the present, we in our turn were affrighted by that fearful disease which had traversed nearly the whole of the globe. Then were we forced universally to flee towards God—then we were aroused to a fearful apprehension of the severe displeasure of the Almighty; and from the moment that the general people bent them in penitence and supplication before the God of Mercy, the pestilence palpably and daily decreased. Being ourselves exempt from the dreadful sufferings in Ireland, we seem loth to recognise the hand of God therein. In the middle of the nineteenth century, and in a civilized country, such a state of things appear almost incredible. It is only too true: and ours may be the next turn, which God avert. But dearth of food has been often the cause of sanguinary insurrection, and even religious wars—the worst of all. The future may be worse than the present or the past; and, therefore, even Christians should pray God to grant us pardon for the past and grace for the future.

If this dread calamity was due in part to the people of Ireland, how much greater was the fault of those who left them in a state of ignorance and crime? For their sins the whole nation was liable. National reform must be as well indicated as accomplished by individual reformation. The public acts of a nation constituted a mass of good or evil—they stamped the character of the people But, let each individual of the nation look to his own sins, his own failures. Let each perform his duty in the station of life in which God had placed him; and then he might, as one of the whole people, come forward and ask for a larger measure of grace for the future, that might bring down on himself, and those among whom he lived, blessings, not curses. One evidence there was which might ascend to the Almighty as an evidence of sincerity, one peculiarly applicable to the present crisis. By a greatly-increased almsgiving, this might enforce their own humiliation, and those offerings might be most acceptable in the eyes of God which we were enabled by our own self-denial to make. After a strong denunciation of Mammon and his followers, his Lordship concluded a most powerful and impressive sermon.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

The House of Peers attended Divine worship at Westminster Abbey on Wednesday. There seemed to be great anxiety to get admittance, and places were taken up at the entrance at an early hour, it not being generally known that the usual time for the commencement of the service had been changed. The rush when the door was opened, at eleven o'clock, was tremendous, and there not being any policemen in attendance, the pushing and scrambling were most unseemly to the place and the occasion. The galleries were filled before the door opened with the more privileged portion of the public, who had obtained early admittance.

The House of Lords met at ten o'clock; prayers were read by the Bishop of St. Asaph; the Peers present were—the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Wellington, the Bishop of Durham, the Bishop of Ely, the Marquis of Northampton, the Earl of Colchester, Viscount Strangford, Lord Campbell, the Earl of Wicklow, Earl Somers, the Marquis of Clanricarde, Earl Granville, Lord Grey, the Earl of Clarendon, the Bishop of Lincoln, the Marquis of Bute, Lord Foley, the Earl of Devon, Lord Auckland, and Lord Montcagle. Shortly before eleven their Lordships, preceded by Sir Augustus Clifford, Usher of the Black Rod, Mr. Pulman, Deputy Usher, the Dean and Clergy of Westminster, and the officers of the Lords, walked in procession from the House to Westminster Abbey, which they entered at Poet's Corner, no one being admitted by that entrance but those taking part in the proceedings. The Chancellor wore his robes of office, and was a prominent figure in the procession. The Bishop of St. Asaph appeared in a black velvet skull-cap, as a defence against the cold of the Abbey; two or three of the Peers did the same. A correspondent who was present describes the demeanour of some of the congregation as anything but decorous. The eagerness to see the Peers as they entered the Choir, was precisely that displayed at a theatre; and some of those who were excluded by the shutting the gate, kept up a rattling and knocking at it with sticks at intervals during the service, in a most irreverent manner.

There was no chanting; prayers were read by the Rev. Mr. Wordsworth; the sermon was preached by the Bishop of St. Asaph.

The Right Rev. Prelate took his text from the 24th verse of the 10th chapter of Jeremiah "Oh Lord, correct me, but with judgment; not in Thine anger, lest Thou bring me to nothing" The Right Rev. Prelate commenced by pointing out that throughout every diversity of life, within the experience of every man who turned to religion for his guide and inspiration, it was made manifest that the good things of this life were not only given by God, but that they were given as tokens of God's favour and approval. The whole of the Jewish chronicles might be referred to as evidence of that fact. The blessings bestowed upon the first pair in Paradise were bestowed so long as the goodness of God was not abused; when evil was done, and the divine command was disobeyed, then the favour was withdrawn, and the wrath of the Almighty was first evoked. In the Old, as in the New Testament, it was always impressed that Heaven was just; and, in the latter, that justice was promised, not alone for this life, but for the life that was to come. He who passed a blameless existence, and devoted his energies and his capabilities to the succouring of distressed humanity, to the helping the needy, protecting the oppressed, and teaching the ignorant, enjoyed perpetual happiness; the conviction was never absent from him that, however he prospered in a worldly sense, he was watched by the eye of God, and that, in the end of all, the justice which he had been taught to expect would be extended to him and his. In the midst of persecution and in the presence of death the Christian was without fear or sorrow; and compared to his state of mind the comforts of the man of this world were as nothing. The missionary who gave up the associations of his fatherland, and resigned himself to a career of struggle in a distant and savage land, occupied only in increasing the fold of his Redeemer, and leading away the barbarian from sin and ignorance, could give up all and look to the future without a sigh; the pleasure he partook of was a hundredfold that which he left behind. The promise of the Scripture meant that the good things of this life should be those things which were really valuable—not mere worldly advantages, but peace and quiet, honour and respect. Those blessings, it was vaticinated, should be so abundant as to leave to the Christian sufficient to enable him to share his possessions with those who were in want; and in the state of society in which they now existed, there would be no one Christianly conduct or ambition who would not display an eagerness to apportion the good things of this life as equally as in his power lay—not reserving all for his future, but parting with some for the relief of the need, in the present, of his brethren. Such should be the rule in ordinary not less than in extraordinary circumstances; every variation of prosperity, and every amelioration of suffering, should be acknowledged as dictated by the will of God; and, to obtain justice from him, we must ourselves be just. To understand the calamity with which we might be visited, or to appreciate the boon conferred upon the community, we must refer to the source whence it proceeded. We must not misinterpret the dispensations of Providence; neither misfortune nor prosperity was the result of accident. We were bound to be charitable in our judgment of each other in the season of adversity in which we now lived; we were bound to endure with a meek temper; and, if we would remedy while we repented, we must admit contritely that the finger of God was in the famine now prevailing in some portions of our empire. At the same time, let it be remembered that the misfortune came not from the hatred, but from the love of God. It was intended to teach us something, and we should be unwise if, in enduring the castigation, we did not seek to derive the lesson which lurked in the chastisement. The observation applied equally to the kingdom and to individuals. No one could look to the circumstances which had preceded and accompanied the national disaster, and not perceive that we were labouring under the chastening hand of a merciful Creator. The wretchedness of some of our fellow-subjects was palpable; it had not been sought to be hid, and could not be disguised. Different men might entertain different opinions of the extent and intensity of the famine and pestilence which prospectively threatened to advance from one corner to another of the British dominions; but no man could close his eyes to the fact that, in various districts of this wealthy, rich, and powerful kingdom, peasants born under the rule, and supposed to enjoy the privileges, of England, were at this moment dying from sheer starvation. Why God had or chastised us was quite another question. Some of us might not see the reason. He could not pretend to distinguish the precise cause; but he could not help acknowledging ten thousand reasons why punishment was conferred. It was necessary to him wiser to inquire rather than to decide. When persons triumphantly pointed to particular events and misdoings, if such they were, as containing cause for the chastisement, they perhaps permitted political prejudices to pervade too prominent a place in their argumentation. The Sovereign of Heaven no doubt chastised us for that which offended Him, but it was dangerous ground to tread upon to endeavour to fix upon the offence; and the discussion, at this juncture, was not altogether necessary. The Right Rev. Prelate then proceeded to show that it was unseemly to take for granted that Ireland had been punished for supposed crimes committed there, inasmuch as the quiet and religious Highlanders, and other nations actuated by different principles, and living under different institutions, had been visited by the same famine. And they did wrong in looking to particular acts to account to themselves for the ordainment of Heaven; they should examine their own minds, and trace that evil principle from which the very feeling, in the act, whatever it might be, had flowed. It was the aggregate sin of the population which had brought down the vengeance of God. The individual sin, it appeared to him, was a want of straightforwardness in dealing with his neighbour, particularly on religious subjects, and God had punished us for the mistrust which prevailed among us. Here were cause and effect; certainly we had sinned in this respect, and we should inquire if we had not merited the retaliation. Then, as to the public sin, let the wrong temper existing among us be traced. This wrong temper, he conceived, was the spirit of national pride which actuated and governed us. God had granted to us great blessings—blessings such as had never been enjoyed among any other nation. England, last year, seemed to have been in the possession of a prosperity which surpassed in its characteristics and amount that ever accorded to any people with whose records we were acquainted. Let the advantages we had enjoyed be placed in comparison with the use we had made of them. We had neglected in our spiritual superiority the spiritual destitution elsewhere. They saw by Lord Ashley's figures alone how many millions who nursed in luxuries had been denied none of the opportunities to obtain a religious education, and they had heedlessly passed over those scenes of squalid wretchedness, barefaced vice, misery, and poverty, in our streets which were spread like a leprosy on all sides of them. Look to the palace of their beloved Sovereign, and then turn to the hovel of some of her subjects. Count over the sums expended, and expended rightly, in the consecration of the halls for their Parliament, and then estimate the cost of building churches for the poor. To whatever point they directed their attention they saw reason why they should be humbled in such scrutable his own heart. Let us not say we would be admired they were only proud. God had desired to correct us, and He had chosen this calamity as His instrument. Public sorrows, regarded in this light, became private admonitions. We had been humbled as we might have been in India; there, our arms had been crowned with victory, and we had then been spared, it was not unlikely, because we should have referred defeat to the errors of our troops, or the fortune of our enemies, rather than to the justice of Heaven. Mighty warriors and great armies had not been selected as the means of instructing us in our faults. The most apparently insignificant of agents, an insect not to be discovered by the naked eye, was recognised and rendered a great empire that it had not walked upright in the straight path. A blight pervaded our agricultural productions—the potato-plant was destroyed—and, unless in His mercy God would withdraw it, it was yet to be seen if the present year would not extend to the whole vegetable kingdom, and, by a connection of causes, imparing the glory and destroying the greatness of the British empire, reduce us, like Athens, Rome, Babylon, and Nineveh and bean redness, until the names of our exploits and pre-eminence became a tradition merely. Who could say that misfortune would not engender discord among those accustomed to success? Who could say that dissension would not be followed by civil war, and that against the national ruin? God was merciful, and the knowledge of that, and the trust that repentance among men would be indicated, justified a hope that such results would never follow. A remedy for the physical evil might be discovered, but it was the duty to rely not upon the expedients of science, but upon the repentance of their own hearts. They must not only acknowledge the sin; it was an act peculiar only unto themselves. Let no man judge his neighbour's repentance before God; there must not only be evidence of genuine sorrow for the past, but clear manifestations of better purposes for the future. They would then be brought nearer to God, and God would they plead powerfully in behalf of their afflicted brethren in Ireland. When Jonah preached to the Ninevites, "God saw that they turned from their evil ways, and He repented of the evil that He intended to do unto them, and He did it not." His Lordship then said, that he thought the Queen's directing this country for having appointed that day of fast; it was a proper and a natural mode of evincing repentance. Fasting, however, was only an item of the repentance; fasting could not do away with the sin of the glutton; but fasting had brought the prodigal son to the acknowledgment of God. By prayer, fasting, and almsgiving would the spirit be moved to true repentance; and to pray, fast, and give alms was now the duty of the people. The Right Rev. Prelate concluded, expressed a hope that God in his great mercy would make this public acknowlement the means of producing a double blessing—a blessing to those poor Irish and Scotch whose hearts would be encouraged to supply the wants of a blessing to those who had lived in the pride of this world and in forgetfulness of Heaven.

The remaining prayers issued for the occasion having been read, their Lordships retired.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—ST. MARGARET'S CHURCH.

According to previous arrangement the Speaker entered the House at a quarter before 11, and shortly afterwards proceeded to the church for worship, accompanied by a considerable number of the members, amongst whom were the following: Lord J. Russell, Sir G. Grey, Sir R. Peel, Sir J. Graham, Sir R. H. Inglis, the Earl of Lincoln, Lord C. Manners, Sir C. Lemon, Colonel Fox, Mr. A. S. O'Brien, Mr. Cardwell, Mr. Brotherton, Mr. Shaw, &c. The front seats of the gallery were chiefly appropriated to the members of the House of Commons, and the other departments of the church were well filled. The service of worshipping of St. Margaret's and the strangers drawn together by the novelty of the occasion. Prayers were read by the Rev. Dr. Milman, rector of the parish, and the sermon was preached by the venerable the Archdeacon of Surrey (Dr. Dealtry), who took for his text the 37th and 38th verses of the 78th Psalm:—"For their heart was not right with him, neither were they steadfast in his covenant. But he being full of compassion forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not; yea, many a time he turned his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath."

The Venerable Archdeacon, after a brief exposition of the general meaning of the words of the text, observed that, as "whatever was written aforetime was written for our learning," so there were various important lessons to be drawn from the passage he had read. Though the Israelites were under a very peculiar dispensation, still there were many things in God's providence as regards that people fraught with valuable instruction to his people in all ages. It was found that the workings of God's providence were ordinarily manifested in the operation of secondary causes, and there were visitations of judgment, National sins were the sins of nations, committed by the people in their individual character, as well as by those who were placed in authority. Neither were they at liberty to point out particular sins as having brought down judgments. This could only be made known by direct revelation; and it was sufficient for them to know generally that God's judgments were upon them for the sins which they had committed. Every man might find out these for himself, by taking as his guide that word "which is a light unto his feet and a lamp unto his path." In pursuing his inquiry it was important to bear in mind that "to whom much is given, of them much is also required." This country boasted of its constitution, of the many privileges which it possessed, and of its nations, greatness; and when they added to these, the free use of the Holy Scriptures, the pure worship of God, and the numerous opportunities given them to spread to the extremities of the earth the glad tidings of salvation, the extent of their responsibility and the greatness of their shortcomings would become manifest! The Venerable Archdeacon then proceeded to consider how far we had come short with those privileges, and faithfully used the advantages be-

It could not be denied that in several respects for some years past the sin and benevolence of this country exerted itself in an increased degree both at home and abroad. The benefits of sound education and scriptural worship, and the sanctification of God's holy day, had exerted a more lively interest than in the preceding age, while buildings consecrated to religion had been erected in every part of the kingdom. Numerous societies had been formed for the sending forth to preach the gospel in other lands. It could not now be said, as at the end of the last century, that in India England had erected no churches and no schools, and that if she were driven out of it, nothing would remain to show that it had ever been in the hands of a civilized people. A very different statement could now be made; and the first object which met the eye of the stranger on approaching the City of Palaces was a Christian temple where God's word was faithfully preached, and the sacraments administered. Without undervaluing what this country had done in these respects, however, it was most humiliating to reflect how few persons made any exertion for the promotion of such objects. Then, as regarded the condition of too many at home, it would suffice to notice the number of juvenile delinquents who were brought before the courts of justice, the multitudes of young children who had no training up in the way they should go, and the crowds of every sex and age who were strangers to the house of prayer, and engaged in the sad desecration of the Lord's-day; and, having mentioned these, he would ask, did their existence show that they were acting worthy of their advantages? And were among those who professed the worship of God, how much of a selfish and worldly spirit was prevalent! After referring at great length to the worldliness which pervaded even the Christian public, and the comparatively little exertion made to ameliorate the moral evils of our large cities, the venerable Archdeacon observed that the very district in which they were assembled exhibited a degree of ignorance almost past belief. In the parish of St. Margaret and St. John, not including the district of Knightsbridge, there were 37,000 inhabitants, including 15,000 children under twelve years of age; and of these more than 13,000 were not to be found in any school, while the number of persons attending churches of any description was not more than one-sixth of the population. Were a like examination made into the condition of all our cities, results would be brought out which ought to lead them to wonder that the judgments had been so long withheld, and that, in the language of the text, he had not long ago stirred up all his wrath against them." It must have been owing to the compassion of the Most High alone, that the death which had fallen on certain parts of the kingdom had taken a more terrible and more disastrous range, and perhaps he might be permitted to speak of some apparent advantages arising from this visitation. It had long been ground of lamentation that the assisted emigration plan stood unhappy division; but it would be regarded as a most valuable improvement in the social system, should the existing distress tend to promote a more cordial disposition more worthy of the Christian name, a disposition to relieve suffering fellow-men, without making questions about either creed or party. This spirit had been to a great degree manifested, and a like spirit had also been exhibited by many living beyond the limits of the British empire, who had testified their cordial sympathy by liberal contributions, the natural tendency of which was to foster and encourage a spirit of kindness among the people of different countries. Among other advantages that might arise from this visitation, was it too much to hope that the conviction of those who had been most affected by it would, as the result of the inquiry now instituted, be materially improved? This interposition of Divine Providence was, perhaps, necessary for that purpose; and though, perhaps, it might be that topics that scarcely fell within the province of a Christian minister, still it might be permitted to him to trace even in this dispensation the wisdom and lovingkindness of the Lord. And the attendance, was the main object of these national afflictions but the nation's good? They were to look upon them as a punishment for sin, but that punishment was to lead them to repentance and newness of life. In conclusion, the preacher observed that the only sure basis for the restoration of not a partial renouncing of sin, a mere outward reformation, but a renewal of the mind, a giving of the whole heart to God, and a life of holy obedience to the Divine will, as revealed in the Word of the Son.

The service concluded about one o'clock, when the Speaker, attended by some Members of the House of Commons, returned to the House, from which they retired a few minutes afterwards.

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.

There was full service in the Cathedral, and a large congregation completely filled the choir. There was, however, but a thin attendance of the members of the Cathedral establishment, owing, probably, to their engagements elsewhere in the performance of morning service in their several parishes. The Bishop of Llandaff, who is Dean of St. Paul's, was in his place, and there were, also, two of the minor canons, Mr. Bennett and Mr. Hall. The choristers' seats were filled with young boys. The service being over, "said," and no gap, Mr. Hall and Mr. Bennett read the prayers, the Bishop assisting at the Communion Table; and, after the Nicene Creed, Mr. Bennett proceeded to the pulpit, and preached from Hosea viii, 37-39—"If there be in the land famine, if there be pestilence, blasting, mildew, locust, or if there be caterpillar; if their enemy besiege them in the land of their cities, whatsoever plague, whatsoever sickness there be, what prayer or supplication soever be made by any man, or by all Thy people Israel, which shall know every man the plague of his own heart, and spread forth his hands towards this house; then hear Thou in heaven Thy dwelling-place, and forgive," &c. The service being over, the Bishop and Mr. Hall, who had occupied seats near the pulpit, returned to the Communion Table; Mr. Bennett remaining in the pulpit; and the service was concluded with the prayers appointed to be read in the Communion Table.

In the afternoon, there was a much fuller attendance of the clergy. The Bishop of London, who had been preaching in the morning at the Chapel Royal, preached his discourse in the accustomed place. The Bishop of Llandaff was again present; as the Bishop of Oxford sat next to Archdeacon Hale, the Canon Residentiary. The Lord Mayor was in the seat set apart for the Chief Magistrate of London; and the choir was crowded to excess.

THE CHAPEL ROYAL, WHITEHALL.—Some portions of the service at this chapel were chanted. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Waddy. The attendance was very considerable. Amongst those present were Lady Peel and family, Lord James Stuart, Sir W. Middleton, Sir Walter and Lady James, Lord and Lady J. Hay, &c.

HANOVER-SQUARE.—The congregation was numerous. The pulpit and reading desk, as is usual during Lent, were hung with black cloth. The prayers were read by the Rev. Messrs. Peat and French, after which a sermon was preached by the Rev. H. Howarth, the text of his discourse being taken from the second book of Chronicles, part of the second verse—"The Lord is with you while ye be with Him; and if ye seek Him He will be found of you; but if ye forsake Him He will forsake you."

ST. TEMPLE CHURCH.—Divine service commenced at this church yesterday morning at eleven o'clock. Prayers were read by the Rev. Mr. Rowlatt. The communion service was performed by the Rev. Dr. Hook (Master of the Temple) (Dr. Robinson), assisted by the Rev. Mr. Howlatt. The sermon was preached by the Rev. the Master from the text, Romans, chapter 2, verse 4, "Despisest thou the riches of His goodness, forbearance, and long suffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance?" The rev. gentleman concluded with a prayer to God to heal our divisions, that so the church and nation of England, represented in the prayers of the faithful, might afford to the world a glory and a praise upon the earth, one fold under one shepherd, and that God might dwell among us, and be our shepherd, and we be his people for ever.

ST. PETER'S, EATON-SQUARE.—The text of the morning sermon was the 14th verse of the 2nd chapter of Joel, "Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat offering and a drink offering unto the Lord your God?" This church was crowded to excess, and hundreds of persons who were desirous of being present were unable to obtain admittance

ST. JAMES'S, WESTMINSTER.—The Rev Mr. Brookfield preached, from the text Luke chapter 13th, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th verses.

ST. GEORGE'S, BLOOMSBURY.—The attendance at this church yesterday was very numerous during the morning service, far more persons were present than could be conveniently accommodated with seats. The sermon was preached by the Hon and Rev. H. Villiers, M.A., rector of the parish, who took for his text the following words of God unto Jonah, as recorded in the 3rd chapter of Jeremiah:—"Only acknowledge thine iniquity." At the close of service, a collection was made at the doors of the church, and the sum so collected is intended to be appropriated to the relief of the distress existing in Ireland.

ST. MARTIN'S-IN-THE-FIELDS.—Fully four-fifths of the usual Sunday congregation were present at the morning service, the remainder of the vast assemblage having been unable to obtain admittance, numbers of whom were excluded from the church in consequence of being unable to obtain seats. The Rev. Sir Henry Dukenfield officiated, and the Bishop of Chester preached, from the following text:—"So the Lord repented of the evil which He said He would do unto them, and He did it not." The rev. gentleman concluded with the following prayer:—"Lord, we have sinned, and have done perversely, and have committed wickedness, and rebelled, even by departing from Thy precepts and from Thy judgments, which Thou hast commanded us to keep. Righteousness belongeth unto Thee, but unto us confusion of face, as it is this day. Unto the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against Him. Neither have we obeyed the voice of the Lord our God, to walk in His laws, which He set before us. Yea, all Israel have transgressed Thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey Thy voice; therefore the curse is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against Him. And He hath confirmed His words which He spake against us, and against our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil; for under the whole heaven hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem. As it is written in the law of Moses, all this evil is come upon us; yet made we not our prayer before the Lord our God, that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand Thy truth. Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us; for the Lord our God is righteous in all His works which He doeth, for we obeyed not His voice. And now, O Lord our God, that hast brought Thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast gotten Thee renown, as at this day, we have sinned, we have done wickedly. O Lord, according to all Thy righteousness, I beseech Thee, let Thine anger and Thy fierce wrath be turned away from Thy city Jerusalem, Thy holy mountain; because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and Thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us. Now, therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of Thy servant, and his supplications, and cause Thy face to shine upon Thy sanctuary that is desolate, for the Lord's sake. O my God, incline Thine ear and hear; open Thine eyes and behold our desolations, and the city which is called by Thy name; for we do not present our supplications before Thee for our righteousness, but for Thy great mercies. O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; defer not, for Thine own sake, O my God; for Thy city and Thy people are called by Thy name." The rev. gentleman then proceeded with a prayer to God to heal our divisions, that so the church and nation of England, represented in the prayers of the faithful, might afford to the world a glory and a praise upon the earth, one fold under one shepherd, and that God might dwell among us, and be our shepherd, and we be his people for ever.

ST. PETER'S, PIMLICO.—The Rev. Mr. Peat preached a sermon from the 14th verse of the 2nd chapter of Joel, "Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat offering and a drink offering unto the Lord your God?" His church was crowded to excess, and hundreds of persons who were desirous of being present were unable to obtain admittance

ST. JAMES'S, WESTMINSTER.—The Rev Mr. Brookfield preached, from the text Luke chapter 13th, 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 5th verses.

ST. MARTIN'S-IN-THE-FIELDS.—Fully four-fifths of the usual Sunday congregation were present at the morning service, the remainder of the vast assemblage having been unable to obtain admittance, numbers of whom were excluded from the church in consequence of being unable to obtain seats. The Rev. Sir Henry Dukenfield officiated, and the Bishop of Chester preached, from the following text:—"So the Lord repented of the evil which He said He would do unto them, and He did it not." In the afternoon, there died of the people, from Dan even to Beersheba, 70,000 men. And when the angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it, the Lord repented of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed the people, —It is enough: stay now there thine hand." The foregoing passage was taken from the 24th chapter of the second book of Samuel, 13th and 16th verses.

ST. MARYLEBONE CHURCH.—The parish church of St. Marylebone was very fully attended; and the poorer classes formed a large proportion of the congregation. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Dr. Spry, the rector, from the 3rd chapter of Jonah, verse 10, "And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them, and he did it not." At the close of the service, a collection was made in support of the national schools of the parish, which the Rector described as being embarrassed by a very heavy debt.

ALL SOULS.—The Very Rev. the Dean of Chichester preached from the 12th chapter of St. Matthew, and the 41st verse:—"The men of Nineveh shall rise in judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it, because they repented at the preaching of Jonas; and behold a greater than Jonas is here."

ST. LUKE'S.—The Rev. Mr. Musgrave, the incumbent, preached to a crowded congregation, from the 3d, 4th, 5th, and 6th verses of the 9th chapter of the Book of Daniel

ST. PETER'S, PIMLICO.—The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Fuller, the text being taken from the second lesson for the day, Matthew, the 6th chapter, verse 16th, "When ye fast be not as the hypocrites."

ST. ANDREW'S, HOLBORN.—The sermon was preached by the Rev. J. T. Robinson, the rector of the parish, who took for his text the words contained in the 3d and 4th verses of the 20th chapter of the second book of Chronicles

"And Jehoshaphat feared, and set himself to seek the Lord, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah. And Judah gathered themselves together to ask help of the Lord: even out of all the cities of Judah they came to seek the Lord.

ST. STEPHEN'S, WALBROOK.—The Rev. Dr. Croly, the Rector, preached from the General Epistle of James, chapter 4th, verse 9th:—"Bliss was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain; and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heaven gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit."

ST. PHILIP, REGENT-STREET.—The Rev. Edward Repton, Incumbent of St. Philip, Regent-street, preached to a large congregation from the 13th chapter of St. Mark, the 8th verse:—"For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; and there shall be earthquakes in divers places, and there shall be famines and troubles; these are the beginnings of sorrows

HANOVER CHAPEL, REGENT-STREET, was unusually well attended. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Bright, on the following text, taken from the 18th chapter of Jeremiah, 7th and 8th verses:—"At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down and to destroy it; if that nation against whom I pronounced turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them."

ST. MARY-LE-STRAND.—The Rev. J. F. Denham, the rector, preached to a crowded congregation from the 13th chapter of Isaiah, the 5th, 6th, and 7th verses: "Is it such a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? Wilt thou call this a fast and an acceptable day to the Lord? Is not this the fast that I have chosen, to loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke? Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? When thou seest the naked that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?" In the evening the text selected by the same rev. gentleman was Ecclesiastes, 7th chapter, from the 1st to the 7th verses: "It is better to go to the house of mourning." &c

ST. MARY'S, BRYANSTON-SQUARE WEST.—The Rev. Edward Auriol, the Rector, preached from the 8th and 6th verses of the 9th chapter of Ezra: "And at the evening sacrifice I arose up from my heaviness, and, having rent my garment and my mantle, I fell upon my knees, and spread out my hands unto the Lord God, and said, O, my God, I am ashamed and blush to lift up my face to thee, my God; for our iniquities are increased over our head, and our trespasses grown up unto the heavens."

ST. CLEMENT DANES.—The Rev. George Taylor, curate, preached on 1st book of Chronicles, the 16th chapter, and part of the 14th verse: "He is the Lord our God, his judgments are in all the earth." The church was unusually well filled.

ST. SAVIOUR'S, SOUTHWARK.—The sermon of the morning was here preached by the Rev. S. Benson, who selected as his text the 1st chapter of Joel, 8th and 9th verses:—"Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth." "The meat offering and the drink offering is cut off from the house of the Lord." "The priests, the Lord's ministers, mourn." A sermon was preached in the evening by the Rev. Mr. Girdlestone, at the termination of each service a collection on behalf of the starving Irish was made.

ST. GEORGE'S, SOUTHWARK.—The Rev. Mr. O'Neill preached an eloquent sermon to a very full congregation. The text was taken from chapter 39, verse 8 "Will the unicorn be willing to serve thee, or abide by thy crib."

ST. MARY'S, BERMONDSEY.—The sermon preached by the Rev. Mr. Gibson was chosen from the 8th chapter of Joel, "Hear the Lord's voice, crush unto the city, and the man of wisdom shall see thy name; hear ye the rod, and who hath appointed it."

ST. JOHN'S, LAMBETH.—The Rev. J. Peat preached a sermon taken from the 1st chapter of Joel, 16th and 18th verses—"Alas for the day! for the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come." "Is not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, joy and gladness from the house of our God?"

ST. JOHN'S, LAMBETH.—The sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Meara, one of the curates, on the 1st chapter of Joel, 13th verse—"And God said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after his kind." A collection was made after the service for the relief of the sufferers in Ireland.

ST. MARK'S, PIMLICO.—(Morning, Rev. W. Harrison, A.M.)—Jeremiah iii. 12, 13, "Return, thou backsliding Israel, saith the Lord, and I will not cause mine anger to fall upon you; for I am merciful, saith the Lord, and I will not keep anger for ever." "Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that though hast transgressed against the Lord thy God." Afternoon. (Rev. G. F. Mortimer, D.D.) Daniel iv. 27, "Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by showing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquility." Evening.—(Rev. J P. Power, M.A.)—Joel ii. 12, 13, "Therefore also now, saith the Lord, turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning; and rend your heart and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil." The collection at the morning service was £240.

THE SCOTCH CHURCH, CROWN COURT A special form of prayer was here offered up agreeably to the Order in Council for the Kirk of Scotland, and a most eloquent sermon was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Cumming. The members of this congregation, who have already so nobly subscribed towards the relief of their distressed fellow countrymen in Scotland, on Wednesday entered into a voluntary subscription for the benefit of those in Ireland.

GERMAN JEWS' SYNAGOGUES.—All the synagogues were opened for a special service. The principal synagogue in Duke's-place, Aldgate, was densely crowded before the time appointed, and the body of the synagogue as well as one of the ladies' galleries being also very full. Among the gentlemen present were Baron Lionel de Rothschild, Sir Moses Montefiore, Mr. David Salomons, Mr. L. Alexander, a magistrate of the City of London, Mr. A. Goldsmid, and the three Ecclesiastical Council of the German Jews of Great Britain. After the usual afternoon service, the 13th and 23rd Psalms were chanted, when the Rev. Dr. Herschell, the Chief Rabbi, took from the ark, and began his sermon, taking his text from Isaiah. After the sermon, an appropriate prayer was read in a very impressive manner by the Rev. Mr. Ascher, followed by several psalms, which closed the service.

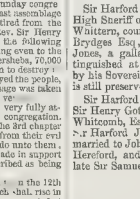
SPANISH AND PORTUGUESE SYNAGOGUE This place of worship was opened at three o'clock, for a form of prayer, and was fully attended. The Rev. Mr. Pena officiated, and read the service in Hebrew in a very impressive tone, more especially a prayer written for the occasion by the Rev. D. Meldola, the presiding rabbi of that congregation. The Rev. Mr. de Sola then preached a sermon, taking for his text the 4th verse of the 4th chapter of Isaiah—"For when Thy judgments are on the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."

Sermons suitable to the occasion, were delivered at the various Dissenting Chapels on the Surrey side of the water, that at Surrey Chapel by the Rev. J. Sherman; at the Baptist Chapel, Waterloo-road, by the Rev. J. Branch, &c

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE RIGHT HON. SIR HARFORD JONES BRYDGES, BART.

THIS venerable gentleman died on the 19th inst., aged 83. At one period of his life he was British Envoy at Bagdad, and for his services there, received from Fateh Ali Shah, King of Persia, a grant of the Royal Arms of that Kingdom, which were confirmed to him in England by Royal Warrant, in 1810. In 1807 he obtained a patent of Baronetcy; in 1822 was sworn of the Privy Council; and in 1826 assumed, in compliance with the will of Miss Mary Brydges, from whom he derived a very considerable fortune, the additional name of Brydges.



Sir Harford was only son of the late Harford Jones, Esq., of Presteign, High Sheriff of Radnorshire in 1778, grandson of Harford Jones, Esq., of Whittern, county Hereford, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of William Brydges Esq., of Old Colwall, and great grandson of Colonel James Jones, a gallant soldier in Marlborough's wars, so preeminently distinguished at Blenheim, from which arms that he was presented by his Sovereign with a sword inscribed "the gift of Queen Anne," which is still preserved by the family.

Sir Harford married, 16th February, 1796, Sarah, eldest daughter of Sir Henry Gott, Knight, of Newland Park, Berks, and widow of Robert Holcomb, Esq., of Whitern, by whom she has left one son, the present Sir Harford Jones Brydges, Bart., and two daughters—Sarah Laura, married to John Lucy Scudamore, Esq., of Kentchurch Court, county Hereford, and Sarah, wife of George Bentham, Esq., only son of the late Sir Samuel Bentham.

SIR ALEXANDER WOOD, KNIG.

EARLY in life Sir Alexander Wood went to Ceylon, on the Civil establishment, and became Member of Council, and sole Commissioner of Revenue there. In 1811, he returned to England, and was subsequently appointed Chief Secretary to the Governments of Malta and the Ionian Isles. Of the latter, he was, at the period of his decease, Resident Agent in this country.

Sir Alexander was son of the late Alexander Wood, Esq., of Edinburgh, a member of the medical profession. In 1807, he married Miss Forbes, eldest daughter of Sir William Forbes, Bart., of Pitsligo.

LIEUT.-GEN. THOMAS MARRIOTT

THIS gallant officer, whose death occurred on the 16th inst., at his seat, Avonbank, near Pershore, County Worcester, was Lord of the Lordship of Seagraves, County Leicester, and a Magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the Counties of Worcester and Gloucester. His father, the late Randolph Marriott, entered the Civil Service of the East India Company, and, with many other civilians, distinguished himself under Lord Clive, obtaining a gold medal for the battle of Plassy. Having acquired fame and fortune, he returned to England, and married Elizabeth, second daughter of Christopher Wilson, Bishop of Bristol, by whom he had, besides the gentleman whose death we record, five other sons and eight daughters.

General Marriott, at the period of his demise, had completed his seventy-third year. He was married to Anne, daughter of Sir John Beckett, Bart., and by her leaves four sons and two daughters.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"C. P. M."—The positions are not adapted for publication.

"B"—Many thanks: the diagrams are now available, and we shall gladly avail ourselves of your contributions. The Problem last sent is hardly up to the mark of our diagram positions, but we have given it among the Enigmas.

"A. L." Holkham—The last is too simple, but in the former which we expect to find three or four of sufficient interest for our columns; and if so, they shall appear very shortly.

"Scacchi."—Lewis's last Treatise was published by Bailey, of Cornhill. The forthcoming "Chess-Player's Hand-book" will be published by Mr. H. G. Bohn, of York-street, Covent Garden. The price is 5s.cd. or 6s. We should strongly recommend both to yourself and friend, the study of Calvi's excellent work translated by Lewis—and next in course of pub ication would be Walker's "Chess-Player's Chronicle" Alteration to these, and a moderate share of good practice, will soon enable you to feel your way.

"A Dublin Subscriber."—The publisher, we are sure, would much rather receive a single Post Office Order for the whole year's subscription than four quarterly payments. Enquiry shall be made as to the cause of the delay. We believe you are mistaken as to any such communication having been made to the Editor of the Foreign Journal in question; indeed, it is quite out of the question that it could have been, as every exertion has been made, privately as well as publicly, to screw the party's courage to the sticking-place, without effect

"Yankee Doodle."—You have been misinformed in both particulars. Maraché's "Palladium" ceased after the third Number, and Stanley's Magazine has been obtainable in London for the last fortnight at least. Apply yourself as Wiley and Putnam's.

"F. A. R." Yes, in about twenty moves.

"J. A. J.," Hull—When the conditions of a Problem are that mate is to be given in five moves, the shortest play longer giving mate is to have that number of moves for effecting it so—not that he is to move thrice, and his opponent twice. Your solution is wrong: you fail to perceive that Black could take the Pawn in passing, when you advance it two steps.

"Ino-Teo." You may Castle your King after he has been in check, provided he has not been moved.

"Separate." The solution of Enigma 126 is—1. Q to K B 8th (ch); 2. K to B 4th, then mate with the Kt next move.

"Pio." In Enigma No 133, a White Bishop at K 5th was omitted in the solution, which will find the solution readily.

"Clifton.—No. 1, in four moves, is neat enough, although extremely [illegible] is incorrectly described, there being two Pawns on one square, which is not admissible, we believe, in any Chess-playing country of Europe. Your solutions are right.

"J. N."—The last in three moves is the best, and shall hereafter form one of our Enigmas.

"W. G. T." The whole of the Games in the Matches between La Bourdonnais and M'Donnell, Cochrane and Staunton, and in the Great Match between England and France, are to be found in the back Volumes of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." Apply to Bussaqua, of Surrey-street.

"T." The Problem you have favoured us with shall be reported on next week. Apply to Sherwin, the Chess-board Maker, for the "Rules of Double Chess."

"J. K.," Ipswich. Neither challenge has yet been accepted. The "Hand-book" will be published in a few weeks.

"W. H. C." Your Problem has arrived at this moment under consideration.

"Wanderer." Lool. again at No. 164.

"——by "Sovracuta," "K. B.," "Q. C. O.," "Pio," "J. P.," "R. T. M.," "——by "W. P.," "Philip," "Mungo," "Sub.," "D. D.," "M. P.," "I. H.," "H. W. E.," "J. K.," "Foster," and "W. H. C.," are correct. [illegible] by "N. V. F.," and "John M——n," are wrong

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM, NO. 165.

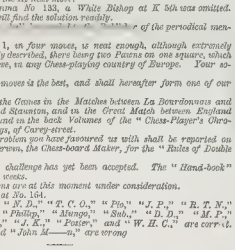
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. R to Q Kt 8th (ch)	K to Q B 3rd (best)	4. R takes R (ch)	R takes R
2. Kt takes K P (ch)	K to Q B 4th	5. Kt to Q B 6th—mate
3. R to Kt 7th (ch)	K to B sq

PROBLEM, NO. 166.

BY MR. E. CLARE.

White playing first can mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE

CHESS AT BRIGHTON.

The President of the Brighton Chess Club has politely forwarded to us some entertaining games just played in a match between Captain Kennedy and Mr. Well, a German amateur of some celebrity, now resident in England. The terms of the contest are that the winner of the first eleven games shall be declared the victor, and that Captain K. shall be the large odds of 9 to 2 upon the result of every game. The score up to this time stands as follows:—

Captain Kennedy .. . 6 Mr. Well .. .. 2 Drawn 1

The subjoined is one of the Games already played, and the best of the remainder shall be given hereafter:—

GAME BETWEEN CAPTAIN K. AND MR. G. W.

WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. W.)	WHITE (Capt. K.)	BLACK (Mr. W.)
1. Q P two	Q B P two	12. P takes P	Q Kt takes P (a)
2. K P one	K P one	13. Q R P one	Q Kt takes K B
3. Q B P two	Q Kt to B 3rd	14. Q takes Kt	K B checks
4. Q Kt to B 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	15. K to R sq	K B to Q R 2nd
5. K B to Q B 4th	K P one	16. Q to Q 3rd	Q to Q Kt 3rd
6. Q P two	K B to K 2nd	17. B to Q R 3rd	Kt to K Kt 4th (b)
7. K Kt to K 2nd	Q to Q Kt 3rd	18. Q B P one	Q takes Q Kt P (c)
8. K B to Q B 2nd	Castles	19. K R P one	Kt to K B 3rd
9. Castles	Q to Q B 2nd	20. K R to Q Kt sq	Q takes K R
10. K Kt to Kt 3rd	K B to Q 3rd	21. R takes Q
11. K B P two	Q B P takes P	And Black ultimately lost the game.

(a) Black can lose no more time to gain a Pawn; for it is obvious that White cannot capture the Kt without losing his Queen.

(b) Having in prospective the playing Q to K Kt 8th, and the check mate at 3 7th with his Kt, in the fashion of the muscadel." Publisher's Lecture.

(c) This move purposely left as a bait, the [illegible] ance of which entails the loss of his Queen.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

(ADAPTED EXPRESSLY FOR LADIES.)

No. 134.—By Mr. A. H[illegible]LL, of Leicester.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at h 8 sq	K at his B 4th	Pa at K Kt 3rd, K	P at K Kt 3rd
R at Q R 6th	Q at K Kt 4th	B 3rd, K 2nd,
B at Q Kt 2nd	Kts at K B 3rd, and	and Q B 5th
Kts at Q B 2nd, and	K 3rd	White to play, and mate in four moves.
Q Kt 6th	B at Q B 8th

No. 135.—By Mr. A——r.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R 3rd	K at Q R 4th	R at Q 6th	Q Kt 2nd
R at Q 3rd	Kts at Q Kt sq, and	White to play, and mate in three moves.
	Q B 3rd

No. 136.—By S. B——, of Hull Chess Club.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his Kt sq	K at Q 4th	Kts at K B 5th,	Kt at Q sq
R at Q B 4th	R at Q Kt 3rd	and Q R 3rd	Ps at K 5th, Q Kt
B at K R 6th	B at K 3rd	Ps at K 7th, and	6th, and Q R 2nd
		Q B 3rd

White playing first, will mate in four moves.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

During the past week "La Sonnambula" has been given each night of performance, with Garcia and Castellan, and the appearance of those two artists in this opera will form an era in its history. We do not allude especially to the music, for, though exquisitely sung by both, we have heard it exquisitely sung before; but, taking all points into consideration, never did two operas present so perfect an ensemble as now. Admirably, indeed, are both these artists suited to perform together; and, though both have displayed in other operas dramatic genius of a different and a higher order, yet especially well are they adapted to the rendering of the pastoral opera. They do not, like many a would-be Amyntas or Sylvia, ape rustic simplicity in their dress, while they preserve conventional affectation in their manners, nor do they give the idea of town denizens, ignorantly embodying their crude ideas of country boorishness. Their acting presents a delightful picture of the naïveté, innocence, and ingenuousness of rustic life, while they lose not for a moment that peculiar refinement and elegance, which are among the distinguishing characteristics of both these artists. They keep the due medium between affectation and puerility, which has been unsuccessfully aimed at by so many a votary of the pastoral muse, and this not by any effort, but by following the dictates of their own natural taste and feeling. Elvino and Amina in their hands are real existing personages, and their simple griefs interest and engage the feelings of the spectator to the uttermost, without their passing for a moment beyond the limits of truth and nature. This is true acting; and in this respect the performance of the "Sonnambula" was never surpassed, if, indeed, it has ever been equalled. Everything here maintains the illusion, for both these artists are not only eminently prepossessing in personal appearance, but both are gifted with that youthfulness of look and manner which adapt them for the performance of these parts.

Castellan's impersonation of Amina is well known; the part is one of the best of her repertoire, and time after time, her naïve coquetry at the commencement, her subsequent heartfelt anguish, and the burst of delight which breaks forth in the "Ah! non giunge," keep the sympathies of the spectator continually aroused, while her delicious voice, now swelling in a profusion of light and graceful fioriture, now giving forth a flowing cantabile strain, completes the charm of her singing. Garcia's performance of Elvino is now in no way much than one sense of the word, as in most parts of the Opera his rendering of the character differs essentially from that of his predecessors This artist has, in "La Sonnambula," achieved a success greater even than in "Le Puritani." His here displays to the highest advantage the powers of his voice, and the resources of his talent; his exquisite feeling for music stands him in good stead, in such morceaux as the "Il pit triste dei mortali!" while in the second part, "Ah! perchè non posso odiarti," his voice bursts forth with a vigour, clearness, and brilliancy, which gives the finest effect to this celebrated aria. The splendid finale of the first act, also, he sings admirably; and he acts it, giving in this true spirit of the part—more moved throughout by sorrow than anger; his tenderness and play seem to struggle with indignation at his betrayal.

Our space will not allow us to go, in the present week, further into the particulars of this performance, which well deserves a more detailed attention; but we must reserve a small space to notice the new and charming ballet just produced at this theatre.

M. Paul Taglioni has, in this ballet, proved himself to be possessed of a talent for the art of no common order. The subject, which we briefly noticed last week, simple as it is, yet affords good ground to work upon, and is attended with much poetic feeling. The grouping, the colouring, and the whole arrangement of postures and dances is excellent, and there is nothing superfluous; it does not hang heavily for a moment, a great and most unusual merit in a ballet. There is a far greater number of dances than in the general order of these compositions is wont to be compressed into so few scenes, and so short a time, and some of these display the composition and colouring of an artist, and the imagination of a poet.

Rosati, figuratively as well as literally, here takes an immense leap in public opinion. Her dancing in Coralia is hardly to be compared with her performance in the new ballet. Its elegance, the finish, and extraordinary purity of her steps, the ease and abandon of her movements, go not to that pantomimic genius which we have before dilated upon, win for her rightly the most enthusiastic, and certainly deserved, applause. Maria Taglioni, younger, and not always so lauded in her style, displays nevertheless a true genius for choreographic art. The extraordinary ease and power, the perfect grace of this young girl, and the enthusiasm with which she dances and, we had almost said the poetic feeling which seems to dictate her movements, while they recall forcibly her celebrated relation and namesake yet have all the freshness of originality, and we ask ourselves how is it possible that so young can have attained to such a perfection of method, and intellectual a style of dancing, and can only echo the generally expressed opinion that she is destined to rise to the most exalted position in her art.

FRENCH PLAYS.

"Le Mariage au Tambour," as a piece, is a model of its kind. The interest is progressive throughout; not an incident is introduced in an episodical manner, but every little scene goes on developing the plot, and is never wearying in its length The actors won golden opinions from the audience; and the drama, with its charming alternations of pathetic and ludicrous scenes, may rank amongst the best—if not the very best—productions of the season.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. T. Morton has adapted the new comedietta at this house—"The Light Troop of St. James's"—from the French piece "L'Escadron Volant de la Reine," as we surmised last week. It is entirely successful. A great deal of tact is shown in adapting the incidents; but, at the same time, it lacks the finish of elevation; hence one of those incidents of court police and intrigue, which are more upon smart epigrammatic dialogue and equivoque than rapidity of action. In fact, it is completely a French piece, and owes its success to the lively acting with which it abounds, as I especially to Mr. Buckstone, as Master Thomas Smallbone. The plot, although slight, is too confused in its incidents (which are not, by the way, always very clear) for explanation; but the "Light Troop of St James's" is composed of the maids of honour to Queen Anne; and the interests of the Duchess of Marlborough form the field on which they are brought into action, under the generalship of their superintendent, Lady Alexande (Mrs. W. Clifford). A mistake—a resignation, and a meeting of wrong parties in the dark, leads the denouement: and when we state that these parties, who are thus in error, are Mr. Buckstone and Mrs. W. Clifford, an extremely laughable scene immediately presents itself. Another of the principal characters, Jane Roberts, the daughter of a Kensington apothecary, was played with great spirit by Miss Reynolds—a young lady upon whose first appearance we predicted success, and who has become a great favourite with the Haymarket audience. She sang a new song, composed by Mr. Reid, so well, as to elicit a loud encore. At the conclusion, the applause was general; and the audience allowed Mr. Buckstone to announce the piece for representation every evening, with a shade of descent.

Mr. Mitchell has completed his Easter piece. It will not, this time, be a fairy tale, but, we believe, a classical subject, and of the nature of that style of piece which has been so popular for a long time at the French theatres, called a revue of the year, in which every species of parody is introduced that the ingenuity of his un-Aristophanic notions, may think fair game for a sly shaft of joke or allusion We shall be enabled, next week, to give, in anticipation, an account of all the Easter novelties.

ADELPHI.

The revival here of Mr Mayhew's "Wandering Minstrel," which sixteen years ago had a long and most successful run at the Queen's Theatre, claims us rather as a refresher of fading associations, and as suggestive of comparison with a last favourite, than for any great positive merit discernible in its present treatment. The abolition (continued in the title) of a gentleman who, as candidate for our city and liberties, has recently enjoyed the attention of our contemporaries and brother electors, is confined to the introduction of a battered Westminster Schoolman (pleasant extravagance) mounted in dressing-gown and slippers, whose sole business seems to be a solitary addition to the smart fire of political jokes and innuendos which constituted a material element of the pristine popularity of the farce. And to such as the Author has thought proper to remember the new and changing topics of the day, these allusions are immediately apprehended, and rapturously applauded, in the fever-time of the Reform Bill—who have seen and felt how they operated, and admired the common heart of English gallery-ry to such it is curious to mark the mixed apathy and innocence which, in these days of slumbering partisanship, have spoiled them for an Adelphi audience.

Mr. Wright is very funny in the various parts he has undertaken; but, rather as a mixture of gratuitous and often ineffective absurdity, with which he perversely overlays, in nine cases out of ten, the genuine comedy of which he is so obviously capable. The performances of this grave quality in the performances under notice, suggests, we can assure him, a contrast considerably in favour of the original representative of the part—the long-departed, but nowise-forgotten Mitchell. The trifling character of Peggy, a maid-servant, by Mrs. Frank Matthews, is the only other point presented in the present cast. It is filled in with its comic care and cordial vivacity with which this lady always contrives to populate the slightest sketches assigned to her. Her unpassioned recollections of Cremorne House are worthy of Mrs. Keeley. The other characters are mere nonentities, presenting no notable feature. The business at the Adelphi is, at present, very good.

STRAND.

This little theatre has served as a sort of life-raft, on which the survivors of the wreck of the Olympic have floated forth, once more, upon the somewhat uncertain sea or public favour. The house opened on Monday evening with a variety of entertainments—tragedy, farce, burlesque, and ballet; and at the reduced prices of a shilling, sixpence, and sixpence, to boxes, pit, and gallery. The performance commenced with "Bertram," in which Mr. J. G. Shore, whose name leave often spoken, appeared as the hero, Mrs. R. Gordon playing Imogene. It was not a very lively affair; but the tedium was somewhat relieved by an unrehearsed stage-effect at the end of the fourth act, when Sir Aldebrand (Mr. Montague) died in the way of the act drop roller, and was rescued by Bertram, amidst the applause of the spectators. To the tragedy succeeded some imitations of popular performers by a Mr. Ramsey: his Buckstone, O. Smith, Vandenhoff, Hasley, and T. F. Cooke, were very good; but the rest were, comparatively, failures. Attention was next called to a placard, stating that the Lord Chamberlain had interdicted the performance of "Jon Travesile," which was announced as one of the entertainments of the evening; but that the Manager would replace it, by as much novelty as was compatible with the time allowed. A divertissement to lowed; and this was good [illegible] Miss Wright danced the "Cracoviennè" so very well that she was encored; and Miss Clari Harcourt—a very graceful and pretty young lady—performed a medley dance with equal good effect. Miss Mussell was also londly applauded. Indeed the ballet part of the entertainment, was the only portion that called for particular notice The house was tolerably filled, and the audience appeared to relish the dancing amazingly. We fear, however, that this is another of those hopeless speculations which only terminate in lowering the position of all engaged in them.

ASTLEY'S.—The Easter novelty here will be "Lord Byron's Bride of Abydos; or, the Corsair and the Avenger's Steed," introducing Mr. Batty's camels, and the whole of his stud of horses

Mr Macready, who [illegible] to perform this week at Manchester, is suffering from indisposition so severe that its appearance is postponed.

The Misses Cushman have been playing at the Theatre Royal, Liverpool, this week, having succeeded Mrs. Butler, of whose performances the Liverpool Chronicle speaks in the highest praise.

MUSIC.

THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

A decided advance has been made in the decorations; the white and gold frontage of the boxes is completed. The roof is now fully seen, the great scaffolding having been removed; and only the proscenium has to be completed, Signor Verardi being now engaged in its painting, which will be in harmony with the magnificent ceiling. The internal fittings of the boxes will be of rich crimson paper, with silk hangings to match.

Letters from Paris announce that Mdlle. Alboni, the great contralto, has arrived there, from Venice, on her way to London, to make her debût in Arsace. Lavia, the new tenor, had also reached Paris; he will be the Idreno in "Semiramide," and Polonini, the new basso, Oroe, the priest, was also on his [illegible] Next Thursday, Grisi, Persiani, Corbari, Mario, and Signor and Madame Ronconi, will be in London; and, about the same time, Salvi, the new tenor; Rovere, the buffo singer, and Marini, the basso profundo, are expected from Milan, with the new prima donna, Mdlle. Steffanoni, from the Scala. Alba, the basso, will be the last arrival. Tamburini, who will be the Assur, his great part, is already here. A grand rehearsal of the opera will take place this day week (Saturday). M. Albert is engaged in preparing the new ballet of "L'Odalisque," in which Mdlle. Fanny Bias from the Académie Royale de Paris, Mdlle. Neodori, Mdlle. Berrin, M. Mabille, and M. Gontie, will appear.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK

THE MUSICAL UNION.—The first meeting of the third season took place on Tuesday afternoon, at Willis's Rooms, in the presence of the President—H R H. the Prince Consort, Cambridge; the Earl of Falmouth, the Chairman of the Committee; Sir G. Clerk, Bart., M.P.; Gen Sir A Barnard, Hon. Capt. Cadogan, Dowager Lady Rivers, Lady Phillips, Hon. Mrs. A. Legge, Hon. Mrs. Bruce, Hon. Col. Somerset, Miss Law, Miss Hill, Lady Davy, Miss Cockburn, Mr. Rogers, Mr. Costa, M. Stevenières, &c. &c. The subscription this year is larger than ever, and there is every prospect of a brilliant season from the mass of first-class talent secured in London. The programme comprised Haydn's Quartet in G, No. 52; Hummel's Pianoforte Quintet in E Flat, Op. 92; and Spohr's Double Quartet in E Minor, No. 3, Op. 87, for four violins (Salmon, Deloffre, Goffre, and Thirlwell), two violas (Messrs. Hill and E. Blagrove), and two violoncelles (Sig. Piatti -Mr. Howell playing the second violoncello part on the contra basso). The execution was all that could be desired from the above artists; and Benedict, the pianist, played beautifully. We congratulate Mr. Ella, the Director, on this auspicious commencement: no professor has made greater exertions to diffuse a high standard of taste in classical music than Mr. Ella. The formation of the Musical Union has been the result of his energy and perseverance; and although his undertaking has originated many other interesting and valuable institutions, it must not be forgotten that it was Mr. Ella who, so far back as 1832, took the initiative in the performance of chamber music. He is an enthusiastic lover of his art, an accomplished scholar, and an artist who, in every point of view -from talent and character—is a most worthy ornament of the musical profession. The Musical Union has established beyond a doubt that our Royal, aristocratic, and fashionable amateurs are not only excellent judges of the beautiful in art, but are many of them practical musicians. His Royal Highness Prince Albert, whose musical accomplishments we have frequently referred to, is the patron of the institution. It is by the exalted support given to the Musical Union, the Beethoven Society, the Amateur Musical society, &c. we arrive at the conclusion that, however popular is the Italian Opera in this country, there is a real love of the higher order of composition amongst the elevated classes.

THE BEETHOVEN QUARTET SOCIETY.—The second meeting took place at 76, Harley-street, on Monday night, the programme consisting of Beethoven's Quartet in D major, No. 3, Op. 18, composed in 1791; No. 7, Op. 59, in F major, in 1808; and No. 15, Op. 131, in C sharp minor, in 1826-1825. The executants were M. Sainton, M. Stevenières, Mr. Hill, and M. Rousselot.

MR. W. STERNDALE BENNETT.—The third and last performance of Classical Pianoforte Music was given by this Composer on Tuesday evening. Mr. Bennett performed Mendelssohn's Fourth Book of Songs without words—the "Winderlier" being encored; Dussek's Sonata, "L'Invocation;" J. S. Bach's Fugue in E minor (posthumous), which was encored; a selection from his own pianoforte works, with Mr. G. A. Grfesbach; Beethoven's Sonata, in C minor, for piano and violin; and, with Messrs. G. Cooke, Williams, Platt, and Baumann, Mozart's Quintet in E flat, for piano, oboe, clarionet, horn, and bassoon. Misses Ransford and Salaman sang nicely Nos. 1 and 5, Op. 63 of Mendelssohn's Part Songs—the first being demanded a second time; and Mr. Marshall, a charming song, "The Past," by Mr. W. S. Bennett.

MISS DORAT FARMER.—This clever pianiste gave a Concert at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday evening, aided by Mr. Blagrove (violin), Mr. R. Blagrove (concertina), Mr. F. Chatterton (harp), and Mrs. A. Newton, Miss Rainforth, Mrs. Weiss, Miss S. Flower, Miss Cubitt, Miss M. A. Lee, Messrs. T. Williams, D. King, J. A. Novello, and Weiss, as vocalists. The rooms were crowded, and there were several encores There was a chorus and orchestra not often met with at such a concert; the conductors were Messrs. W. H. Holmes, Hutchinson, and Nolio.

MR. ROBERTS REEVES.—This accomplished harp player gave an agreeable Soirée Musicale, on Monday, at his residence, 37, Portland-street, at which the Addressed Irish. Herr Kahe, the pianist, and Signor Guglielmo were the conductors; and the vocalists, Miss S. Novello, Madame Mortier de l'ontaine, Madame Catrufo, Miss E. Lyon, Signori Marras, Gallí and Brizzi.

THE BRAHAMS.—On Monday, the veteran Braham gave a Concert, assisted by his sons, at the Beaumont Institution; and on Tuesday evening at the St. James's Theatre, Mr. Henley Records being the conductor on both occasions, and several of his excellent songs being sung. On both nights, however, the Nestor of tenors was absent, owing to indisposition. Miss Dolby, Miss Ransford, Mrs. Newton, and the Ethiopian Serenaders were included in Tuesday's programme.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The first Concert reflected very great credit on the pupils of this Institution. Miss Ransford, Miss Salmon, Miss D'Ernst, Miss Stewart, Miss Cheeseman, Miss K. Ward, Messrs. Herbert, St. Alban, Gardner, Wetherbee, and Weeks, were the vocalists. Mr. A. Summonds played Spohr's violin dramatic Concerto with great skill, and a nice tone; and Mr. J. T. Mew—certainly not a musical name—distinguished himself in Weber's Concert-Stück for the piano. Handel's Funeral Anthem to the memory of Sir W. Curtis, a worthy member of the Committee, was performed, and Weber's Jubilee Cantata, the performance of a MS. Mass by H. Webb evinced traces of considerable promise as a composer. Mr. Lucas conducted the band with great tact.

MDLLE. ROSALIE THERESE. This lady—a pianiste—gave a soirée musicale at the Hanover-square Rooms, assisted by Mr. Sainton (violin), Piatti (violoncello), Benedict, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Miss [illegible] Nelson, and Mr. John Parry.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

This morning is the real carnival of the second Philharmonic Concert, to be given on Monday next, conducted by Costa. Beethoven's Mass in C, and his Choral Symphony in D, will be performed, with selections from Mendelssohn's "Paul," and Spohr's "Last Judgment." Mr. F. Chatterton gives his Concert to-night, at Sadler's Wells Theatre; Mr. Grattan Cooke his Concert at the Casino, in Holborn; and the Ethiopean Serenaders, for the last time before Easter, at the St. James's.

We learn from Paris that Madame Stoltz, the prima donna of the Académie Royale de Musique, has thrown up her engagement, which was to have expired only in June, 1848. She gives a month to find her successor. The début of Bertini, the Italian tenor, in "Masaniello," has been moderately successful. Wilhelmine Clauss, the pianist, had given his concert in Paris, on the 7th of "Alcesse," by Euripides, adapted to the French stage by M. Hippolyte Lucas, has been produced successfully at the Odéon, with new choruses and orchestral accompaniments by M. Ewart, which were received, in less than a month, and are much prized. At Grisi's benefit, at the Italian Opera, her singing in Desdemona created quite a furore—she was supported by Lablache in Bratanno, whose munificence from private boxes, added by M. Bouvenne's orchestra (violin), Piatti (violoncello), Benedict, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Miss [illegible] Nelson, and Mr. John Parry.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

This morning is the real carnival of the second Philharmonic Concert, to be given on Monday next, conducted by Costa. Beethoven's Mass in C, and his Choral Symphony in D, will be performed, with selections from Mendelssohn's "Paul," and Spohr's "Last Judgment." Mr. F. Chatterton gives his Concert to-night, at Sadler's Wells Theatre; Mr. Grattan Cooke his Concert at the Casino, in Holborn; and the Ethiopean Serenaders, for the last time before Easter, at the St. James's.

We learn from Paris that Madame Stoltz, the prima donna of the Académie Royale de Musique, has thrown up her engagement, which was to have expired only in June, 1848. She gives a month to find her successor. The début of Bertini, the Italian tenor, in "Masaniello," has been moderately successful. Wilhelmine Clauss, the pianist, had given his concert in Paris, on the 7th of "Alcesse," by Euripides, adapted to the French stage by M. Hippolyte Lucas, has been produced successfully at the Odéon, with new choruses and orchestral accompaniments by M. Ewart, which were received, in less than a month, and are much prized. At Grisi's benefit, at the Italian Opera, her singing in Desdemona created quite a furore—she was supported by Lablache in Bratanno, whose munificence from private boxes, added by M. Bouvenne's orchestra (violin), Piatti (violoncello), Benedict, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Miss [illegible] Nelson, and Mr. John Parry.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

This morning is the real carnival of the second Philharmonic Concert, to be given on Monday next, conducted by Costa. Beethoven's Mass in C, and his Choral Symphony in D, will be performed, with selections from Mendelssohn's "Paul," and Spohr's "Last Judgment." Mr. F. Chatterton gives his Concert to-night, at Sadler's Wells Theatre; Mr. Grattan Cooke his Concert at the Casino, in Holborn; and the Ethiopean Serenaders, for the last time before Easter, at the St. James's.

We learn from Paris that Madame Stoltz, the prima donna of the Académie Royale de Musique, has thrown up her engagement, which was to have expired only in June, 1848. She gives a month to find her successor. The début of Bertini, the Italian tenor, in "Masaniello," has been moderately successful. Wilhelmine Clauss, the pianist, had given his concert in Paris, on the 7th of "Alcesse," by Euripides, adapted to the French stage by M. Hippolyte Lucas, has been produced successfully at the Odéon, with new choruses and orchestral accompaniments by M. Ewart, which were received, in less than a month, and are much prized. At Grisi's benefit, at the Italian Opera, her singing in Desdemona created quite a furore—she was supported by Lablache in Bratanno, whose munificence from private boxes, added by M. Bouvenne's orchestra (violin), Piatti (violoncello), Benedict, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Miss [illegible] Nelson, and Mr. John Parry.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

This morning is the real carnival of the second Philharmonic Concert, to be given on Monday next, conducted by Costa. Beethoven's Mass in C, and his Choral Symphony in D, will be performed, with selections from Mendelssohn's "Paul," and Spohr's "Last Judgment." Mr. F. Chatterton gives his Concert to-night, at Sadler's Wells Theatre; Mr. Grattan Cooke his Concert at the Casino, in Holborn; and the Ethiopean Serenaders, for the last time before Easter, at the St. James's.

We learn from Paris that Madame Stoltz, the prima donna of the Académie Royale de Musique, has thrown up her engagement, which was to have expired only in June, 1848. She gives a month to find her successor. The début of Bertini, the Italian tenor, in "Masaniello," has been moderately successful. Wilhelmine Clauss, the pianist, had given his concert in Paris, on the 7th of "Alcesse," by Euripides, adapted to the French stage by M. Hippolyte Lucas, has been produced successfully at the Odéon, with new choruses and orchestral accompaniments by M. Ewart, which were received, in less than a month, and are much prized. At Grisi's benefit, at the Italian Opera, her singing in Desdemona created quite a furore—she was supported by Lablache in Bratanno, whose munificence from private boxes, added by M. Bouvenne's orchestra (violin), Piatti (violoncello), Benedict, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Miss [illegible] Nelson, and Mr. John Parry.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

This morning is the real carnival of the second Philharmonic Concert, to be given on Monday next, conducted by Costa. Beethoven's Mass in C, and his Choral Symphony in D, will be performed, with selections from Mendelssohn's "Paul," and Spohr's "Last Judgment." Mr. F. Chatterton gives his Concert to-night, at Sadler's Wells Theatre; Mr. Grattan Cooke his Concert at the Casino, in Holborn; and the Ethiopean Serenaders, for the last time before Easter, at the St. James's.

We learn from Paris that Madame Stoltz, the prima donna of the Académie Royale de Musique, has thrown up her engagement, which was to have expired only in June, 1848. She gives a month to find her successor. The début of Bertini, the Italian tenor, in "Masaniello," has been moderately successful. Wilhelmine Clauss, the pianist, had given his concert in Paris, on the 7th of "Alcesse," by Euripides, adapted to the French stage by M. Hippolyte Lucas, has been produced successfully at the Odéon, with new choruses and orchestral accompaniments by M. Ewart, which were received, in less than a month, and are much prized. At Grisi's benefit, at the Italian Opera, her singing in Desdemona created quite a furore—she was supported by Lablache in Bratanno, whose munificence from private boxes, added by M. Bouvenne's orchestra (violin), Piatti (violoncello), Benedict, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Miss [illegible] Nelson, and Mr. John Parry.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

This morning is the real carnival of the second Philharmonic Concert, to be given on Monday next, conducted by Costa. Beethoven's Mass in C, and his Choral Symphony in D, will be performed, with selections from Mendelssohn's "Paul," and Spohr's "Last Judgment." Mr. F. Chatterton gives his Concert to-night, at Sadler's Wells Theatre; Mr. Grattan Cooke his Concert at the Casino, in Holborn; and the Ethiopean Serenaders, for the last time before Easter, at the St. James's.

We learn from Paris that Madame Stoltz, the prima donna of the Académie Royale de Musique, has thrown up her engagement, which was to have expired only in June, 1848. She gives a month to find her successor. The début of Bertini, the Italian tenor, in "Masaniello," has been moderately successful. Wilhelmine Clauss, the pianist, had given his concert in Paris, on the 7th of "Alcesse," by Euripides, adapted to the French stage by M. Hippolyte Lucas, has been produced successfully at the Odéon, with new choruses and orchestral accompaniments by M. Ewart, which were received, in less than a month, and are much prized. At Grisi's benefit, at the Italian Opera, her singing in Desdemona created quite a furore—she was supported by Lablache in Bratanno, whose munificence from private boxes, added by M. Bouvenne's orchestra (violin), Piatti (violoncello), Benedict, Madame and Signor F. Lablache, Miss [illegible] Nelson, and Mr. John Parry.

OPENING OF THE ROUEN AND HAVRE RAILWAY.

BRIDGE AT ROUEN.

THE ceremony of opening this important Line of Railway took place on Saturday last, and on Monday the regular trains commenced running. At the present moment, the journey from Paris to the sea, and from Havre to the capital, can be accomplished with ease and comfort in six hours and a half. When it is recollected that within little more than two years, the same journey occupied six-and-thirty hours, the consequence of the Railway undertaking may be conceived.

ST. CATHERINE'S TUNNEL.

The inauguration on Saturday was conducted, in as far as the Directors were concerned, with great simplicity. Taking into consideration the great suffering in the country, from the scarcity of food, and looking to the misery existing in the very districts through which the Railway passes, from the excessive dearness of provisions, the Directors decided that they could not inaugurate their Railway more appropriately than by applying to the relief of the poor, the amount which in more prosperous years would have been expended in festivity. They, therefore, resolved to distribute 12,000f. in the districts through which the Havre Railway passes; and that sum was accordingly placed in the hands of the proper authorities.

The guests were limited to one hundred, and consisted of the Chairman, and some of the Directors of the principal Railways round Paris, the Engineers and principal employés on the Railway, some of the principal shareholders in the Line; and the representatives of the fourth estate of Paris, who, by-the-by, outnumbered all the other guests. M. Charles Laffite, the Chairman of the Directors, M. de l'Espée, Deputy; Count d'Alton-Shee, Peer of France; M. Dailly, Director of the Peage et Chevaux at Paris; and M. Blount, banker, Directors, were all present. Among the principal guests were the Directors of the Orleans and Northern Railway, the Duke de Mouchy, the Mayors of Havre and Rouen, M. Dubois, Deputy for Havre; M. Vital, Deputy for Bolbec; M. Theophile Gautier, M. Alphonse Karr, &c.

The train, consisting of eight first-class carriages belonging to the Havre Company, started from the Rouen Railway Station, at Paris, at seven in the morning, and reached Rouen at a quarter before ten. At Rouen, an elegant breakfast was provided for the guests, after partaking of which, they started by the train for Havre. It is hardly necessary to remind our readers that the country between Rouen and Havre, through which this Line passes, is the most beautiful, as well as the richest both for agricultural products and manufactures, in all France. In the course of the journey, charming views are gained of Ivetot, Bolbec, Harfleur, and other picturesque old Norman towns, with occasional peeps of the Seine, and of the opposite coast of Normandy. In the meantime, the Railway itself is a wonderful achievement of science.

For a long time it was thought impracticable to make a Line of Railway to Havre, but the spirit and genius of our own countrymen (for almost every one connected with the work is English), overcame every difficulty, and the Havre Line stands at the present moment a monument of the skill of Mr. Locke, the Engineer-in-Chief, and of Messrs. Mackenzie and Brassey, the Contractors. There is no other Railway in Europe which, in proportion to its length (99 miles), has anything like the same number of stupendous works in the shape of tunnels, viaducts, cuttings, and embankments. There is hardly a bit of level ground in the whole distance. The consequence is, that every portion of the line shows, even to the unaffected eye, the great amount of skill, labour, and perseverance necessary for its accomplishment. The train stopped at the stupendous viaducts of Barentin, Malaunay, and Mirville; and also at some of the tunnels, in order to allow the guests to examine these extraordinary works.

At all the towns and villages on the Line, the population flocked in great numbers to celebrate an event so fraught with important consequences to them; and at the principal towns (with the single exception of Rouen), the authorities also, and the National Guards, received the train. At Havre, the enthusiasm was very great.

When the train entered the station yard, which is one of vast dimensions, the President and Directors were greeted by a brilliant display of rank, fashion, and beauty. On both sides of the rails, under the entrance shed, were ranged the National Guard, in full uniform, with their bands playing lively airs. At the end of the platform were the Sous-Prefet, the Mayors of Ingouville, and Graville, in their official costumes; and the Clergy of Havre, attired in their canonical robes. On the Deputation descending from the carriages, they were received by these various authorities, who, each in his turn, read an address, congratulating them on the happy event they had that day assembled to witness.

Meanwhile, the sound of drums and trumpets, and the shrill pipes of some hundreds of children accompanying the instrumental music, entirely drowned the voices of the speakers; yet sufficient transpired to show that they one and all combined in congratulating M. Lafitte, the President, and Mr. Locke, the Engineer, as representatives of the financial and scientific branches of the Company, for being the instruments of realising the well-known prophecy of Napoleon, that Havre, Rouen, and Paris would ere long become one great city; the latter being the faubourgs of the former, with this deviation, that the Emperor said the river Seine would be the street that would afford the connecting link; whereas, they had produced that connection by a more rapid and economical means.

ST. CATHERINE'S TUNNEL.

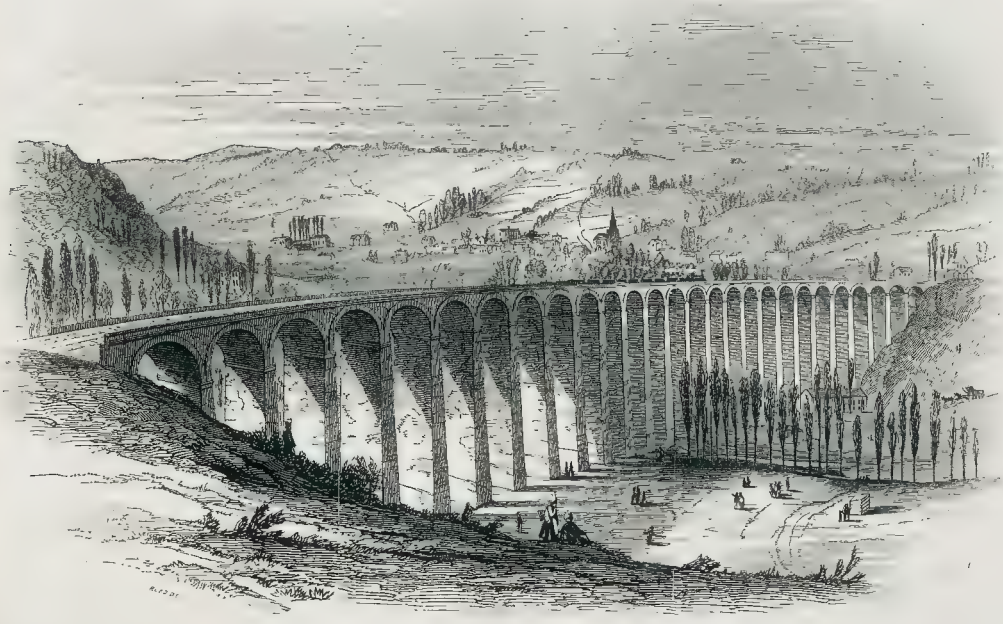
The Havre Station—comprising a passenger station, a goods station, with immense warehouse sheds, and engine sheds, carriage sheds, and coke ovens, together with accommodation ground attached to them—covers an area of thirty-six English acres.

The passenger station abuts on the Cours Napoleon, from which it is separated by an iron railing, affording a good view of the principal offices, which have a northern aspect.

THE MALAUNAY VIADUCT.

OPENING OF THE ROUEN AND HAVRE RAILWAY.



THE BARENTIN VIADUCT.

The distance from Paris to Havre, notwithstanding the numerous delays and stoppages on the way, was accomplished in six hours and a quarter.

The Directors, accompanied by their guests from Paris and Rouen and the authorities at Havre, then adjourned to a handsome dinner provided by the Company at the Hotel Frascati, where 200 gentlemen were entertained. After dinner, the Chairman (M. Lafitte) proposed the health of the King, which was drunk with all the honours. The health of the Chairman was then drunk by acclamation, and responded to by M. Lafitte. The next toast was the health of Mr. Locke, the principal engineer, which was drunk with great enthusiasm. Mr. Locke, in his reply, alluded to the extraordinary and vexatious delays in the opening of the line which had been caused by the Minister of Public Works and the Departments of the Ponts et Chaussées. He also referred to the extraordinary trials to which the works on the line had been subjected by order of the Government engineers—trials which were not only wholly unprecedented in the history of railways, but which were equally absurd and unnecessary. He pledged his professional reputation for the fact that there never was a line opened to the public in a better working state, or the works on which were safer or more solidly constructed than those of the Havre Railway; and he declared that there could not be a better proof of the solidity of these works than the fact that, though the Government engineers, (whether from envy or a more laudable feeling he did not know,) had done all in their power to crush the viaducts, by laying weights upon them which by no possible future combination of circumstances they could be called upon to bear, not a stone had moved, nor a brick cracked, throughout the whole of them. He then alluded to the extraordinary opposition which the Company had met with from the authorities of the city of Rouen—an opposition which showed much more selfishness than patriotism, and which formed a striking contrast with the slavish servility of the same persons when the question lay as to the making of a line between Rouen and Paris.

The only other toast given was that of Mr. Mackenzie, the eminent engineer, and principal contractor for the works on the Line.

The train started for Paris again at ten

THE STATION AT HARFLEUR.

BENEDICTION OF THE RAILWAY.

minutes past four, and arrived in Paris before half-past ten, having performed the journey again in six hours and a quarter.

We subjoin a few engineering notes of the principal works, which were of a singularly heavy nature.

The Line takes its junction with the Paris and Rouen Railway at about a mile above the town of Rouen. At half a mile from its junction, it crosses the river Seine, on a Bridge of eight arches, each having a span or opening of 120 feet; the piers are of stone, founded about 35 feet below the water-level; the arches are constructed in timber. After leaving the Bridge, the Line immediately enters the Tunnel of St. Catherine, through a hill about 430 feet in height. The length of this Tunnel is two-thirds of a mile. The Railway then crosses the Vallée de Darnetal; and, after passing through a short Tunnel of 100 yards, enters the Tunnel de Boudereuil, of which One-fifth part, or nearly a mile. Between this Tunnel and Oissel, viz., that of St Man (three quarters of a mile long), is situated the Rouen Station for this Line; and at a mile from this Tunnel the Railway enters another (the 9th), of about quarter of a mile in length. This completes the "Traversée de Rouen."

The Line then follows, in heavy cuttings and embankments, the hill-side along a very rich valley, until it reaches Oissel, where a heavy Embankment, containing about 800,000 cubic yards; with a [illegible] in the centre of it, 89 feet high, and having eight arches of 50 feet span. The Railway then passes through an excavating, whose greatest depth is upwards of 120 feet, into a Tunnel of nearly a mile and a half in length. After leaving this, another short Tunnel of 201 yards succeeds, and then a series of heavy Earthwork; it next crosses the Seine on a Viaduct of 1,200 feet long, which work contains 27 arches of 50 feet opening, and its height is 110 feet; the whole Viaduct is built on a curve of half a mile radius. Thence, the Railway skirts along the hill-side, through the Valley of Quatigny and Emmarkares, and a short Tunnel, near Pavilly, constantly rising until it reaches the level of the "Plateau," having attained a height of four hundred feet above the sea. It then passes by Yvetot, about 16 miles from Rouen, and, after a long but not extraordinary enormous valley at Mirville, on a Viaduct of 53 arches, of 30 feet span, and at a height of 110 feet; half of this Viaduct being in curve, and the remainder in straight line. At a few miles from this the Line descends by a rapid incline to Harfleur, and then runs along the meadows into an extensive station at Havre.

The Line throughout, especially the Viaducts and Bridges, has been severely tested by the Government inspectors, but more particularly the Malaunay Viaduct. This immense work is of brick; and the French inspectors, however, being accustomed to see large buildings constructed only with stone, had considerable doubts as to the solidity of the brickwork Viaducts of Mirville, Barentin, Malaunay, &c.; and on the latter they proposed to be placed the immense weight of 3,491 tons of earth. It remained several days, and after it was removed, waggons, heavily laden, were driven rapidly backwards and forwards across the Viaduct, which, however, remained proof against these severe tests.

In conclusion, we have to acknowledge the courtesy of Messrs Locke, Murton, Mackenzie, and other gentlemen, in the facilities they have afforded to our Artists for sketching the annexed Illustrations.

MADEMOISELLE MARS.

MADEMOISELLE MARS, who died at Paris on the 20th inst., was a daughter of the celebrated Monvel, and was born in Paris in 1778. Her mother and sister were attached to the company of the Théâtre Montansier; and, upon its boards she first appeared in 1795, then fifteen years old, playing the characters of children in opera and comedy. She always quitted the stage, on each short inactivity, recommenced her dramatic career, when the same actors having played at the Odéon, joined several of the associates of the Comédie Français, and, together, formed the company Feydeau, which soon became celebrated previously introduced to the celebrated Mollé. Contat; and, encouraged by the advice of this celebrated actress, she studied the parts better classed by the French than we can do, as the jeunes ingenuvieres.

A short time afterwards, the interests of the Théâtre Feydeau and that of the Republic being combined as the Théâtre Français, Mdlle. Mars, whose assistance was indispensable to the new company, was admitted as an associate. The Théâtre Français at that time comprised a galaxy of talent in its members that has never since been equalled. Mdlle. Mars came to perfect this admirable company, and soon took the most prominent amongst them, creating several new rôles, and giving to the old ones a point and effect which they never before appeared capable of being endowed with.

Mademoiselle Contat had filled the line of the grande coquette at the Théâtre Français hitherto, and Mdlle. Mars superseded her in 1812. It was then, perhaps, that her talents were in their greatest perfection: she was spoken of as a model, bearing Modène on one side, and Mdlle. Contat on the other; in the representation of the coquettes of the latter author she was never approached. Before this, the tone of the standard comedies had been rather serious and joyous—approaching more to the dignified than the natural; Mdlle. Mars changed this, substituting a style at once more simple and more true; and whilst the admirables tones of her voice penetrated the very souls of the audience, the art with which she turned and accented her words, at once attracted and riveted the interest in them that amounted to admiration. It is next to impossible to enumerate the characters she made her own: we may say in a few words that they form the entire répertoire of the comedies performed during her reign—for such it was at the Theatre Francais.

Her two last creations were Marie, in the piece of Madame Ancelot (which we have seen so admirably rendered by Mdlle. Person, at the Théâtre de la Renaissance), and Mademoiselle de Belisle, in the drama by Alexander Dumas. It was in this character that Mdlle. Mars made her last appearance: her grand and touching exit made in the last triumph will never be forgotten by those present on that occasion.

After her retirement from the stage, Mdlle. Mars lived in her hotel, in the Chaussée d'Antin, where, surrounded by a circle of devoted friends, she at length died.

THE RIVAL ROUTES TO INDIA.—The Courrier de Marseille of the 20th says:—"We are enabled to state that the struggle which has so long existed between the Marseilles and Trieste routes is at last terminated. The English Government has given orders that the steamer Ardent, which had been placed at the disposal of Mr. Waghorn for his Marseilles service, will return to Malta, and it arrived there on the 15th. The English Government has definitively adopted the Marseilles route."

DEATH OF DR. BLOMBERG.—The death of the Rev. Dr. Blomberg, which took place on Tuesday, causes a vacancy in the number of canons residentiary in St. Paul's, as well as in the vicarage of St. Giles's, Cripplegate. The Rev. Doctor was nearly 90 years of age.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Friday.—The present week's arrivals of English wheat having been on a moderate scale the show of samples of that article here to-day was limited. Selected parcels of fine red and white, 1d to 2s per quarter dearer, but all other kinds were very dull, and prices were with difficulty supported. In foreign wheat comparatively little was doing, but we can notice no alteration in value. All kinds of barley moved off slowly, at nearly the late depression in value. So little was doing in malt that prices were almost nominal. Oats, especially the best samples, were held firmly, at full prices. Beans, peas, and flour very dull.

ARRIVALS. English: Wheat, 3220; barley, 1,742; malt, 1720; oats, 2100. Irish: Wheat, —; barley, —; oats, 1700. Foreign: Wheat, 3100; barley, 2,000; oats, 2,000; beans, —; oats, 6000. FLOUR: 2220 sacks, —barrels

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 75s to 80s; ditto white, 78s to 85s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 72s to 78s; ditto white 73s to 79s; rye, 60s to 66s; grinding barley, 40s to 44s; distilling, 50s to 54s; malting ditto, 52s to 56s; Lincoln and Yorkshire, 52s to 57s; brown ditto, 47s to 49s; Kingston and Ware, 77s to 79s; Chevalier, 78s to 81s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire red, 52s to 54s; potato ditto, 52s to 55s; Tongland and Cork, black, 32s to 33s; ditto white, 34s to 35s; tick beans, new, 48s to 50s; ditto old, —s to —s; grey peas, 51s to 53s; maple, 52s to 54s; white, —s to —s; boilers, 54s to 56s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 60s to 63s. Suffolk, 55s to 56s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 50s to 54s, per sack. Foreign.—Wheat, 70s to 80s; barley, 42s to 52s; oats, 22s to 30s; beans, 44s to 52s; and peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, Spanish, 47s to 50s per barrel.

The Seed Markets.—Foreign clover seed—the supply of which is large—moves off slowly, at barely former prices. All kinds of turnip seed—in consequence of which have been taken on Irish account—are in good request, at 24s to 28s per bushel for white, and 20s to 30s for red and green. In all other articles no alteration to notice is doing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 48s to 50s; Baltic, crushing, 44s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 43s to 45s. Rapeseed, 30s to 36s per quarter. Coriander, 10s to 12s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 9s to 10s; white, 6s to 9s. Tares, 5s 6d to 6s 6d per bushel. English Rapeseed, (new) £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 to £13 10s; ditto, foreign, £11 5s to £12 5s per ton; Rapeseed cakes, £7 5s to £7 15s per ton. Canary, 70s to 77s per quarter. English Clover-seed, 50s, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s. Hempseed, 36s to 38s; Carraway, 30s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 10d to 10½d; of household ditto, 8d to 8½d per 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages Wheat, 75s 10d; barley, 41s 10d; oats, 31s 3d; rye, 56s 8d; beans, 51s 11d; peas, 52s 2d.

The Irish Trade Averages —Wheat, 73s 8d; barley, 42s 4d; oats, 31s 11d; rye, 55s 3d; beans, 51s 1d; peas, 50s 5d.

TEA.—The sales have passed off heavily—only a limited quantity having been transacted; but, in prices, we have no alteration to notice.

SUGAR.—The transactions in West Indian sugar have been on a full average scale, and the quotations are well supported. The lower and refining qualities of Mauritius are held at somewhat higher rates. The currencies are, grey and yellow, 46s to 50s 6d per cwt.

COFFEE.—Mocha has sold at 72s to 76s per cwt. For fine Ordinary Jamaica [illegible] ness has been done.

RICE.—The article is very dull, and [illegible] nominal. Middling white Bengal has sold at 22s to 23s 6d; and ordinary, 16s to 19s 6d per cwt.

Provisions.—The demand for Irish butter is by no means brisk, but we have no material alteration to notice in the quotations. There is no doing in Irish butter, and the inferior parcels have a downward tendency. On board, or for future delivery, we have no sales of moment to notice. Owing to the prevailing mild weather, fresh butter is a full inquiry, at barely [illegible] ness. There is very little doing in bacon, yet none of the holders are [illegible] ; [illegible] ness. Both our home and foreign cheese have improved in demand, and [illegible] is steady, at full prices. American Lard is firm, at 46s to 48s per cwt for good and fine, and 50s to 52s for inferior and middling. The supplies of English lard are small; yet there is very little demand for that article, at barely late rates. Scotch pork is firm, at full prices. Irish sells slowly, at 50s to 54s for mess, and 56s to 60s per cwt. Eggs are somewhat lower. Scotch, 9s to 9s 3d., Irish, 8s to 8s 6d; French, 6s to 7s, and English, 9s 6d to 9s 9d per 120.

TALLOW.—Comparatively little business is [illegible] supported. P.A.Y., on the spot, is held [illegible] ; and [illegible] town tallow is tolerably [illegible] ; [illegible] barely late rate.

OILS.—There is a fair amount of business doing in this market, at about former quotations.

Linseed.—The market remains in a very dull state, and prices are without alteration.

Rape.—Privately, there is rather more doing in English wools; but foreign and colonial qualities are neglected.

Potatoes. We have still to report a dull inquiry for all descriptions, at prices varying from 170s to 220s per ton. The supply on offer is small.

Hops (Friday). On the whole, the demand for the best hops is firm, at fully last week's quotations. In all other kinds—the supply of which on offer is good—comparatively little [illegible] ness is doing. [illegible] pockets, £4 0s to £4 7s. Weald of [illegible] £4 12s per cwt.

Coals (Friday) [illegible] ; Wallsend, 20s 3d; Hetwarth, 20s 3d; Stewarts, 20s 9d; Cowper's Hartley, 16s 3d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday). The supply of beasts on sale to-day being large, and the attendance of buyers limited, the [illegible] necessarily fell to barely 2d per 8lb. Sheep were [illegible] There were on offer 120 oxen and cows, 62 sheep, and 12 calves from abroad. The number of sheep with us from the home counties for the trade was in a fair[illegible] state, about the [illegible] mary of an. Lambs were a slow sale, as from 2s to 6s per 8lb. In calves, very little was doing; but we can notice no alteration in prices. The pork trade was heavy, at late rates. Milch cows were a slow inquiry, at from £16 to £19 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb. to sink the offal—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 2s 8d; second quality, 2s 10d to 3s 2d; prime large oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime Scots, &c., 3s 8d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; second quality ditto, 3s 10d to 4s 0d; prime comes-wolded ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime South Down ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 10d; large coarse calves, 4s 0d to 4s 6d; prime small ditto, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; large hogs, 3s 6d to 4s 4d; neat small porkers, 4s 6d to 4s 10d. Lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 6d. Suckling calves, 18s to 28s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 18s each. Beasts, 868; oxen, 145; sheep and lambs, 2210; calves, 131; pigs, 220.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—A very dull trade has been done to-day, on the following terms:—

Per 8lb. by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 2s 4d to 2s 6d.; middling ditto 2s 8d to 2s 10d; prime large ditto, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 3s 4d to 4s 4d; small ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; inferior mutton, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; middling ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; small pork, 4s 6d to 4s 10d; lamb, 8s 0d to 8s 10d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The Convention between the Emperor of Russia and the Bank of France still excites public inquiry. It is generally admitted that the Emperor will become possessed of an enormous power over the state of the French Market, which generally has a corresponding influence on our own Stock Exchange. But, looking only to the present, the relief to the Bank of France is of paramount importance in enabling the Directors to pay the interest of the French Bank-debt, which also assists the improvement of affairs here. To pay, however, for the large imports of corn that France has secured in the Northern markets, the bills drawn on the Treasury of St. Petersburgh will not be required to be supplied. This, to a great extent, the Emperor will not need to part with his gold, but will be paid in Rentes for the surplus harvest of Russia. A more expert financial manœuvre has, perhaps, seldom been played. Whether the Emperor's intentions are for a longer [illegible] nevertheless, as far as the steadiness of prices in the Stock Markets are concerned, a material influence must always exist, arising from the possibility that [illegible] may withdraw his interest in prior loans. We will continue [illegible] selling, and thus depress materially the value of the Funds, from the dread of the extent to which he may push his sales. An uneasy state of things, both in France, and, in a lesser degree, here, must then clearly result from this unlooked-for Convention.

Money has been in demand during the week, and is only procurable for short dates, at the current rate of 5 per cent. The quarterly instalment of the loan which falls due in April, bears heavily on both the Discount and Stock Markets, as it will neutralise the effect that would otherwise result on the payment of the April dividends

The English Market opened on Monday without any change on the closing quotations of the previous week, but with a greater appearance of firmness. Consols, early in the day, quoted 89 to ⅞; received 89 to 89 ⅛, and closed at 89, ⅜. Business, on Tuesday, was very limited. The Commissioner for the National Debt did not purchase, and the last price was 89⅜ to ⅝ for Money, and 89⅜ buyers for Account. Wednesday was observed as a close holiday, and on Thursday the absence of nearly all the leading members of the Stock Exchange rendered business dull and without any change, except a slight tendency to decline. The Exchequer Market continues heavy, at about the rates of last week. Bank Stock has been quoted for the Opening at 206; but the decision of the ballot in favour of the one per cent bonus was anticipated. The closing prices are, for Consols, 89⅛; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent Annuities, ex div., 99⅛; Long Annuities, ex. div., 9 1-16; Ditto, 30 years, 9 3-16; Consols for Account, 89⅛; Consols, Scrip, ⅛ dis.; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to par.

The Foreign Market continues nearly deserted, and, in many of the securities, days elapse without a registered bargain. Mexican, for the Account, on Monday was done at 21¼, and the last price is 21⅛ to 29. Peruvian has been and closes at 39 to 40. Chilian is now the most talked question: 98 to 99. Portuguese Four per Cents opened at 34¾; and close at 33 to 33. The recent debate upon Spanish Stock, and promise of Lord George Bentinck that he should, after Easter, move for papers, has not influenced the Market for the price. The Five per Cent Stock opened on Monday at 23⅜, and the last price at 23⅞ to ¾. The Three per Cents have been, and are 34¾ to ⅞. At closing, the nominal prices of the other Securities were, Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 96½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 49; Ditto, Four per Cent Certificates, 93.

The Railway Market continues heavy, with scarcely any transactions, but of the most insignificant character. Nor can this excite surprise in the present state of the Money Market, when the calls required this year are remembered. The state of prices at the close of the week is as the following list of lines last dealt in:—Amber, Notting., Boston, and Eastern Junction, ½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 13½; Boston, Stamford, and Birmingham, 6½; Bricklayers' Arms, 3½; Caledonian, 8½; East Anglian, 1½; Eastern Counties and Holyhead, 24½; Direct Northern Scrip, 2½; Eastern Counties, 20; Ditto Extension, 5; East Lancashire, 18½; Ditto New, 9; East Lincolnshire, 7; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 73½ ex div.; Eye and Harlington, 15½; Great Northern (London and York Regd.), 98; Ditto, ditto, (Direct Northern Regd.), 97; Great Western, 115½; Ditto, Half Shares, 68; Ditto Quarter Shares, 17½; Lewes and Brighton, 5½; Ditto, New Shares, 1½; London and North Western, 156; Ditto, Kwall, New, No. 1, 4¼; Ditto, New, No. 2, 4¾; Ditto, Extension, 9; London, Brighton, and South Coast, 53½; London and North Western, 178¾; Ditto, Quarters, 19; Ditto, ditto, New Shares, 18½; Ditto, Fifths, 16½; Ditto, £40 Shares M. and B., 69; London and South Western, 64; Ditto, New Consols, 13⅜, 46¼; Ditto, New, 20¼; Ditto, Tenths (Consolidated), 54; London and York Extension Scrip, 3½; Leicester and Lewes, 15½; Ditto, Thirds (Reg.), 32 pm.; Ditto, ¼ (late Huddersfield and Sheffield), 26¼; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, ¾ pm.; Manchester and Southampton, 14½; Midland, 118; Ditto, New, 84; Midland, Birmingham, and Derby, 84; Newcastle and Berwick, 29; Ditto New, 8½; Norfolk, 137; North British, 33¾; Ditto, Partnership, 1½; Ditto Preference, 4½; North Staffordshire, 8; Ditto Scrip (late Churnet and Blythe), 4½; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 16½; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, ¾; Royston and Hitchin, 2½; Shrewsbury and Birmingham, 4; Ditto Class B, 1½; Shropshire Union, 1 dis.; South Staffordshire Junction, 2 pm.; South Eastern and Dover, 28½; Ditto, New, 8½; Ditto, 1½ paid; Ditto New (do. £33 6s. 8d.), No. 2, 1½; New (do. £30), No. 3, 1½; Ditto (do. £25), No. 4, 1½; South Yorkshire, Doncaster, and Goole, 2½; Waterford and Kilkenny, 6; West Riding Union, ¼ pm.; York and Newcastle, 35; Ditto, New, 16½; Ditto, Preference, 8½; York and North Midland, 80; Ditto, Extension, 30½; Ditto, Preference, 11½; Ditto, East and West Riding Extension, 22; Boulogne and Amiens, 16½; Central of France (Orleans and Vierzon), 14½; Dutch Rhenish, 4½; East Indian, Northern of France, 13; Paris and Lyons, 5½; Paris, Ceinture, 2½; Rouen, 34½.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Although business yesterday was confined to the narrowest limits, prices were a point in advance. The closing quotation for Consols was 89⅜ to ⅝ for Money, and 89⅝ to ¾ for Account. There was no alteration in either the Share or Foreign Markets: in both scarcely any business was doing.

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, MARCH 23.

FOREIGN-OFFICE, MARCH 2.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of Adolphe Baron de Maussion as Consul at Kehl-burgh for the Grand Duchy of Baden.

CROWN-OFFICE, MARCH 22.

The Peer of Scotland elected and returned to serve in the House of Peers, in the present Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, viz.:—John Lord Gray, in the room of John Lord Neaves, deceased.

WAR-OFFICE, MARCH 23.

1st Dragoon Guards. Lieut. H. C. Morgan, to be Lieutenant, vice Draper.

3d Light Dragoons. Lieut. W. Fenwick, to be Captain, vice Bowles, 14th. 2d Lieut. W. D. Boyd to be Cornet, vice Cramer.

2d Foot. Lieut. F. Mackelon to be Lieutenant, vice [illegible] Foxe. 3d Major J. B. Thomas to be Major, vice Douglas; J. F. Trydell to be Ensign, vice Bew [illegible] to be Ensign, vice Alexander. Ensign B. T. Barry to be Lieutenant, vice Mc D [illegible] Young; Henry Fowle Smith to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice [illegible]

Ensign Thomas Bonnaire, vice Baxter; Colour Sergeant R. [illegible] to be Ensign, vice Bonnaire. 84th Capt. G. H. Mackenzie, to be Major, vice Bruce; Lieut. [illegible] Hamilton, to be Captain, vice Denville Ensign A. G. Walsh to be Lieutenant, vice Bakers; Ensign W. De Vere [illegible] Lieutenant, vice Walsh; Ensign J. King to be Ensign, vice De Wilton. 95th [illegible] Colmorwood to be Ensign, vice Bennett. 96th. Captain W. Donvyle to be Captain, vice Hilton. 99th. C. W. Wray to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice Lindsay. 60th Lieutenant-Colonel A. Robertson to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice [illegible] Regiment; Corneli Cormac to be Lieutenant, vice Colleton; W. L. Reid, M.D., to be Assistant-Surgeon, vice [illegible]

Ceylon Rifle Regiment: Capt. A. Watson to be Captain, vice Brew. Major Parke; Second-Lieut. C. Adams to be First Lieutenant, vice Parke; J. C. Robertson to be Second Lieutenant, vice Adams.

COMMISSIONS SIGNED BY LORDS LIEUTENANT

County [illegible]: Sir J. C. Thorold, Bart., to be Deputy Lieutenant [illegible] ment of the Duke of Buccleuch's Corps [illegible]

[illegible] Jolly to be [illegible]

[illegible] rrot, vice P. Barker, R. E. [illegible] be Cornet, vice H. L. Antrobus.

BANKRUPTCY ANNULLED.

[illegible] PITCY SUPRASEDED.

SPENCER, Ashelton, Nottinghamshire, nursery and seedsman.

BANKRUPTCY.

[illegible] ROBINSON, Gosswil-street.

C. WILLIAMS, Hay, Brecknockshire, [illegible] H. BENSON

[illegible] Lancashire, grocer W. DICKINSON, jr.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.

J. WALLACE, Leith, [illegible] commission [illegible] J [illegible] tinburgh, keeper of livery stab es. J. NIMMO, Bridgeton of Glasgow, black [illegible] grinder.

FRIDAY, MARCH 26.

WHITEHALL, MARCH 2

The Queen has been pleased to grant to the Hon and Rev Henry Montagu Villiers M.A. the place and dignity of a Canon Residentiary of the cathedra church of St. Peter [illegible] ford by the death of the Rev. Dr. Frederick William Blomberg.

FOREIGN OFFICE, MARCH 26.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr Saul Solomon, as Consul at St. Helena for the Republic the Queen of Spain.

BANKRUPTS.

I. HUTCHINSON, Lloyd-square, wine-merchant R. BY AUMONT, High-street, Deptford, wine-merchant. F. Burdjes, Southampton-row, Bl[illegible] W. JOHNSON, Littlebampton, Sussex, [illegible] number. W. SMITH Gloucester, Staffordshire, mercer. S. BROWN Trowbridge, Wiltshire, woollen cloth manufacturer. J. WHITE, Stanley, Lancashire [illegible] KINSIN, Cockhouse, Yorkshire, iron-[illegible] M. JOHNSON, Leeds, [illegible] maker [illegible] St. Le [illegible] HALL, Doncaster, Saddlewerch, Yorkshire, machine [illegible] ker. J. FI[illegible], Holywell, Flintshire, grocer. H. DUTCHMAN, [illegible]

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS

W MCCULLOCH, Greenock, cheese-merchant J. A. DOBBIE, Glasgow, tacksman.

BIRTHS

The lady of R. Macdonald Stephenson, E[illegible] At Parkfield, Potter's bar, the wife of Charles Harvey, [illegible] Hon. Mrs Fellowes, of a daughter.—At Hollo[illegible] Mrs W. Lake Stephenson, [illegible] y St. Edmund's, the wife of the Rev. J. W Donaldson, B.D., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At [illegible] Church, Marylebone, W. Scot [illegible] Esq, [illegible] to Miss Thomas M. A. sager, Esq [illegible] At Deptford, Septimus Wray, Esq., to Sophia, only child of Richard Bate, Esq.—At Battersea, John Charles M'Mullen, Esq., to Mary Anne, only daughter of the late John Greenwood, Esq

DEATHS

At Tunbridge Wells, the Lady Letitia Browne.—In Lowndes-square, Emma, the wife of Gunsea, Sir Henry F Campbell, K.C.B. and G.C.H.—At Hollo[illegible] Sir Alexander Wood, K.C.M.G.—On the 8th inst., Thomas Mills, [illegible] in his 85th year.—At Woolwich, Major-General Hyde Parker, of the Royal Artillery.—In Upper Harley street, aged 19, Arthur, youngest son of the late Daniel Sinnet, Esq.——On the 19th inst., Benjamin Hawkins, Esq., of Dalbiac, Miss Sarah Dalbiac, in her 78th year, Catherine, relict of the Rev. Thomas Willis.—At Dalbiac, Miss Sarah Delberry, sister of the Chief Justice of Bengal.—On the 8th inst., at his seat near Sydney, Lieutenant-General Marriott in his 74th year.—At Chorlton Lodge, near Alcesford, Hants, Major Barrett, late of the 11th Hussars —At Shuckburgh, Elizabeth, relict of the late The Rev. Rowlebarck, Esq [illegible] Rev. Thomas Clayton Glyn [illegible] Esq., in the 82nd year of his age. In Rane-place, Sloane-street, Lieutenant-Colonel [illegible]—At Hillside, Old-[illegible] John Sharon, Esq., for many years one of her Majesty's Justices of the Peace.—At Kensington, in the 81st year of her age, Miss Mary Meredith.—At Kensington, Horace, the infant son of Mr. Frederick Chambers.—Esq., surgeon, R.N.—In Eaton-square, Lady Hoare, wife of Sir Hugh Richard Hoare, Bart.—On the 20th inst., at Peckham Common, Elizabeth Jane, the wife of E. H. Donaldhorne, Esq., leaving a large family

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN.—By the Nobility, Gentry, Subscribers, and Patrons of Music, are respectfully informed that the New Theatre will OPEN on Tuesday, April 6, under the Direction and Management of Mr. Beale, when will be performed Rossini's Opera Seria of SEMIRAMIDE, in which Mdme. Grisi, Mdlle. Alboni (from the Scala, at Milan, her first appearance in this country), Signor Lavia (from the Imperial Theatre of St. Petersburgh), Signor Poggiolini (from the Imperial Theatre, Vienna), and Signor Tamburini (his first appearance in London for four years), will sustain the principal characters.

In the course of the evening, the National Anthem will be performed by the entire strength of the Company.

To conclude with a New Ballet, in Two Tableaux, by M. Albert, entitled L'ODALISQUE. The Scenery by Mr. Grieve and Mr. Telbin; the Dresses by Mr. Banks; the Machinery by Mr. Dansenser. Mdlle Fanny Cerito, the Accademie Royale de Paris; Mdlle. Barbi (from the Imperial Theatre, Vienna, and from the Academie Royale); Mdlle. Nocolet; also M. Mabelin. M. Gentile (from Madrid), &c.

Director of the Music, Costumier, and Conductor M. Costa, Chemist, M. Carnuit, M. Vincent Novello; the Scenery by Messrs Grieve and Telbin; the pr[illegible] tres by Mr. Banks; Artiste Constantin, Mrs. Baller; the new Decorations by Signors [illegible] and Vanucini.

Stalls and Private Boxes may be secured at the Box-office, and at Messrs Cramer, Beale, and Co's, 201, Regent street. The doors will be opened at Half-past Seven o'Clock—Admittance by [illegible]

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN AND PRINCE ALBERT.

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE (Proprietor, Mr. W. BATTY) will OPEN for the Summer Season on EASTER MONDAY NEXT, April 5th, with a Splendid and Effective Production, and First Time, Lord Byron's Gorgeous and Magnificent Poetic Drama, entitled SARDANAPALUS, introducing Mr. Batty's Troupe of Living Egyptian Camels, Wild Zebras, and Beautiful Strings of Horses, Ponies, &c., on a most complete and magnificent Scale, upon the Arena of which, the Artists of the establishment have been exclusively employed for many weeks, embodying the bold and extensive Stage Arrangements and unequalled resources of this Establishment, which, when presented, by its local Scenes, almost exclusive advantages over every theatre and will be [illegible] and of a different character to any other which has been [illegible] ; and will, if so presented, command, in equal manner, the public patronage. The beauty and number of the Horses display in their varied exercises having been attained nightly with increasing applause, will be sufficient to notice that the most experienced trainer [illegible] ged company in training to new and permanent Stage Effects, with the view of varying to the utmost the Popular Predilections of the Circle, and Feats of Equitation.

In addition to the Equestrian Exercises [illegible] the following Artistes [illegible] equestrian will the re-appearance of [illegible] on the right of the Circle, &c.; and, in respectfully acknowledging the great success during the past season, assures the nobility and gentry that no exertion in such department, which [illegible] will be wanting to sustain the high character in such department, which [illegible] ; afternoon [illegible] will not be interrupted.—Box-Office open on Saturday next, from 11 till 5.—Academy Royal, Astley's.

HAYMARKET THEATRE.—ALLCROFT'S GRAND SACRED and MISCELLANEOUS CONCERT, on TUESDAY NEXT, MARCH 30th, for which the following eminent artists are engaged:—Mesdames Albertazzi, Burch, E. Birch, Lockey, Stanley, Poole, Novello, and Mr. HARLEY, which contains the following eminent artistes will appear: Mesdames Birch, E. Lablache, Steele, Allen, M. O'Connor, Sarah Flower; Messrs Balfe, Harley, Lockey, and Mr. Allcroft, Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Turnbull, M. St. Leon, [illegible] Kenny, Willy, Carter, Beck, and P. Chatterton Conductors, Messrs. Loder, Leo, and Willy Places to be had at the Box-office from Eleven till Three.

THE NEW PLANET.—THEATRE ROYAL, ADELPHI.—On MONDAY EVENING NEXT, during the Week (Good Friday excepted), being Passion Week, and on SATURDAY EVENING, April 3, will have the honour to introduce his ANNUAL LECTURE ON ASTRONOMY, and the particulars relative to the above splendid discovery. Also, a series of Dissolving Views, illustrative of the Solar System of the Sun. Depth at Eight, and about Ten. Boxes, 4s. and 2s.; Pit, 1s. Private Boxes One Guinea and Half a Guinea. Boxkeeper [illegible]

THE LAST NIGHT THIS LENT.—LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS.—Overflowing Houses. Tenth Year in London.—VENTRILOQUISM EXTRAORDINARY. CROSBY HALL, Bishopsgate. On WEDNESDAY next, MARCH 31, being the last performance this Lent, Mr. LOVE will present his last new and highly successful POLYPHONIC ENTERTAINMENT, on a novel construction, with new and appropriate Mirthful Costume and Appendages, entitled A CHRISTMAS PARTY IN THE OLDEN TIME. LOVE will represent, visibly and invisibly, and without assistance, No Hoax and Humbug. Games and Amusements of the Christmas Events particularised in Programmes [illegible] doors open at Half-past Seven. Begin at Eight. [illegible] Mr. Hall [illegible] 2s. Gallery [illegible]

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, Hanover-square Rooms.—PROGRAMME of the SECOND CONCERT, MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 29.—Overture, Spohr's "Last Judgment." Air, "Jerusalem," Miss Birch—Chorus, "Heaven and Earth."—Song, Mr. Lockey—Grand Scena, "Ah, perfido," Mdme. Caradori Allan—Duet, Mr. Benedict and Mr. Lockey—Chorus, "Hallelujah."—Finale, Beethoven. The principal vocal parts by Miss Birch, Mdme. Caradori Allan, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Benedict. Conductor, Mr. Costa. Subscription for the Series, Guineas; Single Tickets, One Guinea; and Double Tickets, £1 10s.; to be had of Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS. MONDAY, MARCH 29th, and Every Monday.—A Subscriber of Two Guineas is entitled to a Double Transferable Ticket for Six Nights, and the subscription will not commence on any other terms. The Talent hitherto engaged for these Assemblies is retained for M. Weippert's Benefit Night, Monday, March 29th. Conductor, M. Weippert; leader M. Sainton. Quadrilles, Waltzes, and Polkas, by M. Weippert. Programme of the Evening to Commence at Ten o'Clock. Tickets, Seven Shillings each, at Weippert's Quadrille Office, 91, Regent-street.

EGYPT—CITY OF CAIRO.—JUST OPENED, at the PANORAMA ROYAL, LEICESTER-SQUARE, a VIEW of the magnificent CITY of CAIRO, from drawings taken by David Roberts, Esq., R.A., with its splendid Mosques, Minarets, and Palaces [illegible] Also, a CHRISTMAS EVENING, and a grotesque Assemblage preparatory to Pilgrimage to Mecca. The VIEWS of the great BATTLE of [illegible] and Victory of the Nile, and ATHENS, are also now open.

WALHALLA, late Miss Linwood's Gallery, Leicester-square.—MADAME WARTON begs to inform the Nobility, Subscribers, and Public that a Splendid Series of MACHINERY, TABLEAUX, &c., will be produced during PASSION WEEK. "Adam Descending with the Angel, [illegible] &c. &c., with appropriate and descriptive Music. Performances at Half-past Eight and Nine. Doors will be opened at [illegible] Stalls and Boxes, 3s. half-price

HALL OF ROME, GREAT WINDMILL-STREET, HAYMARKET.—Under Distinguished Patronage.—An Entire Change of Subjects. The TABLEAUX VIVANTS and POSES PLASTIQUES by Male and Female Artistes, combine Originality with Classic Illustrations, and the Music is selected from the Great Masters; it is announced by the Press unanimously to be the most Splendid Exhibition ever [illegible] Open every afternoon at 3, and at 8 in the [illegible] ; Private Parties during Passion Week Open all the day.—Admission, 1s.; Stalls and Reserved Seats, 2s.

PASSION WEEK.—LECTURE on DESCRIPTIVE ASTRONOMY, at the ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION, Every Morning at Half-past Two o'Clock, and Every Night at Eight (except Good Friday, at closing of Saturday's Entertainments), in which the Latest Interesting Discoveries, and a Newly Manufactured Accompaniment by Mr. Wallis. ADMISSION to the ELECTRIC MAGNETIC CHEMICAL LECTURE, Every Morning at Twelve, by the same Gentleman. ADMISSION to the BELL and DIVER, &c. &c.—Admission, 1s. 6d.

WILLIAM [illegible] RED BOOK AND COURT LIST Buildings, comprising a correct List of the Nobility and [illegible] Law [illegible]

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS; History of the Succession of the Ancient Roman Emperors, with the Prices of their Coins, bearing Portraits, their Dates and Mottoes, is just published by P. WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 45, Strand, London, price 1s., by post, 1s. 8d. Coins sent by post, Draught, Catalogued, &c.

NEW SPRING FASHIONS.—The LADIES' GAZETTE OF FASHION for APRIL, price One Shilling (post-free, 1s. 6d.), is the only Work that contains all the Spring Fashions, four Plates, 70 Figures, 100 Patterns, all of extraordinary ... Walking Dresses, four Children ... Dresses, 6d. Bonnets, and Tables, Inclusion ... dress variety. Descriptions, Taste, Poet.
BEROER, Holywell-street, Strand, and all Booksellers.

NOW READY.
TANCRED. BY B. DISRAELI, M.P. ... h in descrip- ... tions and lively touches of character. It bears the stamp, moreover, of individuality ... it ... Athenæum
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13 Great Marlborough-street

MR. DISRAELI'S "TANCRED," SIR EDWARD BULWER LYTTON'S "LUCRETIA," "The LIFE of LORD SIDMOUTH," by the DEAN of NORWICH, and all the New Books of the Season, are contained (for perusal) in the Library of the Kingdom at BULL'S LIBRARY, 19, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, terms, cards and Post-free on application.

CHEAP EDITION OF THE WORKS OF MR. CHARLES DICKENS, in Weekly Numbers, containing Sixteen clear and handsome ... ages, small octavo, double columns, by Three Half-pence each, and in Monthly ... s, sewed in a Wrapper, price Sevenpence. To commence with the PICKWICK PAPERS, which, completed in about Thirty-Two Numbers, will be published on the 31st of MARTIN CHUZZLEWIT
The First Number is published this day
Prospectuses, with Specimen Pages, may be obtained from all Booksellers.
London. CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand

NEW WORK BY CAPTAIN MARRYAT
On the 1st of April will be published, in Three Volumes, the First Part of the JUVENILE LIBRARY.—By CAPTAIN MARRYAT.
To be Continued Monthly, Price One Shilling; commencing with an English Story, called "THE CHILDREN OF THE NEW FOREST;" to be followed by Tales in succession. The work will be printed on superfine paper, and in handsome type. Each number will consist of Seventy-two Pages of Letterpress, and Two Illustrations engraved on Steel
London: CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand

JAENISCH AND WALKER
This Day is Published, in one closely-printed volume, 8vo., price 18s cloth,
JAENISCH'S CHESS PRECEPTOR; a New Analysis of the Openings of Games By G. F. De JAENISCH, ... Petersburgh Translated from the French, with Notes, by GEORGE WALKER, ... of "Chess Studies," and various other works on the Game of Chess
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GREEN, and LONGMAN

ON CONSUMPTION, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, and AFFECTIONS of the THROAT, their Prevention and Treatment. By JAMES MADDOCK, M.D. Price 8s 6d. Third Edition, with cases and plates SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row; HALLERIE, 219, Regent-street; and may be ordered of any Bookseller in Town or Country

The Art of Health, Happiness, and Long Life, in Two Volumes, 18s each; by post, to stamps 2s 6d each.
WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; (with Diet Tables for all Complaints.) 2. HOW TO BE HAPPY: on Regimen, Exhilarating, and Mental Government.—By ROBT. JAS. CULVERWELL, M.D. M.R.C.S. L.S.A. &c. Seaside-wood, 21, Paternoster-row: the Invalid's Guide to Health and Longevity, 1s 6d; by post, 2s 6d

HEATH'S ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT
On the Thirty-first of March, 1847, will be published, the First Part of a New Edition of THE NEW TESTAMENT, Superbly Embellished with a Series of beautiful Vignette Illustrations, and each page surrounded by an elaborate ... ative Border, drawn by the first Artists, and engraved in the highest style of the art, on ... the superintendence of Mr. CHARLES HEATH.
... published in Monthly Parts of Sixteen Pages, elegantly printed in small folio, price Two Shillings; or, on large paper, with Proofs on India Paper, Three Shillings. Specimens may be seen at all Booksellers'.
London: CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand

This day is published, Two New Volumes of BOY'S OWN LIBRARY
THE BOY'S AUTUMN BOOK
THE BOY'S WINTER BOOK
By THOMAS MILLER ... containing each 70 Engravings on Wood, and Titles and Frontispieces in Colours. ... 2s each, or 3s. cloth. Recently published, uniform with the above.
THE BOY'S SUMMER BOOK. By THOMAS MILLER.
CHAPMAN and HALL, 186, Strand

NEW SERIES OF MAPS
On the 31st of March, 1847, will be published, to be completed in Twenty-seven Monthly Parts, each containing Two Maps, in a Wrapper, with Explanatory Plate, or One Set Complete, Coloured, Part I. of a SERIES OF MODERN MAPS, constructed upon a System of Scale and Proportion, from the most recent Authorities. By JOHN SHARPE ...
Engraved on Steel, by J. WILSON LOWRY.
The object of this undertaking is to produce a Series of Maps which shall combine New and Important Means of Facilitating Geographical study with just accuracy and skilful execution, and at as moderate a Scale of Price ... Specimens ... for about plain, or Sixpence coloured.—Specimens may be seen at all Booksellers'.
London: CHAPMAN and HALL, 186 Strand

ELEGANT LADY'S PRESENT.
Beautifully Illustrated with Coloured Plates, in watered silk binding, ... gilt (dedicated by Permission to Her Majesty the Queen Dowager), price 21s.
THE LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS, Tenth Edition, revised ... by the Editor of "The Forget Me Not."
... should be aware that this is the original "Language of Flowers," the popularity of which has given rise to so many imitations To secure the delivery of the genuine work, orders should be given for "The Language of Flowers, published by Ackermann, 96, Strand, by Appointment to Her Majesty the Queen Dowager, and to His Royal Highness the Prince Albert," which guarantees, for the unexceptionable nature of its contents, can be safely trusted to order. Also, uniformly with the above,
THE BOOK OF FLOWERS. By Mrs. HALE. Containing Poetical Illustrations of "The Language of Flowers." And
THE LANGUAGE OF BIRDS, Comprising Poetic and Prose Illustrations of the most favourite Cage Birds, uniformly with the above, with coloured Plates. By Mrs. SPRAT
SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, 70, New Bond-street

Now Publishing, Third Edition of No. 77 PANSI
MARY BLANE, Lucy Neal, Lucia ... and Eight other ... Songs ... Twelfth Edition ... as sung by the ... Accompaniments complete. Price, for the whole Eleven Songs, with the Mary Blane ... rille 2s. They were set, given as Polkas for Dancing in No. 76, price 2s. No. 78 PLANISTA, ... door from Cheapside.—The Planista is beautifully brought out, and is always ... to ...

DAVIDSON'S CHEAP MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS FOR APRIL
HENRY RUSSELL'S NEW COMPOSITIONS, in Three-penny Sheets, in THE MUSICAL TREASURY.—Man the Life Boat 6d; Life Boats, Grand Ones, 1s; The Sea (Mary Mild), 6d; on the Sea (Grand Song and Chorus), 6d; Billow's Lay, in most wrapper.—Others in the press
ETHIOPIAN SERENADERS' LAST PRODUCTIONS, arranged as Songs and Choruses, with Pianoforte Accompaniments.—Chloe's to be my Wife and De Dandy Broadway two.—the two for 3d; My Skiff as on de Shore, 3d; Uncle Gabriel, and My Old Aunt Sally—the two for 3d; A Life by the Sunny Fire, 3d.; or the whole in one sheet for Ten; In a most wrapper
DALMAINE'S PIANOFORTE DUETS IN THREEPENNY SHEETS. Knudson's Variations on the Harvest Home, Bellevue 2s. 6d.; and Kreutzer's Variations on Sharp, while Sonata, Bellevue 2s. 6d., the two for 4s. The celebrated Alexander March, Bellevue 2s., and the March in Blue Beard, Bellevue 1s., the two for 3d. The Swallow March, Duke of York's March, March in Guillaume ... to, the four for ... or, the whole ... in one Setting
DALMAINE'S UNIVERSAL MELODIST, Part ... APRIL, containing, for 1s., the Musical Words of 1.6 Songs, Sacred Airs for the Violin, Accordion, Concertina, &c., and ... sold also in 32 Sheets.
DITTO'S SONGS, uniform with above, the one ... complete Edition, with the Music and Pianoforte Accompaniments. Part 5, 1s., now ...
DAVIDSON, Water street, Bankfriars, and ... Pianoforte ... ments

ILLUSTRATED NEW TESTAMENT.
COMPLETE FOR 2s. 6d.
ADDRESS

Notwithstanding the previous attempts to illustrate the NEW TESTAMENT, whether by the skill of the artist as exhibited in copperplate engravings, or by the more modern method of the pictorial art, where fancy is principally derived from their Scripture pieces, or by merely suiting together the most accurate views of the more striking scenes and interesting localities, and objects occurring in the sacred record,—it is presumed that the present edition, embodying a portion of several series of pictorial illustrations, now begins by a very essential difference, not yet proved to be the case in any of the former. In these alone, inasmuch as the volume is also adorned with various Woodcuts, faithfully exhibiting, it is believed some of the most remarkable, places, cities, and ruins, now existing in Palestine, which the writers engaged the act edition of the scenes. Wherever practicable, some topographical account of these sketches will be deduced from the most authentic sources. In general, the views of places—such as towns, cities, &c., are not intended to represent what they were in remotages, but rather to exhibit them as they exist at the present time: and where various views are engaged, they either serve to give some idea of what the place may have been in the days of its ancient splendour; or, they do not satisfactorily do this, they at least indicate an idea of the respective places of which they will stand the solemn memorials
While, by the nature of the work, it will be perceived that history has been particularly attended to in their compilation And it may be necessary to observe, that they are intended to be strictly of an explanatory character, without the introduction of any thing of a theological or dogmatical cast. The Notes are much more numerous and of greater length in the Gospels than in the succeeding parts of the work. This may be accounted for by various circumstances. In the first place, it must be admitted that the Gospels are the most interesting portion of the New Testament, and this would necessarily require a larger measure of notice, and, in a certain form and position of the illustrations, sometimes perplexed, and at others, the matter and import of the text itself did not seem to demand, on the plan pursued, anything additional in the way of annotations
For the descriptive matter and other information contained in the Notes, the Editor is mainly indebted to the works of Dr Kitto, particularly his "Pictorial Scripture," to the "Illustrated Bible" of Dr. Jahn, the "Researches" of Dr. Robinson, and some other travels of authority. The first-mentioned of these works he purchased of the author, ... and ... ed from its pages, as also from the work of Professor Robinson, may be ... ected all that would seem necessary for a work of this kind, of the utmost history, ... manners and ... customs ... and ... ancient ... ...

ELECTION OF A SCOTTISH PEER, AT HOLYROOD.

ELECTION OF A REPRESENTATIVE PEER OF SCOTLAND.

On Wednesday, the 17th inst., the Scottish Peers met in Holyrood Palace, for the purpose of electing a Representative Peer in the room of the late Lord Rollo. "There was a good attendance of spectators," says the Correspondent of the Daily News; "and the ceremony, although somewhat formal, is interesting, as one of the few memorials that now occur to remind the present generation of the once separate national existence of Scotland. The very first name on the roll, however, does not confirm any association of this kind, as it is that of the Prince of Wales, who, as Duke of Rothesay, takes his place at the head of the Scottish nobility. The oldest patent is that of the Earl of Sutherland, which is dated 1228, but, from some dispute, his precedency of the other Earls is not admitted. Old Holyrood had its grim walls and still more grim portraits lighted up with glaring red baize for the occasion."

The Peers and Officers assembled, as customary, in the Picture-gallery of the Old Palace; the latter included the principal Clerks of Session, the Lord Provost and Magistrates, the Deans of the Chapel Royal, and other officials. As usual on such occasions, the galleries erected for the accommodation of the public were crowded. Principal Lee, one of the Deans of the Chapel Royal, opened the proceedings with prayer. The Union roll having been called, the following Peers answered to their names:—Earls of Haddington, Lauderdale, Leven and Melville, Selkirk; Viscount Stormont; Lords Gray, Rollo, Colville, and Polwarth. The above-named noblemen having taken the oaths of allegiance, &c., their names were called over, when each of them gave his vote for Lord Gray. Signed lists were then read from the Earls of Morton, Moray, Airlie, and Balcarres, Viscount Arbuthnot, and Lord Saltoun—all of whom voted for Lord Gray. There were no proxies. Lord Gray was accordingly declared duly elected a Representative Peer of Scotland; and, the necessary documents having been signed and sealed, the proceedings were closed with prayer by Dr. Robert Lee, one of the Deans of the Chapel Royal.

We have Illustrated the ceremony, from a sketch by Mr. A. A. Ritchie, of Edinburgh. The scene is the Picture-Gallery, during the Election. At the cross-table are seated the Members of the Court of Session, who administered the oaths; and at the long table are seated the Peers. On the dexter side, immediately behind the Peers, are the Lord Provost and Magistrates, in their robes; with sword and mace bearers.

The proclamation of the Election takes place at the Cross in Edinburgh; where the officials are attended by twelve heralds, in their tabards; six trumpeters; military, &c.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

PARIS FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

THE fashions of 1847 will be remarkable for their extreme sumptuousness: in Paris, as well as in London, the richest materials and most elaborate patterns are only in demand; simplicity is not the taste of the day, but is superseded by the most recherché elegance. Ball dresses, although they are of the lightest materials, are intricate in their designs; and it may be said that they resemble conffets of tulle and gossamer.

A new artiste, patronised by many ladies of fashion, has made a great sensation in high Parisian society; the style of her ball dresses has been very successful at the most fashionable parties. Madame Marie is the fortunate artiste, and we lose no time in submitting to our readers some of the latest specimens of her ingenuity.

The first of the costumes represented in our Illustration consists of a slip of taffetas d' Italie, of bright yellow; and of two petticoats of yellow crape. The first petticoat is trimmed with plaits of tulle, nearly to the height of the knees, these plaits having satin points: the second petticoat, which falls a little below this trimming, is ornamented in the same manner, upon the sides only. The corsage is draped before and behind. The coiffure and the bouquets of the corsage, are of red mallow flowers, or wild poppies.

The other costume is a robe of watered celestial blue, trimmed with lace, and an apron of the latter material. A small hat, of white crape, named petit-bord, ornamented with two feathers, completes the costume.

We may, also, mention from the répertoire of the same artiste, a ball dress, composed of a white satin slip, over which are worn two petticoats of tulle: the first is trimmed below with flounces of tulle, continued in the form of an apron, but narrowed considerably as they rise towards the waist. The second petticoat, which falls somewhat below the tulle flounces, is open in front, to show the apron; and is confined on each side by a ribbon, in a bow, the long ends of which fall over the upper flounce. The corsage is draped before and behind.

The coiffures of flowers are generally in garlands; but a favourite arrangement is in tufts on each side. In the wreaths of foliage are diamonds set in flowers, or long aiguillettes.

Natural flowers are much worn as the perfection of elegant simplicity, when wreathed in the coiffure, made into a bouquet for the corsage, or to be carried in the hand. Diamonds are frequently introduced among garlands of natural flowers, but oftener in wreaths of foliage.

The hair is worn in plain bands very closely in front, and raised over the ears; or in undulating bands which encircle the ears; and in curls, smooth in black hair, and crispés in light. The back hair is worn in a double row of plaits and wreaths. Sometimes, for full dress, two or three ribbon shells are worn amidst the twisted hair.

The other ornamental coiffures are turbans, petits bords, and lace; and nearly all these fashions are copied from ancient pictures of the Spanish, Italian, French, and English schools. Among them are the coiffures à la Marie Stuart; caps à la Reine de Navarre; bonnets Pompadour; and Sevillanes, or Andalouses, of black lace.

The petit-bord shown in our Illustration is from the pattern named Montpensier.

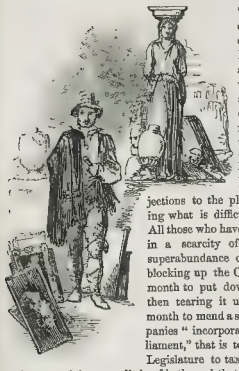
We have thus detailed the costumes most worn in this high season of balls and evening parties, in the réunions of Paris. Our Correspondent, Le Journal des Modes Parisiennes, the best informed authority, and universally received in high society, has transmitted to us these elegant novelties; the designs having been supplied by Madame Frederick, of Albemarle-street, the representative in London, of the above distinguished chronicle of Fashion.

LONDON: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, MARCH 27, 1847.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

No. 257.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1847. [Sixpence.

HEALTH OF TOWNS.



It would be the tritest common-place to say of Lord Morpeth's Bill, that it deals with a difficult subject: it would be absurd to allude to that difficulty at all, were it not for the fact that the public must expect many awful pamphlets and heavy columns full of objections to the plan, laboriously proving what is difficult to be impossible. All those who have a "vested interest,' in a scarcity of water-pipes and a superabundance of paving-stones, in blocking up the City of London for a month to put down a road-way, and then tearing it up again for another month to mend a sewer; and all Companies "incorporated by Act of Parliament," that is to say, licensed by the Legislature to tax the people for light and water, giving very little of both, and that of very bad quality, at any price they choose to ask, except where there is a rival Company to under-sell them—all these bodies, and all their connections, and all they employ, will come forth and exclaim against "unconstitutional" interference, will pronounce the dreadful word "centralisation," which Englishmen, knowing nothing about, believe to be something very shocking indeed; and all these interests, and all these bodies, and all these "cries," will be forthwith raised in noisy opposition to the Government Bill for Improving the Sanatory Condition of Towns. It is as well, then, to start with an acknowledgment that the question is a difficult one; and, taking that for granted, to set about seeing how the difficulty can be dealt with. All the trash about impossibility is not worth noticing; everything is possible that men determine to do, if sufficient means are properly applied.

After many years of enquiry, and many Blue Books filled with the results thereof, we are beginning to think that it may be as well to spend our money in fighting Fever as the French, and that we have "natural enemies" in continually the midst of us, more formidable than those across the Channel; foes, which, though unvisible, sweep away whole armies every year, dealing their havoc with arms that strike without noise, and kill without alarming. For every victim struck down in manhood, a family is plunged into pauperism or difficulty, or embarrassment, varying according to his rank in the great "Army of Industry," which England is, and must be, to keep her station; and all that adds to pauperism, difficulty, and embarrassment, swells the train of miseries with which the onward march of every generation is clogged and impeded. The bare cost of the loss of life that can be clearly traced to our ever-present enemy, disease engendered by inattention to physical laws, is calculated at nine millions a-year. Money loss, is sometimes as good a spur to action as the prospect of money to be gained, and in the above fact, added to other considerations, we see the force that will compel some steps to be taken in the matter, all opposition to the contrary notwithstanding.

Success will only be a work of time; and the passing an Act is the very smallest part of what will have to be done. The carrying it into effect will be the true difficulty; for those whom such a measure will disturb are few and organised; the community to be benefitted are many, spread over a large surface, disunited, and, what is worse, as yet extremely apathetic. In all cases of collective danger the sense of peril in individuals is trifling: in a battle everybody knows that some must be killed, but all trust to the chance that they shall escape. In a community the case is still worse, for the richer classes purchase drainage and ventilation, and good air, just as do they wines and carriages; it is the powerless masses who are unable to help themselves, and from long habit do not even know that they require helping. But as air, water, and light are pure and abundant enough till men poison it, shut it out, and stint its quantity, it is fit we should try whether knowledge cannot be brought to bear on the evils ignorance creates, and give us an approach to what Nature furnishes till man spoils her handy work. We shall be accused of optimism, and of "talking Utopia," if we say there is no absolute, unalterable necessity that makes a crowded city "a foul and pestilential congregation of vapours." The difference between the dwelling of one man and a million is merely the increased scale of the arrangements, all within the reach of money and science. We accept London, with its smoke and filth, and narrow ways, its Corporation system, which dates almost from the feudal ages, and all the complicated interests that have grown up in later times, till they have become powers; and we regard all this and all its consequences as unalterable; yet the change will come; at this moment the means exist of clearing it of its eternal canopy of smoke; that it should be clean is a mere question of labour; there is a company ready to drain it; and that the houses should have more light and ventilation can be effected by repealing a single tax. We are convinced that mud, smoke, and foul air, will become traditions, and our descendants, when they read of "old London," will feel a very proper contempt for us who could live in the midst of such things, wondering how we could endure them, just as we marvel at our fathers burning each other for believing too much in Witchcraft, or too little in the Church, and spiking up human heads and limbs on Temple Bar—a practice still extant in Madagascar.

The Bill of the Government will not effect everything: no single measure of one Minister or Session could do so; but it will make a beginning; and when we get on the right track, the energy of the people increasing as it finds success, will do the rest. The measure is based upon enquiries that have been carefully made by men who may be considered authorities. It establishes a Board of Health and Public Works, that is, of such public works as shall be found necessary for health. Its duties are to investigate and report as to the condition of towns and districts, and, on their recommendation, powers will be given to Town Councils to execute such works as may be required; where there is no Corporation, the town may elect a body of men for the same purpose. The Act is confined to England, and includes London, which the bill of Lord Lincoln did not, the great Leviathan having facility of escaping the meshes of the Law. A power is given to the Crown of "extinguishing all bodies of Commissioners actin, under local acts, for any purpose connected with sanatory legislation, in order that their various powers may vest in one and the same authority. The Bill also proposes the appointment of an Inspector-General, to be an engineer of eminence, and of a Medical Inspector-General, in addition to the local surveyors and healt officers to be appointed by the local authorities. A power is given to be inserted in the Bill for enabling such authorities to contract with gas and water companies, to construct works, and, if necessary, compel the sale of such works, as already exist. The expense of permanent works will, by the Bill, be spread over a series of years, and imposed on occupiers, instead of owners."

PROCESSION OF MR. HUGHES'S THEATRICAL TROUPE OF ELEPHANTS, CAMELS, HORSES, &c. (SEE NEXT PAGE.)

Two things strike us as inconsistent in any Government undertaking to improve the health of the people, that it should continue the Window Tax, and permit Burial in Cities and Towns. If we are to go to the roots and causes of evils, here are two that ought to be exterminated forthwith. The Window Tax has darkened and stifled about two generations, and driven builders to devices for escaping the Exchequer, much more ingenious than sightly. It is not too much to say that Pitt has ruined the domestic architecture of England for the last forty years. There has not been a house built for the residence of a middle-class family, since the Window Tax was imposed, at all approaching in effect, convenience, and comfort, those of the days of Elizabeth and the Stuarts. We do not speak of mansions: the Sutherlands and Grosvenors are beyond the influence of the tax-gatherer; the impost is also lighter, in proportion, on palaces than on the rows of dingy boxes that are called houses, in "genteel" neighbourhoods. While this tax remains, effort will be arrested; light and air must be enfranchised, and builders released from counting windows, and planning houses with as few as possible. It is a stupid sacrifice of the main object to subordinate details—the minor accessory influencing the cost of life. That tax must and will be abolished. Burial in towns is to be dealt with by an act next year, so there are hopes of that shocking practice terminating. In all the cities of Europe it was prohibited ages ago. No one, who has not resided in London can form an idea of the indecency and reckless disregard of the most solemn ideas to which it gives rise. It profanes the service of the dead, shocks the feelings of the living, and makes the "breath of life" in some neighbourhoods almost a misnomer. The prohibition of city interments should have preceded any sanatory measure; but we cannot do everything at once—and, therefore, we presume the most easy and obvious steps are deferred till the last.

PROCESSION OF ELEPHANTS, CAMELS, AND HORSES.

THIS street spectacle may be regarded as a sort of walking advertisement of Easter pageant, to be produced at Drury Lane Theatre, on Monday next. The "Mammoth Troupe," it appears, reached the Euston-square terminus of the North Western Railway, on Saturday; and by various notes preliminary, in the newspapers of Sunday, the public were prepared for a very superb sight on Monday morning, when, it was announced, "a grand procession" of the establishment would take place from Euston-square, through the principal streets of the metropolis to premises provided for the troupe, in Farrington-street. Accordingly, on Monday morning, says a somewhat picturesque report of the affair, "In the interior of the terminus the greatest excitement prevailed during the preparations for the procession of elephants, camels, and the numerous steed, commenced early in the morning, and to the stranger the scene resembled an Asiatic cortège of a military character, so various were its hues, dresses, and appearance."

At about half past twelve o'clock, the gates of the terminus were opened, and the procession issued in the following order, amidst the cheers of the crowd:—1. The leader on horseback (the horse richly caparisoned in lime and gold, with yellow and scarlet trammings. 2. The magnificent dragon carriage, drawn by [illegible] animals with harnessed gold ornaments, and the panels painted with appropriate devices, which, with the crystals, stand full 20 feet high. This was placed the band, twelve in number, playing an eastern march. The carriage was driven by Mr. Wyld, the manager. 3. Two richly-ornamented travelling carriages, each drawn by two camels similarly accoutred, the drivers in costume. 4. Four large vans, termed dressing-room carriages, drawn by two horses each. 5. The grand Burmese elephant carriage, with the two elephants in Eastern costume, the driver similarly attired. 6. Mr. Hudson's open carriage, in which were Mrs Hughes and family. 7. Eight horsemen, single file, the animals in new and rich housings. 8. Eight ladies on horseback, similarly arranged, attired in riding habits. 9. Ten luggage vans, two horses each, in single file. 10. Mr. Hughes, the proprietor, in a carricle, built in the form of a magilus. 11. A large parade carriage, drawn by four horses, and driven by Mr. Webb, the curator. 12. Eight Burmese ponies, with housings of blue and gold, led by grooms. Last One camel, habited as the former ones, and led by four attendants, made up the cavalcade.

From the enormous number of persons who filled the streets, the procession moved at a slow pace, and by the time it reached Piccadilly, the crowd was immense. From Piccadilly the route taken was along Regent-street, Charing-cross, Westminster-bridge, Lambeth-road, and Blackfriars-bridge, to the premises prepared for the troupe in Farrington-street.

FASHIONS FOR APRIL.

THE present epoch of transition in dress gives an impetus to novelties of every species, and great nouveaux de mode are rivalling each other in the elegance and originality of their inventions. Many of the heads of these houses, such as that of Vouillon and Laure, and others, have gone to Paris to gather materials, and to view the novelties which are preparing for Longchamps so that, had the weather continued favourable, we might have seen the costumes of these worn in London on the same day, thanks to the present extraordinary expedition of travel.

After Easter it is de règle that a complete change should be effected in fashionable costume, both for the morning promenade, the afternoon drive, and for the evening soirées, and many hands are now busy at work for the purpose. For morning wear, straw bonnets will still be worn. They are too convenient and too pretty to be relinquished: the forms will be changed, being rounded and close; the style of trimming will undergo some alterations, but must always be very simple.

Crape and gaze riz are the materials adopted for bonnets of more ceremony, for the first-rate houses in Paris. Pink, white, Nemours blue, vert d'Islay, and Nankin colours, are the shades which obtain most favour; they will be trimmed with flowers, and very little ribbon; the farther we advance, the more simplicity in head-dress seems to be desired. Those mixtures of blonde, of flowers, feathers, and ribbons formerly in vogue, are not to be seen on persons possessing real pretensions to fashion and elegance. Flowers, or a single feather, with a little ribbon, are now more than sufficient trimming for any bonnet.

Black will be much worn this season, even in hot weather, only the materials will be lighter. Black mantelets, for morning wear, in silk, trimmed with lace, will be much in favour. For the evening, dresses will be made in black moire, for dinner wear, and for balls, in black tulle, with three skirts, looped up with bouquets or agrafes of pink roses or camellias. Black is always becoming, [illegible]y to those ladies who are inclined to embonpoint. For a brune, nothing [illegible]on decorating such a costume is of black lace, with large roses, [illegible]es.

Evening dresses are made rather décolleés on the shoulders. The berthes of [illegible]. The boddice is frequently trimmed with a number of little boudillons of [illegible] which are also placed on the sleeves, and intermixed frequently with a [illegible] precious stones, and even of diamonds.

[illegible]s much employed on dresses of pink moire. It is twisted like a garland, and forms a tablier in front of the skirt; it is looped and [illegible] at intervals with puffings of ribbon.

For dresses for large parties flowered damasks, moires antiques; and materials of this rich description will abandon their rivals, for nothing can exceed their distinction and good taste; brocaded dresses, with borders and flow[illegible] frequently selected for Court dresses, and damask for the train—such, at least, was the favourite costume at the first Drawing-room.

The greater number of the young ladies, on that occasion, chose dresses of a lighter material, such as three skirts of tulle over white silk, looped up with [illegible] of sprengled tulle, will be much worn to obtain most favour; they will be trimmed with [illegible] and flowers. The Court head dress is much changed from what it used to be. The pyramid of feathers formerly worn is replaced by three or four, which, instead of standing upright, are placed almost horizontally and encircle the face. A new style of ball dress, much spoken of, is [illegible] crêpe lisse embroidered in gold, and worn over a petticoat of white satin. Various [illegible]fures will be composed of gold and silver, with branches of flowers of green leaves, fringed with givres, and filling like foliage.

The turbans à la Jules, in white crêpe lis[illegible]th lace bar[illegible] of sprengled tulle, will be much worn to obtain most favour; they will be trimmed with [illegible] and flowers.

The favourite materials for morning dresses will be light—Scotch plaids. [illegible]ks, in the most delicate colours, and thin materials with the [illegible]

[illegible]er the best materials and colours, such as China Lilac, Nemours, [illegible]vaukin, will be in requisition; a great deal of lace, a great [illegible]umber of bows of ribbon, small tight sleeves, long waists, and very full skirts, with a small train, will be the favourite style.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday

Our guidonnes have been, for the last [illegible], on the tip-toe of curiosity, on account of the arrival of Mr. O'Connell [illegible] the masses was that the Liberator, approaching the term.sati[illegible], was desirous to be ushered at the feasi-nuaires of [illegible]. In the v[illegible]e of Le Vichier, Without loss of time, all those who are in search of m[illegible], were in motion to [illegible]mise the political invalid with their speeches and "visi[illegible]s state." Besides [illegible]te Doctors and the [illegible]ers, [illegible] have succeeded the Marquis de la Rochejaquelin, the leader of the aristocratic Legitimists, and M. de Montalembert, the head of the young Catholic party of France in the Chamber of Peers. The latter—whose mother, by the by, was an English lady—has alone been able to plant a speech, published in the French papers, having headed with an oration a body of visitors, to whom the hero of the Emer[illegible] was compelled to make an answer. Mr. O'Connell, in the [illegible] of Le Vichier, dyspnœa, and in a very precarious state of health; such, indeed, that I am of opinion he will finish his career in Rome, where not only the Pope, but many English Catholic prelates, such as Cardinal Weld, and the renowned Oxford divines, are preparing for his reception. In vain has the hospitality of Lord Normanby and other English residents been offered to the wayfarer—he is hastening to where his mind may find peace with the heads of his religion; at the same time, the balmy air of a more genial clime may soothe his bodily sufferings. The presence of this celebrated Irish giant of politics—he who has shown what mighty resolutions in Great Britain personal energy can effect, without shaking in the least the foundations of the State—naturally is the absorbing topic

Beyond this we have been entertained by deaths and marriages with our volatile countrymen—the serious and the gay being equally commingled. Mdlle. Mars' obsequies in which took place the burial of all that was left of comedy itself—has of course set in motion all the dealers in bon mots and orations, and all the gobemouches who are ever agape are willing to swallow their regrets and regales in due repetition. Now, the subject to the Parisians is already worn threadbare, and reduced to such sapless discoveries as that Mdlle. Mars (Mars, in French, meaning March) left the scene on the 20th of March, and was buried in March. Her burial has quite eclipsed the obsequies of the late Minister, Marrin du Nord, and other recently defunct worthies of France. Now marriages have their turn. First comes that of the greatest and liberal General de Lamoricière, who, instead of marrying M. Thiers' beautiful sister-in-law, is about to choose for his better half a fair aristocrate from the Faubourg St. Germain, to the infinite indignation of the Democrats. Another marriage on the tapis, and immediately forthcoming, is that of the daughter of Georges Sand. As you of course are aware, this is but the pseudonyme of the celebrated bas bleu stocking Madame Dudevant, who, with the nails sous le guerre of George Sand, adopted the masculine dress and many of the accompanying habits, from smoking to duelling. Still is the bride everywhere called Miss Georges Sand, and probably will be married under that name—as if she had been born on the 40

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS Monday.

The Army Enlistment Bill.—The Marquis of Londonderry moved for copies of such correspondence as might have taken place in reference to the Limited Enlistment Bill, between the Government and the Horse Guards.—Lord Grey, on the ground that it would be detrimental to the public service to give up the correspondence referred to, declined to accede to the motion.—The Earl of Cardigan supported the motion, and stated some objections to the plan of limited enlistment, drawn from the experience he had had of the operation of such a system in other countries. In France, the regular troops had actually been beaten in popular commotions, not for want of courage and discipline, but because the troops consisted of old soldiers, and still disciplined at the depôts. This was a consideration not to be lost sight of, and he trusted it would have its due weight with their Lordships.—The Marquis of Londonderry complained that Earl Grey had confined himself to the production of the most official grounds, without entering into the reasons for or against the measure to which his motion referred.—The motion was withdrawn; and soon afterwards the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. Monday.

Employment on Public Works in Ireland.—Mr. Labouchere, in reply to a question put to him by Mr. S O'Brien, stated that the reduction of 20 per cent. of the numbers of those employed on the public works in Ireland, now going on, was to be a reduction of 20 per cent. in the aggregate, and not necessarily a reduction to that extent in every locality. The reductions proposed had, with one or two exceptions, taken place so far without any disturbance, and he had every reason to hope that it would be carried to completion without any serious difficulty or disturbance.

State of Spain.—Mr. Bortwick asked Lord Palmerston whether any communication had taken place between her Majesty's Government and the Government of Spain, in reference to the "brutal" and "atrocious" proclamation recently issued by General Breton, Captain-General of the province of Catalonia. The proclamation, he said, was of a most sanguinary character. One part of it ordained the punishment of death "upon every person who shall be taken, with or without arms, if accompanying any rebel bands—upon all spies—upon every individual carrying letters or despatches for the rebels—upon all who, after having served with the rebels, shall have taken refuge in the towns or country houses—and upon every person who shall receive or conceal in his house any of the wounded, or fugitives, of the rebel forces." Mr. Borthwick contrasted the proclamation with a circular which had been recently issued by the Queen of Montemolin, requesting all the partisans of Don Carlos to refrain from reprisals, were the atrocities threatened by the proclamation alluded to put in force against them. General Breton had been superseded in the government of Catalonia by General Pavia, who, according to the information derived from the journals of Madrid and Barcelona, had adopted the proclamation of his predecessor, and had intimated his determination to act upon it.—Viscount Palmerston said that no official information, in reference to the proclamation, had reached the Government, and that, consequently, no communication upon the subject had passed between the two Governments. As to the sentiments entertained by her Majesty's Government with regard to such proceedings, a debate of the House would understand them by consulting his own feelings, which must be those of disapprobation, disgust, and indignation, at such barbarous emanations from any of the Spanish authorities. While blaming and censuring these proceedings, however, the House ought to bear in mind that these atrocities were not of very recent date. It was impossible to forget the decree of Durango (hear, hear); and in the last civil war atrocities were not entirely on the side of the Queen's troops; they had prevailed on both sides, with this difference, that, while Don Carlos had issued the decree of Durango, none such had been issued on the part of the Queen. But the barbarous practice of shooting prisoners did not originate even at that period; it would be remembered that military murders were committed under the Government of a former period

THE POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

The House again went into Committee on this Bill.

Mr. Gregory proposed a clause to the effect that no person in possession of more than a quarter of an acre of land should be entitled to relief, unless it should be satisfactorily proved that he had parted with and surrendered his title and occupation of the same.

This proposition provoked a long conversation, but, on a division, it was carried by 117 to 17.

Lord G. Bentinck proposed two clauses—one of which prohibited, for the future, from 1847, the occupying tenant from deducting any part of the poor rates now payable by him from his lessor. The object of the clause was to assimilate the law in Ireland to the law in England. The noble Lord, in an animated strain, condemned the course pursued by the Government towards the people of Ireland, a course which, he said, had led to an enormous sacrifice of human life. Their Free-Trade principles, it appeared, extended to Free-Trade in the lives of the poor Irish; and, although they had wantonly lavished the money of the public, yet they were now anxious to conceal the extent of the mortality in Ireland, to which their policy had mainly contributed. He believed that for centuries no Government in any country whatever had allowed so large a body of subjects to perish, without extending a hand to save them, as the Irish Government had done within the last twelve months.

Mr. Labouchere denied that the Government had been indifferent to the sufferings of the people of Ireland, or that they had been anxious to conceal the extent of the mortality in that country; and this denial he gave to the noble Lord in terms as explicit, direct, and unequivocal, as his respect for the House would permit.

The first clause was negatived on a division, and Lord G. Bentinck withdrew the other. The Committee continued the debate upon the bill till past two o'clock on Tuesday morning.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Tuesday.

The business to-day was of a mere formal nature.

The Royal Assent was given, by commission, to the Drainage of Land Bill and some private bills.

On the motion of Lord Colville, a return was ordered of the Minutes of Proceedings, and a list of Peers who voted at the last election of Representative Peers of Scotland.

Lord Montegle gave notice that it was his intention to submit a motion, after Easter, on the subject of emigration.

On the motion of Earl Grey, their Lordships adjourned for the Easter recess to Thursday, the 15th of April: they will then meet in the new house.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

Lord Morpeth announced the nature of the measure proposed by the Government for the amelioration of the sanitory condition of the people. He prefaced his speech by some valuable statistics, proving how mortality was increased by insufficient drainage and ventilation, and scantiness of food and clothing. There was a very great waste of life from these causes. The evil being thus admitted, it was clearly the duty of the Government to interfere. He would admit that the greater part of the proposed measure was founded upon Lord Lincoln's bill; but there were some essential alterations. The Government suggested that a board, somewhat similar to that which was established last session, should be appointed; the board so appointed to consist of five members, three of whom are to be paid, and one a member of the Government, who is to act as a member of the Board without pay; and it was also proposed that the person holding the office who be Lord Morpeth) held, namely, the First Commissioner of Works and Forests, should be ex officio the Chairman of this Board. (Hear.) It was proposed to call the body so constituted "The Board of Health and Public Works," who, on the application of the inhabitants of a town or district, wherever it might be necessary to direct an inquiry to be made into the sanitory condition of any such town or district, should be empowered to recommend to the Crown the appointment of inspectors, to proceed to such town or district, and make all necessary inquiries and sufficient surveys, as well as to give all necessary directions with respect to streams and water-courses, and define the proper area in which any such works might be carried on. (Hear, hear.) The Board was then after receiving the report of the inspectors, if there should be a necessity for so doing—to recommend that an Order in Council should be issued, conferring the necessary powers on a local Administration for the purpose of carrying all the sanitory arrangements which may be required into effect. As a proper supply of water was a great point, it was proposed that the powers of directing drainage, sewers, paving, and the measures for the supply of water, should be placed under the same controul, and to give all the powers enumerated to the body appointed to carry out these regulations on the spot, and to be provided for the purpose with proper functions. The Government thought that there were already too many electoral bodies, and therefore recommended that, in all towns and cities where bodies were already in existence for municipal purposes, those bodies should be selected for carrying out the sanitory objects of this measure. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) The only difficulty anticipated in this mode of carrying out the measure was from the occurrence, where bits of suburbs or portions of districts in the neighborhood of the towns or cities which are not included in the electoral wards, should be so circumstanced as to make it necessary to include them within the area in which those sanitory measures are to be carried on. Where such should be the case, the Government proposed to give a power to add to the electoral districts or wards, or even to create new wards if necessary. Lord Morpeth then said that the bill would apply at present to England only.—"This bill does not include in any of its provisions Ireland or Scotland, not that I do not fully believe that their condition with respect to the evils to be found in the reports to which I have adverted is not more crying, more revolting a nature, and still more pressing than our own; but because I believe that there are great difficulties connected with embracing in the one parchment the condition of three countries with respect to such subjects as those inclinded in this measure. I know, however, that my right honourable friends connected with Ireland and Scotland, within whose province the preparation of measures on the subject would fall, will give their best attention to the working of the bill, with a view to adopting it to the circumstances of their countries, and to rendering its operation efficient." (Hear, hear, hear.) The powers of several Commissioners in London would be superseded. The bill would extend to the metropolis. There was a provision, "that, by an Order in Council, to be issued under this Act, all the Commissioners of Sewers are to be superseded, the rate-payers are to be allowed to elect Commissioners for sanitory purposes, and the Crown is to have power to add a number not exceeding one-third of the number of Commissioners so elected. A larger Commission was thought necessary for London, and the Crown would also have a larger chance in adding to the number, from men fitted by their station, their knowledge, their disinterestedness, and their practical philanthrophy, to discharge efficiently the duties which will devolve upon them. The bill had endeavoured to get rid of conflicting jurisdictions in municipal matters. It would also contain a power to appoint an Inspector of Nuisances, who would see to the removal of substances that might be prejudical to the public health. Provisions would also be incorporated in the bill for preventing the nuisance of smoke. (Hear, hear.) The bill would also contain provisions for the proper ventilation of buildings, and the Commissioners would be empowered to light the towns, and to enter into contracts with gas companies, if they thought proper, for that purpose. Lord Morpeth reverted to the importance of an ample supply of water, and quoted some authorities to prove the evils arising from an insufficient quantity. "I believe (said Lord Morpeth) it will be acknowledged that in many districts even in this metropolis, the supply of water is too scanty and expensive. I stated by Mr. Toynbee, that "the water is only to aid us in the work," and a supply only three times a week, and, at each time the water comes on, the film of dust and blacks that has been deposited on the surface is mixed up with the previous accumulations. The same water is used for cooking bread, by a baker who supplies a great number of the poor." Dr. Oddi says, that the "water retained in the rooms of the poor, for domestic purposes, soon becomes covered with black scum, and there is generally a filthy sediment at the bottom of the water butts. The fatigue of fetching a proper supply, which ought to be 45 gallons a-day for a cottage, is most wearying." Mr Hawksley states, that "it is perfectly well known to those acquainted with the feelings and habits of labourers, they regard it as an intolerable nuisance on their return home, tired with the day's labour, to have to fetch water from a distance out of doors, in cold or in wet, in frost or in snow." It seems that we are not much advanced from the days of Andromache, whose fate it was

To bring
The weight of waters from the rocks a stream

With a view, therefore, to the due supply of water to every house, the Commissioners are empowered to make contracts with water companies." The question of rates had hitherto been an indirect obstacle to improvements in this respect. There was something in the very sound of "rates" which militates against health, industry, content, and all the virtues. Some money, however, must be raised. It was a necessary tribute which property must pay. It must be paid, in the first instance, by those who earned their bread by the sweat of their brow, though it would not be long before they would find the inestimable advantage which improved health would confer Lord Morpeth wound up his explanation of the bill in these words: "I feel that, in a matter so large and so complicated, many imperfections will be discovered, and that many oversights have occurred in the bill which we propose to bring in. I can only say that it has been framed with an honest intention, and with the single view of the public good, and must thankful shall I be if the measure, after undergoing consideration by Parliament, and receiving ultimately the sanction of the Throne, shall, in its result, effect in some degree, but we are sanguine to hope, to diminish, in some degree, those noxious influences which now so painfully afflict so large a proportion of our towns and cities to hunt down to their source, if we can, the prevailing causes of disease—to let in pure air and wholesome water—to purify by every means in our power the filth and stench, and their attendant consequences, bodily weakness and depression, fever, and the death-dealing pestilence; and thus we hope to lengthen the lives and add to the happiness of all classes of our fellow-countrymen." (Cheers.) Lord Morpeth having moved for leave to bring in the bill, which was entitled a bill for the improvement of the Health of Towns,

Mr. Mackinnon seconded the bill, which he thought more comprehensive than the bill introduced last session by Lord Lincoln. He feared, however, that the noble Lord had not sufficiently calculated the opposition he would have to encounter, more particularly in the metropolis; but no hopes of success would be commensurate with the courage with which he had commenced the undertaking.

The Earl of Lincoln thought the bill could scarcely be said to be more comprehensive than the one he had introduced two years ago, for nearly all its chief provisions were to be found in that bill. The noble Earl then stated several objections to the measure, and deprecated the rashness of Lord Morpeth in attempting to extend the operation of the bill to the metropolis an attempt which must lead to a signal failure.

Leave was given to bring in the bill, and the second reading was appointed for Friday, April 23.

The Army Service Bill.—Sir H. Douglas moved that the bill be committed that day six months. The bill, he contended, in no way tended to the interests of the soldiers, or of the classes from amongst whom they were drawn. A discussion arose—Mr. Fox Maule defended the bill, and said there was no real ground for inferring that the Duke of Wellington was hostile to it. It ultimately went through Committee, pro formâ.

The Mutiny Bill was read a third time and passed; and the House adjourned at a quarter past one o'clock on Wednesday morning.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday

The House met at twelve o'clock, and disposed of some miscellaneous business

Lord J. Russell, in answer to Captain Pechell, said that the Poor-Law Commissioners Bill would be introduced immediately after the recess

The report on the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill was received, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time on Friday, the 16th of April

The Customs Duties Bill was read a third time and passed

The Army Service Bill. The House went into Committee on the Army Service Bill. On the clause limiting the period of the first enlistment to ten years, Sir Howard Douglas moved an amendment that the first period of enlistment be for fourteen years.—After a discussion, the Committee divided—

For the clause	.. .. ..	42
Against it	.. .. ..	27
Majority for the clause	.. ..	15

The remaining clauses were agreed to, and the report was ordered to be received on the 12th of April.

The House then adjourned for the Easter Recess, till Monday, the 12th inst.

POLICE.

AN ARTIST CHARGED WITH UTTERING A FORGED CHEQUE.

On Wednesday, at Marlborough-street, Henry J. Dender, an artist, was charged with having uttered a forged cheque for £190, with intent to defraud the Union Bank of London Company.

Mr. Clark, the manager of the Argyll-place branch of the Union Bank of London, said the prisoner, on Tuesday, presented a cheque for £190, purporting to have been drawn by Mr. F W. Chappell, solicitor, of Golden-square, who banked with the Company. As the signature differed from the usual mode of signing adopted by Mr. Chappell, the cashier brought the cheque to his private room, and he then directed that the prisoner should be introduced to him, for the purpose of being questioned. When the prisoner entered the private room, he asked him where he had got the cheque from? The prisoner said he got it from a person named Arnold, with whom he had been in the habit of occasionally taking a social glass. The cheque had been given to him in a letter, which he produced. The letter purported to have been written from 3, Walcot-square. The prisoner said he had no very intimate acquaintance with the writer Arnold. He had met him that day in Piccadilly, near the Egyptian Hall, and had consented to present the cheque, which he believed was genuine. A message was then sent to Mr. Chappell's office, but Mr. Chappell was out. The prisoner told witness he lived at No. 4, Spring-gardens. His explanation of the way in which the cheque came into his possession appeared to be so candid that he was allowed to leave the bank, on an understanding that at a future time he would give further explanation, if needed. It was afterwards ascertained that the cheque was a forgery, and a police-constable was employed to take him into custody. The prisoner's real address was at No. 8, Little Albury-street, Pimlico.

Police-constable C 146, Jeapes, said he took the prisoner into custody for uttering a forged cheque. The prisoner said he certainly presented the cheque, but he did not know it was a forgery. He produced the letter in which he had received the cheque.

Mr. Chappell said the cheque was not in his handwriting.

The prisoner accounted for saying that he lived at 4, Spring-gardens, by stating that he had Lord Abinger's permission to use his library.

The prisoner was remanded.

A COLLECTOR ACCUSED OF EMBEZZLEMENT.

At Worship-street, on Wednesday, John Price, late a collector in the service of the Commissioners of Pavement of the Whitechapel district, was re-examined on a charge of having embezzled various sums, amounting to £70, which he had received in the capacity of collector, appointed by them.

Mr. Jennings, clerk to the Commissioners, stated that the prisoner had filled the situation of collector about six years, but at a meeting of the Board on the 25th of February last, was discharged from his situation. It was the duty of the prisoner annually to send in a return of his accounts to be audited, but upon this occasion he only produced his books, from an examination of which it appeared that there was a balance of £8 14s. due from to the Commissioners for rates he had received; and the prisoner tacitly admitted that to be the amount of his liability, by handing over that sum a few days afterwards. It was discovered by his successor, however, upon going to the rate-payers, that rates to the amount of £70 had been received by him, and he was given into custody.

The prisoner's solicitor contended that the evidence adduced was wholly insufficient to establish any really criminal charge on behalf of the prisoner, who had not had sufficient time allowed him to account for the amounts in dispute.

Mr. Broughton, however, thought that he was bound to commit the prisoner on the score of embezzlement, but took bail for his appearance at the sessions, himself in £400, and two sureties in £150 each

The Royal Society.—The Marquis of Northampton, as President of the Royal Society, gave his last soirée this season on Saturday evening, at his residence in Piccadilly; and no less than 800 persons were present. His Royal Highness Prince Albert was amongst the visitors. The different rooms afforded considerable pleasure to those interested in scientific pursuits, and in the evening, by the variety of objects submitted for inspection. The noble Marquis, previous to the reception, entertained several of the members of the council of the Royal Society at dinner.

Death from Drinking.—On Monday afternoon, as a cart was passing through the West India Dock-gate, Blackwall, the tail of the cart not having been properly secured, a puncheon of rum was tilted out, and the cask having started, it was immediately surrounded by a number of individuals, who greedily swallowed the spirit, which was thirty-nine degrees over proof. One man, named William Pattison, drank such a quantity that he was found next morning, at one o'clock, by a constable, in a state of insensibility outside the Railway Tavern, [illegible]. He was immediately removed to the Arbour-square station, when medical aid was sent for. Dr. Baillie was in prompt attendance, and extracted no more than a pint and a half of pure spirit, and not a particle of food. Every effort that medical skill could suggest was used, but the unfortunate man gradually sank till two o'clock, when he expired.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A Correspondent at Copenhagen states that the King of Denmark entertains the intention of granting to his people constitutional institutions. The assemblies of the States will be convoked separately for three days. They will each have seven delegates, making in all twenty-eight, who will meet at Copenhagen, and discuss in concert the proposed constitution, and come to a mutual understanding upon the interests of the kingdom and the duchies.

Letters from Rome of the 18th ult., announce, that among the papers seized on a refugee implicated in the last conspiracy discovered at Ancona, were several documents showing that Austria was intriguing against the Pope's Government. Those papers having been forwarded to Rome. The Pope sent for the Ambassador. Their interview is said to have been very animated, and when the Pope conducted the Ambassador to the door, he told him, in the presence of the attendants—"I give you my blessing; but you may write to your Sovereign, that if he expects to intimidate me, he is greatly mistaken."

The latest advices from Batavia mention the preparation by the Dutch Authorities of another expedition against the inhabitants of the island of Bally, which was to start next month, to bring the resident chiefs to submission, they having by fresh hostilities broken the stipulated terms of the recent peace.

During the trial of the Chesterfield murder case at Derby, of which a report was given in our paper last week, it was deemed necessary to have a fact deposed to by a witness residing at the former place. The telegraph was had recourse to, and scarcely five minutes had elapsed from the time of sending the message till an answer was received, saying that the witness would come by the next train!

In the statement of the proceeds of the sale of ladies' work in Dundee, last week, the following entry occurs:—"His Grace the Duke of Wellington, per a lady, £5." The explanation of this is, that a young lady of that town wrote to his Grace explaining the object of the sale, and sending a few autographs, which, she said, would doubtless find ready and liberal purchasers. His Grace politely declined the request, but enclosed a £5 note instead, giving his opinion that it would be more valuable than the autograph.

Lord Howden has sailed from Portsmouth in her Majesty's ship Rattler, for South America. The news received of the defeat of Riviera by the troops of Orbe, close to Monte Video, will probably bring his mission for the settlement of pacific terms between the contending parties to a more easy and prompt termination.

The Turkish Government have issued a decree prohibiting, after six weeks, the exportation of corn to any country [illegible] except Austria, Venice, Sardinia, Ancona, Arienis, Delvino, Sirhaia, Rodesto, Salonica, Janina, Prevesa, Brousa, Saroukan, Aiden, Corria, Trebizond, Castamoum, Nicomedia, and Smyrna.

Among the most remarkable shipments from China, to foreign countries which have recently taken place, may be mentioned one of a considerable quantity of opera-glasses, actually so called, and of habit glasses.

The King of Prussia is said, on the authority of letters from Berlin, to be about to grant a more extended system of religious toleration than that which now exists in Prussia. Some alterations respecting the liberty of the press are also talked of.

A return just presented to Parliament shows that the balance due by the public on the 31st of March, 1846, to depositors in military savings' banks, amounted to £47,938, and the numbers of depositors to 4177.

A letter from Ascension, dated Jan. 1, 1847, contains the following:—"We have just received news of a most horrible massacre on the coast. A slave depôt called Gallinas, known by have 2000 slaves ready for shipping, was closely blockaded by our cruisers that the slave owners finding it impossible to embark the slaves, and not wishing to incur the expense of feeding them, actually in cold blood beheaded the whole number, placing their heads on poles stuck in the beach, saying, if you will not allow us to make profit of prisoners we take in war, we will kill all."

It is stated, from Munich, that accounts have been received there of the King of Greece having been suddenly attacked by severe illness.

The Courrier du Havre says, "The Pauline, merchantman, just arrived from Rio de Janeiro at Havre, was the bearer of despatches announcing that the ship Mutuve had brought to Buenos Ayres orders from the Governments of England and France to Messrs. Gore and Baron Bedlands, to sign the treaty concluded between the Argentine Republic, President Orbe, and Le Envoy, Mr. Hood."

Letters from Munich announce the demise of Baron Anton de Cetto, who expired in that city on the 23rd ultimo, at the advanced age of eighty-seven years. The deceased in former years fulfilled many important diplomatic appointments, and enjoyed the full confidence of his Sovereign. During the reign of Napoleon he was Bavarian Minister Plenipotentiary at Paris.

A fête days ago the following massacre was committed at Nedouchel (Pas de Calais). A father strangled his two children, one six and the other only four years old, in order that he might become the uncontrolled possessor of some little property which they inherited.

Marshal Soult entered his eighty-third year on Monday last. He was made a Marshal of France in 1804, and, consequently, has held that rank forty-three years.

The sum of £30 was collected at the English church at Boulogne, on the Fast-day, for the relief of the destitute Irish.

We infer, from some accounts from Athens, that the Turco-Grecian difference is not arranged. By the French steamer, a note was addressed to M. Aupick, Minister, the Greek Chargé d'Affaires, with directions to lay the same before the Turkish Minister for Foreign Affairs. It appears that M. Coletti has requested the Sultan to nominate another Minister in the place of M. Mussuris, after which the King of Greece will give every reasonable satisfaction that his Imperial Majesty may demand. The Sultan, however, is firm in adhering strictly to the letter of the first note addressed.

A letter from Munich, dated March 20, says:—"The estate to be given to Lola Montez is not at Starnberg, on the lake of that name. It is a castle and small estate of Sternfeld, in Franconia. The lady wanted to purchase it; but, as no one can hold land who is not naturalised, she applied for letters of naturalisation, which she would have had to do had she been neither a dancer nor a politician. The case, in the regular course of things, would then have come before the council of state.

A shocking murder, a most unusual thing for Egypt, was committed at Alexandria on the evening of the 19th ultimo, on the person of an Italian horsedealer, who, while riding on one of the public roads, was shot through the head. No one saw the fatal deed, but a strong suspicion had been laid against another Italian, a rival in trade, who was seen riding behind him, and between whom and the murdered man there had always existed a most inveterate hatred. His has been arrested.

The Nieuwe Courant of the 28th ultimo, reports that his Majesty the King of the Netherlands was seized on the 27th with oppression about the region of the heart, accompanied by violent palpitations. Complete repose not having been enjoyed by any one of the members of the family, and the previous evening hard and rapid, recourse was had to copious bleeding, which was soon followed by an improvement. After a tolerably good night, the oppression and palpitation returned, but were again checked, and by the last bulletin his Majesty was much better.

The Mastership in Chancery, vacant by the retirement of Mr. Lynch, will, it is said, be conferred on Mr. Commissioner Shadwell.

In consequence of the continued high price of provisions, there were riots on the 23th ultimo, at Funfhaus, a village in the environs of Vienna; the bakers' and other shops were forcibly entered, and a quantity of bread and other provisions were carried off; but a detachment of hussars soon dispersed the mob. No act of personal violence was committed.

By a Parliamentary return, we learn that the average daily number of persons employed on Relief works in Ireland during the week ending the 20th of March was 683,932, at the weekly cost of £281,264.

The entire village of Meimbressen, in the Electorate of Cassel, is offered for sale, as all the inhabitants, amounting to 600 souls, are about to emigrate to America. The village consists of 80 houses.

The Sheffield Independent mentions that the Austrian Government has doubled the export duty on corn from the frontiers of Silesia and Moldavia.

A few days ago, a young man was arrested at Rome, in a coffee-house frequented by foreign artists, for having spoken disrespectfully of the Pope. He called himself Count Baldi, a native of Corsica, and in his lodgings several poignards, air-guns, and other prohibited arms, were found. He stated that he had intended to assassinate Pius IX. on the day on which his Holiness should distribute religious banners to the different quarters of Rome. He is said to be implicated in the conspiracy recently discovered at Rome and Ancona.

The railroad from Leipsic to Oderburg (Austria), the point of junction northward of Prussian Silesia, was opened on the 22nd of this month. The grand bridge over the Danube, which was damaged by the breaking up of the ice, has been completely repaired, and the trains can again go over it.

The late R. H. Clarke, Esq., of Dulwich, who died on the 7th of March, [illegible] possessed of £20,000 in personal property. He has by his will [illegible] the bulk of his [illegible] to the Dulwich College, and in his lodgings several poignards, air-guns, and other prohibited arms, were found. He stated that he had intended to assassinate Pius IX. on the day on which his Holiness should distribute religious banners to the different quarters of Rome. He is said to be implicated in the conspiracy recently discovered at Rome and Ancona.

The railroad from Leipsic to Oderburg (Austria), the point of junction northward of Prussian Silesia, was opened on the 22nd of this month. The grand bridge over the Danube, which was damaged by the breaking up of the ice, has been completely repaired, and the trains can again go over it.

The late R. H. Clarke, Esq., of Dulwich, who died on the 7th of March, [illegible] possessed of £20,000 in personal property. He has by his will [illegible] the bulk of his [illegible] to the Dulwich College, but [illegible] to the cousins

We understand that the public will be admitted to see the new House of Lords, on the days on which it will be open before it, under the last regulations the Lord Great Chamberlain can make for the general convenience.

The Augsburg Gazette states that the Government of Saxony is negotiating, with the House of Rothschild, for a loan to be applied in completing the railroads of that kingdom.

During the week ending the 28th of March, 662 passengers arrived at Boulogne; of these, 382 sailed from Folkestone and 80 from Ostend; 514 left Boulogne; 498 for Folkestone, 2 for Dover, and 1 for London. The passengers to and from Calais number [illegible]

The new large station built at the [illegible] and junction of the Eastern Counties Railway was opened to the public on [illegible] It is so constructed as to accommodate the trains on the Cambridge and Colchester lines.

NEW BRITISH POSSESSION—THE ISLAND OF LABUAN.

A late Overland Mail brought the important intelligence of the incorporation of the Island of Labuan and its dependencies with the British dominions; the English flag having been formally hoisted on the Island, on the 24th of December, with the customary honours, in the presence of the Borneo Chiefs, and a multitude of the Malay population. A treaty between the British Government and Sultan of Borneo, was formally ratified on the occasion, having for its object:—1. To establish lasting friendship; 2. The cession in perpetuity of the Island of Labuan to the British Crown; and, 3. To insure a mutual understanding for active efforts on both sides towards the suppression of piracy. Already, it appeared that many of the natives of Borneo have manifested a disposition to settle on the Island; but this, in the absence of instructions from England, has not been allowed. Sickness is reported to have prevailed to a considerable extent among the crews of the British vessels; and Commander Gordon, of her Majesty's ship Wolf, is stated to have died of jungle-fever, brought on, it is believed, by over-exertion; and, also, in consequence of the clearing of a large space on the shore, which had produced the miasma usually resulting from newly-exposed ground. The same cause, coupled with carelessness in eating the native fruits, is believed to have occasioned the prevailing sickness amongst the crews, rather than any peculiarities of the Island, inherently unfavourable to health; the experience of Mr. Brooke, at Sarawak, having sufficiently demonstrated that, with ordinary prudence, Borneo is as healthy as any other tropical region of the East; whilst there is, moreover, reason to anticipate that Labuan would possess advantages, in this respect, over the main land.

The colonisation of Borneo has been mooted; but it seems desirable that the first efforts of England should be directed towards Labuan, whence, as the centre of an active trade, our influence over the natives of Borneo, and of the islands of the Archipelago in general, would best extend. The acquisition of Labuan is, altogether, very important, considered not only with respect to the natural productions which it opens up, but also in its bearings upon India and Australia.

By aid of a Correspondent, we have engraved a specimen of the Malay natives of Borneo, who have already evinced such readiness to avail themselves of settlement upon our newly-acquired territory. The sketch was made not many months since at Singapore. The Malays, it will be remembered, occupy nearly the whole coast of Borneo, only a few tracts along it being still in the possession of the Dayacks. Though rather indolent, they are not deficient in military spirit, and have formed a great number of small states. Their complexion is generally brown, but varies a little in the different tribes; their costume, as the Illustration shows, is not unpicturesque.

Some interesting details of the ceremony of taking possession of Labuan have since been received, and thus given in the Hampshire Telegraph:—

"The Iris and Wolf dressed ship, Royal salutes were fired, marines and small armed men landed, and Pangeran Mourmea, the Prime Minister, with all the chief rajahs, nobles, and several hundreds of Borneans, attended on shore, and their picturesque prows anchored close to the beach, with flags and banners, had a beautiful effect. Captain Mundy addressed the assembled natives in a short speech, explanatory of the English and Borneo Governments, which Lieutenent Heath put into Malay, and which seemed to give universal satisfaction; the great majority declaring their anxiety for protection from the ferocious pirates, and wishing for peaceful trade. A sumptuous repast was afterwards given to the natives, princes, and people, under tents erected on Point Pasley, and conviviality was kept up till sunset, when the Mussulmen returned to their fleet. Pangeran Mourmea and all the nobles visited the Iris on the following day, and afterwards returned to Brumi. The pirates had not appeared since the decisive operations of Sir Thomas Cochrane in July, and it is to be hoped the navigation will henceforth be secure. The Iris was at Labuan on the 12th of January with the Wolf. Trade had commenced most favourably, and all that was passing proved the correctness of judgment of the Rear-Admiral in his late measures, as well as the soundness of advice given by that excellent man Mr. Brooke, the Great Lord Rajah, as the natives call him."

MALAY NATIVE OF BORNEO.—SKETCHED AT SINGAPORE.

FESTIVAL OF CORPUS CHRISTI, AT MADRID.

This imposing ceremony, sketched by our Artist during his late visit to Madrid, is a portion of the observance of the Holy Week, when horses and carriages are not seen in the city, and the streets are filled with such exhibitions as that depicted in our Illustration. It is a Good Friday pageant, whose paraphernalia we need not individually describe to the reader.

Mr. Ford, in his admirable "Handbook of Spain," gives some very piquant details of these processional celebrations, wher. the Pasos, as the idol figures are called, are borne in triumph through the streets; though the Paso strictly speaking, means the figure of the Saviour during his passion.

"These Pasos," says Mr. Ford, "are only brought out on grand occasions, principally during the Holy Week. The rest of the year they are stowed away in regular store-houses. The expense is very great, both in the construction and costume of the machinery, and in the number of persons employed in managing and attending the ceremonial. The French invasion, the progress of poverty, and advance of intellect, have tended to reduce the number of Pasos, which amounted previously to more than fifty in Seville alone. Every parish had its own figure or group, which were paraded in the Holy Week; particular incidents of Our Saviour's passion were represented by Companies, Brotherhoods, or Guilds, and these took their name from the image or mystery which they upheld."

However great the distress, Mr. Ford tells us that money is seldom wanting, for these ceremonies gratify many national peculiarities. First, the show delights old and young, then it is an excuse for a holiday, for making most days in the week a Sunday, and for an exhibition of dress hallowed with a character of doing a religious duty. The members thus gratifying their personal vanity and love of parade. costume, and titles; and their tinsel, moreover, passes for a meritorious act.

After the suppression of convents, and appropriation of church property, a new tax was imposed, ostensibly to defray the salaries of the plundered priests and their religious ceremonials. This payment, inadequate in itself, it need not be said, was seldom booked up, as the proceeds were misapplied by the Government: very little reached the clergy, who have no bayonets. Accordingly, they, and their shows, and processions, were supported by private and voluntary contributions; and as they still command in the confessional-box, they seldom failed or ever will fail to extract largely from pious devotees and rich sinners who require indulgences and absolutions. Some revenue is also derived by the sale of "wax-ends." The candles lighted in these processions obtain a peculiar sanctity; they avert lightning, and are greedily purchased at treble their original cost.

THE FIRST OF APRIL.—1847.

'Tis the first day of April, devoted to folly,
From time immemorial, at home and abroad;
We pluck not our quill from thy wings, Melancholy,
While like old Erasmus the motley we laud.
Deprive the fair earth of its glitter.ng bubbles,
Its wild Speculations—Hopes flaeting array,
Then man will be launched on a dark sea of troubles,
With woe for his pilot on April Day

Debar the young hero from visions of "glory,"
And tardily then will he mount the dread breach;
You may lecture "Tom Sqhil" till his temples wax hoary,
One "little acceptance" more prudence will teach.
The moth round the flame will disport till his pinions
Are scorched; and thus man with illusions will play.
Ah! widely extended are Folly's dominions,
And proud is her bauble on April Day.

You dame with her fan prefers "rum to religion,"
Most direful alternative, gross and profane!
The gambler is plucking at leisure his "pigeon,"
Who just has arriv'd from his Essex domain.
The fox and the goose, or the sharper and silly,
Fond Confidence, bind them to Hymen's dear sway,
Though warm be these moments, poor victim I most chilly
The sun will rise for thee next April Day.

Behold on his sofa the poor visionary
Building on smoke his "châteaux en Espagne,"
To-morrow may view him in buildings less airy,
Where iron reality cripples our man.
And oh! Lola Montez! pro-Queen of Bavary,
To thee, folly's children due homage must pay.
Thou hast led by a string many more than you King,
Whose whole life appears but one April Day.

Then hail to the first day of April the fickle,
And the pranks that we lov'd e're our temples were gray.
Oh! cherish, sweet month! the glad fruits of the sickle,
By the balm of thy tears and the warmth of thy ray.
We are scourged by the follies that hourly beset us;
Yet these cannot strike to our spirit's dismay,
Whilst the smiles of free Nature refuse to forget us;
And the Earth give's good promise on April Day.

L.

THE CORPUS CHRISTI PROCESSION ON GOOD FRIDAY, AT MADRID.

THE FIRST OF APRIL.—DRAWN BY KENNY MEADOWS.

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

Sunday, April 4.—Easter Sunday.—St. Ambrose.
Monday, 5.—Easter Monday.
Tuesday, 6. Easter Tuesday.—Old Lady Day
Wednesday, 7.—The Sun rises at 5h. 24m ; sets at 6h. 43m.; and sets at 6h 4.m.
Thursday, 8.—The Moon enters her last quarter at 3h. 26m. p m.
Friday, 9.—Day breaks at 3h 12m., and Twilight ends at 8h. 50m. p.m.
Saturday, 10.—The Day has increased 5h. 42m. in length since the Shortest Day.

Jupiter and Venus are evening stars throughout the month; the latter, during this week, is moving towards the Pleiades.

TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 10

Sunday	Monday	Tuesday	Wednesday	Thursday	Friday	Saturday
M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.	M. A.
h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m	h m h m
4 4 4 19	4 36 4 50	5 8 5 28	5 47 6 9	6 34 6 59	7 30 8 5	8 47 9 30

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"H. W. L."—A List of recent Converts to the Catholic Faith (clergymen and laymen) appeared in the daily journals some time since.
"P. Y. M."—Mr. Tenniel's Prize Cartoon of "Justice" is engraved in No. 107 of the Illustrated London News, to be obtained, by order, of any Newsvendor.
"T A P L." Cork—Thanks.
"G. W. A.," Barnsley. We are not acquainted with the work in question.
"A Constant Reader."—See the column on National Education in our Journal of March 20.
"An Eye-Witness," Wick, is thanked; but the Sketch did not reach us in time for engraving.
"Neptune." We do not remember the offer of the Government Reward.
"R. S. L.," Maitland-street—Declined.
"Farce." Stalbridge, cannot do better than consult Murray's Handbooks for the Continent, according to the country he proposes to visit.
"S.," Bristol. To mention the novelty would be to advertise a matter with whose merits we are unacquainted. The List of Rising Appointments shall appear.
"Inquirer." The Tunnel said by Prince Albert to resemble the Sailors' Home, at Liverpool, bears an elevation of the building. (See No. 222 of the Illustrated London News.)
"An Italian." The beautiful Madame Castellan (now of Her Majesty's Theatre) is a native of the Lyonnese, in the south of France, and made her début on the operatic stage at Turin, in Italy, in 1836, at the age of sixteen. (See the Memoir in No. 153 of the Illustrated London News.)
"L. R.," Bolton; and "T. W."—We do not recommend any Lotteries, English or Foreign.
"C. T. C." The salary of Lord Whitworth, when he filled the office of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, was £20,000 per annum.
"T R." Dublin, should await the accounts of the Covent Garden Opera House, next week
"C. M. J.," Chesters. The debt is still recoverable, as the debtor cannot plead the Statute of Limitation.
"Morley" cannot enforce the production of the bond before the screwing of the writ; but proof of the document being signed in ignorance of its character will be good ground of defence in the action.
"J. O. C." We are not in possession of the information requested by our Correspondent.
"G. S.," Cork.—Rice is thanked for the Weather Predictions
"G. H.," City, may learn Short-Hand from a printed system without a master.
"A. A. F." is thanked, but we have not room for the lines
"Πρόσωπον," Minister. Mr. H. Fox Talbot's work, entitled "The Pencil of Nature," contains the fullest account of his photographic process. Or, see a review of the work in No. 920 of the Athenæum.
"Inquirer."—The fee for inspecting a Will at Doctors' Commons is 1s.
"George."—We cannot speak as to the advertising party.
"Smoke" should write to the Secretaries of the Art-Union.
"T. J.," Norwich, is thanked.
"L. L."—It will not be necessary to administer to the Property, if it has not been conveyed out of "L. L.'s" possession.
"M. J B.," Greenwich, is thanked; but we have not room for the Lines.
"Horse Leaser" will, probably, regret the quotation.
"A Country Subscriber" should go by the South Eastern Railway to Folkestone, and thence by the Boulogne route, to Paris.
"An April Fool" has not succeeded.
"C. E. L." Messrs. Grindlay and Co., 54 Martin's-place, Charing Cross.
"C. O. R."—Edinburgh will be a sufficient address. We will inquire as to the other matter.
"J. H.," Rhymney.—Does not the Ticket bear the address of the Agents?
"I. J.," Hertford.—Apply to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest—Office, 30, Great Marlborough-street
"A Correspondent," who writes about "the ends of a false faith," is reminded that we have already engraved in our Journal the Martyrs' Memorial, at Oxford.
"Amicus" is altogether mistaken as to our choice of Illustrations: a representation does not, of necessity, imply approval of the proceeding.
"J. F.," Newcastle.—The accent is upon the first syllable. See Knowles's "English Dictionary"
"Query," Godalming.—If a person die intestate, and have a wife and children, one-third of his property falls to his widow, and the remaining two-thirds among the children, in equal proportions; or, if any of them be dead, to their lawful descendants, if they shall have left any
"J. F. T. H."—"The Lady."—See "Hints on Etiquette," published by Longman and Co
"S. S. P." A "finished gentleman" is not, nor ever has been, called an "Amphytrion," though a Host has. The reason is this:—In Molière's comedy of "Amphytrion," which turns on the old classical story of Jupiter assuming the form of Amphytrion in the absence with Alcmena, the true Amphytrion arrives before he is expected, and, being confronted with the impostor, much confusion ensues: whereon Sosia (the roguish servant), to put an end to the scene, urges all parties to come in to dinner, observing—

"Le veritable Amphytrion Est l'Amphytrion ou l'on dine."

whence, the name of "Amphytrion" is frequently applied to a hospitable dinner-giving host.
"J. T. B.," Wordsley. There is an excellent Treatise, in the English language, on Dyeing, by Dr. Bancroft.
"Tiras." We have not heard of any extensive application of Anastatic Printing
"Delta," Donington. Apply to Mr. Weale, Bookseller, Holborn.
"Elizabeth," of Gloucester.—The Prints named by our Correspondent would realise between £3 and £4 at a sale, say, at Sotheby's, Wellington-street.
"T. W." The address as to the "Encyclopædia Britannica" should be Marchfield (not Macclesfield), near Chippenham.
"G. E. D.," Parkhurst Rectory, is thanked; but the hint.
"J. K.," Dorking.—The Hospital for Diseases of the Skin is in Bridge-street, Blackfriars. Patients are admitted by Subscribers' letters.
"Chase-Ennis." Smoke is "Founder's Guild" and Varnisher's Manual."
"C. H. W.," Birmingham.—The age in question is 50
"Quandary" will be liable for the Rate, if he is described by the Supply of Water.
"W. M.," Tunstall.—The Rate is to the Belgian Consul, 3, Copthall Court.
"J. L." is thanked; but, we do not perceive any immediate interest in the subject announced.
"A. Z." near Truro.—It is a vulgar error that first cousins may intermarry, and that second cousins may not; for they may both marry with each other.
"Twist."—Cluster's "Castle Doctor."
"A Constant Reader." Archbishop Whately's "Elements of Rhetoric."
"J T." How George the Fourth was born at the old Palace at Kew.
"François." Barnes, Surrey.—The wax for Sunday Schools was commenced to be made at Mr. Rinkes by the Rev. Mr. Stock, curate of St. John's, Gloucester, in 1788.
"H." Fluxman's Dolphin Candles; is at Wedgwood's ware; not wood.
"J. G.," Feele's.—We would comply, had we room.

The New Palace of Westminster.—The Illustrated London News for Saturday, April 17, 1847, will contain a Series of SPLENDID ENGRAVINGS of the NEW HOUSE OF LORDS; from Drawings executed by Authority; accompanied by original Descriptive Details These Illustrations have been some time in preparation; and from the greatest care having been taken by the Artists to insure Accuracy as well as Picturesque Effect, we trust to be enabled thus early to present our Readers with faithful Pictures of the superb Palace as far as yet completed.

BOOKS RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Songs of Berangur.—Point Lace Crochet Book.—Tales of Adventure.
Music.—The Music Book. Part 6.—Handel's Songs, arranged by Gauntlett
Gauntlett's Comprehensive Tune Book.—Anthems and Services. Nos. 13 and 14.—Songs of Dibdin. Part 5.—Universal Melodist. Part 5.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1847.

It has become a practice of the House of Peers to anticipate the discussion of the measures that are to be brought before it, to beguile the tedium of waiting for the arrival of bills from "another place." The "High Court of Registry," as Disraeli calls it, engages in a debate originated by some Peer who has strong fixed opinions on the approaching question: all the arguments that will be brought against it are gone over, and the direction of the current of opinion ascertained with tolerable certainty. The Irish Poor-Law has been subjected to one of these preparatory debates, and the world now knows that Lord Monteagle, Lord Brougham, and the Archbishop of Dublin are utterly opposed to anything in the shape of but-door relief: they vary in the nature of their objections, and the style of urging them; but the conclusion arrived at in each case is the same. Irish property must not be treated as English property; and in Ireland destitution must be left to die off from the face of the earth unrelieved, while, in England, such indifference to human life and suffering is considered criminal. Lord Monteagle speaks as Irish landlords always have spoken, and acts, as a Legislator, as they have always acted; and the consequences of their speaking and acting is that Ireland is the scandal of our name and century, the source of weakness to the Empire, a fearful drain on its resources, and the abode of every horror of the worst periods of the middle ages. Seeing what the wisdom of this school has brought us to, it is high time to cast such counsellors adrift, with the consolation that it must be enormous folly indeed that lands us in anything worse than their "sound principles upon which all Government should be conducted."

Lord Brougham speaks of all Poor Laws with the zeal of an advocate retained by the whole property of the country, to preserve it from the rate collector; he hates pauperism in the "abstract," as thoroughly as the beadle or footman hates the individual beggar who exhibits that despised condition in the "concrete." Like many men of great intellectual power who have been successful in life, he cannot comprehend how there can be whole masses who, without mental or bodily strength, continually sink lower and lower in the scale till they disappear in the dark gulf of pauperism. It almost seems as if Lord Brougham thought every man, if he chose, could be anything, and work his way, if he set about it, to a Lord Chancellorship, and its pension of thousands a year. Yet his knowledge of his own profession, recruited from its educated and comparatively wealthy classes, might teach him that "the many fail, the one succeeds"—that the prizes are very few in comparison with the blanks.

A similar rule operates in all callings of life: the able, the skilled, and the energetic rise; the bulk plod on upon the dead level of existence; those below the average in strength of body and mind fall continually into pauperism. In the "professions," those who cannot, from incapacity or defects of character, succeed, sink into respectable obscurity; in the lower trades and callings, the same unsucceeding classes become paupers. To deny these classes all relief would merely be sentencing them to death; and, while there is a vestige of property above the surface of the earth, they would not perish without a struggle. Hence the necessity for a Poor-Law, which is, in fact, only a surrender of a small portion of the general wealth, that the rest may be enjoyed in security. A Poor-Law is not a question of charity at all, but of safety and self-preservation. Lord Brougham says, as a system, the Poor-Laws have worked incalculable mischief in England. We do not believe it. We are firmly convinced that it has secured the peace and order of society, and left men free to the pursuits of trade and commerce, which would else have been in constant dread of convulsion. The certainty that men feel of not being left to die of absolute starvation, so far from encouraging a servile and lazy dependence on others, rather promotes individual exertion. Sure that the worst is provided against, a man has less hesitation in seeking new employments or fresh fields of exertion; and his energies develop themselves under new circumstances. The manufacturing industry of England has been created by those who were ready to try new experiments and novel callings. With starvation behind him, the Irish cottier dares not quit his miserable holding for anything else; and this is one of the reasons the "anything else" does not exist. So he clings to his bit of land with the tenacity of despair: it is the only chance of life. The man who will not steal the value of a straw, will commit murder when he is threatened with ejectment—as men, in ordinary circumstances kind and gentle, have been known to slay each other, rather than yield their place on the raft that is the only chance of life in a shipwreck. With no Poor-Law, and the landlords sweeping all that could, by the frightful competition for land, be screwed, as Dean Swift long ago said, "out of the blood" of the people, the whole of Ireland has descended to the lowest degree on the scale of European nations. England, with a complete Poor-Law, and Scotland, with a partial one, have risen to the highest point of that scale. What is the inference? Not against a Poor-Law, certainly. The cries of ruin and confiscation are groundless. Those who hold the property will administer the rate upon it, and if they do not direct the labour at their command to the production of profit, they will be the only holders of property in the world who have not been able to do so.

The Archbishop of Dublin also protests against a poor rate: he seems to think the state of Ireland the natural one—a dispensation of Providence with which it is useless to interfere. His arguments are singularly cold and hard, and, if it be not presumption to say it of a Prelate of the Church, completely at variance with the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel. How does his comparison of property to a citadel to be defended against the attacks of pauperism agree with the spirit of that text which declares "the profits of the earth are for all," and the duty of sharing our good things with our poorer brethren to which "the Scripture moveth us in sundry places?" The Archbishop draws a distinction between almsgiving and a rate by law—for we believe his practice is very contrary to the harshness of his theory. But, as a question of property, it comes to the same thing whether relief is given voluntarily or under a regular system, except that the first throws all the burden on the benevolent, and suffers the cold and sordid to escape. Recent investigations have proved that those best able to give have in many cases shirked their duty disgracefully. A rate would make it impossible for them to evade it.

But this is one of those questions that settle themselves; theories and opinions are of little importance now; there is the gigantic evil—here is the only remedy for it. Is it contrary to all the principles of commerce to throw casks of wine and bales of silk into the sea; yet they are flung overboard without a scruple, when it becomes a question of sacrificing a part or the whole. There is no choice. When the pauperism of England, deprived of all resource by the forfeiture of Church Lands at the Reformation, was organising itself into a system of brigandage, and preying locust-like on property, the first attempt was to exterminate it, and seventy thousand men were hanged in one reign. Those were the days of vigorous measures, when the "wisdom of our ancestors" was in full force. But it all failed, and property found at last that giving up a little to the destitute, and feeding them instead of hanging them was the better policy. Political Economy was not then dreamed of, and England established its Poor-Law, worked and got rich in spite of wars and tumults—quite in the teeth of "sound principles," which have always resolved themselves with Irish Legislators, into getting all they could and keeping all they got. Pauperism in Ireland is now drawing ten million a-year from the English Exchequer; to that the Irish Legislators make no objection; it is quite according to "sound principles." Englishmen think the drain can be stopped, and fix Irish property with a rate, as they were themselves saddled with one between two and three centuries ago. And no power on earth can avert it. In England there is not a grain of pity or sympathy for those who, having had all the power and property of Ireland in their hands, have allowed her to sink to its present awful state, whether by ignorance or neglect it matters not. A Poor-Law is inevitable.

The House of Lords met for the last time on Tuesday evening in that portion of the old "Palace of Westminster," which was fitted up for them after the fire. It is said by Dr. Johnson that the most indifferent thing, if done under the certainty of its being for the last time, is done with regret. No such feeling was perceptible among the Peers on Tuesday; but, as they are not in the habit of wearing their hearts upon their sleeves, or prone to betray their feelings by "compliment extern," they may have been very pensive without showing it. Lord Brougham made his usual half-dozen speeches, and seemed not more restless and fidgetsy than on other occasions; it is a wonder he gave nothing like a valedictory harangue on quitting the place of torment in which their Lordships have been so long confined; suffering one of the punishments of Dante's "Inferno"—a continual alternation from suffocating heat to freezing cold. But nothing marked the last evening the old "painted chamber" was destined to hold the Peers of England, after having been in use as a conference room, and as the Upper Chamber for centuries. For the benefit of future historians who may wish to be correct as to an interesting, if not very important fact, we here record that the last adjournment of the Peers in the old House was moved at one minute and a half to six o'clock, on the evening of Tuesday, the 30th of March, 1847, and that within a brief space it was cleared of its noble tenants, and sank into a silence which will never more be broken by the voice of debate.

On Wednesday morning the work of demolition commenced, under the direction of Mr. Barry, as the entrance to the new House of Lords is to be carried through it. The "Painted Chamber" was the apartment in which Edward the Confessor died.

THE WEATHER.

The weather, during the past week, has been cold and gloomy, exhibiting, therefore, in those respects, a great contrast to the weather of the preceding week. The following are the particulars of each day

Friday, March 26, was rather fine, the sky being more or less covered with cloud during the day; its average temperature was 52½°. Saturday was a moderately fine day, the appearance of the sky was very variable, there was a fog early in the morning; its average temperature was 50½°. Sunday was a wet day, four-tenths of an inch of rain fell during the day; its average temperature was 49°. On Monday morning the thermometer reading was as low as 29°, the day was dull, the appearance of the sun's disc was hazy; the thermometer rose only to 44½° during the day, whose average temperature was 36½°, being 16° less than on Friday, March 26. On Tuesday morning the thermometer reading was as low as 34½°; the day was gloomy, and its average temperature was 37½°. On Wednesday morning, the thermometer reading was as low as 26°, a very low point, indeed, for the last day of March; at the same time, the reading of one placed on grass was 16°, and another on flax on grass was 19°; the day was generally cloudy; its average temperature was 36½°. Thursday was a dull cloudy day, the thermometer reading in the morning was again very low, being 28½°, and that of one placed on grass was 21½°; the average temperature of Thursday was 37°. During the month of March, the reading of the thermometer placed on grass has been below the freezing point of water during a part of twenty-five nights; vegetation has, therefore, been subjected to a temperature nearly constantly below that of the average of the season.

The amount of rain fallen during the month was about three-fourths of an inch.

The extreme thermometrical readings each day were—

Friday,	March 26, the highest during the day was	50½	deg., and the lowest was	44 deg.
Saturday,	March 27	51½	,,	40
Sunday,	March 28	48	,,	36
Monday,	March 29	44½	,,	29
Tuesday,	March 30	40½	,,	28½
Wednesday,	March 31	39	,,	26
Thursday,	April 1	45½	,,	28

Blackheath, Friday, April 2, 1847. J. G.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

On Sunday morning her Majesty and Prince Albert, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household, attended divine service in the private chapel at Buckingham Palace. The Rev. Lord Wriothesley Russell preached the sermon. The Hon. and Rev. C. Leslie Courtenay officiated at the service.

The Queen and Prince Albert visited her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, at Clarence House, St. James's.

On Monday afternoon the Queen held a Council. Senor Isturitz, Minister Plenipotentiary from Queen Isabella II. of Spain, had an audience to present his credentials. Senor Mora, Minister Plenipotentiary from Mexico, had also an audience to present his credentials. The Queen was attended by the Marquis of Ormonde and Mr. Ormsby Gore.

On Tuesday, the Queen, attended by the Countess of Gainsborough and Col. the Hon. Charles Grey, visited her Majesty the Queen Dowager, at Marlborough House. The Queen also visited her Royal Highness the Princess Sophia at her residence, at Kensington. Lord John Russell had an audience of her Majesty at Buckingham Palace.

Return of the Court to Windsor.—On Wednesday afternoon the Queen and Prince Albert, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Prince Alfred, the Princess Royal, the Princess Alice, and the Princess Helena, and attended by the Lady in Waiting, the Maids of Honour, the Master of the Household, the Private Secretary to Prince Albert, the Lords in Waiting, and the Equerries in Waiting, returned to Windsor Castle from town. The Royal Dinner party at the Castle, in the evening, consisted solely of the ladies and gentlemen of the Royal suite.

On Thursday Evening (From our own Correspondent.)—Shortly after the arrival of the Court at the Castle yesterday afternoon, her Majesty and the Prince Consort walked across the private plantations, in the Home Park, and visited the Royal aviary, where the Queen and his Royal Highness were received by Mr Walter. Her Majesty and the Prince afterwards visited the Queen's private Kennel, and returned to the Castle shortly before six o'clock. Her Majesty and the Prince promenaded in the private grounds, the Royal family being taken for their usual airings at the same time. Their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal rode on their Shetland ponies; the Dowager Lady Lyttelton was in attendance. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, who was attended by Lady Augusta Bruce, visited her Majesty and the Prince Consort this afternoon; remaining at the Castle for upwards of two hours. Her Majesty was prevented from taking an airing this afternoon, in consequence of a fall of snow, which commenced between four and five o'clock. The Royal carriages and saddle horses were in waiting in the Quadrangle, but were countermanded, and sent back to the Royal mews. Her Majesty will give grand dinner and evening parties at the Castle during the ensuing week. The Queen's private band has been commanded to be in attendance from the Queen's Concert of the Cabinet and Foreign Ministers have been honoured with invitations to her Majesty's banquets. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert dined in private this evening. It is expected that the State apartments at the Castle, and the Round Tower, will be opened to the public to-morrow (Good Friday) after the morning service.

Her Majesty's Drawing-Room. Her Majesty held a Drawing Room at St. James's Palace last Saturday. Long before that hour crowds were assembled in St. James s-street, Pall-mall, and especially in the neighbourhood of Buckingham Palace. At half-past one a party of the Horse Guards (Blue) rode up the Mall, and the Royal Carriage, with Her Majesty and Prince Albert, preceded by two Royal carriages containing ladies in waiting and pages, and escorted by a troop of the Life Guards, left Buckingham Palace, and proceeded, at a rapid pace, through the fantastic arches of Cumberland Gate, and along the earliest arrivals were the Duke of Wellington, Sir G. Grey, Viscount Palmerston, Lord Campbell, Lord Clarendon, and other officers of State. The Drawing-Room was very numerously attended. The Queen wore a very magnificent dress. Her Majesty's train was of green poplin, figured with gold shamrocks, and was richly trimmed with gold lace. The petticoat was of white satin, trimmed with gold lace and ivy, ornamented with diamonds. Her Majesty's headdress was formed of a wreath of ivy and diamonds, and also of feathers. Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge wore a splendid costume. The train was of red velvet, trimmed with satin and gold, over a dress of white satin, brocaded in gold, and ornamented with Brussels lace. Her Royal Highness' head-dress was composed of feathers, lace lappets, and also a wreath of pearls and diamonds. The stomacher, necklace, and earrings of the Royal Duchess were also of pearls and diamonds. His Royal Highness Prince Albert was habited in a field marshal's uniform, and wore the insignia of the Most Noble Orders of the Garter and the Golden Fleece, and the stars of the Orders of the Garter, St. Patrick, St. Andrew, and the Bath, set in diamonds. His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge wore the uniform of a field marshal, with the insignia of the Order of the Garter, the star set in brilliants.

Lord and Lady John Russell.—Lord and Lady John Russell will remain in town during the holidays. Her Ladyship, though considerably improved, is not yet completely restored to health.

The Duke of Wellington.—The Duke of Wellington, accompanied by the Marchioness of Douro, left Apsley House on Wednesday for Strathfieldsaye, where the noble Duke will receive company during the holidays. The Marquis of Douro left town on Thursday, for the same seat.

Death of Lord Saye and Sele.—We regret to announce the death of Lord Saye and Sele, which took place on Wednesday last, at his Lordship's house in Grosvenor-street.

The Duke of Northumberland.—His Grace the Duke of Northumberland is about to take possession of Alnwick Castle, the great baronial residence of the Percy family

Visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge to Germany.—It is the intention of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, at the close of the summer, to visit their illustrious relatives in Germany. The Royal Duke and Duchess will be accompanied by the Princess Mary.

POSTSCRIPT.

CONFESSION AND EXECUTION OF PLATTS, THE MURDERER.

At twelve o'clock on Thursday, at Derby, Platts paid the the last penalty of the law for the murder of Collis, at Chesterfield. (A report of the trial was given in our paper last week.) The concourse of people was immense. Early in the week he made a written confession, the correctness of which he persisted in asserting to the last. He was very firm until he arrived at the pinioning room, when he began to tremble violently, and continued to do so until the bolt was shot. He struggled violently for two minutes, though bound with cords. His conduct is not reconcileable with the evidence. His conduct in gaol was good, and he expressed a firm hope of a joyful resurrection.

PLATTS' WRITTEN CONFESSION

"Morley and I laid the plan before dinner, after the people were gone into church; he said he had been with ——, and they had laid a plan to make away with Collis. They fixed to meet at the New Inn (Bettesen's), at Brampton Collis was to come to them there in the afternoon, and they were all to come down to Chesterfield, to the Wheat Sheaf (David Britt's), and they were to wait there until night. Collis' Morley he wanted to see me; Morley told him I would be at Frank's at night, as she bell ringing; if I was not there, he began to tell him where I was to be found. Morley told Collis that if he did not find me there, that I would be out with Hannah, walking; and that he would be sure to meet me at night, because he had to see about going to market at Chesterfield. They remained at Brampton some time after this conversation. Morley told me before his death that they left the Wheatsheaf about half-past six or a quarter to seven o'clock. He also told me the way he got Collis to the stable; he told him I was there, and that we should all go together to settle there; on which Collis, Morley, and —— went down to the stable. When they got Collis to the door, he (Collis) tried to get away when he found I was not there. Morley got him to settle; the door was open. Morley put his hand inside the stable door, where he had previously placed the spade for the purpose of murdering Collis. He struck him with it, and knocked him senseless, and he said against the cow or struck him with it, and knocked him senseless, and he said against the cow or the stable, and then he dragged him in, and struck him again, for fear of him moaning a noise; then he came to fetch me. —— was on the way, a companion of Morley's, but I do not know whether he said anything to him then or not. I was looking through the cow-house window, and I saw Morley and —— standing at the bottom of the yard. Morley called to me, and I went to him, and we went to the stable; then he told me he had done it a job. When we got there he shoved open the stable and fastened the door with an iron bolt, and Collis gave a great groan; then Morley struck him again with the spade, I think over the head, but I could not see, it being dark in the stable. After this blow was struck —— said he must go, but before he went we planned to meet again between nine and ten o'clock the same night, but I drove it too late. When I left the stable I went to the shop to tie down. I was disturbed with the affairs of the stable I went to the shop that night; and if he had been in Morley's shop, it was between one in the shop that night; and if he had been in Morley's shop, it was between eight and nine, for he was not killed in any shop; he was killed in the stable, and by the hand of Morley; neither did I see the first blow given. When I saw the last, and heard it, and saw him put into the cess-pool. The body was not cut up, it was thrown in whole. There was nothing taken off but his boots. Morley put the barrow into the stable until night, that he took it to Leah's coal-yard. It was Leah's barrow, and had some coals fetched in it for himself, on Monday, for the purpose of conveying the body away. I received the watch and boots a short time after. Previous to the murder Morley told me I should have the watch, and told me it say I bought them of 'Lanky Bill.' * * * Morley got the money, I do no not know how much there was. I gave him £2 10s. the day before. I believe Morley killed Collis's steers to owed him (Collis) for half a beast and some sheep, and I agreed to murder him because I owed him money. I believe Morley strangled Collis at last with a bleeding cord. This was planned between us previous to the murder. Morley was to strike the blow, because he was the strongest man, and ——I were to assist in strangling him. The first agreement was on Sunday morning in Morley's shop, after it was closed.

"I certify, as standing in the presence of God, whe e I shall have to appear in a few hours, that the above statement is true. (Signed) "JOHN PLATTS.

"Wednesday Evening, March the 31st, 1847.—It has been read over to me by the Governor, Mr. Sims. For his kindness since I have been in prison I feel much obliged.

"J. P."

[We have omitted the name of the third party for obvious reasons. We have also omitted two lines which refer to the disposal of Collis's box.]

THE EASTER FAIRS.—Preparations on an extensive scale are already making for the annual fair at Stepney, which the parochial authorities have from time to time salely endeavoured to prevent. The fair will be held, as usual, on Stepney Green. At Greenwich a great gala day is anticipated; several of the travelling theatres, each with its corps dramatique, arrived on Thursday, and took up their positions. There will be a fair on a service of the same sort, and Bunsellars' mart is also said there will be a similar exhibition on Brook-green, Hammersmith, although the inhabitants of the neighbourhood are opposed to it.

[illegible] was killed by a [illegible] on the Great Northern Railway, at Church [illegible] were killed by a [illegible] by the day previous). It appeared that on Tuesday, the 30th ult., about half-past five o'clock in the morning, a number of the workmen employed by the Railway Company at the Church Pit, Church Gresley, to be let down to their usual employment. Daniel Batch, the engine-man, let them down; but when they had descended about forty yards, he heard cries of the wheels crack, and immediately stopped the engine. He ran to the pit mouth, and found the drum running fast, the spur wheel having broken, and fallen under the drum. The cage was precipitated to the bottom of the pit, which is 370 yards deep; the rope broke off the drum, and went down the shaft, although longer than the depth of the pit. It was between nine and ten o'clock before a rope could be attached to the pumping engine, and another cage let down, when the bodies of the dead and dying were drawn up. The Jury returned a verdict to the effect—"That the deceased met their deaths by the accidental breaking of the spur wheel."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

SOUTHWARK COUNTY COURT.—On Monday, Mr. Clive, the Judge appointed to preside [illegible] County Court, in Swan-street, opened the new Court in due form [illegible] Chancellor's proclamation having been read in the presence of William Pritchard, Esq., the High Bailiff of Southwark, and Messrs. J. Meymott and C. Fletcher chief clerks to the Court. The superior officers were not appointed. The Court was then adjourned until the 20th of April, for the hearing of cases. The clerks will, however, be in attendance daily to grant summonses.

CABINET COUNCIL.—A Cabinet Council, which was attended by nearly all the Ministers, took place on Monday. The Ministers assembled at the residence of the Marquis of Lansdowne, in Berkeley-square, the noble Marquis not having recovered from a severe attack of gout in the knee.

NATIONAL GALLERY.—The Government contemplates pulling down the [illegible] Mansion at Whitehall, and erecting on its site a residence of considerable architectural magnificence. It is said that the works will be commenced early in the autumn of this year.

NEW RAGGED SCHOOL IN CLARE-MARKET.—On Monday a ragged school was opened in Yeate's-court, Clement's-lane, Clare-market, a most wretched and crowded locality. The school is on a novel plan. Parents may send their children from six o'clock in the morning until ten in the evening, and they will, free of any charge, be taught to read and write, and be trained to habits of industry and cleanliness. For women who are obliged to go out to work the whole day there has an opportunity given them of having their children looked after and educated during their absence. Another feature is that parents wishing their children to read and learn the prayers of their own creed, will have their wishes attended to and the children taught accordingly. In the evening, a class will be held for those boys and girls, who are occupied during the day.

THE REMOVAL OF THE WOOD PAVEMENT IN THE STRAND.—At the meeting of the Commissioners of Sewers on Tuesday, it was agreed that the whole of the wood pavement at present down in St. Paul's Churchyard should be removed immediately, and laid with the three-inch granite, similar to that laid down in Cheapside and Fleet-street. The wood pavement will accordingly be taken up immediately, and the thoroughfare for carriages will be stopped for about a week. It is also in contemplation to remove the whole of the wood pavement from Cornhill, Bishopsgate-street, Lothbury, and Mark-lane, while that in Bartholomew-lane will be turned.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS IN THE METROPOLIS.—The bills of mortality for the week ending the 27th of March, give the number of births as 1,575; of these 691 were males and 884 females; this is a decrease of 141 from the number of the preceding week. The number of deaths has also diminished to 1,029 (484 males, 545 females, being 39 below the average and 55 below the return for the preceding week.

ACCIDENT TO LORD JOHN SCOTT.—We regret to state that his Lordship met with a severe accident whilst hunting, near Kelso, on Saturday last. In taking a leap, his nose fell upon him, and broke a small bone of one of his legs, and dislocated his ancle. His Lordship was conveyed to his noble brother the Duke of Buccleuch's seat, Bowhill, where the leg was set. His Lordship, we are glad to learn, is going on favourably.

SUDDEN DEATH DURING DIVINE SERVICE AT WINDSOR CHURCH.—Considerable alarm was created at the church of St. John, during Divine Service on Sunday morning, in consequence of a lad named Henry Doe, the son of Mr. Doe, in the department of the Master of the Horse, at Windsor Castle, being seized with death just after the commencement of the sermon. An attack of apoplexy was supposed to have been the cause of death.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

A HUSBAND POISONED BY HIS WIFE.

At Bury St. Edmunds, on Saturday last, a young woman of eighteen, named Catherine Foster, was arraigned upon an indictment charging her with the wilful murder of her husband, John Foster, by administering to him arsenic, at Acton, on the 15th November last.

It was proved in evidence that the deceased was an agricultural labourer, a native of Acton, near Sudbury, Suffolk, and that he had formed an attachment for the prisoner while quite a boy. Last autumn, the prisoner was about to go on a visit to her aunt at Fakenham, about twenty miles from Acton, when he earnestly urged that the marriage might take place, and said that he would allow his bride to pay her proposed visit to her aunt after the marriage. This was accordingly consented, and the ceremony took place at Acton Church on the 28th of October, after which the young couple took up their abode in the house of Mr. [illegible], with whom was then living, besides her daughter, a son, Thomas, and three others.

John Foster having thus gained the long-cherished object of his heart was as happy in the possession of his youthful wife as man could well be. On the third morning they started according to his promise. He handed her into the carrier's cart, and bidding adieu to her, asked if "she thought she would stay all a month?" To which she replied, "No, John, I'll be back before." At the lapse of ten days she returned to her home, and her husband was overjoyed. On his arrival he partook of supper with his wife and her little brother; their meal consisting of dumplings, potatoes, and tea. The man had no sooner partaken of his dumpling than he was taken violently sick. Soon after this, his mother-in-law, who had been out all day washing, came home and found him retching violently in a basin, the contents of which she threw into a neighbouring ditch, near to which were some fowls. During the whole of the night the poor man remained in great pain; at four o'clock he tried to get up, but fell down from weakness, and on the following morning his wife went to Melford for a doctor. Deaming from the prisoner's account that the patient was suffering from cholera, and cholera, then very prevalent, the surgeon prescribed accordingly, and the prisoner took away the medicine, some of which she gave to her husband. On her return she found him worse than when she left him, and he lying dead in her arms at four o'clock, soon after which hour his mother and the surgeon arrived. On the same day the fowls all died.

At that time no suspicion was engendered, and that gentlemen gave it as his opinion that the deceased came to his death from English cholera; but suspicion being afterwards excited by the death of the fowls in a sudden and mysterious way, a further and more searching inquiry was deemed necessary by the Coroner.

The contents of the stomach of the deceased were subjected to analysis by Mr. Image and Mr. Newham, who unhesitatingly pronounced the presence of arsenic in quantities, not only in the stomach and its contents, but also in the flesh of the fowls, and a pudding-bag, in which the prisoner had boiled the dumpling, of which the deceased had eaten on the night before his death. Under these circumstances, recourse was had to the family for their information, and it was ascertained that the prisoner had spent the day with the mother of her husband, "very comfortably," from two to four, when she stated that she "must go home, for it was dumpling night." Her brother was also called from his work by her, when he stated that his sister had made one dumpling for supper, of which they all partook. Afterwards, however, he varied his statement, and then declared having seen his sister make two dumplings on the night in question, into one of which she had put some powder out of a paper, after which she burnt the paper and put that dumpling into a pudding-cloth. He also stated that he and his sister supped off a different dumpling, and that no particle of the dumpling of which the deceased ate. In addition to this, it was shown that after the unfortunate occurrence the prisoner had stated that "she wished she had gone to Bury before she had married, for then she would not have been married at all, and would have got a good place."

The boy, when examined at the trial on Saturday, denied that he had seen the prisoner put anything into the dumpling from her pocket, or burn any paper, and insisted in saying that both his sister and himself, who had not exhibited any symptoms of illness, had partaken of the same dumpling with the deceased. On this subject Mr. Image and Mr. Newham both deposed that if the deceased had taken the poison in that dumpling, it was impossible that any one else could have tasted it without experiencing great illness and danger to life from it.

The learned Judge, after hearing Mr. Power for the prisoner, and the summing up of the Chief Baron, retired for about twenty minutes to deliberate, and after that time returned a verdict of "Guilty."

The prisoner, who had stood unmoved during the whole trial, received the verdict of the Jury with a slight quivering of the lips: but beyond that expression of feeling, which was momentary, she did not exhibit the least emotion from the first to the last moment of the inquiry, which was fraught with such awful consequences to her.

On Monday morning, the prisoner Foster was called up for judgment, and the Chief Baron passed sentence of death upon her. The wretched female received but little emotion during the delivery of her sentences, and walked from the dock with as much composure as the most disinterested person in the Court.

THE ROBBERY AT THE WARWICK AND LEAMINGTON BANK.

At Warwick, on Monday, William Hudson Blayney, aged thirty-one, was charged with having stolen, on the 4th of July, 1845, one hundred promissory notes, of the value of £10 each, the property of his masters, the proprietors of the Warwick and Leamington Bank.

Mr. Waddington and Mr Hayes prosecuted; Mr. Miller and Mr. O'Brien defended.

The evidence was to the effect that the prisoner was a clerk in the bank at Leamington, of which there was a branch at Southam: his brother, George Blayney, had also been a clerk there, but had been dismissed in 1839. The prisoner was the resident clerk at Southam, and had a salary of £100 per annum, which salary had, a short time before the robbery, been increased £10. It was the custom of the bank to send certain sums of money on a Friday to the branch bank at Southam, for its supply on the market day; and, on the 4th of July, a clerk had counted out one hundred notes of the value of £10 each of the Warwickshire and Leamington Bank, together with a number of £5 notes, to be sent to Southam. There was also a parcel containing Bank of England notes to be sent to London. There were three parcels in all, two of which were for Southam, and the prisoner received the amount of postage necessary for the payment of the parcels to Southam. Mr. Smith, the manager of the Southam branch, received both parcels, and, expecting to receive a larger amount than that contained, he communicated with the branch at Leamington, and then it was discovered that the parcel containing the larger amount was missing. The prisoner was interrogated, but stated that he had delivered the parcels at the post-office, which was however denied: and a brother of the prisoner was subsequently seen in London with the identical number of notes—namely, one hundred £10 notes,—and, in consequence of having been a participator in the robbery, and sentenced to fourteen years' transportation, along with another man, the receiver. In the meantime, the prisoner had absconded, and Forester and Roby were sent in pursuit. Blayney was seen in Calais, but refused to come to England with the officers. He was lodged in a gaol in Calais, but the French authorities refused to allow of his being taken to England, and only dealt with the prisoner for the disturbance he created when it was sought to arrest him. A short time back, however, the prisoner came over and surrendered himself, and it was for the robbery committed in July, 1845, that he was now on his trial. The case for the prosecution went to show that the prisoner had been in a lamentable state of destitution, so that she was unable to feed her children. The prisoner, in her defence, said that for some time she had been in a complete state of starvation, with no bread to eat or to give her children. They had often gone to bed without breaking their fast, and that "starvation was bitter bad." Three little orphans, and nothing but raw turnips to give them! The baby she was unable to suckle, as she had no milk, owing to starvation, and the child would not take the union bread, it was so coarse. She had no fire, candle, or even soap to wash the child. The dear baby it too well to hurt it, but it died through want. The Jury returned a verdict of "Acquittal."

BALLOON ASCENT.—On Monday afternoon Mr Gypson, the aeronaut, ascended from the Imperial Gas Company's premises at Haggerstone, with his new balloon, to which he has appended some machinery of novel construction, for the purpose of raising or depressing the balloon at pleasure without a discharge of gas or ballast. He was accompanied by Mr. Carwell. The excursion was continued for 60 miles, to Sandhurst, in Kent, where a safe descent was effected near the residence of Sir John Herschell, the illustrious astronomer. Lady Herschell and some of her family having witnessed the descent, Mr. Gypson and Mr. Carwell were induced to pay their respects to the distinguished observer in the car of the chariot, and "the gentlemen from the clouds" having been hospitably [illegible], the merits and probable utility of aerostation were discussed with enthusiasm, and with considerable competency and knowledge of the science on the part of Sir John Herschell. The aerial voyagers, at one period of their lengthy journey, attained an elevation of three miles, and the machinery, invented by Mr. Gypson, was worked with advantage.

SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

We are not by any means inclined to agree with two or three of our contemporaries in thinking indifferently of the present Exhibition. Critics who contrast the labours of the Society for the few past years, with the Exhibitions of twelve or fifteen years ago, for [illegible] improperly forget—the serious vacancies from which the Society has suffered. Here Stanfield and Roberts, Cresswick and Charles [illegible] Stanfield, Redute [illegible] associate of that body. Martin, when he [illegible] Academy; and Haydon had withdrawn from the Society for several years. There were losses not easily repaired. Had the Society remained true to itself, and its members one and all united, the Royal Academy would hardly have known from what quarter to recruit its ranks. But the temptations to retire were too great, and petty animosities too keen, to allow the Society to hold together for any considerable length of time. Some members withdrew—others ceased to send; so that the Society dwindled down into comparative insignificance, and its Annual Exhibitions into helpless imbecility. A struggle is now making to regain this lost position; a charter of incorporation has recently been granted; a School of Art is on the eve of being established; and the present Exhibition is in many ways superior to any exhibition of the Society within the last seven years. We could have wished, however, that the works of art had been fewer in number, and that the good alone had been selected for exhibition. The Society might have closed with advantage three out of the five large rooms it has judged expedient to fill. Of the seven hundred and seventeen works of art contributing the Exhibition, three hundred and seventeen at least belong to a class of art—if art it can be called which "neither gods nor men are willing to permit." This must always be the case; but the class of art we shall unhesitatingly pass by, and in the following notices refer alone to pictures excellent in themselves—pictures of promise, and pictures of that ambitious kind of character in which inclination is mistaken for skill and the wish to achieve for the means to accomplish.

"Shepherd Boy." J. J. Hill. A small full-length figure, poetically conceived, but somewhat hard in the outline.

"Portrait of a Gentleman." J. Holland. A small cabinet picture, but somewhat hard in the outline.

"Portrait of Herself." J. Holland. A small cabinet picture, but somewhat hard in the outline.

"Portrait of a Gentleman throw off so intolerable a yoke, and recover as much independence of thought and action as his conscience would allow him to assert. At this crisis an accident, which savours more of romance than of history, brought to Munich the adroit and enterprising person who has played so conspicuous a part in the events which have recently taken place. We are not prepared to say—

> 'That love has taught a monarch to be wise;
> And gospel truth first beam'd from Roleyn's eyes!'

but it is certain that the influence of the new favourite soon proved completely hostile to the systematic designs of the ecclesiastical party, which had probably found in her predecessors a convenient alliance for its objects."

The last accounts from Bavaria state that, in throwing off this political yoke, the King is supported by the majority of the people; and that the late transactions have rendered him popular. A Correspondent of the Post says:—"The affairs at Munich appear to be perfectly consolidated. The ultra-montains and Jesuitical (which in other words means nothing more nor less than the *haute-nobless*e) party, is the only one which still tries to move the lower classes to some feeble demonstrations of discontent. But these movements seem to prove a decided failure. On the other hand, the whole Protestant population, as well as the more moderate and reasonable Roman Catholic party, hail these strange events, and, above all, the dismissal of M. Abel, as the dawn of better days; and from private accounts, scarcely credible, but nevertheless from very veracious sources, it is stated that Senora Lola Montez behaves with great prudence and circumspection. So much at any rate is quite certain, that she still resides in a comparatively small house, that the decorations and furnishing of the Palace intended for her have been stopped; and, finally, that nobody talks of or believes in the purchase of great estates."

But there is another phase of the King of Bavaria's character more agreeable to dwell upon. He is a most munificent royal patron of the arts; and he is himself a poet and a man of feeling and taste. He has made his little capital renowned in Europe, and he has submitted himself to criticism by publishing a book. Nor as a ruler was he always the ordinary repressor of freedom which German Kings generally are. At the beginning of his reign he exhibited some tendencies to Liberalism, which alarmed the great powers of Germany. His sister being married to the Emperor of Austria, that Court soon acquired an influence over him that led him to retrace the steps he had taken. He was also alarmed by the heartiness with which the "liberty of the press" was used. The Germans are as afraid of free opinions as they are of fresh air; and the German Princes, unused to be made the subjects of public comment, are absurdly sensitive to anything in the shape of political remark. They have the weakness of Napoleon as to satire, without his greatness in other things: a song or a caricature will scare them out of their self-possession: "men wearing rapiers are afraid of gonequills;" and the Commanders of Armies would be thrown into terror by the pencil of a HB. Apprehensions of a similar kind made the King of Bavaria revert to the policy of his age and country, and his kingdom became distinguished from the rest of Germany, only by the greater encouragement he gave to the arts of architecture, sculpture, and painting. But even in art the tendency he developed was not an onward one. He built a Walhalla for busts and statues of all the great men of the Saxon race, and excluded Luther, the greatest of all. But recollecting the discussions among ourselves respecting the statue of Cromwell, perhaps we are not in a position to blame the omission. In painting, the style encouraged must was the devotional, the mediæval, enlisted in the service of the Catholic Church, in the effort to regain its old ascendancy. Here, too, he ran counter to his early predilections, which, if they can be gathered from his own writings, were with the Ancients, and the master-pieces of Greece and Rome.

His poems were first published by Cotta, at Munich; a second edition appeared in 1830. They were much read, from the novelty of a crowned head being the author; but, though not without merit, they are rather curious than excellent. They contain of short pieces addressed to his family, expressive of amiable personal feelings; and it must be confessed there is something of novelty in reading the lines of a poet who can inscribe a copy of verses "To myself as King," and "To my sister, the Empress of Austria." His longest pieces are addresses to Schiller and Korner, and some odes to "Hellas," written during the struggle of Greece against the Turks, which ended in giving his son Otho a Throne. In his "Fall of Kings," he gives utterance to some Royal discontent, but all his reflections on this subject have been said before, and said better, by a much greater Monarch Solomon.

The general impression, from a perusal of his works, is, that he is a man of more taste than talent, more sensibility and feeling for the beautiful in art than true knowledge of its principles. He has resided much at Rome, and some of the ideas there received he has thrown into a series of short unrhymed couplets,

LUDWIG, KING OF BAVARIA.—DRAWN BY BAUGNIET.

of which we re-produce two, promising the reader that they have lost nothing in the translation. As he is a King, he may be allowed to give an estimate of Royalty. Here is his reflection on

THE EMPEROR'S PALACE.

> Art thou then ever doomed to be the dwelling of Raphio?
> See! the Hawks build their nest o'er the throne of the Cæsars!

As the employer of diplomatists, we admit his authority on the uprightness of Ambassadors:

THE THEATRE OF MARCELLUS.

> A Theatre once—and now an Ambassador's dwelling!
> Still thou art what then wast—the abode of deception!

Rather mild and unimpressive, both, and the idea in each case the same; but they are not the worst of a score of others.

EASTER AT ST. PETERSBURG.

EASTER is celebrated with great enthusiasm throughout Russia, and especially in the capital. Our artist, M. Manuel, has drawn a picturesque scene of its gaiety; and, we cannot do better than quote as a pendent to the illustration the following details of the celebration, from a very interesting work, lately published entitled "The Life of a Travelling Physician."

"The fast has passed its meridian and symptoms begin to indicate the approach of Easter. This is the real fête of the people, this is the period at which they do eat, drink, and make merry, but great preparations announce its advent.

"The eggs dyed of various colours were displayed in the shop windows. An Easter egg is to the laity what Easter offerings are to the clergy, viz. peace offerings. The eggs are of very different merits and value. The common kind are dyed by wrapping worsted round them, and then boiling them, which imparts the tint to the shell. But china eggs adorned by paintings from subjects of holy writ are furnished for the wealthier part of the community. 'Christos voskrest,' says a lady who presents you with an egg on Easter day, upon which you kiss her forehead and reply 'truly he has risen.' All the small retail shops present a lively appearance previous to Easter. Ribbands, new caps, grace the windows; and in common conversation there is continual mention of the approaching festival. It is only a few days previous that the most decided symptoms are indicated. The poorer classes are seen returning from market with a rib of beef, or a square piece of pork, or perhaps an entire ham in their hand, swinging it along in triumph. The cook shops smells savory, the pastrycooks' and bakers' windows display an infinite variety of cakes, all garnished with flowers. The evening previous the streets throng with people, all with something in their hands, a bottle of wine, a pie wrapped up in a napkin, a salmagundi covered over; indeed every species of comestible to fill the long-empty stomach.

"The hard eggs and cold fish chopped up together make a kind of salad with which the boors are well content. Sterlet from the Volga, caviare from the Caspian, melons from Astrakan, and pheasants from the Phasis adorn the merchant's table. Awaiting the midnight hour he contemplates his feast in store, perhaps his last meal. His church calls him to her bosom; he crosses himself as he takes a temporary farewell, and hastens to his orisons. The hour draweth nigh; the churches fill to suffocation. Not all the frankincense burt upon the altars can annihilate the smell of the fast food as it takes its spiritual flight through the pores. Hark to the cannon's sound! a salvo from the fortress announces that Christ has risen from the tomb. This is re-echoed by all the bells from a hundred belfries. All is mad with joy.

> Vor'kündigest ihr dumpfen Glocken schon
> Des Osterfestes erste Feierstunde?

"The streets throng, and men, women, and children embrace each other, and speak the emphatic words—Christos voskrest. On this evening there is a supper at the palace, and the following day a grand levee at Court, where the dignitaries are received in all their paraphernalia. The Emperor has to receive the embraces of hundreds of his subjects, who approach him with the same salutation as the boor makes use of in the streets. This is the hardest field-day of the year, for, although the presentation on the new year is more numerous, he does not come into such close contact with his beloved beards as upon the present occasion.

"During the whole of the Easter week the streets are thronged with people, who kiss and embrace each other. The servants present you with eggs at every house where you call, and a quid pro quo is expected; and it is a very heavy yearly tax upon your pocket. Every house that you frequent taxes you with an Easter egg, having before taxed you with a new year's gift. If you have any business transactions with the inferior classes you are sure to be reminded of it on the present occasion. In genteel society presents are often exchanged under the titles of Easter eggs; some even pay their physicians at this period: would that the custom were more general! Cards are exchanged by the corps diplomatique and by families who are in the habit of visiting. Marriages are celebrated, children are christened, and intoxication becomes prevalent. Labour stands still for a whole week, unless the labour which furnishes amusement to the public. The catchalls are crowded in the afternoon, the theatres in the evening; but the week over, things return to their ordinary course. If the weather be fine, it is a gay and happy period, and few countries celebrate it in so joyful a manner. It is the great fête of the church and of the people. Birth days, names' days, saints' days, old and new year, are all swallowed up in this crowning jubilee."

Our view is taken from the angle of the English Quay, with Falconet's colossal statue of Peter the Great in the foreground. The pedestal is formed of a solid block of granite: upon the mass is seated Peter the Great on horseback, with one hand stretched out, and pointing significantly: the horse paws the air with his fore legs, the hinder trample upon a serpent crawling upon the rock. The statue is of bronze, and its whole weight is poised on the horse's tail, which is fastened in the stone. Upon one side of the pedestal is inscribed appropriately—

> PETRO PRIMO,
> CATHERINA SECUNDA.
> MDCCLXXXII.

In the right-hand distance of the picture are shown some of the booths for the fair. The drive shows a great variety of equipages and costumes.

EASTER WEEK AT ST. PETERSBURG.—DRAWN BY M. MANUEL.

EASTER MONDAY ON THE RIVER THAMES.—GOING TO GREENWICH.

THIS is a pair of pictures of holiday life, illustrative of the amusements of Easter Monday, when the indwellers of London flock by thousands to Greenwich by steam-boats; and either betake themselves to the boisterous mirth of Greenwich Fair; or to the rustic frolics of Blackheath.

Dipping into Mr. Albert Smith's Christopher Tadpole, for the present month, we find the waggeries of the two scenes so pleasantly described, that we shall quote the passages.

"The holiday was Greenwich Fair, whither he was to accompany Mr. and Mrs. Chirpey, and Bessy Payne; and when the little party had assembled in the little shop, it would have been difficult to have found four happier faces, and certainly one prettier, in all London. For the jolly man was still the same—a trifle stouter, perhaps, but that was of little consequence—and his partner had forgotten all her first affections; and, finding that hearts were not daily crushed and blighted as she had once imagined, was as cheerful as her husband; indeed, in the lively, good-humoured Mrs. Chirpey, you would have scarcely recognised the romantic, soul-wearied Miss Twite. She had given up reading the penny romances; for two small publications of her own—one four years old, and the other but a few months—took up all her attention. And the youngest of these accompanied the party, Mrs. Chirpey insisting upon carrying it herself: 'Because, as she said,' she knew what the steamers were, and that babies always went to Battersea or Gravesend by mistake, if their mothers once let them go out of their hands. And Bessy looked so cruelly pretty had grown such a trim, plump little woman, and was so elegantly dressed, that Sprouts quite misgave his power over her affections, almost thinking that she was too good for him. But this feeling did not last long; for Bessy hung to his arm so comfortably, and began to talk and laugh so good-naturedly to Mr Chirpey, and Letty, and to Tom more than anybody offering to carry the baby, too, ('for practice,' as the jolly man observed, which improper remark produced the greatest confusion and was indeed too bad) that Tom was soon re-assured. And so they set forth, the envy and admiration of the entire court; and proceeded towards the river.

"They had to wait a little while at Hungerford Pier, for there was scarce standing-room on the packet that was to start first. Tom bought some periwinkles on the sly, 'to amuse himself going down,' he said, which made Bessy pout, and regret that he felt so dull, at which Tom wanted to be affectionate, but was very properly reproved. In a few minutes a boat came up, and the dangerous process of embarking Mrs. Chirpey and baby having been accomplished, the others followed, and the vessel moved off, rolling under its heavy freight until the water almost washed in at the cabin windows. The folks were so wedged together, that Sprouts could not produce the effect he had intended, with a bottle of stout and a biscuit; and the harp and cornet had as much as they could do to get room to move their arms. But this, as Tom said, was an advantage, because it was perfectly impossible for them to come round for money when they had finished playing. At last, after stopping everywhere to take in more people, until the passengers swarmed like bees on every available part of the boat, and Mrs Chirpey laboured under a constant hallucination that they were continually going to the bottom, and that the captain knew it but would not tell them, and begged the jolly man to save their child, but let her perish, when the boiler burst, which she was sure it was going to do—they got to Greenwich, and made their way towards the Park. * * * *

"Their next pitch was Blackheath. Of course the donkeys offered too great a temptation to be refused; and Bessy and Tom were soon scampering over the heath as fast as three boys behind each animal could hurry them on. The progress of Sprouts was most extraordinary. His length of legs was such, that both touched the ground, so that although he appeared to be mounted he was in reality running as fast as the donkey. However, it all made fun; and when so much was to be got for sixpence, it was astonishing what uncomfortable lives people led to collect fortunes, just by the time they were of no use. For perhaps after all it is a question whether happiness is not fun in a quiescent state.

"Mr. and Mrs. Chirpey did not ride. the jolly man mistrusted his weight, and his partner would not venture with baby. So they sat on some timber, and watched their companions; and when the ride was over listened that Sprouts should have his fortune told, as a swarthy bead-eyed gipsy approached them. Upon which they both consented; and heard so much about presents, and journeys, and dark gentlemen, and pieces of silver, that it was very evident an important period in their lives was arriving."

EASTER EXHIBITIONS AND AMUSEMENTS.

THIS year, Easter commences with "the month of love," usually "full of showers;" and holiday-makers, as Mrs. Gamp says, "must take the consequences," &c. It may, therefore, be useful to glance, for the reader's guidance, at the Metropolitan Sights and Amusements in door as well as al fresco, to provide for the paschal freaks of our climate, in the every-day alternations of wet and dry.

THEATRES will, of course, be in full blow on Monday, and their attractions, legitimate and others, will be found anticipated in an adjoining column. There is, by the way, one sign of the Dramatic times of unmistakeable import: Covent Garden will be opened on Tuesday as a second Italian Opera-house; and Drury Lane on Monday, with an exhibition of Elephants, Camels, and Horses, announced in the true mountebank fashion of riding round the town; both verifying Mr Macready's words, at the General Theatrical Fund Dinner, on Monday last: "Covent Garden was no longer, or, it appeared, never could be, a dramatic theatre; and Drury Lane was nearly in the same [illegible]."

PAINTINGS next demand our attention. First, we have the National Gallery, open on Monday [illegible]. The crowded pictures [illegible] will do well to inquire after the Raphael just added to the Collection. The [illegible] admission are from 10 to 5 but, next month, the latter will be 6.

The Dulwich Picture Gallery has just been re-opened for the season, every day except Friday; the admission by free tickets, to be obtained of Colnaghi and Puckle, Cockspur-street; Graves and Co., Pall Mall; Ackermann, Strand; Jennings, Cheapside; and Moon, Threadneedle-street; but not to be procured in Dulwich. The Collection is strong in the Flemish and Spanish schools

EASTER MONDAY ON BLACKHEATH.

The British Institution, at the western end of Pall Mall, has lately been re-opened with Pictures by Living Artists. The Collection contains a few fine pictures, but is, by no means, a first-rate one. The Exhibition is, however, pleasing: its merits have been estimated in Nos. 281 and 286 of our Journal

The Society of British Artists, in Suffolk-street, Pall Mall East, opened their Gallery on Monday last. The Collection is, certainly, superior to that of last year: landscape, as usual, predominates. An impartial review of the Exhibition will be found in the present Number

The Water-Colour Societies will not open their Galleries until next month; when, also, "the Exhibition," par excellence, of the Royal Academy will open. The Private Collections of Pictures in the metropolis, for which the public are admitted, under certain conditions, are not, generally, opened until May, June, and July.

The Panoramas, by Mr. Burford, at Leicester-square, are well worthy of a visit. In the larger Circle, a View of the magnificent Cairo has just been put up. We have estimated its characteristics in No. 285 of our Journal: it is, certainly, superior to most of Mr. Burford's works, and this is greatly to be attributed to the excellence of the drawings, by Mr. David Roberts, R.A. In the two other Circles, are views of Athens; of the Battle of Sobraon, and the Victory over the Sikhs. The "Athens" has become very popular.

The Diorama (Regent's Park), has just been reopened with a splendid View of the Interior of St. Mark's, Venice, painted, by M. Diosso, pupil of M. Daguerre; and a View of Tivoli, Italy, painted by M. Bouton, admirably show the passing effects of light and shade peculiar to this Exhibition: the rich interior of St. Mark's, and the sunny Tivoli, are alike charming specimens of art, aided by mechanical contrivance.

The Colosseum (Regent's Park), with its manifold attractions, has just been thrown open, at the reduced price of 2s., by day or evening. Thus, we have the Panoramas of London, by day or evening; the Museum of Sculpture, Conservatories, Gothic Aviary, Classic Ruins, Mont Blanc and Torrent, Swiss Cottage, Stalactite Caverns at Adelsberg, Prize Cartoons from Westminster Hall, &c. The evening Exhibition is especially brilliant: she "lights by night," as an illusion, has never been exceeded. When we recollect that the charge for viewing this vast Establishment, some eighteen years since, was 7s., and that it was then a long way from complete, holiday folk may congratulate themselves upon the reduction which now admits them for less than one-third of that sum to a very superior Exhibition, of which Mr. Horner's creation was but the embryo.

The Cosmorama (Regent-street), being especially for juveniles, is an Easter sight; and, under the same roof, is "the largest Lady in the World," with whose weight we are afraid to trust our pen.

Madame Tussaud (Baker street), has increased her Collection by Five New Figures: of its class, this is the best Exhibition ever known; and Mrs. Salmon, and her famed Wax-work, would have melted with indignation at Madame Tussaud's long success.

Brunetti's Model of Ancient Jerusalem (213, Piccadilly), appeals to another class of visitors beyond the lovers of scenic sights: the Exhibitor describes it as "the most appropriate subject for this period," a representation we are not inclined to gainsay. Our estimate of the ingenuity of this Exhibition will be found in No. 247 of this Journal.

THE MUSEUMS will, doubtless, be well attended. The British Museum, we perceive, by the late Returns, has doubled its number of Visitors during the past year. The New Building is now hastening to completion: the Grand Staircase is just finished; the Great Zoological Gallery, an especial treat for holiday folks, is open; as are, also, the principal Saloons of Antiquities. Some of the new Smaller Rooms up-stairs, as the Egyptian, Etruscan, Ethnographical, Coral, &c., are extremely interesting; and their systematic arrangement bespeaks an educational effect as well as an amusing attraction. In olden times, Museums were, doubtless, receptacles for trash of the Temptando, and thus they may have greatly extended popular error. In these days, such tricks are out of the question, and every wonder-monger must discover the police of enlightened public opinion. There is a great stir among our sages for improving the Museum administration in matters of Natural Sciences, just now; and the accession of Dr. Buckland to a Trusteeship is a good omen for its success). Some novelties from the Museum are expected to appear during the year.

The East India Company's Museum, Leadenhall-street, is open on Tuesdays and Thursdays, by Directors' Tickets, and on Saturday, free. The contents are Oriental MSS., Sculpture, Implements of War, Oriental Boats, Zoological and Botanical Collections, &c.

The Mechanics' Museum, Bloomfield-street, Moorfields, is open free, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. It is rich in ethnographical rarities, especially relating to heathen worship, collected by Missionaries during their travels.

The United Service Museum, in Middle Scotland Yard, Whitehall, is open throughout the year; the admission being by Tickets from Members, who are upwards of 4000 in number. The principal Stars are the models and implements of war, by sea and land, natural history specimens, &c. It will be found described and illustrated in No. 97 of our Journal.

The Museum of the College of Surgeons, in Lincoln's-inn-fields, is open daily to the public, except Friday and Saturday, from twelve to four: the admission being by a fellow or Member's introduction or order. It is the most magnificent collection of its kind in the world: and is rich in specimens of Natural History, Comparative Anatomy, Physiology, and Pathology: there, indeed, visitors may learn "how wonderfully and fearfully we are made." A neat notice of its contents, with a large Engraving, will be found in No. 179 of our Journal.

The Museum of Economic Geology is still in Craig's-court, Charing-cross; but a handsome edifice is erecting, in Piccadilly, for its removal. It is open to the public, daily, and free: it contains a splendid geological and Mineralogical collection. Models of Mining Machinery, &c.—each specimen fully described; the object being to afford practical information to all who are engaged in manufacturing pursuits connected with Geology. A visit to it may be seen in our Journal now in keeping Easter, but it will be a profitable one. There is here, also, a very interesting assemblage of Specimens of Staffordshire Pottery, anterior to the time of Wedgewood

Sir John Soane's Museum, 13, Lincoln's-inn-fields, has just been opened for the season of April, May, and June, on Thursdays and Fridays. The admission is by free tickets, to be applied for a day or two before. The Museum is a rare treat for the lover of architectural antiquities of Egypt, Greece, and Rome; and the alabaster sarcophagus, purchased of Belzoni, for £3000, is, of itself, "an exhibition." There are some matchless pictures by Canaletti and Hogarth.

The Royal Institution Museum, in Albemarle-street, may be viewed daily, by a member's free order. The collection consists chiefly of specimens of British Minerals. The Laboratory of the Institution, too, is well worth inspection: here is the vast Battery constructed for Sir Humphry Davy, and here Professor Faraday has made some of the most brilliant discoveries in experimental philosophy.

The Zoological Society's Museum, in their Gardens in the Regent's Park, may be inspected at the same time with their Living Collection, which now numbers nearly One Thousand Animals.—We are glad to learn that the public will henceforth be admitted to the Gardens on Mondays and Tuesdays throughout the year, and on every day in Easter and Whitsun week, except Saturday, without the usual order of admission signed by a Fellow of the Society. A novelty just received here is engraved in the present number

The Surrey Zoological Gardens are also open for the shilling fee; but the al fresco attractions are not put forth until Whitsuntide.

The Polytechnic Institution, 309, Regent-street, has more attractions than we can afford space to enumerate; and thus sustains its well earned repute. Its success is a sure indication of the growing popularity of scientific recreation.

The Society of Arts, John's-street, Adelphi, open their stablishment daily, except Wednesdays, free to strangers: the Model Room is extremely interesting; but there is a novel exhibition here which merits more special mention. In the room up-stairs, has just been assembled a large number of articles by means of British Manufactures and Decorative Art in Pottery and Porcelain, Glass making, Wood Carving, Coating in Metal, &c.; some of which exhibit a very near approach to the perfection of Continental artists. Barry's Italian Frescoes upon the walls of this Room, have also been lately freed from dust and dirt, and their grandeur of conception and execution is complete. The whole Exhibition was visited on Tuesday, by Prince Albert, who is the President of the Society.

THE THAMES TUNNEL, though much less frequented than formerly, has its fair quota of visitors: nothing appears wanting to complete the wonder except the railway transit through the Tunnel, which has been some time projected.

THE TOWER OF LONDON continues attractive, notwithstanding the "remodeling" now in progress has swept away many of its olden curios. The Horse Armoury and the Regalia may be seen, each for a sixpenny fee, daily. To see the other portions, requires a special order: the White Tower is a stupendous specimen of the old fortress, and although the "pulling down" yearly lessens the historical interest of the place, enough remains to people it to the visitor's mind's eye from the impressive drama of our history.

We have confined our notes to the metropolitan sights. We need scarcely add that steam, by land and water, presents all sorts of inducements for the holiday-seeker to leave the wonders of the Town itself. We must, however, mention that the Eastern Counties Railway have just started a fourth-class train of open carriages, for conveying passengers to the different stations along the line, at one halfpenny per mile!

INTERESTING ANTIQUARIAN DISCOVERY AT ARUNDEL.

(From a Correspondent.)

DURING the past month, workmen have been employed in constructing a Mausoleum for the family of the Duke of Norfolk, in the sepulchral chapel of the Earls of Arundel, attached to the church of Arundel. In the course of the requisite excavations, several of the remains of the former possessors of the Castle were disinterred, and among others, those of the last members of the [illegible] family, who preceded the present Howards. One of them, wrapped in [illegible] round the person, was inscribed—

MARY COUNTESS OF ARUNDEL
OBIIT
20 OCTOBER;

and rose to the following singular discovery: The Earldom and Castle of Arundel accrued to the Howard family on the death of Richard, last Earl of the Fitzalan line, in 1580; by the marriage of his second daughter and heiress, Mary, to the father of Philip Howard, the first Earl of this family. She died in London, in August, 1607, and was interred with great pomp (as recorded by Strype—I think, page 355 of his "Memorials") at St. Clement Danes Church, in the Strand: her mother-in-law (Mary) died in the October of the same year, and was likewise there interred. Some years afterwards, it was thought right by the descendants to remove the body of the first-mentioned Mary to Arundel, to rest by the side of her father and ancestors, more especially as being the person who conveyed the title and estates to their present possessors; consequently, a body was brought here, but the past few days has revealed the fact that the wife, who had no direct interest in the descent, was brought instead of the daughter of the Earl. This is accounted for by the circumstance that the name of both was Mary; both were Duchesses of Arundel, and both died in 1557; and on the removal, the month could not have been noticed

During the works at Arundel, an iron chest has also been exposed, containing the remains of the Duke of Norfolk who was beheaded by Elizabeth, with a Latin inscription, stating that the bones were placed here in 1624.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Studiis rasus erit senectus.—HORAT.
In races it is not the long cracks or stayers that endure the speed.—BACON

The past week was—as was fitting—a blank in the sporting world: scarce a passage of public merry-making was held from one end of the land to the other, and such as took place had been "more honoured in the breach than the observance." Of course, for the reason, in the present instance, is prosaic enough: not having the wherewithal—neither the wish, to speak of the past, we proceed to Daguerreotype—from their shadows—the coming events of the present month—quoad the Turf.

April will be rich in racing: the increase of the popularity of that sport has called into operation so many new meetings, that the season, par force, begins much earlier in the spring than it was wont: later in the autumn it could not be protracted—for the Houghton week at Newmarket generally runs into November. On Easter Monday the Craven Meeting—at that place—always commences: the year its materiel is above the last year's average. But Riddlesworths seem to have dwindled to the shortest span:" they contain six nominations each, with nothing of account in either

There are some sporting matches set down, but, from various reasons, their coming off is unlikely. The Handicap—to be run on Tuesday is the market issue; but out of a large field left in, two are backed respectively at 9 to 2 each, which with difference odds against the remainder, is long odds. The chief event will be the Column Stakes—on the third day—which contains an entry of thirty-one; but several of these being stable companions, we can scarce reckon on a full party at the post. Still, for that stake will afford the first début of consequence among the racing dramatis personæ

It will bring before the public a great many of the young ones; and the Handicap, the Port, &c., will show us the form of the old ones, and reveal such as are bottled up, for races to come. Burton Constable takes place on the 7th and 8th: but as the stakes, or nearly all of them, only closed on Thursday night, it is impossible to deal with the list of fare. Accordingly, on the 8th, will interest the locality, but no more. Bath races occur on the 13th and 14th. They will exhibit very few of the three year olds the Somersetshire Stakes being the great feature. This event is not in the market yet. Catterick Bridge Meeting—on the same two days, is put on the scene, in the Racing Calendar—with a prodigious flourish of trumpets. Its rules and regulations fill two or three pages. Its feature will be the two-year-old stock brought to the post. The days are early yet for the appearance of the little ones. Barnet and the Hoo are "minors" that call for no note or comment. Epsom Spring's great—by grace of the publicans of the city. The Metropolitan Stakes will be a sporting affair—albeit in the matter of business detail, it has given small satisfaction: this meeting will be celebrated on the 10th inst. Newmarket First Spring is the most important meeting of the whole year. It is a great measure anticipative to the Derby—for, by its signs and tokens, the horoscope of that mighty event is read. It will extend over the five days, from the 19th inclusive, and set before the speculators the Two Thousand and the One Thousand Guinea Stakes, besides many Sweepstakes and other issues, containing among their nominations a large moiety of the popular horses now in training. Durham Races fall on the 22nd and 23rd, but it will be a local affair, while Chester, the eyesore of all observance, is set down for the 27th—it used to be fixed for the first Monday in May. The list is a monster catalogue, the Trades' Cup entries alone occupying more than four pages of the Book Calendar! The Ascot Meeting will be a sort of Derby rehearsal, and the whole a brilliant show. Thus terminates our pencillings in the perspective we cannot close without a touch in the back-ground. . . .

At the late Northampton Races, the starter dropped his flag, and "told the jockeys to go"—(such is his evidence before the Stewards) for the Althorp Stakes. After they had gone, he called them back "You may call spirits from the vasty deep, but will they come?" They went—neither will a jockey who don't hear you. Well, that was a false start—as they rightly said, and then went, as he ought, "without any word from the starter." This, too, is called "false." Now, if a start be false when the word is given, and when it is not given, what may constitute fair start. The conundrum is more easily asked than in the one and twenty pages of the laws of the Jockey Club, as that code appears in the Racing Calendar, not the slightest allusion is made as to the manner in which a race is to commence. It is only required that "the horses be up to the post" before the starting post (as he (the starter) may think necessary:" but, of how long they are to remain so—or upon what authority they are to depart—no word is said.....It is only necessary to call to mind how often these laws were framed, that we may deal leniently with Acts of Parliament.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—The principal betting this afternoon was upon the Newmarket Handicap, the aspirants to which will be put to the test on Tuesday next. The Euclid colt, Sting, and Vanish, were the lions, only the latter, however, showing any improvement, as Tutbury Lass reported herself "amiss." Sting sprang almost to evens for the Port, which looks like a certainty. The Derby betting was remarkable for the eagerness to back Planet and to lay against almost everything else in the race. Notches in the Oaks.

NEWMARKET HANDICAP.

9 to 2 agst Euclid colt	10 to 1 agst Footstool (t)	100 to 6 agst Humdrum (t)
9 to 2 —— Sting	12 to 1 —— Lycœus (t)	20 to 1 —— Campanula
7 to 1 —— Vanish	14 to 1 —— Kenberg (t)	90 to 1 —— Tom Tulloch
	Waterloo (t) scratched.

THE PORT STAKES.

Offers to back the field at evens or to 1 to 6 to 4 about Sting.

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

	18 to 1 agst Bourston (t)	25 to 1 agst Pine Apple
9 to 2 agst Planet (t)	20 to 1 —— Wallace (t)	50 to 1 —— Odessa Lily (t)
	Vivenagh is scratched

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

7 to 1 agst The Liberator (t)	8 to 1 agst Christopher

CHESTER CUP.

20 to 1 agst Mendicant	28 to 1 agst Mickey Free		250 to 25 agst Lord Eglinton's
25 to 1 —— The Lamb	28 to 1 —— Punch		two (t)
25 to 1 —— Peter Lely	40 to 1 —— Lycœus (t)	600 to 20 —— Mr. Colquitt's two
25 to 1 —— Newcourt	66 to 1 —— Annandale (t)

OAKS.

700 to 200 agst Kent's lot (t)	25 to 1 agst Gherkin	66 to 1 agst Sir C. Cobweb (t)
14 to 1 —— Forth's lot (t)	25 to 1 —— Canygahan
20 to 1 —— Van Tromp	30 to 1 —— The Liberator	50 to 1 —— Pavilion
20 to 1 —— Planet (t)	40 to 1 —— Horn of Chase	50 to 1 —— Bingham (t)
13 to 1 —— Ephrata	60 to 1 —— Mendicant (t)	50 to 1 —— War Eagle
	66 to 1 agst Oxonian (t)

OAKS.

8 to 1 agst Farmer's Daughter

THURSDAY.—The betting this afternoon was almost entirely governed by Monday's quotations; one exception, however, should be noticed: viz, the Euclid colt, who was ejected from the front rank, and left off two or three points worse than on Monday. Planet was in great request, from his engagements, and Dulcet became the leading favourite for the Chester Cup. Such were the only noticeable features of a particularly dull afternoon.

NEWMARKET HANDICAP.

4 to 1 agst Sting (t)	9 to 1 agst Lycœus (t)	15 to 1 agst Humdrum
7 to 1 —— Euclid colt (t)	10 to 1 —— Lyneus	15 to 1 —— Queen of Tyne
7 to 1 —— Vanish	12 to 1 —— Footstool (t)	20 to 1 —— Tom Tulloch
	25 to 1 agst Remorse (t)

THE PORT

Even on the Field agst Sting	2 to 1 agst Sir Tatton Sykes

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP.

13 to 1 agst Euclid colt	15 to 1 agst Wolf Dog (t)
17 to 1 —— Bourston	25 to 1 —— Odessa Lily (t)

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKES.

3 to 1 agst Planet (t)	7 to 1 agst Liberator (t)

CHESTER CUP.

20 to 1 agst Dulcet (t)	25 to 1 agst Cismora Gherardi		33 to 1 agst Intrepid
22 to 1 —— Headlam	25 to 1 —— Mickey Free (t)		66 to 1 —— Sweetmeat (t)
25 to 1 —— The Lamb (t)	33 to 1 —— Punch (t)

DERBY.

6 to 1 agst Van Tromp	25 to 1 agst Gherkin	40 to 1 agst Mr. Martin (t)
9 to 1 —— Planet (t)	28 to 1 —— Liberator (t)	40 to 1 —— Bingham
14 to 1 —— Ephrata	33 to 1 —— Christopher (t)	50 to 1 —— Pavilion
	50 to 1 —— Cossack (t)

LINCOLN STEEPLE CHASE. MARCH 30.

Richard Sutton, Esq., and John Tomlin, Esq., Stewards.

Handicap of 20 sovs each, with 100 added by the town and neighbourhood of Lincoln; 15 forfeit.

Mr. Morris's c g Tamworth	.. ..	(Taylor) 1
Mr. Hutchinson's ch g Profligate	.. ..	(Bradley) 2
Mr. W. Lott's Repealer	.. ..	(Owner) 3

Thirteen horses started—A most excellent race.

A Handicap Race for 10 sovs each, 5 ft, with 30 added; over six hurdles, two miles. The winner to pay £5 expenses.

Mr. Walter's b g Cavendish	.. ..	1
Mr. Marshall's gr g Wanderer	.. ..	2
Mr. J. Scott's The Doctor	.. ..	3

Six horses started. A capital race.

THE EASTER HUNT. The meet on Monday next (Easter Monday) has been appointed to take place on Stoke Common, about three miles from Slough. It is stated to be very probable, should the morning be fine, that his Royal Highness Prince Albert will honour the meet with his presence. Lord Granville, the Master of the Buck Hounds, has left town for Paris, and is not expected to return until after the holidays.

OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR APRIL.

BUILDING A MAN-OF-WAR IN PORTSMOUTH DOCKYARD

As no outlines were distinguishable, there could be no idea of dimensions. Howbeit, the new planet was all made of wood-work inside; John Downs felt sure of that. It was a world of cross-beams and rafters, upright and downright: above his head, beams and timbers all crossing and traversing, and thick and three-fold, so that scarcely any daylight could be seen in looking up. Level with his feet, and with his knees, and his breast, lay all sorts of loose planks, some of them pretending to be for the measure of passages to and fro, with here and there half or three quarters of a ladder, just knocked up any how with a few bits of wood and—a hammer, or a notch; and beneath him more cross-beams, and uprights, and slanting timbers, and lumbering masses of wood unfixed, and small platforms of planks with men standing upon them, doing something, while cantles or bantlings were seen dimly shining far in the depths beyond, some of them stationary, some moving about and suddenly disappearing. Nothing seemed to have any shape. Men were distinguishable in all directions, but were recognised by inches rather than the eye; for even the figures of the men, as well as the objects that environed them, were shapeless. Amidst all this, the noise and confused din were prodigious—the constant blows of innumerable hammers of different weights and powers upon wood and metal, mingled with the hacking of axes, the chipping of adzes, the lumbering of heavy logs, the clatter of planks, and the varied voices and tones of the workmen, produced in their entire effects much such an impression as might have been experienced by a visitor to the interior of the Tower of Babel. As to the work that was going on—it was inconceivable. Every man seemed to be working at random; and each group, so busy upon a strip of platform, or huddling together below over some great mass of timber, appeared to be exerting themselves with no definite object or effect. Douglas Jerrold's Shilling Magazine.

HALFPAX POLITICIANS

In the winter season, when but few vessels enter the port, and the operations of agriculture are wholly suspended, politics are ably and amply discussed, and very sapient conjectures formed as to the future, in these interesting and valuable crowns adjacent to the fountain-head of legislation—the Lords, taverns, blacksmiths' shops, tap-rooms, and the sunny and sheltered corners of the streets. Every one, however humble his station may be, is uncommonly well-informed on affairs of state. A man who can scarcely write a common letter, or read a paragraph, can spend with great facility and neatness a constitution, and he who exhibits great awkwardness in measuring a few yards of riband, manifests astonishing skill in handling the measures of a government. Indeed, this seems a natural turn for political economy, as the Germans and Italians have for music; and it is the principal source of amusement they possess. If Lord John Russell were to spend an evening at the public room of the Excelsior, the world find such topics as the Corn-Laws, Free-Trade, Responsible Government, and the Repeal of the Union, disposed of to his entire satisfaction, in a manner so lucid, so logical, and conclusive, that he could not fail to be edified and edified. He would be convinced that the Colonial Office should be removed from Downing-street, London, to Shark street, Blueberry-square, Illenoe, where there are master minds capable of directing reconciliation among the complicated interests of a vast and populous empire.—Fraser's Magazine.

NORTH OF BEAUTY

Has the beloved reader, in his experience of society, never heard good-natured female friends; who always wonder what you can see in Miss Smith that is so fascinating; or what could induce Major Jones to propose for that silly, insignificant, simpering Miss Thompson, who has nothing but her wax-doll face to recommend her? What is there in a pair of pink cheeks and blue eyes, forsooth? these dear moralists ask, and hint wisely, that the gifts of genius, the accomplishments of the mind, the mastery of Marshall's questions, and a lady-like knowledge of botany and geology, the gift of making poetry, the gift of rattling sonatas in the Herz-manner, and so forth, are far more valuable endowments for a female, than these tuitive charms which a few years will inevitably scrub. It is quite edifying to hear women speculate upon the worthlessness and the duration of beauty.—Vanity Fair.

SHAKSPEARE AND MACBETH

The tragedy of "Macbeth" was not favourably received by the critics. The Fifty Society have raked up some curious particulars connected with the first night of its performance. The gods seem to have been particularly obstreperous; and, when the incantation scene commenced, the witches' cauldron appeared upon the stage, one graceless 'prentice from the Ward of Chepe bawled out "Harry, if such pieces be setts forth—then verily is ye theatre guyinge unto potte." Another, in a most loude voyce, did pronounce the tickette for soupe;" whilst a third "did prophecie that ye cauldron would cooke Macbeth his grosse." The ancient MS. continues: "but, forsamuch as ye tragedie didde welle and marle amouncte ye people, ye Master Shakspeare didde take his fyrbes of pears—and sappynge that samen nighte at the Mermaidde, didde saye, and of this there be many witnesses worthy of all credite, that ye pyese dyddes goe righte well, and that, if forsooth it should ruine ten thousande pounde, he would pay unte mine hoste his score at thatte hostelrie" That same night, or forsooth mornynge at fyve of the clocke, when ye reckonynge was called for, ye poet, Ben Jonson, as indeed was e'stomed with his dyddes dutifulnesse towarde ye man I have neve whither: see that, because of his in such a mannerre makynge of himself soe scarce, he was called ever after 'Scarce (or Rare) Ben Johnson.' "—The Man in the Moon.

SERVANTS' GOSSIP

The servant at No. 1 told the servant at No. 2 that her master expected his old friends the Baileys to pay him a visit shortly; and No. 2 told No. 3 that No. 1 expected to have the Baileys in the house every day; and No. 3 told No. 4 that it was all up with No. 1, for they couldn't keep the bailiffs out, whereupon, 4 told 5 that the officers were after No. 1, and that it was as much as he could do to prevent himself being taken in execution, and that it was nearly killing his poor, dear wife; and so it went on, increasing and increasing, until it got to No. 32, who confidently assured the last house, No. 33, that the Bow-street officers had taken up the gentleman reported to be No. 1, for killing his poor, dear wife with arsenic, and that it was confidently hoped and believed that he would be executed at Horsemonger-lane Gaol, as the facts of the case were very clear against him. The Greatest Plague of Life

IMITATION WINE

The butt of Malmsey in which Edward IV. caused his brother to be drowned was, it is believed, actually sold as a full, fruity wine with "plenty of body in it," after poor Clarence had been in soak till death relieved him from his drenching. Comic History of England.

WHITTINGTON AND HIS CAT.

There is nothing very interesting in the history of Commerce until the time of Whittington, whose cat was a fabulous animal, though it has taken its place by the side of the British Lion in our English annals. We are inclined to believe that there is some analogy between these two brutes, and that both are meant to be the types respectively of our political and commercial prosperity. We have sometimes thought that the British Lion, from its plurality of lives, ought rather to be called the British Cat, especially from its readiness to come to the scratch when the affair of the throne may seem to be in jeopardy. Whatever may be the exact nature of the beast, it is certainly a very highly-trained and somewhat harmless animal, for any statesman may place his head in the British Lion's mouth, and venture to withdraw it without any the slightest injury. The creature will roar loudly enough and show an ample expanse of jaw, but it is frequently not præterea nihil with the noisy brute, whose grumbling is often indicative of his extreme amiability. Whittington was actually three times Lord Mayor of London, and we find him "doing a bill" for Henry IV. to the tune of a thousand pounds, and taking the subsidy on wool out of which the sovereign generally fleeced the people as collateral security. Comic History of England.

THE FAMINE IN IRELAND.

Ireland is now, in one sense, in the midst, in another sense, we fear, in the beginning of a famine. Two millions of which the world has never seen Four millions of people, the majority of whom have always upon the verge of utter destitution, have been suddenly deprived of the sole article of their ordinary food. Without any of the ordinary channels of commercial intercourse, by which such a loss could be supplied, the country has had no means of replacing the withdrawal of this perished subsistence, and the consequence has been, that in a country that is called civilised, under the protection of the mightiest monarchy upon earth and of events within a day's communication of the capital of the greatest and richest empire in the world, thousands of our fellow-creatures are each day dying of starvation, and the wasted corpses of many left unburied in their miserable hovels, to be devoured by the hungry swine; or to escape this profanation, only to diffuse among the living the malaria of pestilence and death.—Dublin University Magazine.

MR. DONNET'S RAILWAY JOURNEY

Away, with a shriek, and a roar, and a rattle, from the town, burrowing among the dwellings of men and making the streets hum, flashing out into the meadows for a moment, musing in the hollows, jumping the rivers, booming on in darkness and heavy air, bursting out again into the sunny day so bright and wake; away, with a shriek, and a roar, and a rattle, through the fields, through the woods, among the corn, through the hay, through the chalk, through the mould, through the clay, through the rock, among objects clear at hand and almost in the grasp, ever flying from the traveller, and a deceitful distance ever moving away with him: like as in the track of the remorseless monster, Death! Through the hollow, on the height, by the heath, by the orchard, by the park, by the garden, over the canal, across the river, where the sheep are feeding, where the barge is going, where the hay is making, where the dead are lying, where the factory is smoking, where the stream is running, where the village clusters, where the great cathedral rises, where the bleak moor lies, and the wild breeze scrapes on the corn, through the day

THE THEATRES, AND THE PREPARATIONS FOR EASTER MONDAY.

DRURY-LANE.

The most extensive preparations are being made at this theatre, for the new spectacle, to be produced next Monday evening; and the appearance of the stage, when we were present at a rehearsal on Wednesday morning, was most peculiar. The rehearsal of a full piece is always, more or less, an affair of great confusion; but it is next to impossible to convey an idea of the scene which the coulisses of Drury-Lane then presented. Every portion of the scenery—even the "wings," as they are technically called—had been removed, showing the vast extent of the stage, on which two hundred persons were grouped about, forming into processions, taking their places for entrance, or waiting for the proper "cue" for their appearance. Down the sides of the stage, some fifty horses of every breed and colour were snorting, stamping, and clattering about over ribbed platforms; and at the back, near the wall in Drury-Lane, a group of camels were patiently looking on at the confusion. The appearance of these last was most interesting. Three of them the finest animals we ever saw—had arrived but the day before, by race of the Clermont Company's ships; and they were attended by the same number of native Mamelukes, in their picturesque costume, to whose slightest word the enduring "ships of the desert" were obedient, rising and kneeling down, or changing their places, when ordered, with the docility of dogs. On the other side of the stage, an elephant was mildly amusing himself with some scraps of vegetables, perfectly unconcerned. There was another, and much larger one, in the yard of the theatre, who was preparing for his entry for awhile, because he was too large to enter at any of the archways; and the passage leading from the stage door to the stage was going to be cut away to admit him. Immediately in front, near the foot-lamps, the author, prompter, stage directors, and principal performers had collected. To a person not experienced in dramatic matters, it would have appeared impossible to get all this confusion into anything like order by Monday evening, yet we were assured such would be the case; when a grand Oriental spectacle will be represented, called "The Desert, or the Insaum's Daughter," which Mr. Fitzhall has written as a vehicle for some superb effects, as well as the introduction of Follchen David's symphony, "Le Desert," which has been adapted to the English words by Mr. J. H. Tully. The choruses will be sustained by one hundred voices, and the music will be principally sung by Miss Messent, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, and Mr. Harley, to whom the chief characters in the drama are entrusted. Some magnificent scenery has been painted by Mr. Grieve and Mr. Telbin, and the great effect will be at the end of the first act, when the canvas will be seen falling in the Desert, where it will be attacked by Bedouins, the scene concluding with the coming of the Simoon, or fire-wind, and rising of the sand. This very elaborate effect will be arranged on a new and very complicated principle. At the recitation of the chorus in the ballet department will also be brought into action, and the appliances are of the most gorgeous and costly description. The performances will commence with Wallace's ever-charming opera of "Maritana."

HAYMARKET.

After Mr. Bourcicault's comedy of the "The School for Scheming," a new Easter entertainment will be produced on Monday night, called "The New Planet," from the prolific pen of Mr. Planché. The clever author has this time abandoned the romances of fairy history, of which he has been time and time again the chronicler, and produced one of those pieces known at the French theatres as a revue: of the same style as his "Drama's Leves," brought out some years ago at the Olympic, and "The Dream at Home," produced a few seasons back at the Haymarket. The present piece will commence with a meeting of the different planets in the star-chamber of the new one, with their transit from that locality to "London by Night." The first appearance of Mr. Buckstone, in the character of Harlequin will, no doubt, be a great feature of this scene. We are next carried through the Polytechnic Institution, with its gun cotton lectures and other wonders: the Egyptian Hall with its opposition nigger Serenaders, the Hunt of the Wits, with the different Giselles from the Adelphi, Drury Lane, the Adelphi, the Princess', &c.: with some hard hitting on both sides at the rival Operas; and the extravaganza winds up with Harlequin's Tableaux Vivans, by various living statues of celebrity, and the enthronisation of the new planet. The programme will conclude with the sixth performance of Mr. Morton's last one act comedy drama, "The Light Troop of St. James's," of which we gave a notice in our last.

The habitues of the Haymarket, and lovers of the comic drama generally, will be delighted to learn that Mrs. Nisbett (as she is still called in the bills) is engaged at the theatre for a limited number of nights, and will make her reappearance on Monday week in Sheridan Knowles's comedy of "The Love Chase," in her original part of Constance.

THE ADELPHI

relies upon the attraction of its present bill, and therefore no novelty will be produced on Monday evening. "The Flowers of the Forest," by Mr Buckstone, and Mr. Charles Selby's "Pantomimic Burlesque of "The Phantom Huntsman," will form the entertainments; the different pieces in preparation being kept back until the attraction of the drama begins to be on the wane, which, however, we do not expect will be just yet.

THE LYCEUM

has but one novelty in its bill—a farce, called "Crusoe the Second"—which is an adaptation, by Mr. Stoqueler, of an amusing vaudeville now performing in Paris. A three-act drama, "The Creole," by Mr. Shirley Brooks, the scene of which is laid in the Mauritius, will, it is expected, be ready for representation by Thursday evening.

It is to be regretted that any misunderstanding should have arisen between the proprietor and the lessees of the Lyceum, and it is to be hoped that some arrangements will be made that will prevent the latter bringing their management to an end in three months, at which time, we believe, the lease expires. The Keeleys raised the Lyceum after the Princess's Company had failed, previous to a "fact" in the dramatic world, by a clear-headed direction, and by taking the field at a fortunate moment; but the attraction, it must be borne in mind, rested, in a great measure, in themselves, and not in the mere walls of a theatre.

PRINCESS'

After the new opera of "The Bandolle," Shakspeare's "Midsummer Night's Dream" will be produced, with every aid towards a general great effect that the different departments of the theatre can contribute. With the aid of some exquisite scenery, by Mr. W. Beverley; a well trained chorus; and a cast of great strength, the revival will, in every respect, equal the celebrated one produced at Covent Garden during Madame Vestris's management. The theatrical disadvantage of the operatic tendencies of Mr. Emden, under whose direction the former version was produced. The part of Oberon will be sustained by Miss Sara Flower, and that of Titania by Miss Anne Romer. Mr. Compton will support the character of Bottom; and the principal members of the troupe at this house will also assist in the representation. The Princess' Theatre appears altogether to have given up the production of burlesque, for the performance of which it was once so celebrated.

SADLER'S WELLS.

Mr. Phelps is preparing to revive "Macbeth," and, as we understand, with the greatest care; surpassing all the pains hitherto bestowed upon everthing produced by the management of this theatre. It will not be produced on Easter Monday: as a holiday audience, however, will frequent the interior of this establishment, is not always the best to commit the fortunes of an important revival, or production to. The first representation of "The Tempest" at Sadler's Wells will excite much interest in the dramatic world.

SURREY.

Some members of the Bedouin Arab tribes are engaged to appear here in an entertainment on Monday next; and gave a rehearsal of their performances at the theatre on Wednesday. Their performances are certainly most extraordinary, eclipsing all that these very active children of the desert have hitherto shown through before an English audience. We think it almost a pity that they were not engaged to contribute to the reality of the effect of the "Simoon," and other effects of "The Desert" at Drury Lane; but we have little doubt but that their performances will meet with an audience of equal appreciation, and, perhaps, of equal numbers (for the auditory of the Surrey is very capacious) as at the larger theatre. We have been told that the agility and grace of the Bedouin Arabs in "ground and lofty tumbling," is owing to the natural pad, if it may so be termed, that the sand of the desert forms for them in their early practice. If this be the case, we think that the Goodwin Sands, at low water, might be turned to some account for similar purposes, and that an immense race of tumblers might be produced to rival the Eastern tribes of saltimbanques.

ASTLEY'S.

Mr. Batty advertises a new equestrian spectacle for Easter Monday, on which day, from time immemorial, the "summer season" of Astley's has commenced. The present lessee has, however, kept the theatre open throughout the year. The new production is termed "The Bride of Abydos; or, The Corsair and the Avenger's Steed" and it will introduce all Mr. Batty's canine, feline, and ursine host of horses, ponies, and other quadrupeds. In fact, so great is the irruption of Eastern animals into London, that we doubt not before long, camels will ply for hire in the streets, to the injury of the index cabs, and elephants usurp the places of the cheap omnibuses. Whether acting or not, the great concert members of Mr. Batty's corps must be always eating—his expenses, we have no doubt, will be repaid.

Mr. LOVE will continue his entertainments at CROSBY HALL, whereat all those who had not the opportunity of hearing him during Lent, may ensure a very agreeable evening's amusement. We confess that we like these ventriloquial entertainments. We love to be deceived into the conviction that ladies and gentlemen are left in houses, behind screens, by themselves, and that other useful persons hunt blunebottle flies, and fry omelettes, and repair chimneys, and do other versatile things in their behoof; and of these pleasant deceptions, Mr. Love is a great professor.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—One of the most difficult things in the management of a great establishment, such as her Majesty's Theatre, is to place in profitable juxtaposition the great artists at its command. The rarest contrast will be produced on Thursday night, in the production of "I Puritani," for in Lablache, the greatest lyrical actor extant, we have a portrait of the old roundhead, as graphic as if limned by the pencil of Lareche. Castellan is the beau ideal of the puritan maiden; while, in Celesti and Gardoni, who will complete the lyrical picture, we have two actors and singers whose vocal and physical means will complete the dramatic illusion. The attractions of the ballet will consist of the chef d'œuvre of Rosati, Lucile Grahn, and Marie Taglioni; each will exhibit their various excellencies, and form a treat as unique as it is dazzling.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"Novice."—The notation by numerals that you propose was formerly adopted here, but gave way to the system now in use, which, although more cumbersome, is certainly more expressive.

"C. S. R."—Bridport. No. 133 was corrected in the last Number.

"C. F." North Devon. Your Problems shall be reported next week. The omission of a White Bishop in No. 133 and in No. 135 renders both inspracticable. In the first place, a Bishop at King's 5th, and in the second, at King's Bishop's square, and you will not have much difficulty with them.

"C. W. R." See the preceding notice to "C. F."

"G. N." Kaunen. In marshalling the Chessmen for action, you place the White Queen on a White square next the King, and the Black Queen on a Black square.

"Hamberd" may obtain a work on Polish Draughts at any of the chief Chessmen Turners.

"Wichdart."—We believe you must be labouring under some strange misapprehension regarding Problem 164, but have no means of acting you right until you send the position itself

"Marsion."—It does not appear that Black gains any advantage by the move in question; you can always reply with Queen's Bishop takes King's Knight, or at once retreat the King's Bishop to Queen's 3rd, leaving he Queen's Knight comparatively hors de combat.

"E. T." The new work will be noticed hereafter.

"S. B." Next week, if we have room.

"T. W. N." The Yorkshire Annual Meeting of Chess Players will take place this year on the 12*th of May, at Hull, not Leeds, and a very brilliant assemblage is anticipated.*

"P. Quay." Place a White Bishop at White King's Bishop's square.

"Eon. C. S. L."—Very nice, and shall be made available.

"C. S.," Brighton.—Next week, if possible

"Accuratus."—We have no opportunity of referring to the back Numbers: you must be good enough, therefore, to write out the positions in question.

"A German."—The Match by Correspondence between Hamburg and Lubeck is not concluded, although the Game was virtually won by the former some time since.

"A. B. C." Eltham.—You can pay your annual subscription for Bucklebeck's Leipsic Chess Magazine to Williams and Norgate, the Foreign Booksellers.

"S. T. W." We cannot undertake to notice books not sent in the usual way.

"Eon, C. S. L."—The Little Match between Captain Kennedy and Mr. Weil has terminated in favour of Captain K., who won eleven games to his opponent's five.

"Brede," Alcona.—A communication was forwarded by post a month ago, which we fear has miscarried.

"Yankee." Mr. Stanley's Chess Magazine is now procurable in London.

"Senex"—Try Rest-n-Grand Dimon, or Gliddon's, of King-street. At the former, you will always find antagonists

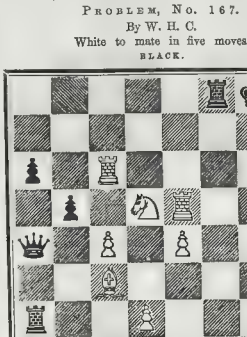
Solutions by "C. P." "N. D.," "G. A. H.," "Sopraccita," "M. D." and "Philo-Chess," are correct.

PROBLEM, No. 167.

By W. H. C.

White to mate in five moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

GAME LATELY PLAYED AT THE LONDON CHESS CLUB, BETWEEN MESSRS. VON CARNAP AND G. W. MEDLEY IN CONSULTATION AGAINST MESSRS. HARRWITZ AND BURGHES.

WHITE (MM. Von C. and M.)	BLACK (MM. H. and B.)	WHITE (MM. Von C. and M.)	BLACK (MM. H. and B.)
1. K P two	K P two	21. K B P one (f)	B takes Q
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	22. P takes Q (ch)	K takes P
3. Q P two	P takes P	23. P takes B	Kt to K B 2nd
4. K B to Q B 4th	K B checks	24. Q R to K sq (ch)	Kt to K 4th
5. Q B P one	P takes P	25. B to Q Kt 5th	K R to B sq
6. Castles	P takes P	26. R takes R	R takes R
7. Q B takes P	K to B sq	27. Q R P one	R to K B 5th
8. Q to her 5th	Q to K 2nd	28. R to Q sq	K to Q sq
9. Q R P one	K B to Q R 4th	29. K Kt P one	R to Q 5th
10. K Kt to Kt 5th	K Kt to R 3rd	30. R takes R	Kt to K B 6th (ch)
11. K B P two	Q P one	31. K to B 2nd	Kt takes R
12. Q Kt to B 3rd	K B takes Q Kt	32. K to K 3d	Kt takes B
13. B takes B	Q Kt to Q sq	33. P takes Kt	K to Q B 3d
14. Q to Q 4th	Q Kt to K 3rd	34. K to Q 4th	Q R P two
15. Kt takes Kt	P takes Kt	35. P takes P en pass	Q Kt P one
16. Q R P one	Q Kt P one	36. K to Q B 3d	K to Q Kt 3d
17. K B P one	K P one	37. Q R P one	K takes P
18. Q to Q 5th	Q R to Kt sq	38. K to Q Kt 4th	K to Q Kt 3d
19. Q B takes K P	Q R to K 3rd (a)	39. K R P one	K R P one
20. Q B takes Q P	P takes B	And White resigns.

(a) Taking the Bishop would involve at least the loss of their King's Rook: for, suppose

	P takes B
Q to her 8th (ch)	Q to K sq
P to K B 6th, winning easily

Nevertheless, White played very ill in taking the K P with their Bishop; for, although it could not be safely captured on the move, Black was enabled to prevent its escape, and secure it presently.

(b) The opening players have quite thrown away the advantages they possessed.

CHESS AT BRIGHTON.

GAME BETWEEN CAPTAIN KENNEDY AND MR. WEIL.

BLACK (Mr. W.)	WHITE. (Capt. K.)	BLACK. (Mr. W.)	WHITE. (Capt. K.)
1. K B P two	Q P two	16. K to Q 2d	K R to K sq
2. Q B P two	K to B 3d	17. K to B 2d	Q B to K 5th (ch)
3. P takes P	Kt takes P	18. K to Q 2d	K R to K 3d
4. K P one	Q B P two	19. K B to K 2d	Q to K Kt 4th (ch)
5. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3d	20. Q R to K sq	Q to K 3d
6. K P one	K P two	21. Q to K B 3d	Q B P one
7. P takes P	Q Kt takes P	22. K R to B sq	Q R to Q sq
8. Q P one	K B to K 2d	23. Q P one	K B to K Kt 4th (ch)
9. K Kt to B 3d	Q B to K Kt 5th
10. Q to Q R 4th (ch)	Q B to Q 2d	24. K to K sq	K R takes K P
11. Q to K 4th	Q Kt takes K Kt (ch)	25. K to K B 2d	K B to K 5th
12. Q takes Kt	Kt takes Kt	26. Q to K B 3d	Q R to K sq
13. Q Kt P takes Kt	Q B to Q B 3d	27. K to K B sq	B takes R
14. K P one	Castles	28. K B takes Q B P	B to K R 6th
15. K Kt P two (a)	K B to R 6th (ch)	29. Q B to Q 2d	Q B to Q B 3d
	And Black resigned	30. Q to K B 5th	K R to K 7th

(a) This Pawn was pushed forward to prevent the threatened advance of White's K P two squares, an awkward move for Black; but the remedy proved worse than the disease, for White now obtained, by means of it, a sudden and powerful attack from which his adversary had no subsequent way of escape.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

(HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.)

No. 137.—By Mr. M'G——.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
K at his B 4th	K at K B 3rd	Kts at K B 5th and 8th
B at Q R 3rd		White to play, and mate in three moves.

No. 138.—By A. L., Ipswich.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
K at K R 2nd	K at h it sth	Ps at K B 4th, and
B at K R 3rd.	P at K R 3rd	K 3rd
Kt at K B 6th		White to play, and mate in four moves.

No. 139.—By W. H. C.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.
K at his B 7th	K at his B 4th	Ps at K R 3rd, K Kt
Bs at K B 3rd, and Q 6th	P at K R 4th, Q 4th and 5th	2nd, and Q 2d
		White playing first, mates in four moves.

LITERATURE.

THE GERMAN CHRISTMAS EVE; or, Dentschen Damen Weichnats Korbchen, a Picture of Home Life in Germany. By MADAME APOLLINE FLOSS. Edited by MRS. A. MONTGOMERY. Calnes.

Although the staple of this volume be sentiment, it has a more practical claim upon the reader's attention, for presenting instructions in that class of female employment which assimilates to the angling of the stronger sex, and is neither work nor play—we mean, Knitting. It may be, too, that such pursuits belong to woman's chivalry, in which she accomplishes tender victories, and with silken cords leads into bondage the stouter heart of man. Happy triumph! in which there is equal delight to the victor and the vanquished!

Mdme. Flohr's work comprises a collection of tales, descriptive of the simple and simple customs of her fatherland, Germany; and the peaceful and domestic, though somewhat quaint and romantic features of its every day life. These tales are some twenty in number, and occupy half the volume: their incidents are all of that startling school of horror or mysticism which is a disagreeable excrescence of German literature; but they have much of its better charm, a "peculiar mixture of high imaginativeness and minute detail." The accomplished Editor of the work well observes, in her preface, there is greater warmth and a more picturesque character attached to the history of the homes of the Germans than to our own. They resemble us in our close family union, and they surpass us in our love for festive entertainment without excitement; and of such kind are the family scenes, the rejoicings, and the fêtes narrated in the volume before us. Thus, we find described the celebration of a Golden Marriage on the 50th anniversary of the wedding-day: this being so named because the wife, who, fifty years ago, wore her bridal wreath of myrtle, and twenty-five years after her silver crown, at her silver marriage, now receives her golden crown, and a bonsilver crown, at her silver marriage, now receives her golden crown, and a bonquet of the same materials. Here Mdme. Flohr suggests a very interesting chapter, as does also a Ball; but the Christmas Customs are, unquestionably, the paramount attraction of the book. The celebration of Christmas Eve at the Orphan Asylum, at Hanover," is a delightful chapter, and the instructions for preparing "the Christmas Tree" will enable the English reader to participate in a novel mode of keeping the holy season.

Between the above portion of the volume and the sequel, which is purely practical, there is a cleverly-contrived connection; for, the latter consists of Directions for working the Knitting Patterns, repeatedly referred to in the narratives by those we added Berlin and Netting Patterns; the whole illustrated with plates in outline.

The German Customs in Germany are especially attractive; and it is worthy of remark, that the poorer classes are always desirous of imitating the highest order in providing their entertainments, whereas, the middle classes observe much less ceremony and expense in their weddings. The bride takes from this class of society, whatever is linen, and a wreath of myrtle is firmly fastened round her head: the myrtle of the two ends being considered typical of the bride's virtue.

We should add, that Madame Flohr's "Picture of German Life, and Knitting Book," is produced in handsome style, and, considering its extent and completeness, the work is not costly

MUSICAL REVIEW.

THE BOOK OF MELODY AND DRAWING-ROOM COMPANION. By ROBERT GUYLOTT. Darton and Co.

This very elegant volume is worthy of a place in any accomplished lady's drawing room. There are twelve original pieces by composers of talent and eminence, with the additional grace of Mr. J. Brandard's artistical skill in the illustrations. Two pianoforte pieces, by Signor Catalani, are of more than average merit, not overloaded with difficulties to dismay amateurs. Mr. Guylott's introductory remarks on the style of singing a ballad, are full of good sense and sound advice, and his own inspirations display a composer of taste and feeling

IRELAND.

STATE OF THE COUNTRY.—More favourable reports are given this week from the Irish provinces. The Armagh Guardian reports that the mortality in that town is rapidly decreasing, and there were favourable symptoms of a speedy disappearances of typhus fever, which had been so destructive in the locality. In the western town of Cork, however, the mortality is still very great. The deaths during the week before last amounted to 175. The number of paupers in the house was 5199.

THE CORN AND PROVISION MARKETS.—The panic in the Corn Exchange has subsided, but still there is little demand at present prices. Indian corn was sold on Tuesday at 80s. to 32s., but large purchases could have been effected at even lower terms. To give an idea of the turn in this article, we may observe that it was in demand at 78s. only three weeks ago. The importations of food into Dublin last week were very large, and the price of the coarser kinds has fallen considerably. Singular to say, potatoes begin to show themselves in great abundance in all the markets, both Dublin and provincial, and have fallen considerably in price.

THE REPEAL ASSOCIATION.—At the meeting on Monday Mr. John O'Connell made a long speech. In the course of it he adverted to the Young Ireland party to whose accession from the Association he attributed their forlorn and insolvent condition. He hoped, however, that a reconciliation might be effected The difference between them was trifling; if they gave up the assertion of the right to resort to physical force for the attainment of the Repeal of the Union, that Association would be rejoiced to have Mr. Smith O'Brien and his associates back again. (Cheers) He would go far towards effecting a reconciliation (cheers); and, if he had done or said anything calculated to wound the feelings of any of those gentlemen, he freely expressed his unqualified contrition for it. (Hear.) To err was human, and, for the sake of Ireland, he would admit he had erred in regard to the course he took towards that party. (Hear, hear.) If Mr. O'Brien returned, the Association would again rally, and soon be restored to its former powerful position. (Cheers.) Mr. John O'Connell admitted that the people of England had come forward most liberally with private charity for the relief of the suffering people of Ireland, and he gave notice of a motion for a special vote of thanks to them—but as to the Government and Parliament, they had acted in a niggardly and heartless manner. In short, they refused his country common justice, while they lavished upon her insult and injury. For his part, he would support Sir Robert Peel in preference to Lord John Russell, if he would out-bill him in liberality to Ireland (cheers)—but he expected nothing from Sir Robert Peel, or, indeed, any English party. (Hear, hear.) It was not his (Mr. J. O'Connell's) intention to return to Parliament during the present Session, unless some contingency should happen that would imperatively demand his presence there. He repudiated the idea that, under any circumstances, the Imperial Parliament could do justice to Ireland. The House of Commons and the English press, which represents public opinion in England, were hostile to Ireland, and they (the Irish) had nothing to hope for but through the Repeal of the Union. (Cheers.)—The week's rent was £299 9s.

LOSS OF A VESSEL LADEN WITH CORN.—The Kilcas and Mary, of Cork, from Youghal to Clonakilty, corn loaded, was lost yesterday week, at Nohoval-bay, and all hands perished. The bodies of two children have been washed ashore.

CONVICTIONS FOR MURDER.—On Saturday week Thomas Cosgrave was convicted of the wilful murder of Bridget Barret upon the high seas, on the 10th September, 1845, by drowning her, assisted by James Mannion. Baron Lefroy passed sentence of death on the prisoner, who heard it with perfect composure, but on Mannion's sentence being declared he was insensible. James Mannion, who was convicted of murder at the last assizes, and sentenced to be hanged, has had his sentence commuted to transportation for life.

FATAL AFFRAY IN CONNEMARA.—The Galway Mercury contains the following:—"Accounts have reached town of a fatal affray in one of the islands off the coast of Connemara, early this week. We learn that a great number of men were there for the purpose of taking away oysters from the beds belonging to Mr. Martin, M.P., and, being warned off, they persevered, and flung stones at the keeper in charge, when he was obliged to fire upon the party; the consequence of which was, that one man was killed, and another severely wounded. We are also informed that Mr. Martin's men were severely hurt, and some of their limbs fractured.

ATROCIOUS MURDER BY A WOMAN.—At the Naas Assizes, on Saturday last, Catherine Colgan was indicted for the wilful murder of Margaret Foran, a woman upwards of ninety years of age, at Fort Barrington, on the 22nd of February. The prisoner pleaded not guilty. Mr. Corballis stated the case, which in substance was, that on the 22nd of February, Catherine Colgan, with a shovel, beat in the skull of the deceased, and then locked her up in her solitary dwelling, and left her there to die a lingering and horrible death. On the next morning the police from Athy came to the house, broke in the door, and found the old woman weltering in her blood, and speechless. Suspicion at once rested on Catherine Colgan; she was apprehended, and, from circumstantial evidence, the girl was brought home to her. Several witnesses were examined, whose evidence appeared so satisfactory to the Jury that they had no hesitation in finding the accused guilty. Mr. Justice Crampton sentenced the unhappy prisoner to the extreme penalty of the law. The day mentioned for the execution is Wednesday, the 23rd of April. The cause of the murder was to obtain the cabin in which the deceased lived, and three quarters of an acre of land which were attached to it.

MAUNDAY THURSDAY.—The day before yesterday being Maunday Thursday, it is Majesty's Royal bounty was distributed as usual by Mr. Hanby, Sub Almoner at Whitehall Chapel, to a number of aged men and women. Previous to her present Majesty coming to the throne, the Royal bounty used to be distributed on this day to as many aged males and females as the Sovereign was years old. This old ceremony is still observed, but none of the former recipients of Royal favour are neglected, as they have a present of equal value allotted them.

SUFFOCATION IN A WELL IN BOW-STREET.—On Monday evening Mr. Bedford held an inquest, at the Unicorn, Tavistock-street, on the body of Henry Warren, a plumber, who was suffocated in a well on Saturday last. John Hewson said he was employed with the deceased in removing the pump to make way for the new carriage-road in Bow-street. The deceased had to go down the well to cut off the pipe, and witness offered him a candle. Deceased put the ladder down the well, and went down six steps, his head being then two feet below the mouth of the well, when he suddenly fell into the water. Witness saw him fall, but was unable to render him any assistance. Deceased sank under the water, and was not found till half an hour had elapsed, and was then brought up with the drags. Previous to that a man went down with a rope round his body and his mouth tied up, but was compelled to return in consequence of the foul air. Mr. Cooper, the deceased's employer, said he thought the state of the well arose from the fact that, since the new sewer was made, the gas from the pipes in the road had escaped into it. Verdict, "Accidental Death;" the Coroner and Jury recommending "that in future all wells should be tested before any one entered them."

ADDITIONS OF THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

PERUVIAN VESSELS AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

ANTIQUITIES OF PERU AND MEXICO.

THE articles represented are part of a collection in the Ethnological Room of the British Museum. They have been placed there recently, and have not yet been classed or described in the Synopsis; so that a few details of them will be acceptable to holiday visitors.

PERUVIAN REMAINS

These remains appear to belong to various periods of a mixed people, probably supplied by colonies from other regions. Many indications tend to suggest the introduction of art from an Egyptian source, in the ancient edifices of the above sites, several of which present forms and dimensions approximating nearly to those of the Nile. Among these are the lintels of doors, the expanded bases of the buildings, and the hieroglyphic characters with which they are inscribed. Many vessels and other articles of potters' work assimilate to the productions of the Etruscan people: the key ornament is a common decoration, as is, also, the zig-zag ornament.

Nos. 1, 3, and 5, in the group of PERUVIAN VESSELS, are ornamented with such patterns, and their shape resembles the Etruscan. In No. 2, a vessel of a dark and very fine material, a well-executed pattern appears, consisting of diagonal crosses, zig-zag and diamond work. The face represented on this vessel has a strong Egyptian character. The handles are formed out of the ears; and the mouth of the vessel, which opens at the top of the head, gives it a remarkable affinity to crowned kings seen in Egyptian sculpture.

Nos. 4, 8, and 11, represent drinking vessels which were expressly dedicated to the use of the Incas and the priesthood, and were used in religious ceremonies. They were sometimes constructed with double bodies, connected by a hollow pipe, and terminating in heads of animals, &c., which formed the mouth-piece. In the group of MEXICAN remains, a vessel of this description is marked No. 3.

No. 6 of the Peruvian remains is a cup of a fine dark red stone, resembling porphyry in texture. The stem is a human foot, well carved, with a capital representation of the sandal. The foot rests in a cross-shaped trough, with figures at the corners.

Nos. 9 and 10 are minute vessels, neatly modelled, the former much resembling a common classic form.

MEXICAN REMAINS.

No. 1 in the group of Mexican Remains is a remarkable approximation to the Greek Myth of Icarus, the son of Dædalus; the figure being winged, but evidently by mechanical contrivance. Besides the wings, there is a tail, similar to that of a bird—probably meant for the same purpose, i. e. that of a rudder, to direct the flight. The decoration of the head and other parts of the figure are very similar to some appearances among the remains of Persepolis. This curious figure, which appears to have served as a baluster or dwarf column, is coloured throughout; the process which emanates from the top of the head being green, the dress variously blue, yellow, and dull red. The wings are edged with green; a yellow bar follows; and this is succeeded by one of red; then one of blue. A decoration, similar to the key ornament, next occurs, in blue on a yellow ground; after which the remainder is dull red. The part forming the tail is blue. The figure is relieved upon a red ground; and the handle-like projections at the sides are blue. The height of this figure is about two feet four inches.

No. 2 has served as the projection of a cornice: it is of a dark material, without colour.

MEXICAN REMAINS AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

Nos. 10, 11, and 13, are various grotesques.

In No. 10 the head is crowned with a kind of horn, decorated with incised hieroglyphs. These three figures are dwarfish, and have a curious resemblance in their lineaments to the people on the Asiatic side of Behring's Straits.

No. 12 again has an aspect decidedly Grecian.

Nos. 4, 5, and 7 are various grotesques.

Nos. 8 and 9 are of later date, and well formed.

In No. 6 we probably have a specimen of Mexican art subsequent to the Spanish Conquest. It is a coloured head, seemingly intended to represent the effigies of some one of the Spanish colonists.

The head crowned with thorns (No. 14) is remarkable. It is evidently intended for that of our Saviour, and is probably the work of a Christianized Mexican. It is a mask about five inches in length.

In the various works above noted we appear to have specimens of Peruvian and Mexican art, indicating the production of these undefined people during a period of many centuries.

By the late Return to Parliament, among the most valuable acquisitions are some sculptures from the fortress of Boudrum, originally decorations of the celebrated Mausoleum; a marble bust of Apollo; a sarcophagus discovered at Beyrout; a valuable collection of bronzes and terracottas, chiefly from the Basilicata; a large collection of Babylonian cylinders and Oriental engraved stones; a very interesting collection of bronze, iron, and gold Anglo-Roman antiquities, discovered at Stanwick, in the North Riding; a collection of objects from the Darnley Islands and New Guinea; an interesting collection of Peruvian relics; an Afghan cloak; a suit of armour made of a crocodile's skin; several crocodile mummies and sepulchral vases; 1559 coins (161 gold, 776 silver, and 622 copper); and 52 medals. The coins include a "septem" shilling of Henry VII., and a profile-faced shilling of Edward VI., both in fine preservation.

We have engraved one of the "New Rooms," in the Northern Zoological Gallery. The Wall Cases contain the Handed and Gilrine Mammalia, as apes, monkeys, and bats; and beavers, porcupines, hares and rabbits, squirrels, &c. The Table Cases contain the different kinds of Corals, which are cleverly arranged, and are very attractive. Over the Wall Cases are placed large fish, as the Herschel pike fish, from the Cape of Good Hope; the Sudis, from the rivers of Berbice; and the bony pike, from North America.

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

PORCHESTER CASTLE.

In a very elaborate paper read to the Archæological Institute, at Winchester, in 1845, the Rev. Mr. Hartshorne has adduced sufficient evidence to prove that Porchester, (in Hampshire,) was one of the spots pitched upon by the Romans for a military post as soon as they had obtained a footing, or at least, when they had determined upon completing the conquest of Britain. Still, our accomplished archæologist is compelled to travel over in silence a dark period of several intervening centuries, to the time of the Conqueror, and thence to the reign of Stephen, or one of the two first Henrys, the date of the architecture of the Keep.

It is built at the north-west corner of the Roman inclosure, and is of the usual quadrangular form, lit by small narrow loops. Contiguous to the Keep is a long building, of a late Decorated character; and another, more ornamental and mixed in its style, adjoins it, forming the third or south side of the inner bale. This exhibits, amid a few remains of Norman, some very good specimens of Tudor, architecture. There is nothing to indicate the exact use of either of the three sides of the inner bale; the entrance to it was under two portcullises.

The first incidents connected with Porchester deserving mention are the visits of King John, who came hither oftener than to any other place in his dominions. Henry III. strengthened the Castle, and repeatedly used it as a state prison. It does not appear that Edward I. actually visited Porchester. Edward II. repaired and often sojourned at the Castle. Edward III. directed it to be thoroughly strengthened; as did, also, Richard II.; from which periods, changes in the modes of warfare, deficiency of records, and its having passed from the Crown to the Priory of Southwick, and subsequently to private hands, bring the history of Porchester Castle to a close.

It has been already referred to as a state prison, in the reign of John; and its advantageous position caused it, during our war with France, to be again appropriated for the same purpose; so that during the Revolution, as many as 5,000 men were confined here at one time. At the peace of Amiens, the gates were thrown open; soon afterwards, however, to be closed upon new captives for a longer time of exile.

PORCHESTER CASTLE.

Porchester is situated at the head of Portsmouth harbour; the quadrangle inclosses 4 or 5 acres: the walls are from 8 to 12 feet thick, and 18 feet high; and the fortress is surrounded by a double ditch. The parish church of Porchester, a large Norman cross structure, is within the outer court of the Castle.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The decorations have been completed, and the labours of the upholsterer will be terminated this evening (Saturday). A full stage rehearsal of "Semiramide" takes place this morning, when the orchestra will assemble for the first time under Costa's baton. The Choruses have been in rehearsal for the last three months, directed by Signor Bonconcini. M. Albert is quite ready with his new ballet of "L'Odalisque." The Official Referees under the Metropolitan Buildings Act, have given their certificate for the opening of the Theatre. As will be seen by our advertising columns, the opening night will be on Tuesday next (the 6th of April); and it is a curious fact, that this very day was named by Mr. Albano himself, when he first submitted his plans—an instance of architectural punctuality rarely met with in public buildings. As our artists have been some days actively engaged in preparing the illustrations of this beautiful edifice, we shall defer details as to the decorative portion until next week.

The decorations for her Majesty's Box and suite of rooms are superb. The Royal Box is lined with India silk crimson damask, on walls panelled with gilt-enriched mouldings. The Ante Room is of light blue and gold silk, and the ceiling enrichments gold ground and ornaments finished in white. A private Retiring Room is in white and gold. The State Room is papered with yellow damask; the wood-work is white and gold. The Staircase and Corridors are finished in white Italian marble.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The second concert, on Monday last, was brilliantly attended, and a finer performance has been rarely heard. The scheme opened with Spohr's Overture in C minor to the "Last Judgment," which was never more relished; the conductor paying such attention to the nuances, as to render it quite a picture. Miss Birch then sang the air, "Jerusalem," from Mendelssohn's "Paul," but did not adhere to the text, and her intonation was flat. The lovely chorus, "Oh! happy and blest," from the same oratorio was deliciously sung; a pianissimo having been extracted from our band and choral singers. The undulating movement of the violins, the mellowness of the tenors and violoncelli, and the charm in the wind instruments, render this production most captivating, although its forms and ideas may be traced in one of Haydn's Quartets, and in Hummel's Graduale, "Quodquod." Then came Beethoven's glorious Mass in C, composed in the middle epoch of his career, and free from the vocal difficulties and intricate harmonies of the subsequent Mass in D, and the No. 9 Symphony. Costa's reading of this Mass was the admiration of every true artist and amateur, and it was universally admitted that it was one of the finest displays of instrumental and choral perfection ever heard in this country. The "Gloria" is sublime; the "Benedictus" and the pious plaint of the "Agnus Dei" are soul-stirring. We heard this Mass at the Cathedral in Bonn at the Beethoven Inauguration in 1845, an account of which appeared in our columns at the time, but we award the supremacy to our English executants.

The second part of this fine Concert was exclusively devoted to the Choral Symphony, No. 9, composed expressly for the Society, by Beethoven, in 1823. The massive melodies, gorgeous harmonies, and colossal proportions of this symphony, are unparalleled in the entire range of art. The daring innovations of the master-mind are herein most strongly manifested, and, despite of the prejudices of the sticklers for ancient uses, time has done full justice to the genius of Beethoven. When Spohr conducted this No. 9 at the Bonn Festival, many converts were made. Even Fétis, who has protested so strongly against the last period of Beethoven's writings, was constrained to applaud the instrumental movements, although he still objected to the choral expression of joy in the concluding one. Costa conquered the enormous difficulties of the execution, with astounding vigour and precision. It has been remarked that there is not another conductor in this world who could have achieved what he did with a single rehearsal. The wild and startling phrases in the opening allegro, the grotesque imagery of the scherzo (the trio in which was encored), and the impassioned feeling of the elegant slow movement, were exquisitely interpreted. The double basses in the recitative in the finale gained great glory; and, with some mishaps of the trumpets and third horn (Mr. Jarrett) the offender in which, the critics who have so often attacked Mr. Platt, have omitted to name—an instance of gross partiality, against which we most emphatically protest—the work went off admirably. The next Concert will be on the 12th of April.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

On Monday, Mr. Edney gave a concert in the National Hall, Holborn; and Mr. Hanford had a concert at the Surrey Theatre. On Tuesday, Mr. [illegible] gave one of his huge programmes at the Haymarket Theatre, which was well filled. There were sixteen pianists, and eight harpists, besides the ordinary orchestra, conducted by Mr. T. G. Read. Madame Dulcken, Mr. Richardson, and Master Thurwall played solo on the piano, flute, and violin. The vocalists were Miss Birch, Miss Rainforth (encored in the "Marble Halls"), Miss E. Birch, Miss Poole (who sang very sweetly), Miss Hawes (whose "Infancy Bud," by Mehul, was finely rendered), Madame F. Labische, who was in admirable voice, Miss Steele, Miss Hill, Messrs. Travers, Harrison, Brizzi, Phillips, H. Russell, and Guibilei. Mr. Lavenu was the conductor. The Ethiopian Serenaders gave their attractive performances; there is an ensemble in the acting and singing of this company, that is quite irresistible. On the same evening they had given their entertainment at the Grafton-street Assembly Rooms.

On Wednesday the "Messiah" was given at Exeter Hall by the Sacred Harmonic Society: Miss Birch, Miss Dolby, Miss Kirkham, Messrs. Lockey and Phillips, being the vocalists. In the morning, Miss Steele, at the Mortimer-street Rooms, gave a selection of sacred music, with the aid of Miss Rainforth, Miss Hawes, Messrs. Lockey and Machin; Mr. Turle being the conductor.

Mr. H. Phillips gave his entertainment on Tuesday at the London Mechanics' Institution; and, on Thursday, his Illustrations of Handel and Haydn, at the Marylebone Institution. On the same evening, the Ethiopians sang at the Western Literary Institution.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT

On Monday next, the third meeting of the Beethoven Quartet Society, in Harley-street; and Mr. Dando's sixth and last Quartet Party at Crosby Hall.

On Tuesday, the opening of the Royal Italian Opera at Covent Garden.

On Thursday, the annual festival of the Western Madrigal Society.

On Friday, the fifth concert of the Amateur Musical Society.

The Ethiopian Serenaders at the St. James's Theatre on Wednesday morning, and on Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings.

The musical portion of David's "Desert" arranged by Mr. Tully, is to be executed by a powerful chorus, and by Mr. Rafter and Miss Messent in the soli.

M. Lacombe's dramatic Symphony of "Manfred," founded on Lord Byron's poem, has been rapturously received in Paris. M. Roger, M. Tagliafico, Mdlle. de Ruppilin, and Madame Duplot Maillard, were the vocalists. The orchestra was directed by M. Dimcrt. The "Invocation of the Spirits" is much praised.

M. Willmers (the Danish pianist) and M. Godefroid (the harpist) have given their concerts in Paris with great success; the former will be soon in London.

Duprez's voice completely failed him at his début in the German version of "Lucia," at Hamburg. He has gone to Vienna for a more congenial climate.

Madame Rossi-Caccia is now the prima donna of Barcelona.

For Ronconi's benefit, at the Italian Opera, in Paris, "Nabucco" (the third act) and "Il Barbiere" were given. On Tuesday the season closed, and Grisi, Persiani, Corbari, Ronconi, and Mario, immediately left for London, for the Royal Italian Opera; and Lablache, for her Majesty's Theatre.

Mdlle. Loewe, the German prima donna, who has been in London, is about to marry a Venetian patrician, and to retire from the stage.

Vieuxtemps (the violinist) has arrived in Paris, on his way to London.

THE NEW CORAL ROOM, AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

OPENING OF THE BIRKENHEAD Ddocks.

Monday will be an eventful day for the fast rising town of Birkenhead, on the shore of the Mersey, immediately opposite Liverpool. It is then proposed to open, with great ceremony, the Birkenhead Commissioners' Docks, and the Dock Company's Warehouses, an extension line of the Chester and Birkenhead Railway to the Docks and the Park. Here are alike prospects of business and recreation for many years' realization.

The proceedings, we learn, from an official programme, will commence by the Birkenhead Dock Commissioners, the Birkenhead Improvement Commissioners, the Directors of the Birkenhead Dock (Warehouses) Company, the Directors of the Birkenhead, Lancashire, and Cheshire Junction Railway, and the Directors of the Chester and Birkenhead Railway, receiving Lord Morpeth on board a steamer lying off Monks' Ferry, which will then proceed past Woodside Ferry Pier, and the whole extent of the Dock Works, and enter the Birkenhead Docks by the Woodside Basin. After passing through the Woodside and Bridge End Docks, the steamer will moor alongside the south wall of the latter, when the party on board will disembark, and then proceed to the Warehouses, where a Déjeûner will be provided for a company of eight hundred.

After the Déjeûner, Lord Morpeth will proceed to open the Park, the distance from the Warehouses to the Grand Entrance being about half a mile. The quays of the new Docks will be lined with the several clubs, the pensioners' and other bands, flags, &c.; and, after the opening of the Dock, they will proceed to the Park, so as to be in waiting to receive Lord Morpeth.

In the evening, a Ball and Supper will be held in two of the warehouse rooms, and a display of fireworks will take place; and rural sports and amusements will be provided in the Park in the course of the afternoon.

Next week, we intend to illustrate these festal proceedings. Meanwhile, we present our readers with a substantial specimen of the Birkenhead progress—the New Market, nearly approaching in extent the vast market of St. John's, at Liverpool. In the Birkenhead structure, iron has been employed wherever available; and the result is great security combined with a more ornamental character than, under other circumstances, have been attained.

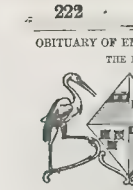
BIRKENHEAD MARKET.

STATISTICS OF MANCHESTER.—In the annual report of Captain Willis, the head constable of Manchester, to the Watch Committee, the population of Manchester is computed at 200,000 persons. The total number of houses is 47,323, and of dwelling cellars, 4,838. Of the former, 845 were uninhabited, when taking the return; and of latter, 295; many of the uninhabited dwelling-houses, however, were new houses, which had never been tenanted. The number of new houses erected during the past year is 1,627, and 406 more are in the course of erection. One of the most singular features in regard to crime is, that the largest number of committals should have occurred during the most prosperous period of the year. The most numerous class of offenders are between the age of 20 and 25 years; the next between 25 and 30; and the third between 15 and 20 years of age. The returns also show a greater number of offences in the day than in the night time.

POISONING IN NORFOLK.—Last Sunday evening, Mrs. Pearson, the wife of a farmer of that name, at Tibbenham, 14 miles from Norwich, invited a Mrs. Everett, the wife of another farmer in the same village, to take tea with her. She accepted the invitation, and these females and other persons of the family sat down, and took tea together. Soon after each of the above females, and others of the party, were taken ill. Mrs. Pearson and Mrs. Everett are since dead, and others (whose names are not known) are lying in a very precarious state. At present it is not known by what means the poison, which, we understand, is arsenic, could get into the tea, or by whom it was administered. Mr. Pilgrim, one of the county Coroners, held an inquest on Tuesday on the bodies, but it was adjourned in order to allow time for further inquiry into the circumstances.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE DUCHESS DOWAGER OF MONTROSE.



CAROLINE-MARIA, Duchess Dowager of Montrose, died a few days since, at Petersham, in Surrey. Her Grace was eldest daughter of George, fourth Duke of Manchester, and derived in direct descent from the celebrated Parliamentary commander, Edward, Earl of Manchester, so distinguished for his victory at Marston Moor. At the period of her decease, the Duchess had completed her 76th year. She was married to James, third Duke of Montrose, 24th July, 1790, and had by him two sons—James, Marquis of Graham, and Lord Montrose Wilfrid Graham; and four daughters—Georgiana Charlotte, late Countess of Winchilsea; Caroline; Lucy, Countess of Powis; and Emily, married to Edward T. Foley, Esq., of Stoke Edith Park, county Hereford.

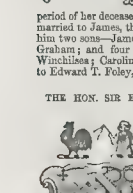
THE HON. SIR EDWARD MARMADUKE VAVASOUR, BART., OF HAZLEWOOD, COUNTY YORK.



SIR EDWARD VAVASOUR died suddenly, near Dijon, 16th March, on his road to Rome. He was the second son of Charles Philip, sixteenth Lord Stourton, by Mary, his wife, daughter and co-heir of Marmaduke Lord Langdale, and assumed the surname of Vavasour, in 1826, on succeeding, by bequest, to the estates of his cousin, Sir Thomas Vavasour, Bart., of Hazlewood. In 1828, he obtained a patent for the Baronetcy.

The very ancient family from which the deceased Baronet thus derived his estates, took its surname from the high office held, in former times, by its senior members—that of Sheriff of Yorkshire, a dignity little inferior to the baronial. The pedigree can be authentically traced to the period of the Norman Conquest; and from that remote era to the present, the family has ever maintained a leading position among the great landed proprietors of Yorkshire.

In the reign of Elizabeth, Thomas Vavasour, Esq., of Haslewood, distinguished himself by his gallant exertions in raising forces and equipping vessels to defend England and its Queen against the Spanish Armada. To requite this zeal, and to show her regard for one of her Maids of Honour, Vavasour, the heir of the house married the fair lady-in-waiting, Queen Elizabeth, who, through her grandfather, Sir Thomas Boleyn, descended from Maude Vavasour, would never suffer the Chapel at Hazlewood to be molested; which, to this day, has continued a Catholic place of worship. During the great civil war, the Vavasours, connected by marriage with the Gifffards of Chellington, and the Langdales of Langthorpe, both eminent for their loyalty in the worst of times, arrayed themselves under the King's banner; their chief, Sir Walter Vavasour, raised a regiment of Horse; and a younger son of the house, Thomas Vavasour, fell gallantly fighting at Marston Moor. Sir Edward Marmaduke Vavasour was born 6th May, 1785, and married, 5th August 1813, Marcia-Bridget, only daughter of James Lane Fox, Esq., of Bramham Park, county York, by whom (who died 10th June, 1826) he has left a large family, the eldest daughter of which is married to William Constable Maxwell, Esq., of Evringham Park, county York.

SIR HENRY ROBERT CARDEN, BART., OF TEMPLEMORE.

ACCOUNTS from Ireland mention the death of this respected gentleman, at his residence in the county of Tipperary. Early in life he held a military commission, and served under the Duke of Wellington in the Peninsula and at Waterloo. The son of Sir John Carden, Bart., of Templemore, he succeeded to the family Baronetcy at the decease of his half brother, Sir Arthur Carden, in 1822. He was born 8th February, 1783, and married, 10th March, 1818, Louisa, only child of Frederick Thompson, Esq., by whom he has left Sir John Craven Carden, Bart., and several other children. The family of Carden, one of considerable antiquity, removed from Lincolnshire into Ireland about the middle of the seventeenth century, and obtained, in the land of their adoption, large territorial grants.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE.—The arrivals of English wheat up to our market during the present week have been small, yet we have had a very dull sale for that article at a decline in the quotations of from 2s to 4s per quarter. In foreign wheat, next to nothing has been doing, and the rates have fallen 2s per quarter. Barley is 1s per quarter lower than last quarter less money. The same fall has been experienced in the rates of malt. The oat trade has been dull, at 1s per quarter less money. Beans and peas must be considered 2s to 3s per quarter lower. Flour and Indian corn have sold at reduced figures.

English. Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 72s to 80s; ditto white, 76s to 80s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 72s to 78s; ditto white, 76s to 80s; grinding, 50s to 56s; malting, 52s to 58s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 72s to 74s; brown ditto, 67s to 68s; Kingston and Ware, 77s to 79s; ditto, 72s to 76s; Chevalier, 76s to 80s; rye, 46s to 48s; feed oats, 20s to 24s; potato ditto, 25s to 28s; Lincoln and Yorkshire potato, 26s to 28s; Scotch potato, 24s to 26s; Dundee, 24s to 26s; Aberdeen, 24s to 26s; Inverness, 24s to 26s; Cork, 24s to 26s; Limerick, 24s to 26s; Waterford, 24s to 26s; Galway, 24s to 26s; Sligo, 24s to 26s; tick beans, new, 42s to 44s; ditto, old, 44s to 46s; harrow beans, 44s to 46s; maple, 42s to 44s; white, 42s to 44s; boilers, 44s to 46s; per quarter. Town-made flour, 50s to 52s; Suffolk, 50s to 52s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 48s to 50s; per 280 lbs. Foreign. Wheat, 70s to 80s; barley, 40s to 42s; oats, 22s to 26s; beans, 44s to 48s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 45s to 48s; Baltic, —s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Clover seed has met a very dull sale, at drooping prices. In all other seeds exceeding a little is doing.

Linseed, English, sowing, 42s to 50s; Baltic, crushing, 44s to 48s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 44s to 48s. Hempseed, 32s to 36s per quarter. Coriander, 10s to 12s per cwt. Brown mustard-seed, 5s to 10s; white, 5s to 10s; tares, Essex and Kent, 5s to 6s per bushel. Rapeseed, (new) 22l to 24l per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, 6l 13s to 6l 15s; ditto, foreign, 6l 5s to 6l 7s per 1000. Rapeseed cake, 4l 2s to 4l 4s; per ton. Canary, 70s to 77s per quarter. English clover-seed, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; trefoil, —s to —s; ribgrass, —s to —s; coriander, —s to —s. Foreign, —s to —s; —s to —s; —s to —s;

ILLUSTRATED EDITION.—COMPLETE.
THE NEW TESTAMENT;
WITH UPWARDS OF
SIXTY ILLUSTRATIONS BY BEMNY
A Large
London Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON
sellers. PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ONLY.

LOLA MONTEZ.—Should this meet the eye of the fortunate Germans, she is requested to order an ISLAND IN THE MOON, for APRIL, of our various Agts.
WILLIAM HOWITT is recommended to buy a number of th wherein he will find something last concerns him.
THE FAST DAY.—Exclusive particulars of this Fast Festival will appear in the MAN IN THE Mo
MR. BOWYER'S SOUP forms a prominent for APRIL.
THE ALPHABET OF THE MONTH in the MAN IN THE MOON for APRIL DRAWING-ROOM THEATRICALS.—The being "Guy Fawkes," a harlequin in one scene, in the MAN IN THE MOON for APR JENNY LIND.—The on y authentic portrait of the great singer is in MOON for APRIL.
Order the MAN IN THE MOON, No. 4, for APRIL. Ed
ANGUS B. REACH May be had at every Railway Station, Lo in the Kingdom. Price 6d. CLARK, Warwick-lane.

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS: History of emperors, with the Prices of their Coins, bearing Portraits, their Dates and M tions, is just published by P. WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 46, Strand, London, price 1 by post, 1s. 2d. Coins sent by post, Brought, Catalogue, &c.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A NEGRO SLAVE.
Just Ready, in One Vol., Post 8vo, with Frontispiece, Price 7s. 6d. cloth,
THE LIFE AND ADVENTURES OF ZAMBA, an African Negro King, and his experience of Slavery in South Carolina. Written by Himself
London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

NEW PRACTICAL WORK ON GARDENING AND FLOWERS
Just published in two handsome royal 8vo. vols., beautifully illustrated, price 32s.,
THE ANNALS of HORTICULTURE, comprising the entire System of Practical Gardening, and the Cultivation of every Kind of Flower, Fruit, and Vegetable. HOULSTON and STONEMAN, Paternoster-row

DEDICATED, BY PERMISSION, TO H.R.H. ALBERT EDWARD, PRINCE OF WALES.
A NEW COMPARATIVE FRENCH GRAMMAR, and Phraseological Reference Book. Prepared expressly for the Royal Children of England. By MARIE DE LA VOYE Demy 8vo bound, price 12s. 6d
London: G. H. LAW, late Scarr and Law, 198, Fleet-street

EXPLANATION OF THE MINDS OF COUNCILS ON EDUCATION.
This Day is Published, 8vo 2s. 6d.
THE SCHOOL, its Relations to the STATE, the CHURCH, and the CONGREGATION: being an Explanation of the Minutes of the Committee of Council on Education, in August and December, 1846.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street; and for the head of all Booksellers in Town and Country

TWENTY-TWO STEEL ENGRAVINGS, from Designs by Eminent Artists, to Illustrate the new Cheap Edition of PICKWICK, now publishing in Monthly Parts (four in each) price Fourpence, or in complete sets, price One Shilling and Eightpence; forming the cheapest and prettiest Work ever offered to the Public.
London: J. NEWMAN, 48, Watling-street.
NOW READY.

TANCRED. BY B. DISRAELI, M.P.
In 3 vols. post 8vo.
"Tancred is a brilliant book, abounding in adventure and entertainment, rich in descriptions and lively scenes of character. It bears the stamp, moreover, of individuality. It has at least as much claim either to dignity or spirit."—Spectator, who thinks, may stand higher upon the favour. It is unquestionably the most brilliant and surprising novel of the season."—Athenæum
HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street.

JAENISCH AND WALKER ON CHESS OPENINGS
This Day is Published, in one closely printed volume, 8vo., price 18s., cloth,
JAENISCH'S CHESS PRECEPTOR; a New Analysis of the Openings of Games, By C. F. De JAENISCH, of St. Petersburgh Translated from the French, with Notes, by GEORGE WALKER, Author of "Chess Studies," and various other works on the Game of Ches
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GRE N, and LONGMANS

Just published, in neat foolscap 8vo., Cas
THE ECONOMIC CHESS-BOARD; Co Board, provided with a complete set of Chess-Men, for playing Games in Carriages, o t of doors, and for up, and carrying in the pocket, without disturbing the Game. Invented by P. M ROGET, M.D., and Registered according to Act of Parliament.
The Chess Board is particularly adapted for resolving the Knight's Tour Problems, and for the study of published Games and Positions.
London: LONGMAN, BROWN, GRE N, and LONGMANS

Just published, price Sixpence
MRS. WARREN'S SECOND SERIES of the POINT LACE
CROCHET COLLAR BOOK (with instructions), containing Designs taken from Antique Specimens, and Novelties, in the Point Lace Stitch, also, Point, Brussels, and London SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, and Co. and all Booksellers
Mrs. WARREN, 2, Manor-place, Holloway; and all Berlin Warehouses and Fancy Establishments

THE THIRD VOLUME of SHARPE'S LONDON
MAGAZINE, Forty Illustrations, and 400 pages of Letter-press, for 4s. 6d. Bound in cloth, and ever ready. London: J. S SHARPE, 15, Skinner-street; or may be ordered of any bookseller in town or country

Price Eighteen-Pence half-penny,
SHARPE'S LONDON MAGAZINE for APRIL, consisting of the 9 new Numbers, and Title and Index to Third Volume, contains, in addition to five stock Illustrations, and many other original and selected articles,
Frank Fairlegh. Maiden Aunt Sketches of Germany—Cinque Ports Pleasure Sketches, Philosophy of Hearing
Roadside Sketches of Germany—Cinque Ports Pleasure Sketches, Philosophy of Hearing Life and Character of John Forster Illustrations Railroads, &c.
London: J. S SHARPE, 15, Skinner-street; or any bookseller.

The Art of Health, Happiness, and Long Life, in Two Volumes, 1s. each; by post 1s. 6d. each
WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; (with Diet Tables for all Complaints.) 2. HOW TO BE HAPPY: on Regimen, Expediency, and Moral Government. By ROBERT CUTLER FERRELL, M.D. M.R.C.S.E.
WOOD, 23, Paternoster-row; the Author, 19, Argyl

Now Publishing, Third Edition of No. 77 PLANISTA, containing MARY BLANE, Lucy Neal, Buffalo Gals, and Eight other popular Quadrilles, Waltzes, Polkas, Galops, &c. Also, Just Published, the Quadrilles complete. Price 2s. the whole. Eleven Sets
They were a splendid Present for Planista by Wi print Either Number, 30 pages. "Planista" Office, first floor, 57, Paternoster-row one door from Cheapside. The "Planista" is beautifully brought out, and is always c

THOMAS BAKER'S MODERN PIANO-FORTE TUTOR.—
MR. BULLEN has the honour to announce that he has just published the above Work, which he flatters himself will be found the most satisfactory and complete Tutor for the profession.
Notwithstanding the improvements that have taken place in Piano-forte Playing within the last ten years, no deviation has been made in the system of teaching from Tutors of the Old School, in which many gifted with brilliant talents have been unable to execute the music of the present day. For this reason the MODERN TUTOR has been introduced, and met with the greatest success from the elite of the profession, who have universally adopted it. The Work is divided into two parts: The Rudiments of Complete Tutor in itself, containing the Rudiments of Music, its use for the Formation of the Hand, Scales, Finger Exercises, &c.
Interspersed with Harmonious and Melodious Lessons, Studies, Short Airs, Duets, &c. Published by Robert Albert, Russell, Bedford Dorforth &c., price 8s. The second part consists of a more with numerous Examples and Exercises, on all the various Fingerings adopted by the most eminent Performers of the 18 degree Piano-forte Masters, from the time of Scarlatti to the time of Herz, Jobbler, Rasbergs, &c., in fact, everything necessary to constitute a first rate Musician.
In the 8s. of the Middle Work. Published by JULLIEN and Co., at the Royal Italian
Conservatory, 214, Regent-street, and 45, Ring-st where all the Compositions of the above Author may be had.

POSTAGE FREE.—W. S. LINCOLN'S 28th CATOLOGUE
OF SECOND-HAND P s is NOW READY. Also, Catalogue of Cheap
Music, either or both will be s s and post-free, to town or country
Residence, 5, Warwick-court, Holborn, Westminster-road, London.

BEETHOVEN ROOMS, 76, HARLEY-STREET Chamber Music and obtains been clos
Quarter's-study during the last two seasons for the great advantage they possess over all other Concert Rooms in London, in consequence of the Music Room being so situate that the noise of the street can in no way reach it, which has always been so
Mr. Hall on 21. Several street for musical purposes will only be let for Sa
Lectures, &c., being unsuitable for Schools Assemblies, or Dancing

"OH! HOW VERY COMFORTABLE," exclaim all who sit in the NEW MEDICAL EASY CHAIR. To invalids, peculiarly an essential Piece, combining in itself the two qualities of Safety and Elegance, at the same time quality JOHN INGRAM and SONS, Manufacturing Upholsterers, ROAD, Finsbury-square.

CHILDREN AND INVALIDS' CARRIAGES.—Invalids'
Wheel Ca from £ , with hoods, second-hands as well as new. Rustic and Self-acting Chairs, Bath Wa Warmers Pipettes, Barometers, Thermometers, Opera Glasses, Telescopes, Microscopes, Pocket Compasses, Portable Writing Desks, Dressing Cases, Work Boxes, Tea Trays, Tea Urns, Tea Caddies, Tea Kettles, Cheese Toasters, Bread Baskets, Cruet Frames, Cutlery, Plated Goods, Fenders, Stoves, Kitchen Ranges, Kitchen Requisites, Culinary Utensils, Bronzes, Lamps, Chandeliers, Gaseliers, Table Glass, Chimney Glasses, Dressing Glasses, Cheval Glasses, Pier Glasses, Hall Lamps, Hall Stoves, Hall Chairs, Hall Tables, Hall Oil Cloths, Hall Mats, Hall Rods, Hall Bells, Bedsteads, Bedding, Blankets, Counterpanes, Sheets, Pillows, Bolsters, Pillow Cases, Bolster Cases, Table Linen, Table Covers, Carpets, Rugs, Hearth Rugs, Floor Cloths, Stair Rods, Venetian Blinds, Window Blinds, Curtains, Curtain Poles, Curtain Cornices, Curtain Pins, Curtain Rings, Curtain Loops, Curtain Tassels, Curtain Fringes, Curtain Bands, Curtain Cords

MISSIONARY INSTITUTION OF TYUMIE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Cape of Good Hope papers, to the 26th of January, have reached us. Sir P. Maitland had received his order of recall, and had immediately given up the command of the troops on the frontier to Colonel Somerset, without waiting the arrival of his successor, Sir H. Pottinger. The official account of the proceedings of the troops in the operations beyond the Kie River are published, the dates coming down to the 10th Jan., and the result was the capture of upwards of 10,000 head of the colonial cattle. Pato had not been captured at the date of the latest accounts from the frontier. Notice had been received at the Governor's quarters that Kreli had gone in pursuit of him for the purpose of delivering him up, as he was the only obstacle to the final conclusion of a peace.

In the early part of the invasion, the Missionaries took an active part; and among them were the principals of the Institution of Tyumie, near Block Drift, about 46 miles from Graham's Town. Our Engraving, from a Sketch by the clever artist at Cape Town, by the aid of whose pencil we have frequently illustrated the war, gives a bird's-eye view of the Settlement, encompassed with hills, and presenting a good site for an establishment whose object is peace.

THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

DE LALAND'S LONG-EARED FOX (OTOCYON LALANDII.)

ALTHOUGH this very singular species was made known to naturalists as long ago as 1820, after the return of De Laland from South Africa, the individual from which our drawing was made is, undoubtedly, the first which has ever reached Europe alive. It is an inhabitant of the mountains in the vicinity of the Cape of Good Hope, but it is so rare, as we are informed, that this same individual is the first ever seen at Cape Town, where Sir E. Belcher lately obtained it, on his return from the Indian Archipelago, in H.M.S. Samarang.

The spectator can hardly avoid remarking the extreme sensibility of its hearing; and there is something in the general expression of the head which suggests a resemblance to the wall known physiognomy of the Long-Eared Bat. We believe that its habits in a state of nature are essentially nocturnal; and it appears to thrive well on birds and insects, which form its principal food at present. It will be found in the S.E. angle of the Society's Gardens in the Regent's Park, near the Turnstile Gate into the Broad Walk; and it is certainly one of the most interesting additions which have been made to the collection for some years; although, at this time, there are upwards of 900 animals of all classes in the menagerie.

LONG-EARED FOX, AT THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

THE SOCIETY OF ARTS.—His Royal Highness Prince Albert paid a visit on Tuesday to the exhibition of select specimens of British manufactures, which has just been opened gratuitously to the public by the Society of the Encouragement of Arts and Manufactures, of which his Royal Highness is the President. He was attended by the Hon. Colonel Phipps and Colonel Bouverie, and spent upwards of an hour in the inspection of the best and most recent productions of our manufacturing industry; taking a special interest in those specimens which exemplify the combination of decorative art with mechanical ingenuity. He praised some specimens of enamelled and coloured glass, which have beautiful forms, and which exhibit the hopeful infancy of a branch of manufacture from which, until recently, the British manufacturer was excluded by the prohibitory duty on glass. His Royal Highness remarked the deficiency of this country in bronzes, in which we are greatly surpassed by other nations. The specimens of oak carving he regarded as the means of enabling the designs of the best artists to be multiplied and executed at a cheap rate, and expressed his hope that the great powers of that machinery would be used on the very best designs only of the most eminent artists. In the process of colouring on china his Royal Highness remarked that we were making rapid progress, and the exquisite vases in china decorated with flowers were praised. The larger specimens of decorated earthenware were commended, especially those decorated with foliage in relief. On the whole it appeared that this exhibition, which had its origin in the recent efforts for extending the usefulness of the society, which have been made under the auspices of the Prince, seemed to have fulfilled the object of at once exhibiting to the public how much our manufacturers have done and how much they may still have to achieve. The exhibition has also been visited by many noble and distinguished personages who take an interest in the progress of our arts and manufactures.

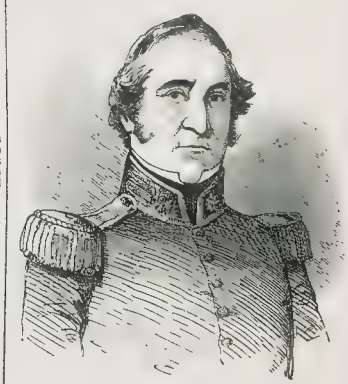
THE NEWCASTLE AND BERWICK RAILWAY.—That portion of this line which extends from Berwick to Chathill was publicly opened last Monday. Between Chathill and Morpeth, passengers are conveyed by omnibuses. It is expected that the entire line will be completed in the course of next month, when there will be an uninterrupted line of railway communication between London and Edinburgh.

COLONEL THOMAS H. BENTON.

THOMAS HART BENTON is a distinguished member of the Senate of the United States, for Missouri, who has just been chosen to an office to which we have nothing similar, and which can only be required during WAR: it is that of Commissioner of the Government, or rather of the President, of the United States for superintending the operations of the army in Mexico. He is, in fact, the political chief of the army, as General Taylor is the military commander. Though a civilian, Mr. Benton is given military rank, to enable him to discharge his duties, and goes to the South with the commission of a Major-General. Politics mingles so largely in all the circumstances of this war, that it is absolutely necessary the President and his party, the Democrats, should be represented actively on the scene of operations. Mr. Benton, as an old, tried, and trusted member of that party, is, therefore, sent on the mission, which resembles that of the Commissioners of the French Convention in the armies of the Revolution, before the rise of Napoleon. An unsuccessful or dilatory General was frequently arrested by them in the midst of his troops, sent to Paris and guillotined. But such Oriental despotism is not, we apprehend, to be the rule of the Western Republic, in dealing with its military commanders. At the best, the appointment exhibits a want of confidence in the General of the Troops, which may or may not be well founded. Experience is not in favour of a control by civilians over military operations. It creates discord and quarrels. Dumouriez had to arrest the commissioners sent to command him; Napoleon never obeyed anybody: Wellington was often embarrassed by the "instructions" of the Cabinet at home, and to the control of the Aulic Council of Austria over the Generals of its armies can be traced its loss of Italy twice repeated; it was an old and absurd system that quite broke down when opposed to such a man as Napoleon. But the Mexicans are not Frenchmen, and Santa Anna may be safer to deal with than the Corsican

Mr. Benton is by birth a North Carolinian, being a native of the County of Orange. The ancestors of Colonel Benton were among the leaders of the Revolution of 1775, and contributed in every way to the service of their country. The family of the Harts, from which he is descended on the mother's side, was one of the most active in the State in furtherance of the settlement of Kentucky, which was originally commenced in North Carolina, under the name of the Transylvania Colony: and it is sometimes cited by North Carolinians, with no little pride, that the people of that State (and among them the Harts) were the real backers of the famous Daniel Boon.

Mr. Benton's senatorial life dates from the year 1820, when, at about the age of thirty-seven, he was elected by the Legislature of Missouri, before the formal admission of that State into the Union by Congress. He had removed to Missouri about five years before, from Tennessee, where he had immediately risen to distinction at the bar. It will be remembered that the representatives from that State were not admitted to their seats in Congress till the succeeding year. The interval Col. Benton devoted to study, in preparation for the career which a worthy ambition had already doubtless, marked out before him in public life. Within that time he made himself master, in particular, of the Spanish language; and, to a considerable extent, of its literature. Col. Benton early rose to a prominent position in the Senate.



COLONEL BENTON.

He was a determined member of the Opposition during the Presidency of Mr Adams, as he was one of the main pillars of support to the Democratic Administration which succeeded it. He is, and has always been, a decided Democrat; it is this ardnous devotion to the service of the Democratic cause, in opposition to all encroachments on the plain original principle of equality of rights, which has given such distinguished éclat to his name throughout the whole American Union.

In the style of his oratory, Mr. Benton is forcible and very effective in the powerful struggle of debate. The manner is rhetorical, and he is at times singularly happy in his metaphorical illustrations, in which he is very abundant. He is laborious in the preparation of his materials, as he is usually luminous and forcible in their arrangement and use. Some of his best efforts have, however, been entirely extemporaneous. He has that facnlty indispensable to greatness, a strong memory; and his extensive reading, and particularly his familiarity with all ancient and modern history, often supplies him with happy and striking illustrations of his position. But his great strength consists in the sincere force of his own convictions, in his unhesitating confidence in the eventual support of his opinions by the verdict of the public judgment.

In all the domestic relations of life, Mr. Benton is a remarkably exemplary man; he is highly fortunate and happy in his family. He mixes little in general society, being but rarely tempted by any of its attractions from his own firesids, his family, studies, and the public business, to which his zealous attention is unremitting. In person he is large, robust, of florid complexion, and powerful frame, capable of enduring fatigue, both mental and physical, under which but few other men could bear up.

FIRE-DAMP EXPLOSIONS ON THE CONTINENT.—A dreadful explosion of fire-damp took place in a coal mine near Mons, on the 22nd ultimo, at a time when fifty men were in it. Twenty-six were killed; the others were got out more or less injured. An explosion of the same kind also took place on the 23rd ultimo, in one of the coal pits of La Grnine, in Alsace, and caused a dreadful loss of life. Out of thirty-six workmen in the pit at the moment, twenty-four perished, and the other twelve are seriously burnt. Seventeen of the bodies have been got out, but the other seven still remain in the pit, it being impossible to reach the spot where they are lying, in consequence of a portion of the coal-bed being on fire. Nothing has transpired to show how this accident has occurred.

HORRIBLE AFFAIR.—A letter of the 3d ult., from Napoli, in Greece, records a horrible event:—A day or two before two brothers, Demetrius and Theodosius Tryphonpolos, had been condemned to death for brigandage, and were brought to the town to be executed. Both allowed themselves to be conducted to the foot of the scaffold; but at the moment the executioner was about to tie Demetrius to the fatal plank, he, being a man of extraordinary strength, broke his bonds, and, throwing down the executioner and his assistants, attempted to escape. They endeavoured to secure him, but he made a desperate resistance, and cruelly ill-treated them. At last, after a long and violent struggle, the executioner drew a knife from his pocket, and stabbed him to the heart, killing him instantaneously. He, nevertheless, caused his corpse to be decapitated. The other brother, Theodosius, was perfectly resigned, and trembled convulsively. He gave himself quietly up to the executioners, and in a few minutes ceased to exist.

AN IRISH PAUPER.—An Irishman, who had been begging piteously, was taken up before the Warrington magistrates the other day, and on search of him nothing was found but a large ball of soap. He prayed they would take that from him, as "he liked to be clean, though he was poor." The uneasiness of his entreaty led the gentlemen to cut the piece of soap in two, and inside, was found, in gold, £16.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, 198, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by WILLIAM LITTLE, 198, Strand, aforesaid.—SATURDAY, APRIL 3, 1847.

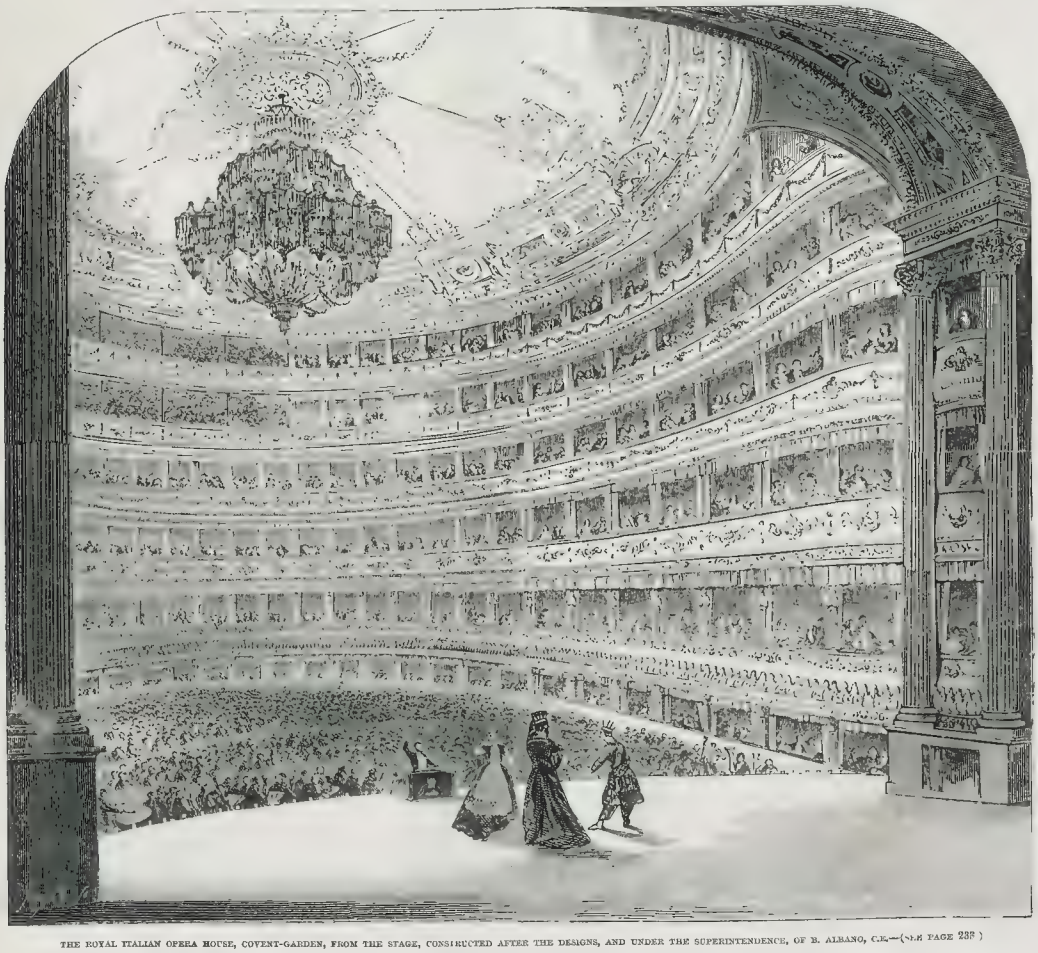
THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 258.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 10, 1847. [Sixpence.

EDUCATION.

The difficulty which, in England, has always surrounded the question of Education, is by no means of modern growth; it can be traced back to the Reformation, when those who threw off the trammels of the old Church were too much absorbed by the immediate necessities of the time to perceive the whole of their mission. When they became aware of the importance of teaching the people, it was too late; too much power had passed into the hands of others; freedom of conscience, and that religious liberty which has become interwoven with the very roots of our Constitution, forbad any one body to assume, as of right, the office of Educator of the State; each sect and persuasion taught its peculiar doctrines within its own pale, accompanied with more or less of secular instruction; but there was no one great system, including all, and within which all were equal. Instruction has in England never been with success severed from religious teaching, and thus we have among us many schools, but no national system. We are divided among ourselves, and to the present day prefer that division, with all its defects, to allowing a power to grow up strong enough to suppress those differences altogether. It is only a despotic Government like that of Prussia or Russia that can place all the minds of the nation under an intellectual drill, as complete as the military control over their legs and arms. And we confess to a strong preference for [illegible] system, or, perhaps, no system, of England, if we undervalue [illegible] results. A man may be educated—that is, his faculties may be drawn forth—by many things besides the teachings of the school, a fact that is often overlooked or forgotten. At the same time, it is not safe to trust too much to this indirect and involuntary training, in which much depends on character and circumstances. The school of the world has many classes, some of them teaching strange lessons; the results of which may be seen in convict ships, penal colonies, and things yet more sad than they.

Between the impossibility of compelling every child born in the Empire to go to school and be taught, and the equally impossible course of leaving everything to individual, sectarian, or parochial effort, a Government has a difficult task to perform in trying to take any step in the matter. The jealousy of State interference is extreme, principally because, as a State, its religious teaching must be that of the Established Church: the feeling evidently is that every child taught in a Church School will be won over to the Establishment—will be a unit subtracted from the great sum of nonconformity. There is no objection whatever to allowing the Church to educate its own flock as it pleases; but it must not assume a control over those not of its pale. And if the State were to cut the knot so difficult to untie, by separating knowledge from opinion, and furnishing secular teaching without any reference to religious belief, it would be met by a storm of reproaches to which those that greeted the establishment of the Colleges in Ireland were as nothing. Thus we travel round a great question without any progress through it, leaving the education of the people, and how it is to be effected, a problem yet to be solved. Scotland has succeeded, America has succeeded, Prussia has succeeded; if it tries seriously, we do not for a moment believe that



THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA HOUSE, COVENT-GARDEN, FROM THE STAGE, CONSTRUCTED AFTER THE DESIGNS, AND UNDER THE SUPERINTENDENCE, OF B. ALBANO, C.E.—(SEE PAGE 233.)

England will fail; but hitherto it has not been itself with complete earnestness to the task. And the fault is in the people rather than the Government; the hardest of all things to overcome is indifference; and, as education imperfect and faulty it may be is within reach of all those classes above indigence, is procured by their own effort, just like clothing and food, the want of it by the classes who are positively indigent, is not known or perceived, except by the startling facts revealed in the statistics of crime.

These have drawn the Government to another attempt. It is an exact physical and not merely moral want, to which science, wealth, and enterprise, the working man as we are even beginning to perceive the eyes of our country, and but are, and expanding year at, the same spirit of investigation proves the existence of moral and mental evils, if we are trying to legislate against those also. Having spent millions on the apparatus of punishment, prisons, treadmills, constables, penitentiaries, and chained all in idle and lawless are rapidly rising crime, we are at last awakening to the necessity of trying if we cannot prevent it, by dispersing that utter, almost brutal ignorance, in which so much crime has its root.

It is no small credit to Lord John Russell that he has the courage to meddle with the question after his experience of 1839. Then Lord Melbourne's weak mind, and attacked by a violent and bold opposition. Hesplan of Education knitted and ignorant ferment that bore down all before it, and was one of the final blows that shattered the tottering Government to pieces. But ten years now alters the public mind as much as a quarter of a century in former days; or every great question of party the main opinions of the then despot Whigs have fixed themselves into measures, they were safer guides than they were right to be; it is a general conviction of this that gives the present Ministry its majorities and its power in the same Parliament in which they were supposed to have met the most deadening influence. And the opposition to the Education scheme of 1847, compared with that good of the plan of 1839, was a small thing indeed, as it does not even equal the excitement raised against the Educational clauses of Sir James Graham's Factory Bill, that only applied to the children of one class of operatives.

For the plan itself, as incomplete, and a compromise with existing circumstances; it takes what it finds existing, and tries to make the most of it. The separate and sectarian system of Schools is not superseded by the Scheme of the State; and the difficulty that must arise from the connection of such a legend as Schools to a Government supervision and inspection, is got over by the provision that the Government Inspectors are not to exercise any right of control or supervision to the religious teaching of these establishments: they are bound only to the Master that they are satisfied with the state of secular instruction in them, so to be received without investigation. The supervision and assistance of the State in Elementary Schools will apply to the secular instruction, or, in plainer terms, the literary knowledge only; in the Church Schools, that supervision will extend, of course, to the religious teaching also. This is the chief concession to the religious difficulty; in all other respects, the plan is limited enough; but the germs of better things are there; and time and use will favour their development, till the war against Ignorance will be waged by an army strong enough to give hope of conquest over the great enemy.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

The [illegible] season of [illegible]stom of promenading [illegible] on fashionable days of the [illegible] carriages and equipages—is still held on Good Friday. The Champs Elysées were overspread with lords and boobies of every imaginable conveyance, whether of wood or "a fathern convenience," from a [illegible] to a calash or a landau, was set in motion, and the myriad of two wheels and four wheels poured towards the accustomed haunt. But no uncommon have long since discovered that the elements are our enemies, ever on the look-out to defeat us since fire and frost drove us from Moscow [illegible] your neighbours, or being looked at by them with their miserably blue countenances, appeared to freeze you. Then came the rain, and all illusion [illegible] fatal blows with unsparing hands. Within a week, the celebrated veteran General Drouot, the right-hand man of Napoleon, and Prince Polignac, have both gone to [illegible]

[illegible] looking at the portraits of the celebrated feuilletonists and lively writers of Paris, so conspicuous in the present Exhibition—"Ah! these are exactly the faces I thought such truculent writers possessed!" Whilst the fact is, that several of the [illegible]

[illegible] IRAN[illegible]

[illegible] as a fertile topic of discussion and agitation for the Paris journalists. The Opposition papers contend that demonstrates the failure of the attempt to ensure French influence in Spain [illegible]

[illegible] mild.

Count Roy, Peer of France, who was Minister of Finance under the Restoration, expired at Paris on Saturday. He was one of the largest landed proprietors in France, his revenue amounting to two millions of francs.

The funeral of the Prince de Polignac took place on Saturday, at St. Germain-en-Laye. It was strictly private, the members of the family being alone present. It was the wish of the Prince to be carried quietly and without pomp to his last abode. His mortal remains have been conveyed to Fergus, and placed by the side of those of his elder brother, who died about a month since

SPAIN.

The Ministerial crisis in Spain has been terminated, not by the resignation of the Duke de Sotomayor, but by the Queen insisting that he and his colleagues should supersede their resignations. It is said that the Duke de Sotomayor, in order and his colleagues refuses, to let them resign at the present [illegible] and [illegible] by the appointment to-day, on the evening of the 25th ult., the Ministers of the Interior and Finance were called upon the Queen for the purpose of [illegible] her Majesty's acquiescence to some of the minor acts of administration, as if nothing was wrong. It does not exactly appear how her Majesty received them, but at a later hour in the evening M. Bravo de Rueda, the Minister of Public Instruction, having called upon the Queen, her Majesty merely told him that it was her wish that the Ministers should resign. M. Bravo de Rueda replied, that, as far as he was personally concerned, he had no objection to conform to her Majesty's wishes, but he added that as every measure, decided in his colleagues were disposed to take office on [illegible] it was clear that the opinion of M. Bravo de Rueda was not shared by his colleagues, and however painful to resign, and M. Bravo de Rueda, at the same time, [illegible] assented to countersign the Royal Ordinance dismissing the Duke de Sotomayor from his office, and it was only then that the rest of the Cabinet consented to resign.

The new Cabinet is thus constituted:—M. Pacheco, President of the Council, and Minister of Foreign Affairs. M. Salamanca, Minister of Finance. M. Pastor Diaz, Minister of Public Instruction. M. Mon, Minister of War. M. Sotelo, Minister of Marine. M. Lozavidos, Minister of the Interior; M. Bahamonde, Minister of Justice. The first three in the above list are Puritans, and the last three Moderados.

On the 26th, there was a Presidency of the Council made a statement to the Cortes, explanatory of the principles upon which he intends to carry on the government of the State, and expressing a hope that he should meet with the support of the Chamber. A motion, brought forward by M. Gonzales Morion, an adherent of the late power, for the purpose of embarrassing the present Cabinet, was rejected by a majority of 54 to 51.

The permission for M. Olozaga to return to Spain was signed by the Ministers on the 27th ult. His brother, it appears, had presented a petition to that effect to the Queen, who was moved by her compassion for the anguish that she supposed the petitioner to feel at not seeing her exiled brother. The petition was then carried to M. Olozaga's brother to the Minister of the Interior, who, it seems, was prepared with communications from the Moderado party in favour of the petitioner, and the permission was immediately signed. It is believed that M. Olozaga will not avail himself of the permission, but will remain in England, where he is [illegible] by Lord Palmerston and other influential persons. It is believed that the Queen will not receive him at her Majesty's court, and that he will not be allowed to take his seat in the Cortes. The Moderados are [illegible] at the step they have taken in favour of M. Olozaga, and it is said that they will [illegible] to vote for the Ministry, unless they [illegible] to the Queen's wishes in this matter.

Our latest advices mention that Narvaez is to go to Paris, and Prim to be Governor of Madrid. Pidcox, who is to be dismissed from the command of New Castle and Madrid, is brother of Lady Prim, the husband of Queen Christina. General Serrano had submitted, and made such apologies as saved the dignity of the Cortes.

The sittings of both Houses were adjourned till after Easter.

PORTUGAL.

We have accounts from Lisbon to the 21st of March. Affairs remain much in the same state as before. The Government had failed to raise a loan either at home or abroad, and was consequently unable to prosecute the war with any effect. Disaffection was becoming very general amongst the Queen's ci-devant supporters. Several leading Cabralists had left the country, a number of large [illegible] steamers, breaking the monument. Blockade with ease, and it was apprehended at Lisbon that he would attempt to seize the capital by a coup de main.

On the 24th ult., the famous cavalry guerilla chief, Galamba, surprised a detachment of the Queen's troops at a place called Degracias, two leagues distant from that town, killed 28 of them, and took 110 prisoners and 30 horses, without losing a ship's man killed or wounded himself.

Saldanha remained in his old position under Oporto, and the Junta had made no movement against him. The Spanish Colonel, Buenage, had gone to Lisbon, the bearer, it was rumoured, of the heads of a convention between some of the leaders of the movement and the Queen's General.

General Bernardino, upon whom the Oporto Junta has conferred the title of Baron Friamunde, has been sent from that city into the Serra d'Estrella.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

In our latest edition last week we mentioned the assassination of Captain Gibson, Dr. Howell, and the Kaffirs. We have received the details of this melancholy event. They were all new comers, and unacquainted with the Kaffir character and tactics. Captain Gibson and Dr. Howell had the charge of a small party, and started from the Kat River. Being short of rations, they went with a party to take some cattle for use. They fell in with a herd, apparently unguarded (placed in all probability as a decoy), and, accompanied by four Hottentots, commenced driving them away. They were waylaid by a party of about 150 Kaffirs, and the officers, with two of the Hottentots, killed, before the soldiers, alarmed by the firing, when two miles distant from the scene of action, could get to them. Dr. Howell was killed at the first fire, and Gibson sacrificed their own lives rather than desert him. They had [illegible] ammunition, and their dead bodies were found lying beside each other [illegible] which they had shot. The bodies had been mutilated in a shocking manner by the savages. Captain Gibson was married; his wife and family are in Europe. He was about to retire from the service, and [illegible] had arrived, on his papers, and might have left the camp, but he [illegible] he was long as [illegible] fellow in the field. The Hon. Mr Chetwynd was not more than twenty-five years old, and Dr. Howell was about the same age.

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

New York papers to the 19th ult. have reached us by the Waterloo packet-ship. They contain very little news, the principal item being the resignation of [illegible] Benton of the Chief Command of the Army, offered him by the President, [illegible] this rank, and [illegible] Mexico, with out full [illegible] powers, as I also liberty to sign preliminaries of peace, which the President declines. Benton [illegible] [illegible] had [illegible] and [illegible] One of them says, the New Orleans Delta, contains a report that another engagement had taken place between General Taylor and Santa Anna near Saltillo, on the road to Monterey, and that the latter terminated in the defeat of the Mexicans, with a very heavy loss in killed and wounded, General Ariola being among the latter. In New York, however, the report was generally disbelieved, as letters of later date make no mention of such a battle.

It was understood that commissioners [illegible] had been superseded in the command of the naval squadron by Commodore Perry, and that the latter would [illegible] for Europe in the Saratoga, a frigate then at Pensacola, which was to take place, on leaving [illegible] on the 20th of last month.

Provision of [illegible] demand for vessels in the American ports to transport [illegible] troops had caused the freights to be very high, and also a scarcity in other branches of trade. In that of sugar and molasses it is now full, a large number of vessels employed in this branch having loaded for England and Ireland.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Avon has arrived at Southampton, with the West India mails. There is no news of consequence from the West India Islands. The prospects of the crops are extremely encouraging.

A fund for a subscription had been commenced for the relief of distress in Dominica, Sandyford.

The Legislature at Barbadoes has voted £2,000 for the distressed Irish and Scotch, which is to be placed in the hands of the British Association of London.

Lieut. gen. Reynell Taylor, Chief of the forces in the Windward and Leeward Islands, arrived from Jamaica on the 3rd February, relieving Lieutenant-General [illegible], who sailed for England the next day.

His Excellency Sir John Scott died at Haiti on the 24th February. A new President was elected on the 6th March, and [illegible] were married to Jacmel, in case of any disturbance. Everything, however, went off quietly.

NEW CHURCH IN THE CITY-ROAD.—A new and elegant church has been for some months in course of erection in the City-road, about an equal distance between the Angel and the Eagle Tavern, and is now nearly finished and ready for opening. It is a handsome Gothic structure, and the plan consists of three aisles, with galleries on each side, and a tower in the centre, [illegible] with a handsome lofty spire. The whole is to be [illegible] by the melancholy event, [illegible] cause of the recent [illegible] in the neighbourhood.

AN IGNORAMUS.—Upon the occasion of the Durham Chronicle, in a notice of the late educational controversy in Stockton, spoke of the Quakers as ignorant. In the discussion, the meeting was highly edified by a speech from a man in fustian (a very appropriate garb), who condemned education as an evil, and said that he at one time had the offer of a good education, which offer he, however, on principle, refused. He then stated to the meeting that he confidently believed that but for his refusal of education, he would have been hanged long since for forgery or some other [illegible]

ACCIDENT TO LORD LONSDALE'S GROOM.—Lord Lonsdale's Groom, the second son of Mr. Gilpin, of Lazonby, was riding his horse back, while riding for the Penrith [illegible] on Wednesday, at the Wighill Steeple Chase, in company with [illegible] when the horse [illegible] and [illegible] the head [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

most monstrous thing I ever heard, to make up a prescription without putting in all the ingredients; nor does the circumstance of your ignorance better the matter. Don't misunderstand my meaning. To make up a prescription without including all the ingredients is a fraud on the person who brings the prescription. You must not give only what you happen to have in your shop; you ought to have said, "I have not the ingredient;" you set up your judgment against that of the physician whose prescription it was, and you had no right to interpose your judgment.

After some other evidence, an intimation was made that the case need not proceed further.

Mr. Justice Coleridge said, the witnesses, with one exception, seemed agreed, that if the prescription had been properly made up, the medicine would have been harmless. It was inferred then by them, that when the stronger form was intended, the weaker one, or concentrated would have been added.

Mr. Clarkson said, that there was a case of a precisely similar kind as this on record, and the Jury had returned an acquittal. There was not a shadow of doubt that Mr. Wakley ought not to have committed Dr. Cronin for trial, if, indeed, he should ever have had the case before him at all.

The Jury not appearing to come to an agreement.

Mr. Justice Coleridge said that if they had any doubt in the case they should let the trial proceed, or allow him to sum up the evidence already given, and then consider the verdict.

The case accordingly proceeded for a short time, when the Jury expressed themselves perfectly satisfied, and, without calling further witnesses, at once returned a verdict of "Not Guilty."

Mr. Clarkson said that he had been fully prepared to prove the constant use of this ingredient as a medicinal vehicle in the form used in Dr Cronin's prescription; but the decision to which the Jury had arrived would not entail on him the necessity of bringing his witnesses forward.

Mr. Justice Coleridge, addressing the prisoner: You are discharged.

THE ALLEGED MURDER IN SHOREDITCH.—On Thursday, Thomas Brookes, a man of 21, was tried for the murder of William Gobert. It will be recollected that, on the 17th of March, the prisoner shot the deceased, at a house in Hare-alley, Shoreditch. The Jury found the prisoner guilty of manslaughter, and he was sentenced to transportation for life

POLICE.

THE ARTIST CHARGED WITH UTTERING A FORGED CHEQUE.—Henry James d'Enden, the artist who, as we stated last week, was charged at MARLBOROUGH-STREET, with uttering a forged cheque for £120, with intent to defraud Mr. Frederick Fahey Chappell, solicitor, 35, Golden-square, has undergone another examination, the result of which was his committal for trial on the charge.

OMNIBUS THIEVES.—At the same office, on Saturday last, John Lawrence and Ernest Schultz, well-dressed men, were charged with the following robbery:—It appeared that two ladies, of the name of Hammond, sisters, living at No. 12, Middlesex-place, New-road, got into an omnibus on the previous evening, at Hungerford Market. Shortly after they were in the vehicle, one of them asked the other to give her a sovereign, and, on her going to do so, she found that some person had adroitly taken a sovereign out of the purse in her pocket. The prisoner Schultz sat next to the first one, and his companion on the opposite side of the omnibus, next to her sister. Schultz pressed very close against the Miss Hammond he sat by, and she found him, as the vehicle was proceeding, very busy with a reticule which lay in her lap, which caused her to shift it. Directly afterwards she saw the other prisoner fumbling about her sister's dress, and distinctly observed Schultz touch his companion with his toe. The other, however, continued using the right hand under his cloak, and suddenly put something into his waistcoat pocket, at which moment she spoke to her sister, who discovered her loss. Lawrence tried to escape. Both prisoners, who gave false addresses, were found in possession of loose money in different pockets. They were remanded. The prisoners underwent a re-examination on Wednesday, when additional evidence was given against them, and they were committed for trial

IRELAND.

THE OPENING OF M. SOYER'S SOUP KITCHEN.

On Monday last M. Soyer opened his model soup kitchen at the Royal Barracks, Dublin, a ceremony which was attended by Prince George of Cambridge, the Lord Chancellor, the Earls of Meath and Charlemont, and many other distinguished individuals.

The building, which is constructed of wood, is about 40 feet in length, and 30 feet in breadth, and consists of one large apartment, where the preparation and distribution of the food is effected. In the centre of this apartment is a large steam boiler mounted on wheels, and arranged around the apartment are a number of metal or box-shaped vessels, also mounted on wheels, into which the materials for the soup are placed. These are heated by steam conveyed by means of iron pipes from the central boiler, and by a slow digestive process the entire of the nutriment contained in the materials is extracted without having its properties deteriorated. When the soup is ready, the recipients are admitted by a narrow entrance at one side of the house, one by one; each receives a large bowl of soup, and, having drunk it, then receives an ample allowance of bread, and is dismissed by another door in the rear of the building. In this manner M Soyer calculates he will be able to give one meal every day to at least 5000 persons from an establishment of the size of the present one.

Shortly after three o'clock, the Lord Lieutenant, accompanied by the Ladies Fensonby, and attended by his aides-de-camp, drove into the esplanade, and, to the regret of all present, it was announced that, owing to slight indisposition, from which he had been suffering for some days, he could not leave his carriage, but he requested his rations might be sent out to him. M. Soyer then presented his Excellency with a bowl of the soup which stands No. 1 in his Irish recipes, and appears to be the cheapest of all; the cost is about 3d. per gallon. His Excellency took a reasonable share for an invalid, and pronounced it excellent. Ladies Emily and Katherine Fensonby, Mrs. Williams, the Misses Brady, Mr. Gerald Fensonby, Mr. C. Connellan, the Lord Chancellor, the Dean of the Chapel Royal, and several others, remained inside the square formed by the range of tables, whilst the poor people were enjoying their meal, and the pleasure in which those benevolent personages derived from seeing the poor people give every token of their approval of the "steam-engine soup," was visible upon every countenance, the ladies seeming to take the deepest interest in the subject

FEVER AND DESTITUTION.—According to the letters from Dublin, fever continues to increase to an alarming extent in Cork, Sligo, Mayo, and various other counties, and, indeed, the pestilence exists to a greater or less degree generally throughout the country. In the union workhouses, especially, the malady prevails, and the mortality in some places is very considerable. As yet Dublin and the surrounding metropolitan districts have escaped, but there is reason to apprehend that with the approach of warm weather the capital will also suffer as well as the provinces. In some few counties—for instance, in Cork and Sligo—famine is still at work, but generally there appears to be a decrease of destitution.

BALLYMORE EUSTACE.—A correspondent corrects a statement which appeared in our paper of the 20th ult., as to the sale of a large quantity of potatoes at Bal ymore Eustace, county of Kildare. Our correspondent assures us that there have not been two sacks of potatoes in any market at Ballymore Eustace for the last three months. On each Wednesday for the last month, he says, there have been about 30 stone weight of potatoes offered for sale; but, during the months of January and February, there were none to be had in the market. The account in question formed part of a letter given by a contemporary. We regret to find from the information of our correspondent that the parish alluded to is in a very destitute condition, and trust that this notice of the fact will attract the attention of the charitable.

DEATH OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF CORK. The Cork papers announce the death of the Right Rev. Dr. Murphy, the Roman Catholic Bishop of that diocese, at the advanced age of 75. He was consecrated Bishop in 1815, and was very much esteemed by all ranks SERIOUS FIRE IN LIMERICK.—A very alarming fire took place in Limerick on the night of yesterday week. The splendid premises belonging to the firm of Egan and M'Cormack, Thomas-street, were burned to the ground, and an immense quantity of corn and flour destroyed. The largest brush factory in Europe, which had been reared by the enterprise and skill of the partners in the firm, was totally destroyed. The fire spread with such fearful rapidity from front to rear as to render escape from the range of buildings impossible. Buildings in front in George s-street, to the rear in Roche's-street, and around to Catharine-street. With considerable exertion the fire was prevented communicating to the store of Mr. Robert Wheeler, but the private dwelling adjoining the brush factory in Thomas-street was partly burnt down.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF LIEUT.-GENERAL SIR DUGALD L. GILMOUR, K.C.B.—Intelligence has been received from Rome of the demise in that city of Lieut.-General Sir Dugald L. Gilmour, K.C.B, on the 26th ult. This distinguished officer had been upwards of fifty years in the service, and almost the whole of his Peninsular campaign under the gallant Sir John Moore and the Duke of Wellington

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION ON BOARD TWO STEAMERS. Fires recently broke out on board the steamer Shearwater, and the store ship Tartar. The first occurred on board the Shearwater steam vessel (two guns), Commander Sir Webster, Bart., stationed at Oban, on the 26th of March last. The fire broke out in her coal bunker, next on the next day in the opposite one. With the united exertions of the officers and crew, after some hours working at the pumps, it was extinguished, but not before great damage was done. The second was on board the Tartar (2 guns) store ship, Captain Hutton, stationed as guard ship at the Island of Ascension, for the supply of the African steam squadron with coals. The fire broke out among the coals, a signal gun was fired, and the whole troops in garrison were put in requisition, when, after four days and four nights hard work her hold was cleared and the fire extinguished, but not till nearly all her beams were burnt from three to five inches through.

DEATH OF SIR W. T. POLE, BART.—Sir William Templer Pole, Bart., died at Shute House on Saturday night, after a long but not a painful illness. He is succeeded in his title and estates by his son, John George de la Pole, the present Baronet, a young man of considerable attainments and promise.

CONSECRATION. The Lord Bishop of Winchester will consecrate the newly-erected Church of St. Thomas, Winchester, capable of affording accommodation to nearly a thousand persons, on Friday, the 16th day of April.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

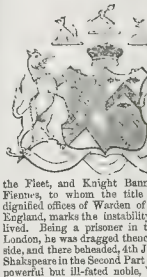
THE PRINCE DE POLIGNAC

THE house of Polignac is one of the oldest and most noble in the genealogical records of France. It boasts of many eminent men in ancient times; at more recent periods, the Cardinal Melchoir de Polignac Minister of Louis XIV., and Madame de Polignac, the devoted friend and confidant of Queen Marie Antoinette, and mother of the Prince just dead, may be mentioned as distinguished members of the family. The subject of this notice, Augustus Julius Armand Maria, Prince de Polignac, was the second son of Julius, Duke de Polignac, by his wife, the lady above-mentioned. The Prince was born on the 14th May, 1780, and, shortly after, he and his whole family were driven into exile by the French Revolution: his mother died of grief for the murder of Marie Antoinette, and he and his brothers passed their youth partly in Austria, partly in Russia, and then in England. Staunch supporters of Royalism, and ardent adherents of the Bourbons, the Prince de Polignac, and his elder brother Armand, embarked, in 1804, in the abortive conspiracy of Georges Cadoudal against Napoleon. The Emperor, at the instance of Josephine, spared the lives of the Polignacs; but they remained close prisoners in France until the Bourbon Restoration.

After the return of Louis XVIII., the Prince de Polignac became the avowed leader of the Ultra-Royalist party, which was but little encouraged by the King, but strongly supported by his brother the Count d'Artois, afterwards Charles X. In 1823, the Prince de Polignac went as Ambassador to London, and remained six years there. In 1829, he became Prime Minister of France; and then it was that his zeal completely outran his discretion. At his instigation, mainly, Charles X. issued the fatal ordinances of July, which dethroned him, and founded the monarchy of Louis Philippe. For his share in this memorable business, the Prince was condemned to death by the Chamber of Peers, but the penalty was commuted into perpetual imprisonment. After a long incarceration at Ham, the Prince was permitted to go into exile, and finally he was allowed a free residence in France, provided he did not sojourn in Paris. He there established himself at St. Germains, a place more than once the last refuge of ruined kings and statesmen, and he here passed his final years of broken health and deep affliction. The deaths of Charles X. and the Duke of Angoulême completed the misery of his existence. After these events, he sunk into a gloom from which he never entirely recovered; and he expired, on the 29th ultimo in his sixty-eighth year.

Julius Prince de Polignac was a man of bygone times—the chivalrous servant of an absolute King—a Minister full of love, loyalty, and devotion for his master. He unfortunately lived at a period unsuited to his opinions, and his utter undoing was the result. Yet, though he may have been violent and wrong-headed in politics, he was immaculate in private. True to his race, he exhibited every virtue that became a gentleman, and was likely to win honour and affection. Now, that the storm in which he was wrecked has passed over, he sinks into the grave more pitied than condemned by mankind. The Prince de Polignac was twice married—first, on the 6th July, 1816, to Miss Barbara Campbell, by whom he leaves a son and successor, Armand The Prince married secondly, the 3rd June, 1824, Maria Charlotte, youngest daughter of Thomas, first Lord Rancliffe, and widow of the Marquis de Choiseul: by this lady he leaves four other sons and a daughter. The Prince de Polignac was the possessor of Millemont, in France, of a part of Calderon and Argès, in Isle St. Vincent, and of the lands of Wild Sturm and Reichersdorf, in Bavaria.

WILLIAM THOMAS EARDLEY-TWISTLETON-FIENNES, LORD SAYE AND SELE.



THIS nobleman enjoyed the ancient title of his family for little more than two years, having succeeded his father in November, 1844. He has died unmarried, aged forty-eight, leaving all his estates, his cousin, the Rev. Frederick Twistleton, D.C.L., heir to the barony, which was conferred originally in 1447 on Sir James Fiennes, by Joan, his wife, daughter of Sir Geoffrey de Saye, of Sele, in Essex, and Knt, until very rethe Fleet, and Knight Banneret. The ultimate fate of Sir James Fiennes, to whom the title was thus granted, and who held the dignified offices of Warden of the Cinque Ports and Lord Treasurer of England, marks the instability of greatness at the period in which he lived. Being a prisoner in the Tower when Cade's mutiny entered London, he was dragged thence by the rioters to the Standard at Cheapside, and there beheaded, 4th July, 1451. His death is graphically told by Shakspeare in the Second Part of Henry VI. The son and successor of this powerful but ill-fated noble, William, second Lord Saye and Sele, was appointed Vice-Admiral of England under the auspices of Warwick, and eventually fell, under the Yorkist banner, at the battle of Barnet. He married Margaret, daughter and heir of William Wickham, of Broughton, in Oxfordshire, nearly related to William of Wickham, Bishop of Winchester; and thus his Lordship's descendants became of course of political importance. He it was who defended ably and eloquently Thistlewood and others of the poor wretches engaged in the Cato-street conspiracy: and one of his last forensic displays was, when, very old and almost blind, he spoke before the Judges of the Queen's Bench, in favour of the privilege of the House of Commons, in the memorable action of Stockdale against Hansard. Mr. Curwood made, some years ago, a rather unwise change, from the Home to the Oxford Circuit: this materially injured his practice; he was, however, appointed a revising barrister on the latter circuit; and has, until very recently, continued to labour at his profession. The extremely gentle disposition, the agreeable manners, and the strictly honourable feeling and conduct of Mr. Curwood, had endeared him to a wide circle of friends in the profession, whose sympathy and attention tended to soothe the trying circumstances of declining prosperity and health. Mr. Curwood's death took place rather unexpectedly, at Hendon, on the 31st ult.

JOHN CURWOOD, ESQ.

THIS gentleman was one of the oldest members of the English bar. He was called to the station of a barrister by the Honourable Society of the Middle Temple so far back as the 10th June, 1796. Mr. Curwood very soon attained considerable practice on the Home Circuit, and at the Old Bailey; and his name appears in connection with many Crown cases of political importance. He it was who defended ably and eloquently Thistlewood and others of the poor wretches engaged in the Cato-street conspiracy: and one of his last forensic displays was, when, very old and almost blind, he spoke before the Judges of the Queen's Bench, in favour of the privilege of the House of Commons, in the memorable action of Stockdale against Hansard. Mr. Curwood made, some years ago, a rather unwise change, from the Home to the Oxford Circuit: this materially injured his practice; he was, however, appointed a revising barrister on the latter circuit; and has, until very recently, continued to labour at his profession. The extremely gentle disposition, the agreeable manners, and the strictly honourable feeling and conduct of Mr. Curwood, had endeared him to a wide circle of friends in the profession, whose sympathy and attention tended to soothe the trying circumstances of declining prosperity and health. Mr. Curwood's death took place rather unexpectedly, at Hendon, on the 31st ult.

LEMAN REDE

THIS clever writer, whose name is well known to the periodical and dramatic literature of the day, was the son of a Mr. Leman Rede, a barrister and an author, who died many years ago. Mr. Rede, junior, was born at Hamburgh, in 1802. He first appeared before the public as a dramatic performer, and afterwards as a contributor to the magazines and a successful theatrical writer. His productions for the stage are extremely numerous. Among them, "The Rake's Progress" and "The Old and Young Stager" had great success. The latter drama introduced Charles Mathews to the London boards in 1835, and was acted for eighty-four nights consecutively. In private, Mr. Leman Rede was a kind and respectable man. He married a Miss Sarah Cooke, daughter of Cooke, the bass singer, by whom he leaves a son. Mr. Rede died of apoplexy on the 3rd instant, at his house in Southampton-street, Strand.

THE RIGHT HON. JOSEPH PLANTA, G.C.H.

THIS gentleman, whose death occurred on the 5th instant, at his house in Queen Anne-street, Cavendish-square, was son of the late Joseph Planta, F.R.S., for twenty eight years Principal Librarian of the British Museum; and grandson of the Rev. Andrew Planta, Minister of the German Reformed Church in London who came to England in 1752, from the Grisons in Switzerland. His period of official service was an extended one. For nearly ten years he filled the important appointment of Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; at the Congresses of Paris, Vienna, and Aix-la-Chapelle, attended Lord Castlereagh, the British Representative on those occasions; and, from 18[illegible] was Joint-Secretary to the Treasury. The right honourable gentleman sat in several Parliaments previously to 1844, as Member for Hastings, in the neighbourhood of which town he possessed a handsome residence, called Fairlight Place. •Mr. Planta was born in 1787, and married, in 1831, Mrs. Ooss, relict of Thomas Ooss, Esq., of Bedford-square. At the period of his death, he was in the enjoyment of a pension of £1500 per annum.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE ROYAL HOSPITALS.—On Monday the Lord Mayor attended at Christ's Hospital upon the occasion of the preaching of the first Spital Sermon at Christ's Church. A true report of the number of children and other poor people maintained in the several Royal Hospitals of the City of London under the care of the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Governors thereof the past last past was presented to him.

PROPOSED NEW EXHIBITION FOR THE FINE ARTS. On Wednesday, a preliminary meeting of gentlemen connected with literary and scientific pursuits, and interested in the promotion of the Fine Arts, was held at the saloon of the Adelaide Gallery, Strand, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of establishing an annual exhibition of general works, sculpture, and drawing, intended for the Royal Academy, but which the committee of that body [illegible] compelled, from want of space, to refuse. William Carpenter, Esq., was unanimously called to the chair. After a discussion, in which the Rev. J. Richardson, LL.D., Capt. Brander, Robert Soutar, Esq., Bertie Ambrose, Esq., W. Carpenter, Esq., H. Justins, Esq., and other gentlemen took part, the following resolution was proposed by the Rev. Mr. Richardson, seconded by Mr. Soutar, and carried unanimously, "That a committee be now formed with power to add to their number, for the purpose of carrying out the object of this meeting."

THE NATIONAL GALLERY.—The visitors to this institution on Monday were about 16,000, all appearing highly gratified both with the old works and with the recent additions, which have been cleaned and re-framed, and will tend to render the collection more attractive than before

VICTORIA PARK.—On and since Easter Sunday this new popular place of resort at the east end has attracted a large number of visitors, and on Sunday and Monday it was ascertained that upwards of 20,000 persons passed through the gates at the leading entrance in Bishop Bonner's Fields. Since February great progress has been made in the plantations, and the lake is nearly complete, and partly filled with water. The sites for two cricket grounds have also been marked out, and everything in connection with it presents a very forward appearance, and building speculation is going on very actively in the vicinity.

MARSHALSEA AND PALACE COURTS. These Courts, which possess separate jurisdictions, are exempted from the operation of the New County Courts Act, and actions may be brought in the same, notwithstanding the new law is now in force in the metropolitan districts. The Marshalsea Court is a very ancient tribunal, and is mentioned as early as the seventh century: it has jurisdiction in matters connected with the Royal household, but proceedings are very seldom adopted therein. The Palace Court was created by letters patent in the reign of Charles the Second, and therein four barristers and six solicitors (all of whom purchase their places) practise: the Court has a jurisdiction of twelve miles from the Royal Palace at Westminster, "every way," with the exception of the City of London

THE PARISH OF ST. STEPHEN, WALBROOK, AND ALDERMAN GIBBS.—A vestry was held on the ratepayers of the above parish took place on Tuesday, for the election of churchwardens and other parochial officers. The Rev. Mr. Croly, the rector, took the chair. Mr. Rock, one of the churchwardens, congratulated his parishioners upon the improved aspect of affairs. The Court of Common Pleas had decided that Mr. Alderman Gibbs had unduly exercised the rights of churchwarden, the custom by which he claimed to be elected being at an end. The vestry had to pay £2000, and not yet been paid in, although Mr. Alderman Gibbs had been unable to prove his claim of £1800 against the parish. Mr. Flight said that, on the 15th of last month, demand was made upon him for £709 13s. for the expenses of the poor, and, to his small astonishment, he found it signed "Michael Gibbs." There was much complaint as to the letting of parish property at one-third its value, and even that had not been duly collected. Messrs. Rock and Flight were unanimously re-elected as churchwardens for the ensuing year. The Rev. Dr. Croly referred at some length to the condition of the parish church, which, he said, was utterly unfit for the performance of divine service in the cold state it was in the middle of winter. The parish was indebted 140 guineas to the organist (a poor woman), and £273 to the sextons. For four years he had not received a shilling of the stipend due to him for the Sunday afternoon lectures in the parish vestries every year, and he hoped the ratepayers would assert and maintain their right to manage their parochial affairs

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS.—On Wednesday, the preparations for the formation of the new street from the Broad Sanctuary, Westminster, to Shaftesbury-place, Vauxhall Bridge-road, were commenced; and also the demolition of the remaining portion of St. Martin's-lane, for the continuation of the new street from Leicester-square from Piccadilly and Coventry-street

THE NEW PIER AT HUNGERFORD BRIDGE.—On Wednesday, at twelve o'clock, the new pier at Hungerford Bridge was opened for steam-boat passengers by Mr. Hawes, accompanied by the directors of the bridge company.

MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—The number of deaths, from all causes, registered in London, in the week ending April 3, is 1004. The average calculated on deaths in the spring quarter (which, in the Registrar-General's distribution of the seasons, commences in April) is 914. The average of the winter months is 1068. The amount of mortality, as shown in the present return, therefore, is nearly what might be expected in the state of transition from cold to heat. It is satisfactory to observe that the mortality of young persons is unusually small; and that on the whole deaths from the epidemic class of diseases is not more than 107, while the average is 166.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE CROPS. As considerable interest now prevails in reference to the state of the weather, we have looked carefully to the reports in the provincial papers upon the subject. The accounts, for the most part, are favourable. In Cambridgeshire and Sussex, the wheats look well. In Bedfordshire, there is great improvement in the wheat and barley, and Yorkshire, the wheat has suffered from the cold, but no serious injury has been inflicted Upon the whole, the prospect is cheering.

THE EDUCATION QUESTION IN BIRMINGHAM.—The agitation of this very important question proceeds in Birmingham. Various meetings, which may be looked upon as preliminary to the town meeting, have been held under the auspices of the clergy of the Establishment, and at all of these resolutions have been passed, signifying approbation of the Government measure, and memorials to the House of Commons in the spirit of these have been adopted. It should be noticed, that many meetings have taken place in different parts of the country, for and against the plan.

NEW CEMETERY AT BIRMINGHAM.—On Tuesday the interesting ceremony of laying the first stone of a chapel in the grounds laid out for a Church of England new cemetery, took place at Birmingham, in the presence of a large concourse of persons. At half-past two o'clock Divine service was performed in St. Paul's Church, after which a numerous and highly respectable procession was formed in carriages, to Warston Lane. The stone was laid by the Hon. Frederick Gough, after which the directors and a select party partook of a collation at the house of J. Aston, Esq. The following is the inscription on the plate:—"This stone was laid on Tuesday, the 6th of April, 1847, as the Church of St. Michael. Architect, Mr. Hamilton; builder, Mr. Burton." The grounds are most pleasantly situated, and when laid out according to the plans which have been approved of, will present a picturesque appearance.

MORTALITY IN LIVERPOOL IN 1846. The parish accounts have just been published. It appears that the baptisms in 1846 were 11,648; the burials, 6970; and the marriages, 3901. The increase in baptisms has been 473; in burials, 1917; and in marriages, 316. The greatest mortality seems to have been amongst children under two years of age, of whom 19,1 died during the twelve months. It was called the visiting, such as Tonteth Park, Everton, &c., the additional baptisms have been 1848; burials, 4114; and marriages, 428.

SUDDEN DEATH AT LIVERPOOL.—Mr. Evan Evans, of Liverpool, attended, as a juror, at the coroner's inquest, on Monday morning, and on that evening dropped down dead in the street.

AN ATTEMPTED MURDER AND SUICIDE AT FAREHAM.—On Wednesday a special session of the justices for South Hants was held at the Red Lion Inn, for the purpose of investigating the charge of attempted murder against Charles Wolfe, aged about nineteen years, upon the person of Elizabeth Ayling. The alleged murder was committed on the 22nd ult., and some particulars of the case were given in this journal. It will be recollected that the prisoner and the girl Ayling were fellow-servants in the house of William Thresher, Esq., one of the magistrates of Hampshire, and that on the day above mentioned he came into her room, and, using expressions indicative of jealousy of some attentions that had been paid to her by a man of the name of Brown, struck her with some blunt instrument, and drew out a razor, with which he inflicted some severe wounds in the throat, but fortunately not of a nature to lead to serious results. The prisoner afterwards attempted to commit suicide, but was prevented and taken into custody. The details of the occurrence were proved by the evidence of the girl Elizabeth Ayling, herself, who is now considered out of danger, and other witnesses, and the prisoner, who did not deny the truth of the statements, was committed for trial on the charge of attempted murder

OPENING OF THE BIRKENHEAD DOCKS AND PARK.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF BIRKENHEAD.

Another glory on the Mersey's side:
A town springs up as from a magic wand,
Behind those noble docks—the merchant's pride,
And the fair park extending o'er the Strand.
The gallant bark that often had defied
The wild Atlantic now no longer dread
The treacherous shore. In safety now they ride
Within the waters of fair Birkenhead
Good, great, and glorious is the work. The head
And brotherhood between two worlds, hereby
Is knit more closely; and all states find
Will spring up where before a forest vainly,
Success to Birkenhead! its commerce trade,
And may true worth its people's hearts pervade.

On Monday last a portion of the immense Docks at Birkenhead was opened with the éclat befitting such an important incident, and a vast concourse of persons assembled to witness the ceremony. The works thrown open form but a small part of this magnificent and comprehensive scheme, but what has already been accomplished gives a goodly promise of a speedy completion of a most useful and efficient series of docks, the promoters of which may hope, at no very distant day, to see them, on account of their extensive usefulness, worthy of being associated in importance with those on the other side of the Mersey. Birkenhead may now be said to have entered into competition, or rather into articles of partnership, with Liverpool, the great north outlet and inlet of our foreign and transatlantic trade. At any rate, it will henceforth divide the palm with Liverpool, and participate in the prosperity and profit derivable from its immense mercantile marine. Birkenhead may fairly be looked upon as of Liverpool lineage and alliance, and as having been literally called into life by that leviathan of trade itself in its effort towards finding an ampler field for the accommodation and convenience of its over-grown trade. Birkenhead will now become a sort of chapel of ease for the redundant commerce of the mother port, and probably there is no port in the kingdom, not excepting Liverpool itself, that presents such grand natural facilities. A few years hence, and Birkenhead will become a second Liverpool, launched upon the Mersey; for time was when, at the beginning of the eighteenth century, Liverpool itself, now the entrepôt of all our trade with the Americas and Indies, was simply a fishing village. The same a few years since might be said of Birkenhead. At present it is not even mapped out as a town upon the Mersey. A few years ago,

Whereon it stands
The vacant winds did whistle, and the laugh of sunshine
Sported in wild freedom

Both are probably the finest examples on record of the brilliant results of unfettered British enterprise. Anciently the settlement and consolidation of a town was the work of generations; now, thanks to steam, they spring up and prosper with all the rapidity of the famed ice palace of the Queen of Russia. Great advantage may be expected to accrue to the public and frequenters from foreign ports from the generous emulation that will be established between the old and the new ports, and in a few years the northern, no less than the eastern arm of the Mersey, may be expected to be the seat of a crowded and busy community. It will give an insignificant idea of the immenseness of Liverpool, that it extends for three miles along the Mersey, and is upwards of a mile in breadth. Liverpool has for years had at her command a comprehensive and splendid chain of railways, and unsurpassed port facilities. Upon these Birkenhead is only just entering. Monday gave England, in the latter respect, a new point of ingress and egress to the western seas; but Birkenhead will have to wait awhile for the completion of her railways. It is true she has long had one, but this is less than half what she wants. For long she will be the very "roasette" of railways, for, in addition to the existing Chester and Birkenhead, she will have the Birkenhead, Lancashire, and Cheshire Junction, operations on which have just been commenced by the contractors in real earnest, and which, in addition to drawing all the commerce of the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire and Lancashire to the Mersey, will give to Birkenhead the mineral trade of Wales, the salt traffic of Cheshire, the immense products of the Potteries, besides having with Holyhead the traffic to Ireland. If Rome was not built in a day, Birkenhead, by a figure of speech, assuredly has been. We have in it a great mercantile community, with all its moral and commercial apparatus springing simultaneously and almost magically into action under the vivifying power of British enterprise. We have it put in possession, at the same time, of docks for forests of foreign masts, with warehouses for having their wares, and with a railway for their transit to inland homes.

To enable a large party from London to attend the entertainment an express train was harnessed for six o'clock, and started precisely at that hour from the splendid station of the London and North-Western, at Euston-square. The arrangements, under the superintendence of Capt. Huish, the superintendant, and Mr. Brookes, the traffic-manager, were excellent. The train worked its way at a slashing pace, time and space apparently being secondary things—say at forty miles an hour to Liverpool, with as much ease, and apparently in as little time, as it would take to perambulate between Hammersmith and Hampstead. Having breakfasted in London, the next consideration was that of practically achieving the experiment of luncheoning at Liverpool. There were five first-class carriages

OPENING OF THE DOCKS.

OPENING OF THE BIRKENHEAD DOCKS AND PARK.

ENTRANCE TO THE PARK.

to the express train, and two luggage-vans, weighing together 32 tons. To draw this special load one of Stephenson's long-boiler engines, with an outside cylinder, and seven feet driving-wheel, was selected. The line was understood to be laid out for the special performance of this engine, and it was anticipated that she would make a splendid run to Birmingham (a hundred and twelve miles) in two hours and a half, and to Birkenhead (two hundred and twelve miles) in five hours, at forty-two miles to the hour; but, owing to the over-straining of the staple works of the engine in order to attain the attempted velocity, the cylinder became heated, which prevented its accomplishment. It is only fair to state, that a strong lateral wind prevailed the whole way, which presented, of course, considerable retardation. At ninety-three miles up the line, which from starting at 6 A.M., was reached at 13 minutes past 8, the cylinder gearing became red hot, and the speed was slackened to 8 or 10 miles an hour, the old average, for several miles, and for some distance to 3 or 4 miles an hour. Close upon Birmingham this engine came to a dead stop, and it was found necessary to supersede her by a new pilot engine, and lay her up in the locomotive hospital. Ultimately, the train fell foul of Birmingham at 28 minutes past 9, doing the distance, 112 miles, in 3 hours and 5 minutes, or at the rate of 40 miles an hour. The train, after stopping 13 minutes, started from Birmingham for Birkenhead, at 16 minutes past 9, passing Stafford and Crewe, where there is a splendid new station, built in the Elizabethan style, and at a minute or two past 12, the train, amidst the mingled artillery of its own rattle, salutes from six-pounders and the artillery of tongues, made a triumphs entry into Birkenhead, amid strains of "See the Conquering Hero comes," to throw open

THE DOCKS.

Here the scene was truly splendid and imposing. The immense estuary of the Mersey, one of the noblest arms of the sea in England, was mirrored over with multitudes of masts and men with steamers stemming its tumultuous tide, with vessels of all climes sleeping tranquilly on its surface, bellying at intervals with their white wings to the breeze. It was a scene of animation such as the waters of Liverpool have never seen before, nor perhaps ever will see again, burdened with all the beauty of which both Birkenhead and Liverpool could boast. The proceedings of this part of the inauguration were commenced by the Birkenhead Dock Commissioners, the Birkenhead Improvement Commissioners, the Directors of the Birkenhead Dock (Warehouses) Company, the Directors of the Birkenhead, Lancashire, and Cheshire Junction Railway, and the Directors of the Chester and Birkenhead Railway, receiving Lord Morpeth (the Chief Commissioner of Woods and Forests), Lord Lincoln, and other distinguished visitors, on board a new steam packet, the Lord Warden, built by Mr. John Laird, which was in readiness at Monk's Ferry.

The Lord Warden is a beautiful iron steam-vessel, just completed, under the superintendence of Mr Morrison, the foreman of Mr. Laird. She is a companion to the Clementine, of quick-sailing celebrity, and is expected to prove a clipper. She is now fitting out in the Trafalgar Dock.

Leaving Monk's Ferry, the Lord Warden, with the party on board, proceeded, amid vociferous cheering and music, past Woodside Ferry Pier, and the whole extent of the Dock works, and entered the Birkenhead Docks by the Woodside Basin.

The two Docks already constructed are the "Passage Dock," near Woodside Ferry, and the "Bridge End Dock," now so called from its being on the site of a small valley, formed originally by a rivulet, or more correctly by a creek or arnulet of the sea, the tide having passed up it, under a bridge, time out of mind.

The walls of both of the new Docks are built of red freestone, principally quarried on the ground, and with ashlar bindings. There are a number of arches (facing the river) of the upper Dock, on each side of a tongue forming a quay running westward, which protect the mouths of the sluices, intended to scour out the Great Basin, yet to be constructed on the east. These arches, apparently about twenty in all, and also the piers, are beautifully built of Bolton and Longridge stone.

Steamers were plying between Liverpool and Birkenhead the whole day, and carried thousands, at 2d. a-head. The shops in each place were nearly all closed, and the day universally observed as a holiday. The Docks are two in number, forming part of the grand scheme which, in all its comprehensive details, has so long occupied public attention. The extent of shipping accommodation afforded by these Docks alone will equal that of Prince's Dock, and no doubt is entertained that they will almost immediately be called into active operation. A procession was then formed and proceeded t

OPENING OF THE PARK.

THE WAREHOUSES.

Amongst the number being Viscount [illegible], Colonel Bell; Sir Philip Egerton; Lady Egerton; Mr. Egerton; Miss Legh; Sir Thomas Fremantle and family; the Rev. H. M. Fielden and family; T. Grimshitch, M.P.; F. H. Goldsmith, Esq.; Count H. D Avigdor; Lord Ingestre; Honourable Wellington Talbot; George Cornwall Legh; Earl of Lincoln; Lord Monteagle; R. Neville, M.P.; Professor Owen; R. N. Phillips; Mrs. Phillips; Major Rolo, R.A.; Prussian Consulate and Lady; Hon. E. H. Stanley; E. J. Stanley; T. Thornley, M.P.; Captain H. Vernon; Baron and Baroness [illegible]; Russian Ambassador; [illegible]; Henry Thomas Hope, Esq.; the Mayors and Town Clerks of Manchester, Salford, and Chester; and the Consuls representing the different powers at Liverpool. Twelve of the warehouses, each capable of holding 4000 bales of cotton, are already completed. They have been erected in the best style of workmanship, by Messrs Hilton and Morris, and will form three long tiers, running rectangularly from the shore. They are two stories in height, and are, in every respect, highly convenient and substantial. In each of the lower story of each warehouse run two lines of iron pillars, the floors being laid with asphalte cement. The stairs leading up to the upper story are of iron, and projecting from the upper windows are hoisting cranes. In fact the whole is furnished with every requisite to make a warehouse valuable and complete.

The Superintendent of the Dock Warehouses is Mr. W. H. Slomon, late of the Southampton Docks, and formerly of the East and West India Docks, London.

THE RAILWAY.

The extensive line of railway from Grange-lane to the Docks has been formed in an incredibly short space of time, and, although in a somewhat rough state, was sufficiently advanced to allow of its opening at the same time. It runs in a diagonal line, by means of an open excavation across the town, from the Lancaster-lane Station through Oliver-street, Conway-street, Price-street, and Cleveland-street, and continuing along the Dock warehouses even to the water's edge. This arrangement affords facilities and advantages which few railways or few docks enjoy. From the main line branches run along each side of the warehouses, one side will be made available for the storing of goods by vessels just arrived, the other for conveying goods to vessels loading for sea. The rails run so close that the goods can be hoisted direct from, or lowered into, the trucks, and thus all confusion and necessity for carting will be avoided; neither will there be delay or hazard from exposure on the quays.

THE OPENING OF THE PARK

The Park, which was thrown open to all, is a splendid enclosure, and has been formed at a cost of £127,770. A refreshment tent was fitted up, 170 feet long; and various other booths, canopy, &c., were erected. Cricket, football, and other athletic games, rural sports, and other amusements, occupied the holiday throng in that vast and picturesque arena. An efficient committee of the most respectable tradesmen had undertaken the superintendence of this portion of the day's proceedings, and nearly all the tradesmen of the town, in addition to a holiday, agreed to give each person in their employ half-a-day's wages. The programme of these sports comprised sack-races, pig-chases, pole-climbing, and, with a variety of other rare and spheno-curing sports, "a foot-race for women of all ages." The far-famed Lancashire Bell-ringers were engaged, and were placed in the Boat house, on one of the beautiful serpentine lakes; and the effect of their melodious notes added considerably to the interest of the scene.

The new Market, on which a sum of £26,000 has been expended, likewise presented its attractions. Of this we gave an Engraving last week. On the east quay of the new Docks, facing the river, six pieces of ordnance were placed, for the purpose of firing salutes; the cannons being under the management of a detachment of the Royal Artillery from Chester Castle

No procession was formed, but the quays of the new Docks were lined with the pensioners, the several clubs and societies with their bands, flags, &c.; and, after the opening of the Docks, they proceeded to the Park, to be in waiting to receive Lord Morpeth. A stand was erected on the west side of the Bridge-end Dock, capable of holding 1200 persons.

THE BREAKFAST

For this entertainment four of the warehouse-rooms, each 140 feet long and 50 feet wide, were beautifully and tastefully fitted up with pink and white drapery, by Mr. Shaw, upholsterer, of Birkenhead, assisted by Mr. Hornblower and Mr. Bruce, architects. The suite included reception, retiring, and refreshing, ball and banquet rooms. In the former, a magnificent cascade, furnished by Mr. Highfield, Mr. Jackson's manager, sent forth a silvery and refreshing jet, amidst a profusion of choice conservatory plants and flowers. The walls of all the rooms were lined with alternate white and pink, arranged in the Grecian tent style, and finished round the top with Roman drapery. The prevalence of pink shed a rich and warm light into the rooms. The ball-room was furnished with an orchestra in the centre, its walls decorated with four stars. The banqueting-room had a very gay appearance. In addition to drapery decorations, the roof was decked with evergreens. A high table, 140 feet long, ran along the side, at which the Chairman, with the distinguished guests, were arranged. Transversely were about twenty lower tables.

About 600 persons were present. The chair was taken by Mr Bailey, jun., M.P., supported by Lord Morpeth, Earl of Lincoln, Lord Monteagle, and other eminent individuals

The usual loyal toasts having been proposed,

Lord Morpeth was received with great acclamation. He assured them he felt sincerely the kind and cordial manner in which the toasts had been received. Ever since he had been called to the office which he now held, of First Commissioner of Woods and Forests, and which connected him with the property of the Crown, he had felt the strongest interest in the rising fortunes of Birkenhead. They were probably aware that besides the general interest which the Crown might be supposed to take in all that was represented by the abstract idea of its six yards, it had also a more personal and peculiar interest and disinterested for meaning well to the port and town of Birkenhead. He avowed this the more readily, inasmuch as it was quite obvious that the proportion in which the undertakings here set on foot could become profitable must be according to the degree in which they were made available to the accommodation of commerce and the public good. The Chairman had alluded to his (Lord Morpeth's) visit to Birkenhead and he could say, in reply, that he hoped the portal [illegible] would be instrumental to the relief of an afflicted country by [illegible]ng from thence the crops which like the rich banks of the Ohio and the innumerable streams of the mighty Mississippi. He hailed it as a good omen, and hoped that the first use of the ample basin through which their vessels would day had for the first time gilded, and all those striking and startling specimens of engineering skill and admirable natural resources by which it was surrounded, would be consecrated to the admitting the surplus harvests of foreign fields, and make provision for the bread that keeps alive. Next in the progress of time—he hoped in the course of the ensuing autumn—they would be able to bear their part in accommodating the timber trade; and without proceeding through the long vistas of usefulness and enterprise, and of the success which he trusted would attend on Birkenhead, he hoped that the proceedings of that day eloquently foreshadowed an auspicious commencement, and a powerful impulse. He would only express a hope that the best feeling would always prevail between town and the great city immediately opposite them Liverpool —which divided with London the supremacy of the commerce of the world; and, as London could not but feel benefited by the improvements of South[illegible], so Liverpool could have cause to rejoice at the prosperity of Birkenhead; and, even should the majestic Mersey become lined with a double line of docks, he trusted that there would never be more than room enough for the corn that waves in the western hemisphere. He trusted that they had that day forged another link in that chain of friendship which ought to connect England with America. While they remembered that Rendel had constructed their Docks, they had also [illegible]s Paxton to lay out their promenades, and they were one of the first cities which had given a sympathetic attention to the great subject of the public health. He hoped that, when the pageant of the day had passed away, it would still leave them ground to remember that it had not been a triumph which gained its trophies from the strife of nations or the engines of destruction.

Lord Lincoln rose amid cheers to propose "The Commerce of the Mersey," and expressed a hope that the only rivalry that would exist between Birkenhead and Liverpool would be for their common interest. They, he hoped, as large American vessel, and that day entered their harbour, freighted from abroad with guano, to fatten the broad acres of Cheshire

Lord Monteagle proposed "Manchester and the Manufacturing Interests," and dwelt emphatically on the improvements that had been effected in the sanitary system of the districts, and [illegible] other towns to follow, in this respect, [illegible] Liverpool [illegible] Manchester [illegible] Birkenhead [illegible] and other towns of a local character [illegible] Mr. Cobden attended [illegible] Birkenhead [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

POSTSCRIPT.

The New College at Leamington.—On Thursday the first stone of the New Leamington College was laid by Henry Jephson, Esq., M.D., President of the Institution. The site chosen is at Binswood, a short distance from the centre of the town, and is considered one of the healthiest situations in the district. Shortly after three o'clock, the hour appointed for laying the stone, the Directors many of the shareholders, and a number of the patrons of the institution assembled at the Regent Hotel, where a procession was formed, and proceeded, accompanied by the band of the 11th Hussars, through the principal streets of the town, to Binswood; where the ceremony took place, in the presence of an immense concourse—amongst whom were Lord Somerville, the Hon. Colonel Cathcart, Hon. R. C. Ferry, Captain Harford, &c Accident on the London and North-Western Railway.—An accident of a very serious nature occurred on the above line on Wednesday evening. The express train, which leaves Birmingham at ten minutes after eight o'clock for Liverpool, started as usual, with between forty and fifty passengers; and, so far as it could be seen, everything was in proper order, and promised a safe run. When, however, the train arrived at Winsford, between seven and eight miles beyond Crewe, the engine ran off the line, and with such violence that it was completely turned over, and the whole of the carriages were thrown into disorder. The engine-man, whose name is Gray, was dashed with great violence to the ground, and found lying on the rails with his back broken, and otherwise severely injured. The stoker was also thrown off, but not seriously hurt. None of the passengers were injured, although alarmed and inconvenienced by the delay which necessarily occurred in repairing the damage.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE

A morning paper of yesterday contained a report of the sudden and alarming illness of Louis Philippe. This report, however, we are glad to believe, was without foundation; for we yesterday received accounts from Paris, by express, dated so late as Thursday noon, which make no mention of such an event, some information of which must then have transpired, had it been true.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Advices from the Cape, a few days later than those noticed elsewhere, have reached us. The only fact worth notice in them is the arrival of Sir H. Pottinger, who had issued an energetic proclamation on assuming the command.

ACCIDENTS AND OFFENCES.

DESTRUCTION OF THE HIBERNIA WHARF BY FIRE.

About three o'clock on Tuesday morning, a conflagration of an alarming character took place upon the premises known as the Hibernia Wharf, on the Southwark side of London-bridge, the property of Mr. Alderman Humphery.

The fire made its appearance in the first instance in the front facing the water's edge, through the windows in which the policeman on duty upon the bridge observed a strong glare of light. He had scarcely made this discovery before a huge body of flame burst from the lower part of the wharf, and in a few moments the fire rushed upward with fearful violence. Information was instantly despatched to the several engine stations, and very shortly several engines were brought to the spot. At the time of the arrival of the earliest engines, owing to the inauspicious states of the weather, and the hour at which the outbreak occurred, but two or three persons had assembled, and considerable difficulty was experienced in obtaining assistance

As soon as was possible, however, the engines on shore were got into full play two of them being stationed on London-bridge, while vast bodies of water were poured from engines stationed in Montague-close, and the floating engine moored immediately in front of the wharf. For some time but little impression was made upon the fire, but by a judicious management, the flames were confined to the wharf, and the adjoining property and party-walls were kept as cool as possible.

The buildings were exceedingly old, and contained an immense quantity of timber, and, had it not been for the strong party walls on either side, the two adjoining wharfs, known as the lower and upper ones, also belonging to Mr. Alderman Humphery, would have been consumed.

On Tuesday Mr. Payne sat at the Bridge-house Hotel, to investigate the cause of the fire. Several witnesses having been examined, the Jury returned the following verdict:—"That there is not sufficient evidence to enable them (the jurors) to decide how the fire originated; but, in their opinion, there is every probability that it arose from the spontaneous combustion of some bales of waste or shoddy." A juror explained that shoddy was a dressing of Yorkshire cloth, and the most dangerous article that could be placed in any building. It was of an oily nature, and if the least quantity of water got upon it, it would cause the substance to ignite spontaneously. He (the juror) had been obliged himself to throw some into the Thames on several occasions

---

Fires on Monday Morning. -Early on Monday morning, a fire broke out at 42, Chapel-street, Islington, in the occupancy of Mr. J. Cresswell, general dealer. The premises originated in the back parlour, and were first discovered by the proprietor. Before it could be extinguished, the fire either burned or damaged the whole of the stock in trade, furniture, &c., in the lower portion of the house. The loss, as far as Mr. Cresswell is concerned, will fall upon the Sun Fire-office, but the lodgers, unfortunately, were uninsured.—Between five and six o'clock, a fire took place on the premises belonging to Mr. J. Pitt, hatter and haberdasher, Wellington-street North, Strand. The county of water being procured, the flames were extinguished, but not until the whole of the stock of hats was damaged by fire and smoke, and the partition, the flooring, and fixtures on one side of the shop materially burned.—About half-past two o'clock, a fire broke out upon the premises known as the Temperance Hall, in Milton-street, Cripplegate. It was caused from the over-heating of the copper flue, which set the board flooring of the back kitchen in flames. The engines and firemen quickly attended, and they succeeded in getting the fire extinguished before any considerable damage was done.—On Sunday night, shortly before eight o'clock, there was also a fire upon the premises of Mr. Simpson, a fancy bread and biscuit baker, at the western corner of Bond-street. A plentiful supply of water being at hand, the engines were put in action, and, in the space of an hour, succeeded in so far reducing the fire as to allay all apprehension of further danger, but not until the whole of the premises were gutted, and the stock in trade, together with the furniture, completely destroyed. The premises adjoining, No. 45, Bond-street, occupied by Messrs. Judd and Son, hot and shoemakers, and No. 58, Piccadilly, occupied by Mr. Alabaster, straw bonnet maker, as also their stock in trade and furniture, were seriously injured by water and hasty removal.

Lancaster Boiler Explosion.—A boiler explosion attended with loss of life occurred on Thursday (last week) on board the Troubadour, which trades between Swansea, Bristol, and Liverpool. The vessel had just arrived at the Mersey, and turned after her anchor, when one of the principal tubes of the boilers exploded, filling the engine-room with scalding steam, which rose in a dense cloud, and was seen from the shore. Two men were below at the moment, and their cries were frightful. One of them rushed out of the door which communicated with the engine-room, and fell exhausted. The other made for the ladder, with a view of getting on deck, but the scalding steam drove him backwards, and he sunk. When extricated they were actually boiled. They were conveyed to the Swansea Infirmary, where one shortly died: the other remains in a dangerous condition. None of the passengers sustained any injury.

Death of Two Soldiers.—A melancholy accident occurred on Monday evening to two privates belonging to the Coldstream Guards. One of them had been married on the same forenoon at the Military Chapel, and proceeded on board one of the Greenwich boats, in company with his bride and equally unfortunate but brave comrade. It appears that the first-mentioned, on the boat passing Rotherhithe, by some unlucky chance stumbled backwards and fell into the river. He sank almost immediately, and was seen by the second soldier, the deceased, who accordingly, plunged into the water, but lost his own life in the attempt.

Sudden Death.—At a little after six o'clock on Tuesday morning, Henry Hitch, a man in the employment of Mr. Cubitt, Pimlico, went to his work as usual, but feeling himself very unwell, immediately returned to his residence, 2, Neat Houses, near the Monster, Pimlico, where he expired in a few minutes afterwards.

Fatal Accident on the London and North-Western Railway.—On Monday, a fatal accident occurred at the Eccles Station of the London and North-Western Railway (Liverpool and Manchester Branch) A person of the name of Isaac Sutton had been attending the marriage of his father at Eccles Church. The party had had much to drink, and were about to proceed to Knowmill Fair, Manchester. The deceased was very busy, and, on the arrival of the train at the station, he attempted to jump on the foot-board while the train was in motion. He missed his hold, and fell between the steps of the carriages and the platform, and was killed on the spot. The following day an inquest was held on the body, when a verdict of "Accidental death" was returned.

Sudden Death of a Recue Sergeant.—On Tuesday night, an inquest was held before Mr. Bedford, at the Red Lion, Princes-street, Westminster, on the body of Thomas Powell, aged thirty-five, a police sergeant of the A division of metropolitan police. It appeared that, about half-past two o'clock on Monday morning, the deceased was on duty, apparently in his usual health, when he was drove from Wright's coffee-house, Charing-cross, in which were four men and a woman, who were creating a great uproar. Deceased ran after the cab, for the purpose, as was supposed, of taking the men into custody, without uttering a word; he fell back on to the ground as if shot. Police-constable Eve, A 47, who had followed, found deceased in a state of insensibility, and took him to Westminster Hospital, where he was pronounced to be dead. Mr. Tebbs, house-surgeon of the hospital, said he found long standing disease of the heart, and he had no doubt that the exertion of running had, in consequence of that disease, occasioned deceased's death. A verdict was returned of "Natural death."

Serious Accident to the Earl of Bective.—On Tuesday, as the Earl of Bective was returning to Dublin from hunting, his horse fell under him, and broke his Lordship's leg. His Lordship was brought to the Bective Hotel, in Sackville-street, and his medical attendants pronounced the injury a simple fracture. His Lordship is the eldest son of the Marquis of Headfort.

Sudden Death in Tavistock-square.—On Wednesday afternoon, as a respectable man, named Benjamin Somers, residing at No. 9, Sandwich-street, Burton-crescent, was passing along Tavistock-square, he was observed suddenly to stagger and fall with great violence on the pavement, while at the same moment blood was observed to pour from his mouth. He was conveyed to a surgeon's in the neighbourhood, but death, it appeared, had been almost instantaneous—caused, it was believed, by the sudden breaking of a blood-vessel of the heart.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

Windsor, Thursday Evening.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Her Majesty, the Prince Consort, and the Royal Family took their usual airing during the day; the Queen and his Royal Highness promenading in the Home Park this morning and taking a carriage airing in the afternoon. His Excellency the Spanish Ambassador, and Viscount Palmerston, left the Castle, this morning, for the town. Lord and Lady Ezelin, who are staying upon a visit to W. B. Harcourt, Esq., St. Leonard's, with their two children, had the honour of visiting her Majesty at the Castle, this morning. We are happy to state that her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, who has been suffering from the effects of a severe cold, is convalescent. According to present arrangements, the Court will take its departure for Buckingham Palace on Monday next.

The Duke of Portland.—The Duke of Portland is now considered convalescent. The Marquis of Titchfield and Lords George and Henry Bentinck are staying with their venerable parent.

Present from Louis Philippe.—The King of the French has lately presented the Dowager Lady Brenton with a beautiful vase of Sevres china, in token of the high estimation in which he holds the memory of her husband, the late Vice-Admiral Sir J. Brenton, Bart., a copy of whose memoir his Majesty had been graciously pleased to accept from Lady Brenton.

Her Majesty's Drawing-room.—The Queen will hold a Drawing-room, at St. James's Palace, on Thursday, 15th April, and one on Thursday, 27th May next, to celebrate her Majesty's birth-day. The Knights of the several Orders are to appear in their collars, at the Drawing-room on the 27th of May.

The French Ambassador.—Count de Ste. Aulaire has left Hertford House, and returned to Paris. The Count is expected back to London in about a fortnight. Count Louis de Noailles left the Embassy some days since for Paris. The Count de Jarnac acts as Chargé d'Affaires during the congé of the Ambassador.

The King of Prussia's Present to the Prince of Wales.—It is stated, in a Berlin letter, that M. A. de Humboldt has been charged by the King to convey to London the magnificent shield which his Majesty has caused to be executed for his Royal godson, the Prince of Wales.

Illness of Sir George Hamilton.—Accounts have been received from Florence, which leave scarcely any hope of the recovery of Sir George B Hamilton, K.C.H., our resident Minister at that Court. His Excellency has been suffering from a complication of disorders for some time past.

Aristocratic Marriage.—On Thursday, at St. James's Church, Lord Alfred Henry Paget, M.P., Clerk Marshal and Chief Equerry to her Majesty, led to the hymeneal altar, Miss Wyndham, youngest daughter of the Countess of Listowell, by her first marriage with the late George Thomas Wyndham, Esq., of Cromer Hall, Norfolk. The ceremony was performed in the presence of Field Marshal the Marquis of Anglesea (father of the noble and gallant bridegroom), and Lady Adelaide Paget, Viscount and Viscountess Sydney, the Earl of Uxbridge, Mr. and Lady Eleanor Graham, the Earl and Countess of Listowell, Lord and Lady Macdonald, &c. The party returned to the Earl of Listowell's, Kingston House, and partook of a sumptuous dejeuner a la fourchette; after which the happy couple set off for the Duke of Devonshire's, at Chiswick. The bride has, it is said, a fortune of £5,000 per annum.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE WINDSOR STEEPLE CHASES.

From time immemorial the festival of Easter has been the especial season for popular sports and pastimes in this country Shaking off what Sir James Mackintosh calls "the ascetic atmosphere of stupidity," casting, for the nonce, his national phlegm and natural reserve, John Bull celebrates the great Christian feast with an earnestness, the strength and intensity of which, perhaps, are owing to the circumstance of their coming "but once a-year." Christmas, indeed, may be the more prominent occasion of good cheer, but Easter is the saturnalia of fun and frolic. The dwellers in and around the metropolis are catered for with certain reference to their classification. So manifold are the appliances and means, that the mere catalogue of them would carry us out of our bounds—a descr ption, even in outline, is, of course, out of the question. On this account we select one scene from the grand spectacle of action. Our art lies under the walls of Imperial Windsor. Thither accompany us, and, as it is written in "Gil Blas," we "will sh-w thee that thou hast not got among beggars."

Some three or four years ago, the ceremony of Easter Monday with the Royal Rounds" was discontinued, following the Epping Hunt to the tomb of all sublunary pageants. The latter, or its shade—"alas, poor ghost!" has again appeared: the former is represented by another passage in chivalry—certain tournaments a cheval, or Military Steeple Chases. These constitute the material of our subject: let us to the discussion.

On Monday last, towards two of the afternoon, a considerable company had gathered hard by the Cavalry Barracks adjacent to Windsor. The trysting place was in goodly keeping with the ceremonial. Almost above their heads floated the Royal Standard of England; in front, waved the russet of its forests; all around, was token of rural state and comfort which might scarce be found elsewhere.

The course was over nearly four miles of country—the first two consisting of such average enclosures as one sees in the neighbourhood of towns—with a ragging brook and a considerable portion of the rest in Capt. Bulkeley's park. None of the fences were abstractedly dangerous— but they were quite considerable enough to need a hunter to negotiate them safely. The whole distance, from start to finish, and it was in excellent order. The principal peripatetic stands, used at the great race meetings, were erected to the left of the run in, and the whole mise en scene was artistic and correct. To be sure it had its accessories, but what contrivance is without them. It was humiliating to see the cream of gentle blood cavalier born with silver spoons in their mouths and baptized in alabaster vases, worsted in their especial devotes by a grim old gentleman of the Jewish persuasion—such is fate.

Since Steeple Chases elsewhere have their distinguishing titles, such as "The Great National," "The Aristocratic," "The Grand Military," and so forth—why not call this the Full Dress? It would be a very appropriate title—for such spick and span turns out of velvet, satin, silk, doeskin, and patent varnish, you would look for in vain at any other. By grace of the civil power, Mr. Punch, all this bravery was spared the usual fortune of such costume: save where a fall occurred, there was not a speck on the garments of the riders. Of course, there were lords and ladies wholesale: and of the intermediate classes, good samples as could have been desired. The ground was admirably kept: the carriages and equestrians being confined to the field where the winning-post and its accessories were, while the foot-people wandered about, lining the large leaps, and looking out for the greatest amount of excitement.

The start for the first event, the Household Brigade Stakes, took place at three o'clock, the winner being Charon, ridden by Lord Strathmore, who went at once to the front, and finished by himself, the second being a mile or so astern. For the 5 Sovs. Sweepstakes, with 25 added, 12st. each, the same as the preceding race, half a score went, and a sporting affair ensued. Champagne won cleverly. Mr. Elmore had entered a "brown gelding," but not having named an especial animal of the description, and there being many brown geldings in the world, the specification was held insufficient. The Military Open Race gave us a very spirited encounter, ending in a dead heat between Carlow and Lopez, the former ridden by Captain Peel, the latter by the Hon. G Noel. The stakes were then divided. The sports were wound up by the Jockey Sweepstakes, 5 added, won by Villager; but it was too late an hour for visitors from afar; a twenty miles ride after seven P.M. in April, is a serious business such had we to achieve.

Tuesday was again fine, and the muster quite brilliant. There were two events of sterling interest, besides two others right pleasant, if not so important. The first of the great pair was the Handicap Stakes of 25 sovs a-piece, with 100 added, making a capital of considerable amount. This was won in a field of a dozen by Marengo, beating Brunette by a neck only. The second, the Aristocratic, brought nine to the post—Chandler, ridden by Captain Peel, winning: a good-looking race, but ultimately a very easy conquest.

Negro won the 5 Sovs Sweepstakes, beating seven others; and Shamrock the 2 Sovs ditto, beating five—in a canter—three winding up the account of the most sporting catalogue. Nearly seventy horses were stated to be in the vicinity—having engagements for the two days.

Lord Brownlow Cecil had a bad fall—and was ridden over—in the last race but one: he was, however, going on well the following day.

NEWMARKET CRAVEN MEETING.—Monday.

The Craven Stakes, of 10 sovs each, for three-yr-olds, 6st; four yrs, 8st 4lb; five yrs, 8st 12lb; six years and aged, 8st 5lb. A. T. Three ran.

Mr. Mostyn's King of Morven, 3 yrs	.. ..	(Kitchener) 1
Duke of Bedford's Weatherbit, 3 yrs	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2
Mr. Marsom's h f The Cardinal's Niece, 3 yrs		(W. Archer) 3

King of Morven made all the running, and won cleverly by a length.

Handicap Sweepstakes, of 20 sovs each, only 5 ft, &c., to go to the second horse; for three and four-yr-olds. Eleven subs, one of whom paid 5 sovs ft.

Lord Orford's Prussic Acid, 4 yrs, 8st 12lb	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Duke of Bedford's Bridle, 3 yrs, 6st 11lb	.. ..	(Feitit) 2
Lord Chesterfield's Bro. to Catch, 3 yrs, 6st 7lb	.. ..	(J. Prince) 3

Won by a length.

Handicap Sweepstakes, of 25 sovs each, 10 ft. T. Y. C. Six subs.

Mr. Mostyn's Wilderness, 4 yrs, 8st 12lb	.. ..	(H. Bell) 1
Lord Exeter's Cocoanut, 5 yrs, 7st 7lb	.. ..	(Mann) 2
Mr. R. Boyce's Colleen Bawn, 3 yrs, 7st 5lb	.. ..	(A. Day) 3

Won by a length. Run in 1 min. 22 sec.

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each, h ft, for three-yr-olds. R. M. Eight subs.

Mr. Bouverie's War Eagle, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(J. Marson) 1
Colonel Anson's Don Cæsar, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2
Duke of Beaufort's f by Assassin, out of Esmeralda, 8st	.. ..	(Nat) 3

The favourite made all the running, and won easily by two lengths.

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each, for three-yr-olds. R. M. Six subs.

Duke of Richmond's Halo, by Mus, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Sir J. Hawley's Miami, by Venison, 8 st	.. ..	(J. Marson) 2

Halo made all the running, and won by half a length

A Sweepstakes, of 50 sovs each; for colts, 8st 7lb; and fillies, 8st 4lb, not engaged in either the Riddlesworth, the 2000 Guinea, or 1000 Guinea Stakes.

Lord E. Russell's Reminiscence	.. ..	(J. Marson) 1
Lord Orford's gr c by Clearwell, out of Anguilina,	.. ..	(Nat) 2
Mr. Wigram's Philo	.. ..	(Boyce) 3

Won easily by a length. Philo beaten off.

The Riddlesworth Stakes, of 200 sovs each, h ft. Ab. M. Six subs.

Mr. Wreford's Whirligig, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(A. Day) 1
Mr. Coombe's ch by Sir Hercules, out of Harmony, 8st 7lb (Bartholomew)		2

Won by a neck. Run in 1 min. 30 sec.

Match, 500, h ft, 8st 7lb each. A. F.

Mr. O'Brien's The Traverser	.. ..	(J. Marson) 1
Mr. Gully's Pyrrhus the First	.. ..	(A. Day) 2

Won by half a length. Run in 2 min, 18 sec.

TUESDAY

The Riddlesworth Stakes of 200 sovs each, h ft, for the produce of mares covered in 1843. D. M 6 subs.

Colonel Peel's King of Naples, by Slane, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Duke of Bedford's Fistiana, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2
Mr Wreford's Wild Doe, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(A. Day) 3

The King of Naples won by a head, and there was only a head difference between the second and third Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each, h ft, for the produce of mares covered in 1843, not engaged in either Riddlesworth. D. M. 7 subs.

Mr. W. S. Stanley's Bella Donna, by Slane, 8st 11b	.. ..	(W. Boyce) 1
Lord Strathdrick's, by The Saddler, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(Robinson) 2
Lord Glasgow's ns Sorrel, 8st 11b	.. ..	(Nat) 3

Bella Donna made all the running, and won cleverly by a length. Sorrel a bad third. Time 1 min 48 sec.

The Newmarket Handicap of 25 sovs each, 10 ft, and only 5 if declared &c., with 200 added; for three-yr-olds and upwards; the second to receive 100 sovs out of the stakes. Clermont course. 77 subs, 39 of whom declared.

Mr. Gregory's ch c Claremont, by Euclid, 4 by Taurus	.. ..	(W. Treen) 1
Lord E. Russell's Sting, 4 yrs, 8st 6lb	.. ..	(J. Marson) 2
Sir C. Monck's Vanish, 4 yrs, 7st 9lb	.. ..	(Simpson) 3

Won by a length, Sting beating Vanish by a head; Lyncens fourth. Run in 3 min 9 sec.

WEDNESDAY.

Subscription Plate of £50; for three-yr-olds, 7st; four, 8st 7lb; five, 9st; six and aged, 9st 2lb. T. Y. C.

Lord Exeter's Wood Pigeon, 5 yrs	.. ..	(Mann) 1
Mr. Mostyn's Wilderness, 4 yrs	.. ..	(Nat) 2
Mr. Robert's Mogultstan, 3 yrs	.. ..	(Clay) 3

Deciding heat, 2 to 1 on Wilderness. The horse made all the running, and won by a length.

Sweepstakes of 50 sovs each; for three-yr-olds; colts 8st 7lb, and fillies 8st 2lb. D. M. 8 subs

Duke of Richmond's Halo	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Col. Anson's Lazarillo	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2

Halo made all the running, and won in a canter by two lengths.

The Column Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft; for three-year-olds. R M. 31 subs.

Mr. Bowes's Epirote, 8st 9lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Col. Peel's Palma, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(Nat) 2
Duke of Richmond's Red Hart, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(H. Bell.) 3

Match: D.M. 300, h ft.

Mr. Gully's Mendicant, 8st 7lb	.. ..	(F. Butler) 1
Lord Glasgow's Conspiracy, 8st	.. ..	(Nat) 2

THURSDAY

Subscription Plate of £50; for three year olds, 6st 12lb; four, 8st 7lb; five, 9st, six, and aged, 9st 2lb. The winner to be sold for £300, if demanded, &c. D.M.

Col. Anson's Don Cæsar, 3 yrs	.. ..	(J. Sharpe) 1
Lord Chesterfield's Free Lance, 4 yrs	.. ..	(Nat) 2

Sweepstakes of 200 sovs each, h ft, for three-year-olds. D.M. (8 Subs.)

Sir J. Hawley's Vanity, 8st 4lb	.. ..	(J. Marson) 1
Duke of Bedford's Fistiana, 8st 11b	.. ..	(Nat) 2
Col. Anson's Jack Mustard	.. ..	(F. Butler) 3

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs each, h ft, for three-year-olds. D.M. (14 Subs.)

Mr. Mostyn's Planet	.. ..	(Nat) 1
Mr. Bowes's Epirote	.. ..	(F. Butler) 2
Mr. Mostyn's King of Morven	.. ..	(H. Bell.) 3

Won by half a length.

Post Match. 300 each, h ft. D.M. Lord Chesterfield's Lady Lurewell, 8st 7lb (Nat), beat Lord Exeter's Conchita, 8st 7lb (Mann), by half a length.

THE WINDSOR GRAND MILITARY AND ANNUAL STEEPLE-CHASES.

MONDAY

The Household Brigade Stakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, with £20 added; the second horse to save his stake, &c.

Mr. J. Leslie's (1st Life Guards) Charon	.. ..	(Earl Strathmore) 1
Mr. R. Hesketh's g g Seven Stars	.. ..	(Major Ogilvie) 2

The Military Open Race for 5 Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, 5 ft, with 15 added,

Mr. Little's Carlow, 12st	.. ..	(Capt. W. Peel) 0
Hon. G. Noel's b g Lopez	.. ..	(Owner) 0
Captain Gambier's ch g Forester	.. ..	(Mr. Brodrick) 2

TUESDAY.

A Handicap Sweepstake of 25 sovs each, 16 ft, and only 7 if declared on or before the 20th of March, with 200 sovs added by public subscription.

Captain Barnet's ch g Marengo, 10st 8lb	.. ..	(Bradley) 1
Mr. Preston's m Brunette, 12st 3lb	.. ..	(A M'Donnough) 2
Mr. Wesley's b h Gaylord, 10st	.. ..	(Hackley) 3

Won by only half a neck.

The Aristocratic Steeple Chase of 10 sovs each, 5 ft; 11st each.

Capt. Wm. Peel's br h Chandler	.. ..	(Owner) 1
Mr. J. Leslie's (1st Life Guards) Charon	.. ..	(Earl of Strathmore) 2
Mr. R. Sutton's b g Durham	.. ..	(Owner) 3

Won by about six lengths.

A Sweepstakes of 5 sovs each, with added. The second horse to save his stake.

Mr. Martin's b g Negro	.. ..	(Rackley) 1
Mr. R. Clifton's b g Cornelius	.. ..	(Mr. Bromley) 2
Captain Phillips's rd b g Romeo	.. ..	(Owner) 3

A Sweepstakes of 2 sovs each, with 10 added. The second horse to save his stake.

Mr. Philpott's Shamrock	.. ..	(Mason) 1
Mr. Purby's b g Robin Hood	.. ..	(Seffert) 2
Mr Purby's g g Wellington	.. ..	(Driver) 3

Won by about ten lengths. The winner was claimed by the owner of the second horse.

FRIDAY.

Handicap Sweepstakes. T Y C

Mr. Merton's African, aged, 7st 10lb	.. ..	1
Lord Exeter's Cocoa Nut, 6 yrs, 6st 13lb	.. ..	2

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs each, h ft, for three-yr-olds. D.M.

Mr. J. S. Douglas's Marie Louise, 8st 2lb	.. ..	1
Lord Chesterfield's Lady Lurewell, 8st 2lb	.. ..	2

Match, 200, h ft. A.T.—Lord E. Russell's Reminiscence, 6st 7lb, beat Mr. G. H. Moore's Wolf, aged, 9st.

Match, 100, h ft A. T.—Mr R. Boyce's Colleen Bawn, 8st 7lb, beat the Duke of Bedford's Leopard, 8st 3lb.

The Port Stakes, of 100 sovs each, h ft, for four-year-olds. T.M.M.

Lord E. Russell's Sting	.. ..	1
Mr. W. Scott's Sir Tatton Sykes	.. ..	2

LATEST BETTING AT NEWMARKET.

THE PORT

Offers to back Sting against the field.

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP

4 to 1 agst Clermont	10 to 1 agst Wolding
9 to 1 —— Jenny Wren	100 to 1 —— Elevator (nominal)
	13 to 1 agst Rufus.

SWEEPSTAKES of 10 sovs each, 2 ft, for three-yr-olds. D.M.

7 to 1 agst Priest

CHESTER CUP.

17 to 1 agst Dulcet	40 to 1 agst Clermont (t)	1000 to 15 agst Sir Tatton Sykes
20 to 1 —— Mendicant	40 to 1 —— Inheritance	1000 to 15 —— Byrsa
25 to 1 —— Newcourt (t)	50 to 1 —— Intrepid	1000 to 15 —— Sylvanus
25 to 1 —— Camera Obscura	50 to 1 —— Annandale	1000 to 10 —— Conjuror
33 to 1 —— Sting (t)	50 to 1 —— Inglewood	1000 to 10 —— Queen of Tyne

PEEL

8 to 1 agst Planet	16 to 1 agst Epirote (t)	20 to 1 agst Lincoln
8 to 1 —— Van Tromp	16 to 1 —— The Liberator (t)	25 to 1 —— Conyngham
	50 to 1 agst Halo

500 even between Epirote and the Liberator.

Offers to back Planet agst Van Tromp.

SCOTLAND.

Spread of Fever in Glasgow.—A letter from Glasgow, dated April 1, says:—"Fever still presses on us to an alarming extent—the lives for last month number 298. 275, High-street is still a seat of disease, and our District Surgeons' Report Book up to last night still bears on its face the names of [illegible] (We purposely avoid publishing the names.) In Springburn, too, (which is part of the same district), we have ten cases of small-pox, and seven of fever, in this week's report, so there is little doubt disease is spreading to what was comparatively a healthy situation.

Fever among the Railway Labourers.—One of the Glasgow papers mentions that a malignant fever has broken out among the railway labourers employed on the Caledonian Railway at the Cut, at Inchmead. The mortality is said to have been extensive, and to have extended to the surrounding rural population, four deaths being specially mentioned as having taken place in the family of a shepherd, at a farm called Howbeheath.

Death of a Mother and Daughter from Starvation.—The Ross Advertiser states that two females, of the name of Logan, residing at the Shore of Invernessa, died last week from actual starvation. They were, at one time, in comfortable circumstances—the knowledge of which, in addition to their recent depressed circumstances, and their anxiety to conceal their actual condition from the knowledge of the public, rendered them averse to asking parochial or other relief. The result, therefore, has been that they were both found dead in one bed.

The Baron De Bode.—The obsequies of the Baron De Bode took place on Wednesday, at the Roman Catholic Chapel, St. John's Wood, his son having arrived from Russia a few days since. The body was followed by M. D. Hill, Esq., Q.C., Mr. Serjeant Manning, Captain Langalee, and a large body of personal friends. The present Baron De Bode was chief mourner.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.—THE MORNING AFTER THE BATTLE OF HASTINGS.—PAINTED BY A. J. WOOLMER.

We see, after a second visit to the Exhibition of the Society of British Artists, in Suffolk-street, very little to add to the general character of our former criticism. It is, on the whole, a more than average Exhibition, and one, perhaps, of promise. But the members must remain true to themselves: there must be a higher penalty for secession than any that has yet been entered into. A second set of deserters from the body would be more than the Society could stand. The Exhibition in Suffolk-street, without Mr. Pyne, Mr. Allen, Mr. Herring, Mr. Dickse, Mr. Holland, &c., would indeed be a sorry Exhibition. Now that the Society has obtained its Charter of Incorporation, the members must keep well together, establish their school, and work in honest emulation one with another. Much may be done, should the Society succeed; for a good and permanent opposition would have the certain effect of forcing the Royal Academy to revise its rules—some of which are really detrimental to the true interests of art.

The first picture selected for our Journal is "The Morning after the Battle of Hastings," by Mr. A. J. Woolmer.

The next day was devoted by the Normans to the interment of their dead, and William gave leave to the Saxons to perform the like charitable office to the remains of their unfortunate countrymen. Search was made for the body of Harold, but at first in vain,—even Githa was unable to identify the remains of her son; but there was one whose fond eye no change in the object of her affections could deceive,—this was Edith, a Saxon lady of great beauty, and by her the corpse of Harold was recognised.

The finding of the body of Harold has long been a favourite subject with our painters. It is still, however, a "subject to let." Mr. Hilton made very little of it, and Mr. Woolmer can hardly expect to succeed where Hilton failed. Should Mr. Woolmer repaint this subject, he will do well to refer to a beautiful poem by Penrose, inserted by Campbell in his "Specimens of the Poets." The poem is called "The Field of Battle," and some of the stanzas are of extraordinary beauty. Mr. Campbell, in his "Adelgitha," and, above all, in his "Wounded Hussar," has given a vigorous echo of the poem, which wants little to rank it high among our ballad strains. The picture in the last stanza but two is extremely fine:—

> Dear anguish urged her to press
> Full many a hand, as wild she mourn'd;
> Of comfort glad the drear caress
> The damp chill dying hand return'd.

Edith, in history, finding the body of Harold, might receive an additional charm from Maria, in the ballad, seeking the body of her Edgar.

Our second picture is one o six exhibited by Mr. H. M. Anthony and, though the least ambitious of the number, unquestionably the best. Mr. Anthony is fond of lurid glares, and out-Martins Martin, and out-Danbys Danby, in the feverish blue and brimstone-like character of his effects. The picture we have engraved is entitled "Evening—Sunset after the Storm," and has no more incident in it than a few indistinct horses drinking in the foreground. The composition, however, is pleasing; though the effect is surely of unusual occurrence, and, moreover, somewhat overdone. Mr. Anthony must not be tempted into extravagances by his skill in colour: fashions change, and artists have new theories in art, but Nature is invariably the same. All Mr. Turner's caprices upon canvass, and all Mr. Anthony's attempts in the six pictures he exhibits, will never induce us to think that Nature is otherwise than we now see her—as Claude and Cuyp have painted her, and Thomson and Cowper described her.

We shall revert to this subject, perhaps, in our closing notice.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.—EVENING—SUNSET AFTER THE STORM.—PAINTED BY H. M. ANTHONY.

OPENING OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.

THE GRAND STAIRCASE.

MUSIC.

OPENING OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

This long expected event took place on Tuesday night, in the presence of an immense assemblage of rank and fashion and of artistical and literary celebrities. Rossini's "Semiramide" was the opera, and there was a new ballet, by M. Albert, called "L'Odalisque."

Before we can refer to the performances, it is requisite to describe the aspect of the new theatre, created by the genius of Albano, the civil engineer, in the short period of four months, completing his gigantic work, and opening on the very day originally announced. The old Covent Garden Theatre, constructed by Smirke, after the fire in the ancient edifice in 1808, where Handel's Italian operas were originally given, is, of course, familiar to our readers. Smirke's model was the [illegible] of Minerva, built under the direction of Phidias. It was originally intended that the interior of Covent Garden should have been much larger, but Kemble was fearful that nobody would be seen or heard; and Smirke therefore, constructed the smallest possible interior in the largest available exterior. Thus enormous space was lost in useless corridors and passages behind the façade of the interior.

THE INTERIOR

Albano submitted to the present lessees three plans: the first would have made Covent Garden the largest theatre in the world, beating the Milan Scala, and the Neapolitan San Carlo; the second was smaller; and the third would have left the interior its original size, only with additional tiers of private boxes. The medium plan is the one adopted. Our artists, this day, afford some notion of the alterations. The new road under the portico, by means of which visitors shall set from their carriages without being exposed to the vicissitudes of the weather—the new suite of rooms occupying the space of the old arcades the two new entrances at the southern (the pit door) and northern (the Box-office) wings, with the grand door in Bow-street—are the principal changes in the exterior. It is on entering the central door the magnitude of a new Hall, and of the newly-arranged Grand Staircase, first strikes the eye. (See our Illustration.) This is painted in imitation of Sienna marble, with lofty bronze candelabra between the columns light this staircase, which is universally admired. Passing through a suite of elegant rooms, in the first of which is the statue of Shakspeare, the Saloon or Crush Room is reached, divided into three compartments by two Corinthian columns at each end. The walls of this room are papered with green; the doors are covered with scarlet baize, and the mouldings richly gilded. Filled with ottomans and large mirrors, this Crush Room is both commodious and luxuriant. There are more looking-glasses throughout the interior than we have before seen in an English theatre, for which we suspect Albano will have the gratitude of the ladies of the creation, and, perhaps, of the lords also, to no small extent.

Gaze now at the interior—there it is, seen from two different points, as sketched by our artists. Would that we could add the effect of colour, and the effect on the grand chandelier being lighted up suddenly shortly before the overture, an effect so electrical, that it was followed by an immense burst of cheering from all parts of the house. The coup d'œil was really superb. Above is the painted ceiling, an engraving of which we shall give in next week's publication, the exquisite work of Ferri, Verardi, and Zarra. In the centre, descending through a perforated pinnacle of scroll gilding, is the colossal chandelier, this year a cluster of innumerable gas. Then the eye wanders to the glories of the proscenium, with the Royal Arms, splendidly modelled—the rich panels—the fine figures of Italy and Britannia, on each side on golden grounds, the brilliant white, blue, and gold groups of the six tiers of boxes, the style of decoration on each tier being varied, relieved by the crimson hangings of the boxes—the noble drop curtain, with the blue expanse in the distance, and the contrast of the red and white draperies with the figures of Ernte, and Ceres, and Flora, and Victory. The second drop curtain, with the inscription "Vivat Regina,"—the whole forming the most harmonious combinations of colours, calculated not only to set off the occupants of the boxes in the best light, but to make a splendid coup d'œil on the first rising of the curtain. Another light effect, to which the stage affords a striking contrast." The caryatides on the grand tier, with their graceful and slender shapes, the circular sweep of the boxes, and the curves in the flooring, create much the unity of the ensemble.

There are altogether 188 private boxes thus subdivided, 8 proscenium or stage boxes (four on each side), 30 pit boxes, 34 on the grand tier, 34 on the first tier, 28 on the second tier, 28 on the third tier, and 10 on the fourth or top tier. The second or third tiers are broken by amphitheatres, each holding 128 stalls, and non-reserved seats, so that if the pit be full, there are open places, besides the gallery, the advantage of which was already the case. Mr. Albano has also made some remarkable alterations to afford additional accommodation in these three localities, as after the three first rows, which cannot be exceeded in adaptation for seeing and hearing, there was an interruption in the line of the sight, from the flooring not having been sufficiently raised to clear the parapets, and afford a view of the front of the stage. There are 280 pit stalls, and the pit holds upwards of 400 persons, all the seats, including the gallery and amphitheatres, having backs. The spaciousness of the corridors, passages, and two stone staircases, evince the anxiety for the public accommodation. Perhaps some of our readers, not yet acquainted with the geography of the house, will be glad to learn what are the modes of ingress and egress. In the first place, the visitors to every tier of boxes enter at the grand staircase in Bow-street, through the Crush Room, and then take the same staircases right and left, according to the side of the house where their boxes may be taken. The habitués of the stalls enter by the same route. The pittites, at the southern door in Bow-street; the Royal Family, in Prince's-place; and the gallery and second amphitheatres, at the Piazza, Covent-Garden. For egress, there is the option of taking the grand entrance or the Piazza staircase; the access to the latter is by doors on the grand and first tiers of boxes, and by the imposing hall, both necessary for the pit and stalls entrances. The house, when quite filled, will hold above 3000 persons. The stage is forty-six feet in breadth between the columns of the proscenium. The space from the curtain to the lamps is eighty feet, and the depth of the stage and of the house sixty-two feet four inches. The ceiling is seventy feet by sixty-two.

A very prudent precaution was taken on the opening night, no money being taken at the doors, but the rush at the pit was still tremendous. Except the Royal boxes, every nook commanding a view of the stage was filled. The entrance of the artists excited much applause. The first in the field, after the 80 first-rate instrumentalists were assembled in the orchestra, was Costa, the Conductor and Musical Director. The second reception was given to Jenny Lind, and the third sensation was the entrance of Grisi. Lavia, the new tenor; Tagliafico, the new basso; and Alboni, the new contralto, were honoured with encouraging signs, but not so marked as those to the established favourites. As the opera progressed, however, there was no mistake as to the great hit of the evening, which was made by Mdlle. Alboni, a portrait of whom, as Arsace will be found elsewhere. A greater sensation probably was never produced on a débutante; but her face is full of intelligence; her eyes are expressive and beautiful; and her deportment easy and elegant. The critics have been unanimous in her favour. The Times says, "Perhaps a more perfect organ was never heard," the Post, "She has qualities of the best order—her style is refined, and her expression truthful;" the Daily News declares "that she is a treasure; the Herald, that her debût was "of the most triumphant character;" and the Chronicle, that "she created, from first to last, an unprecedented furore." It is difficult to describe the beauty of her organ; it comprises two octaves in the compass, combined with rare flexibility. It is one of those voices which gain more on the heart and produces an irresistible emotion. Her pathos, sensibility, and energy, are equally remarkable. In the air in the last act, she was encored, as well as in "Giorno d'orrore," in which her voice blended with that of Grisi, and the effect was prodigious. She might have accepted encores, indeed, for almost every air, but she never complied until there was a tremendous display of rapture from the entire house. It has been universally remarked, that Grisi never sang more superbly nor acted more forcibly. She was daring in her divisions, and dignified and impressive in her action. As she stood upon the throne in the last scene—the moment selected by our artist for his drawing (see the Illustration), she looked every inch a Queen. The noble bearing of Tamburini in Asur, his dramatic skill and marvellous vocalisation which has earned for him the title of the Rubini of basses, were particularly conspicuous. There is still no living artist who can accomplish the intricate roulades Rossini composed in his opera for a basso like Tamburini. He was in excellent voice, and, except in his upper notes, has a perfect command of its powers. Ivanoe is one of the most ungrateful of parts, and tenors have as much horror of it as that of Pollio in "Norma," but Lavia executed the music, especially in the concerted portions, very artistically. The new basso, Tagliafico, made an impressive High Priest he will be a very useful if not a great artist.

The great feature in this performance of "Semiramide," after the glories of the principals, was the perfection of the ensemble; thus the concerted pieces were really exquisite, especially the quartett and cazan. Then followed the chorus was powerful and exact, and had been well drilled. To eulogise the band too strongly would be impossible. Costa has achieved a most important improvement in the balance of the instruments, adding to the strength of the stringed ones, the brazing of brass has been balanced. We never heard such first violins for brilliancy, and the luscious tones of the tenors and violoncelli, and the power and crispness of the double basses, were quite delightful. The overture and accompaniments were capitally rendered; there was an observance of the nicest gradations of time, and of varied colouring, altogether unprecedented in an English orchestra, and we may safely assert Covent Garden band as now the first in the world. There are fifteen first violins, with Sautton at the head; fourteen second, with Ella; ten violas, with Hill; ten violoncelli, with Lindley; nine double-basses, with Howell; with a powerful complement of wind instruments, &c. Amongst the players, are H. Blagrove, Willy, Dando, Mellon, Thirlwall, Goffrie, Case, Thomas, Griesbach, Watkins, Patey, J. Loder, Payton, H. Westrop, Lucas, Hatton, Hancock, Lavenu, Jarrett, Reading, Goodban, W. Loder, Howell, Casciani, Pratten, C. Severn, Ribas, De Folly, Barret, Lazarus, Baumann, Platt, T. Harper, Cioffi, Prospère, Handley, Chipp, Jarratt, Rae, Harper, Smithies, Heather, Keating, Boord, &c.

M. Albert's new ballet of "The Odalisque," although mounted with great splendour, may be pronounced to be a failure, owing principally to the want of a leading danseuse in the leading character. Carini's music was full of pretty melodies. Badarna will appear on Saturday (this evening) for the first time, and Dumilâtre in a few days.

On Thursday, "Semiramide" was repeated. On Tuesday next, Madame Persiani appears in Lucia, Salvi in Edgar, and Gardoni in Arturo; and on the following Saturday, Mario and Grisi will appear in the "Puritani."

The debuts of Mdlle. Steffanone and Roveri (the great buffo) will follow in rapid succession. Marini (the basso) will appear in a few days, for the first time in this country, in Rossini's "Italiana en Algieri, in which Alboni will sustain the leading character.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—MADEMOISELLE JENNY LIND.—A letter received on Thursday, and dated the 31st of March, announces the arrival of Mr. Lumley the previous day at Munich. The opera chosen by Mdlle. Lind for her début has been put in rehearsal, in order that she may appear as early as possible after her arrival in London.

MUSICAL CHIT-CHAT.

The celebrated Hungarian Minstrels, four in number, have arrived in London for the season. they have the faculty of imitating instruments with the voice in an extraordinary manner, and have created quite a sensation in Paris and Brussels.

Mr. Dando's sixth and last Quartet Concert at Crosby Hall, and the third meeting of the Beethoven Quartet Society, took place on Monday.

Mr. Henry Russell has resumed his popular entertainments at the Strand Theatre this week; and the Ethiopian Serenaders at the St. James's Theatre. Mr. Collins and his clever family gave a concert in Pentonville on Wednesday.

This morning is the rehearsal of the third Philharmonic Concert, for Monday next; on which evening Mr. Wilson begins his season at the Music Hall. The second meeting of the Musical Union will be on Tuesday, and the sixth concert of the Amateur Musical Society on Friday.

The annual festival of the Western Madrigal Society was celebrated on Thursday night, at Freemasons' Hall, with great éclat. Ladies were assembled in the galleries, who seemed to relish the fine specimens of the Old Masters amazingly. Mr. Evans, the President of the Society, was in the chair, and has exertions, as well as those of G. Budd, Esq., the Hon Secretary, to maintain the high character of the club, were duly acknowledged. A piece of plate was presented to Mr. Budd on this interesting occasion.

MR. BLEWITT has announced his benefit concert to take place on Wednesday evening next, the 21st, at the Music Hall, Store-street, Bedford square. He will be supported by the Misses Rainforth, Williams, Sara Flower, and Mrs. Weiss; Messrs. Harrison, H. Phillips, J. L. Hatton, Henry Russell, Calkin, Machin, and Mr. Parkinson, the celebrated performer on the Westminster Abbey instrumentalists, the Messrs. Distin, Frederick Chatterton, Gratian Cooke, Herr Brandt, Kuhe, and Rousseau. Conductors, M. Benedict, T. Cooke, and J. L. Hatton. Blewitt will contribute some of his own comic compositions.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be performed at Exeter Hall, under the direction of the composer, on the 16th and 23rd inst.

LOLA MONTEZ.

We have received the following letter from Munich:—

"To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

"Sir—In consequence of the numerous reports circulated in various papers regarding myself and family, utterly void of foundation or truth, I beg of you, through the medium of your widely-circulated Journal, to insert the following:

"I was born at Seville, in the year 1823. My father was a Spanish officer in the service of Don Carlos; my mother, a lady of Irish extraction, born at the Havannah, and married for the second time to an Irish gentleman, which I suppose is the cause of my being called Irish, and sometimes English; "Betsy Watson," "Mrs. James," &c. &c.

I beg leave to say that my name is Maria Dolores Porris Montez, and I never have changed that name.

"As for my theatrical qualifications I never had the presumption to think I had any: circumstances obliged me to adopt the stage as a profession, which profession I have now renounced for ever, having become a naturalised Bavarian, and intend living in future, making Munich my residence.

"Trusting that you will give this insertion, I have the honour to remain,

Sir,
Your obedient Servant,
LOLA MONTEZ."

"Munich, March 31, 1847.

THE THEATRES.

DRURY LANE.

On Monday evening there was not a nook of standing room to be obtained to witness the new spectacle of "The Sea Shore" produced at this theatre, and this long before the half-price commenced. As a spectacle, "The Desert" is very beautiful, albeit, we cannot award very great praise to it as a drama. The story of "Lalla Rookh" has evidently been taken for the plot, on which the music of Reliolati David has been grafted, with some very pleasing songs for Miss Messent, Mr. Isaacs, and Mr. Hafter, by Mr. Tulley. But the audience evidently cared a great deal more for the camels than the composers; and, indeed, the processions, groupings, and general stage business, were exceedingly picturesque and effective. We have never seen anything better managed than the flying clouds of sand during the Simoom, at the end of the first act. It is as good a thing in its way as the passing of the clouds in the night-view of "London" at the Colliseum; and this is no mean praise. Another beautiful effect is the night-bivouac and the approach of sunrise, with the start of the caravan; indeed, the arrangement of all the tableaux reflects the highest credit upon Mr. W. West, under whose superintendence the spectacle has been produced. The camels are very docile and obedient, and the horses of the Bedouins pranced about with becoming spirit. There was, however, a trifling hitch in the progress of the elephantine car in the last scene. The larger of the two beasts got, somehow or another, entangled in his harness, and for a while refused to move. A "jibbing" elephant is an awkward customer to encounter; especially on the comparatively limited stage of a theatre; but, in the present instance, the obstinate animal was at length soothed by his conductors, and led into his proper place for the concluding picture.

We have said that the house was crowded to the ceiling. Every seat in the area-circle was occupied, and several of the visitors were obliged to be contented with peeping through the little windows in the box doors, each of which had its occupant. The piece "hung" somewhat in the second act, and provoked some slight disapprobation; but the "grouping" of the trumpeter will arrange that. At the end, there was loud applause, and a general cry for the manager. He, however, did not appear; but a wag in the slips threw a cross "bun" upon the stage, which elicited a roar of laughter

FRENCH PLAYS.

The charming Mdlle. Rose Chéri will return to the boards of this theatre on Monday evening, and was most enthusiastically welcomed by a large audience, all of whom appreciated her natural style and finished delineations. The first piece was the one in which she made her first appearance before a London audience—"Un Changement de Main," a piece of the Scribe school, in which it was played both at the St. James's Theatre, and in an adapted form at the Adelphi, under the title of "The Lioness of the North." The chief attraction, however, is the vaudeville, by the indefatigable M. Scribe, new to our stage, called "La Protegée sans Savoir," the action of which passes in London. The story is delicately and gracefully handled. Hélène (Mdlle Rose Chéri) is a young French orphan, who, by the influence of Russell, the noble M.P., Lord Clavering (M. Rhozevil), takes very great interest in her, and through a picture-dealer, Crosby (M. Tourillon), purchases her productions at a large price, also that of a young artist, Charles Chester (M. Lacressonnière). A friend of Clavering's, Lord Tressillyan (M. Pascal), a conceited dandy; and an old drawing master, Durocher (M. Cartigny), fall into the mistake of conceiving Hélène to be the mistress of Clavering, instead of acting in this piece. Her unaffected ways, her graceful manners, and, above all, her burst of passion when encouraged by Durocher with a dishonourable course of life, made the deepest impression on the audience. Next week we are promised the representation of the famous Parisian version of "Clarissa Harlowe." They are palmy days at present, at the St. James's Theatre.

HAYMARKET.

Mr. Planché's extravaganza, "The New Planet," produced here on Monday, is rather a succession of tableaux, relating to objects of passing interest, than a piece of connected story; and these are made to pass in a dioramic fashion before the audience, for the edification of the principal members of the solar system, who have visited earth from curiosity. "The New Planet," itself is performed by Miss P. Horton; Mars, by Mr. J. Bland; Juno, by Miss Reynolds; Venus, by Miss Julia Bennett; and Mother Earth, by Mr. W. Gallaher. Mr. Buckstone, who first appears as Mercury, is changed to Harlequin—with the attributes of the speaking Arlechino of the old Italian pantomimes; and he serves to guide the Planets to earth. It is difficult to mention any part that has escaped Mr. Planché's light, and happily-aimed shafts. We have in succession the Colosseum wonders, the Polytechnic Institution, Magnetic Telegraphs, Gun Cotton, the Egyptian Hall, the Egyptian Obelisk, the Malakoff and Adrian Serenaders, the Casinos, the Animals at Drury, Jenny Lind, the Rival Operas, all the Giselles, and an exhibition of poses plastiques, comprising Shakspeare, Britannia, the Wellington Statue, and a colossal Jullien. All the hits at the satire cuts like a good knife—ever sharp and well-tempered; and the allusions are keenly relished by the audience; although, as usual, some of the very best fly over their heads. The exhibition of poses plastiques, that they only show you too much for a shilling, was loudly laughed at; as indeed were all the other popular allusions.

The scenery—especially the view of London by night—is admirably carried out; the dresses were perfection, and the acting capital. Miss Reynolds made a great hit in a burlesque imitation of Grisi; and a quartet of the Planets was changed so spiritedly as to be encored. Mr. Gallaher, as to be unanimously encored. A small, well-selected chorus gave great effect to the concerted music. Miss P. Horton's beautiful voice told admirably in one or two scenas, and Miss Julia Bennett was as fair a representative of Venus as could be found. The manner in which she coaxed and fondled Mars, made great fun, thrown out as the tenderness was by the blunt burlesque heroism of Mr. James Bland.

If "The New Planet" does not run quite so long as "The Invisible Prince," it will be because a general audience is not, to an individual, sufficiently au courant du jour to comprehend the volley of jokes and allusions with which it is crammed, whereas the most unsophisticated country visitor can understand a fairy tale. It has, however, achieved a complete and well-deserved success. On Monday evening two accidents occurred, which were happily unattended with any disastrous consequences. The dress of one of the Wills, in the giselle scenes, and the illuminated head of one of the Planets, caught fire, and, though, in either case, the flame was at once extinguished. We recommend managers to put up some slight wire-gauze guard between the performers and the footlights.

LYCEUM.

The only novelty produced here on Monday was, as we announced, a new farce, or rather musical extravaganza, called "Cruiser and Second," so essentially outraging all probability, that the audience were compelled to laugh, and that heartily, in spite of their judgment. The plot is the merest thread to hang the situation on. A party of designing milliners, forming the "Brazil Patent Corset Company," are left upon an island, with nothing but some costumes they were taking over for a fancy ball; at least, so we barely understood, through the noise attendant upon the "settling down" of an Easter Monday audience on the commencement of a piece. Here they encounter two prior settlers, Willoughby Wobbles (Mr. A. Wigan) and Marmaduke Snodgrass (Mr. Keeley), who have established themselves as Robinson Crusoe and Friday, and form themselves into monarch, parliament, and people. In Wobbles, Clementina, the chief of the milliners (Mrs. Keeley), ultimately discovers a lost husband, and the piece concludes with the arrival of a ship to take them all home. The dialogue relating to the political affairs of the island-kingdom was written with great smartness, and the three principal characters were admirably played—a pas de deux between Mr. and Mrs. Keeley throwing the house into convulsions of laughter. A great deal of amusement was also created by the Burnam-wood-like stratagem of the milliners, who, armed with large boughs, form themselves into a marching hedge, and bewilder Snodgrass in his endeavours, in the dark, to get near his sweetheart. The reception of this laughable trifle was capital; and a neat tag at the conclusion was greeted with unqualified applause.

On Thursday evening an original drama, in three acts, called "The Creole; or Lowe's Fetters," was produced, and with immense success. It is written by Mr. Shirley Brookes, and is, to our thinking, the most effective first piece that has been brought out under the present management. The length of our theatrical notices this week prevents us from giving its story in detail, or paying a well-merited compliment to the admirable manner in which it was written and performed; but we shall endeavour, in our next, to do full justice to author and actors. The applause at the conclusion was most enthusiastic and unqualified; and Mr Shirley Brookes was called before the curtain, and bowed his acknowledgments of the honours showered upon him. The house was very well filled.

PRINCESS'.

After "The Barcarole," the "Midsummer Night's Dream" of Shakspeare was revived, having been put upon the stage in the most beautiful manner. Indeed, we are certain that, without disparagement to the performers, the music, or the orchestra, the chief impression left, when the piece concluded, was that produced by the magnificent scenery of Mr. Beverley. Of all the designs hitherto carried out, to represent fairy-land, we do not recollect any so exquisite as that of Titania's home, both as regards the general idea and its execution. We cannot say that the enthusiasm with which the scenery was greeted, was extended to other features of the revival, although it was strongly cast. Possibly the most attractive part was the Puck of "little Mr. Marshall," as we must still call her. Her acting was full of elfin'galety and mischief. "The Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Princess' will not create the sensation it excited at Covent Garden but may prove successful, nevertheless, as a half price piece, for some little time Our notice, however, to revert to the mise en scène—may be summed up in the comprehensive criticism of a gentleman in the gallery, who shouted out, more than once, "BRAVO, scenery!"

SADLER'S WELLS

This house did not put forward any great novelty for Easter—nothing, in fact, beyond a musical interlude called "The Rival Sergeants," which was supported with much spirit by Miss Wallack, Mr. Scharfe, and Mr. H. Mellon, and may be considered as successful. Before the "Sea Shore" was admirably performed; Miss Cooper playing the heroine with exceeding judgment, and Miss Laura Addison, in Ariosa, producing her wonted effects by her impassioned and energetic acting. A word should also be given to that of Mr. G. Bennett's Gloster. The farce of "The Bengal Tiger" wound up the evening's entertainments, to the great delight of the audience.

Passing over the greatest triumph yet achieved by the management of Sadler's Wells Theatre was the revival of Shakspeare's "Tempest," on Wednesday evening. It has been our pleasant duty to bestow unqualified praise upon all the productions and revivals which have gained such an honourable name for the house since Mr. Phelps first took the direction; and we are bound to say that of all these the last is unquestionably the best; whether we look to the excellence of the scenery, or the careful and judicious manner in which every part was played, down to the most unimportant one. Against only one alteration have we to make the slightest objection: and this is to the omission of the scene "On a ship at sea," with which the piece opens. Many of our readers must remember the wonderful piece of machinery by which this was represented four or five years ago at Covent Garden, and the great effect produced thereby. With this one exception, the Sadler's Wells revival will not, in any way, suffer by comparison; either with that restored for the Vandenhoffs, above-mentioned, or with Mr. Macready's a few seasons previous, at Drury-Lane. We have said that the acting was particularly good; perhaps, as a whole, "The Tempest" was never better played. The Prospero of Mr. Phelps was most impressive, and will add another great part to his already admirable repertoire. Equally excellent was Miss Laura Addison's Miranda—graceful, delicate, and confiding; and displaying the nicest perception But we must more especially praise the Caliban of Mr. G Bennett—the monster was never more perfectly represented, and the "make-up" was as admirable as the performance. There is no actor now on our boards who could portray the character with such effect. Mr. Scharfe was a most whimsical Trinculo, and played with a true appreciation of Shakspearian humour; and Mr. A. Youngs was as good as ever. We have not seen so charming an Ariel, as that of Miss St. George, since the character was played by Miss Priscilla Horton at Drury-Lane. Messrs. Fenton and F. Finlay deserve the warmest commendations for their admirable, delicate, and considered in a poetic and artistic spirit. The house was crowded in every part, and the provoked and enthusiastic cheering at the conclusion, betokened the great satisfaction of the audience. "The Tempest" will bring a mine of wealth to the Sadler's Wells treasury, we may safely prophesy.

OLYMPIC.

This hapless little house—the seasons of which begin and end with such remarkable rapidity—was opened again on Monday evening, with Colman's old piece of "The Mountaineers," the farce of "The Spae Sed," and a new burlesque, called "Joan of Arc, the Maid of Albeuns." In the first play, Mr. Denvil appeared as Octavian, and performed the enormous physical power; and, in the burlesque, Mr. George Wild was the representative of Joan of Arc; Miss Fanny Williams, of whom we made favourable mention a few weeks back, playing Pierre-le-Fou. There was an army of female warriors, who went through their evolutions with becoming precision, and some passable hits and allusions aimed at topics of the day or, rather, of yesterday, for too many of them were some what passé. The house was but thinly attended, and a cheerless spirit reigned in the scanty audience, not in keeping with the usual Easter Monday holiday making

In addition to the above novelties, there were, a grand spectacle at ASTLEY'S called, and founded on, "The Battle of Algiers;" three new pieces at the SURREY, a drama called "The Discarded Daughter," a farce entitled "Kissing Goes by Favour," and a concluding play, "The Two Brothers of Pisa," besides the performance of the Blind Asses, at the QUEEN'S, where produced two new dramas, "The Snip of Glass," and "The Wolf Hunters;" and, at the CITY OF LONDON, a translation of the French drama, "L'Inondation." All these were performed on Monday, and shall be noticed at length, according to their deserts, in our next; but the labours of the theatrical critic have been, this week, somewhat of an extra-ordinary character; and the present length of our notices warns us that it is time to conclude.

Miss Woolgar, the popular actress, since her appearance in "The Flowers of the Forest," at the ADELPHI theatre, has received several most flattering congratulations on her success therein; among others, we may mention Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton as having expressed his high sense of her abilities, and the wish that she should assume a higher position in her profession, to which he thinks she is entitled. He stated that he should like to see her play Pauline, in his own piece of "The Lady of Lyons."

THE EASTER HOLIDAYS.—GREENWICH FAIR, 1847.

A song in the praise of Old England's glad holidays!
Good is the maxim "be merry and wise!"
And where but in Greenwich are witnessed such jolly days,
When the blest Easter smiles down from the skies.
The festival brings with it hope, exhilaration,
And nature then tells us to smile at dull care,
To snatch from Time's grasp a few days' recreation,
And join the gay gambols of old Greenwich Fair.

From spire, mast, and tower, float banners and streamers;
The festival's joy-bells are ringing in the breeze.
Well freighted I ween, are the trains and the steamers,
And health breathes a welcome from blossoming trees.
The mighty metropolis empties its masses
Flocking from alley, the street, and the square,
And even the gravest of London's great citizens,
Visit the Park upon old Greenwich Fair.

For 'tis not the shows, nor the pantomime gambols,
The reback and revel so lusty and lond;
A worthier motive oft leads to the rambles
Of groups that to Greenwich right joyfully crowd.
On the sweet grass is laid the mechanic's refection,
The choice of his heart and his children are there;
While round them float many a bright recollection
Which aye must unvulgarize old Greenwich Fair

For there is the tar with his temples so hoary,
Whose young blood was shed at the Nile—Trafalgar;
And there the twin dames where Elizabeth's glory
Was cradled triumphant in peace as in war.
Our old wooden ramparts are hardly yet rotten;
We have true hearts of oak yet, enough and to spare;
And the sinews of yore are not dead nor forgotten,
When throned in his glory at old Greenwich Fair.

Still, though we at Greenwich may many a trophy see—
Many a record of naval renown,
Peace, after all, is the noblest philosophy—
Glorious alike to the country and Crown.
Full often the Park's oaken branchlets have wreathed
The brows of th brave who can do what they dare;
Yet dark is the eye where Mars War shall have breathed
The blight of his curse upon old Greenwich Fair. L.

PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.—The Anniversary Dinner of this excellent Institution will take place at the London Tavern, on Tuesday, the 20th of April next, on which occasion Luke J. Hansard, Esq., will preside. Since the formation of the Society in 1827, one hundred and thirty-four pensioners have been elected on its funds, and at the present time fifty-six (twenty-six males and twenty-nine females) are participating in its bounty, the former receiving £13 12s., and the latter £8 8s., per annum.

EVERYBODY'S COLUMN.

BY ALBERT SMITH.

THE EASTER NOVELTIES.

S USUAL, Easter has brought with it its annual novelties; chiefly consisting of foreign bipeds and quadrupeds. We have wonderful singers, who reach notes higher and lower than any ever before attempted some, indeed, being so high in the scale, that nothing but a scaling-ladder could possibly attain them; marvellous brutes, with real Ethiopian entertainers; horses, used to one stage before the railways took away their occupation, and now coming to another; tumblers of the Eastern deserts: in fact, with Italian singers, French actors, German dancers, American riders, Indian elephants, Egyptian camels, Arabian acrobats, Chinese performers, London will soon become a perfect Babel. In fact, we may put an additional verse to an old song as follows:—

AIR—"Four-and-twenty Fiddlers."

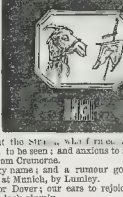
Four-and-twenty novelties all of a row,
Four-and-twenty novelties all of a row.

There was the New Italian Opera just opened in Covent-garden; than which nothing could be properer, though 'twas not to be worth a farden.

There was the Drury-Lane spectacle, with its Eastern priests and priestesses walking about upon the sand along with the beasts and beastesses; with David's vaunted music, that went off rather dully, and "vorn't vanted" at all, as the gallery remarked, benguet-wise good as that of Mr Tully; and the house was so crammed, that we were two hours jammed with our nose 'gainst the panel of the box-door; and this is all the impression we got of the procession, so we can't give a notion of more.



There was the British Museum, and a farce at the Lyceum, and St. Paul's, which was rather forlorn;

For the prices were so high, that the visitors were shy: there was Mr. H. Russell at the Surrey, who, if not as fashionable a band; and the veteran Green, wishing much to be seen; and anxious to appear, as a general overseer, went up in a balloon from Cremorne.

And Rose Chéri came, with her very pretty name; and a rumour got wind, that, at last, Jenny Lind had been met with, at Munich, by Lumley.

And would shortly be over, out Brighton or Dover; our ears to rejoice, with her wonderful voice, and make other soprani look gliumly.

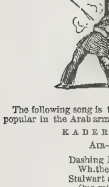
But we've no room left to speak of the numerous posse plastiques; the fairs and the shows, and the drinking booths in rows; and the serpents, and giants, and Albinos.

And the many dark invaders, who are christened "Serenaders:" from St. James's who're the first, to others who're the worst; and the steam-boats, and the taverns, and casinos.

ON THE ESCAPES OF ABD-EL-KADER.

Considerable light has been thrown upon some not too clearly explained failures of the French in Algeria, by the arrival of a troop of Bedouins at the Surrey Theatre. We allude to the repeated escapes of Abd-el-Kader, when supposed to be, almost actually, in the hands of the invaders.

We have learnt from these intelligent individuals fourteen in number that every Bedouin is a tumbler from his birth. In England, hot water frequently makes a tumbler fly; but in Algeria, hot sand has the same effect; for on the glowing Desert do these "Bounding Balls of the Bedouin Battutes,"—as an Astley's play-bill would call them—learn their aërial exercises. Abd el-Kader is spoken of as a gymnast of the first water; and to his activity does he owe his many escapes; his first, in which he shot the French soldier who was after him, being here represented.



The following song is translated from one that has been very popular in the Arab army.

KADER THE SELLER.

AIR—"Zoé's Ritornella."

Dashing French feller,
Wh.ther away?
Stalwart as heller,
One minute stay.
No, I have lingered
Too long on the road,
Matchlocks are handled,
And Kader's abroad;
All the French fellows
Have too much to fear,
If a scout bellows—
"That Kader is here!"

Timid French feller,
Beware, ah, beware!
Abd-el can only
Be caught in the air:
To his light footsteps
His muscles add wings;
'Tis Abd-el-Kader
Himself who now springs!

[Here Abd-el-Kader jumps up twenty feet, throws a somersault, fires off his gun, and disappears over a mountain, as he sings—

So, like Dan Tucker,
Get out of the way,
Else you'll be struck, or
For quarter must pray.

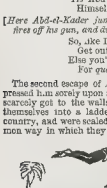
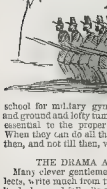
The second escape of Abd-el Kader was from Bugeaud, who pressed him sorely upon approaching a fortified town. They had scarcely got to the walls, when his faithful adherents formed themselves into a ladder, according to the custom of their country, and were scaled by their bold leader. This is the common way in which they take steps to invade a town.



But his last escape was the most remarkable. A party of the French had got him literally into a corner, when by the exercise of that feat known in the vernacular of Astley's as a trampoline, he flew right over their heads, to such a distance that he has not been since seen. In consequence of this, the French have instituted a school for military gymnastics, and vaulting, leaping, and ground and lofty tumbling, will be henceforth deemed essential to the proper education of a French officer. When they can do all that Ile Arabs at the present day can—then, and not till then, will Abd-el-Kader be taken.



THE DRAMA AND ITS SUPPORTERS.

Many clever gentlemen, blessed with high-class intellects, write much iron time to time about the Drama—its decline and fall its enemies and supporters. Having been at the theatres every night this week, we have had many opportunities of studying the latter. They consisted invariably of a knobby stick and a white coat; and we therefore present our readers with a portrait of

THE REAL FRIEND OF THE DRAMA.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"C. R."—The Problems received shall have due attention.
"A Constant Reader."—We are unacquainted with the Game.
"Work."—In the situation proposed, your Pawn has the privilege of taking the advance Pawn en passant.
"J. N."—Thanks. They shall be reported on speedily.
"R. R. E."—Did you see the enunciation of Diagram 13th, in our last Paper? With the addition there proposed, you will find it easy enough.
"An Admirer," Jersey, is referred to the Solution of Problem 165, in the present Number.
"T. F." Liverpool, can hardly be serious in expecting us to forward solutions of other folk's Problems by post. We should soon have abundant occupation.
"C. T. L."—"Robertus." Send your Post-office Orders, 4*s.* 6*d. each, to Hastings, of Carey-street, who will despatch the* "Chess-Player's Chronicle" by post to you on the morning of publication.
"Juvenis."—We have not space to teach you "how to Castle," "how to checkmate," and many such like "hows" Buy Kenny's Shilling Manual, where all these elementary matters are clearly explained.
"Edwin," York.—We acknowledge all solutions sent.
"E. G. D."—The solutions are only omitted occasionally from want of space.
"S. B. J. S." Is the position original? If it is, and has not before been published, we shall find a niche for it by and by.
"A. M. B."—One player can have two or more Queens on the board at once, as, we believed, every reader of the Chess Column in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS must know by this time, since it has been repeated fifty times at least.
"M. H."—It would not be a journey of some miles to refer to the Number you mention: if you will write out the position, a solution shall be furnished.
"Wykeham," Cheltenham.—Your own solution is unpracticable; at the third move, Black may check at K E square, and postpone the mate indefinitely. You are equally unfortunate in your suggested improvement of ours; for the K*t played to* K 5th, as you propose, instead of prolonging, would hasten Black's defeat by two moves at least.
"C. F."—Unquestionably an improvement on your previous attempts. No. 1 shall appear shortly.
"D. L." The games in the Great French Match appeared in Vol. V. of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle." We doubt if you will be able to get them, unless immediate application is made.
Solutions by "J. B. W." "G. H." "Flo." "G. A. H." "Sopraclita." "T." "Wilhelm." "C. F." "N. V. F." "A. M. B." and "Echeca," York, are correct.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 166.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. B to Q 2nd	Q to K R 4th	4. Q to K R 8th (ch)	R to Kt 2nd
2. Q takes Q	P takes B	5. Q to Q 4th (ch)
3. Q to K R 4th (ch)	R to Kt 4th	and mate.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM No. 167.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. Kt to K 7th (ch)	K to R sq	4. R to R 4th (ch)	P takes R
2. B to K B 7th	Q to her 8th (a)	5. R to R 3rd (ch)
3. Kt to Kt 6th (ch)	P takes Kt	mate

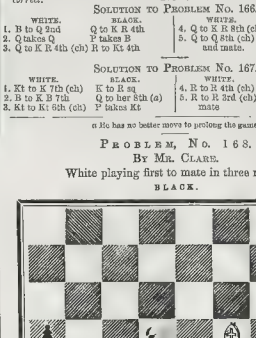
(a) He has no better move to prolong the game.

PROBLEM, No. 168.

By MR. CLARE.

White playing first to mate in three moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CHESS IN GERMANY.

The following Game, played by Correspondence is now pending between Hamburgh and Lübeck.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
1. K P two	K P two	20. K Kt to Q Kt 3rd	K t to Q R 5th (g)
2. K Kt to B 3rd	Q Kt to B 3rd	21. B to K Kt 3rd	Q to K B 2nd (h)
3. Q P two	P takes P	22. Q to Q 3rd (i)	Q R P two
4. B to Q B 4th	B to Q B 4th	23. Q to Q B 2nd	B to K B 4th
5. Q B P one	K Kt to B 3rd	24. Q to Q B sq	B to Q 6th
6. K P one	Q P two	25. Q Kt to K B sq	Kt to Q Kt 3rd
7. B to Q Kt 5th	B to K 3rd	26. Q Kt to K 3rd	Q R P one
8. Q Kt P two (a)	B to Q Kt 3d	27. K Kt to Q 2nd	K R P two
9. Kt takes P (b)	B to Q 2nd	28 Q to Q R 3rd	Q to K Kt 3rd
10. B takes Kt	P takes B (c)	29. Q to Q B 5th	Kt to Q 2nd
11. Castles	Castles	30. Q to Q Kt 4th	B to Q Kt 3rd
12. K B P one	Double P one	31. Q to K R 4th (k)	B to Q R 4th
13. P takes P (d)	Kt takes P	32. Kt to Q sq (l)	B to Q B 7th
14. K to R sq	R to K sq	33. Q to K R 3rd	Kt to Q B 4th
15. B to K B 4th	Q B P one	34. R to K 3rd (m)	B takes Kt
16. Q to Q 2nd (e)	B to Q B 2nd	35. R to Q B sq (n)	B to Q B 7th
17. Q to K 3rd	Q to K 2nd	36. Q to R 4th	K B to Q sq
18. R to K sq	K B P one	37. Q to Q Kt 4th	Kt to Q 6th
19 Kt to Q 2nd (f)	P takes P	38. R takes Kt	Q takes R

(a) We believe all the White player's subsequent embarrassments may be traced to this move.

(b) Taking Pawn with Pawn would now be bad, on account of Q R P 2, immediately or after castling.

(c) The doubled Pawn is a decided advantage, as it enables the second players to wrest the attack from the adversary.

(d) Here White begged to say Black's Knight looked decidedly malicious. The Knight cannot, we believe, be safely taken. Cr. pr.—

13 P takes Kt	P takes Kt	14. Q B P takes P	P takes K P

And White must lose a Pawn, at least if | 15. R to K sq | Q takes P

And has a much better game. From both these modes of play interesting positions arise.

(e) The move loses a Pawn; if to K Kt 3rd seems better.

(f) It is easy to see White cannot take Pawn with Pawn without incurring greater loss.

(g) Kt to K 5th, though not so sound, would probably be preferred in playing over the board.

(h) This and several subsequent moves of the second players have in view the preventing the advance of the isolated Q B 3 Pawn.

(i) White commences a series of fantastic manœuvres with the Queen as in fact, reduced to the necessity of making useless moves

(k) A very bad move, the consequence of which will be seen presently after Black's last move, however, the Queen was forced to this desperate rush across the board, or to retreat at once to her old station at Q B sq.

(l) If Q R to Q B 3, the second players win immediately by advancing Q P.

(m) It takes K P would be just as bad, etc. pr.—

34. R takes K P	R takes R	37. R to K sq Q takes Kt
35. B takes R	B takes Kt	38 Q to Q Kt 3rd Kt to K 3rd
36. R takes B	Q to Q B 7th	39 K B P one (if) Q P one, &c.

If 36 B to Q 4th B to Q B 7th, or Kt to K 3rd, in either case wins for a move.

(n) We do not see that this is any better than taking the Rook with the Rook. White here offered to resign, provided the Hamburg players would commence a second game, which, owing to the departure of one of the players, could not be accepted.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

(HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED.)

No. 140.—By Mr. Mc G——y.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at Q R 2nd	K at Q 4th	Kt at K 6th
B at K B 4th		Kt at Q B 5th
B at Q 3rd		White to play and mate in three moves.

No. 141.—By Mr. S. B., of Hull.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at his 4th	K at Q B 6th	Kt at Q Kt 2nd
R at K 7th	Ps at K B 5th and	P at K B 3rd
B at Q R 3rd	Q Kt 6th	White to move and mate in three moves.

No. 142. By C. S., of the Brighton Chess Club.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK.
K at K B 5th	K at Q 4th	R at K B 6th
Q at her B 3rd	P at Q 2nd
White, playing first, mates in three moves.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A letter from Pisa states that the Italian aeronaut, Orlandi, who has made already four hundred and twenty aerial voyages with continued success, has just completed an entirely new machine, which is proved, with machinery to enable him to have complete control of the balloon in the air, and to guide its direction with certainty.

The Frankfort papers of the 1st instant assert that the Arch-Duchess Maria is about to bestow her hand on the Comte de Trapani, his Sicilian Majesty's brother.

His Excellency Francesco Carboni, the Senior Diplomatist at the Court of Sweden, died at Stockholm at the close of last month, in his 87th year. The deceased was Chargé d'Affaires of the Duke of Lucca, and fulfilled that office thirty years at Stockholm.

At the Sussex Assizes last week there were no less than four actions springing out of family feuds, viz., one by a father against his son, one by a son against his father, one by a son against his mother, and one by one brother against another.

Letters from Naples of the 20th ult. mention the presentation of Mr. Cobden to the King, by whom, and the Neapolitan merchants, he is stated to have been received with much kindness. It was expected that a Royal decree would shortly be promulgated, permitting the free importation of grain into Sicily.

We learn from Munster (Westphalia) that on the 29th ult. the bishop of that diocese, while walking in the corridors of his cathedral, between six and seven in the evening, was struck with apoplexy, and died in a very few minutes. His last words were, "My hour is come. O God! have mercy on my soul!" He was raised to the see only on the 10th of December last.

A fossil cherry-tree was discovered lately in a bed of sandstone, in the Isle of Wight, 700 feet below the level of the earth.

The northern portion of the Newcastle and Berwick Railway, from Treadmouth to Chathill, about 26 miles in length, was opened on Monday, and the trains have been running regularly upon it since, the passengers being conveyed by coach from Morpeth to Chathill, the only portion now wanting to complete the line from London to Edinburgh.

Upwards of 6000 German emigrants have, within the last fortnight, passed through Cologne, on their way to Bremen, Havre, and Antwerp, where they will take their departure for America. The greater part of them seemed to be rather well off. It is calculated that 120,000 Germans will emigrate this year.

The Augsburg Gazette states that a chemist of Vienna has produced bread from oil cake—the refuse of the colza seed, after extracting the oil—which is both agreeable and nutritive, and costs only one halfpenny per pound. The process is said to be very simple. Samples of this bread have been supplied to some members of the Imperial family, and found to be excellent.

The German papers contain accounts dated Halberstadt, March 26, which state that on the previous night, the houses were burnt to the ground in Wedrigrode. Seven children and a woman servant have perished; some horses and cattle also have been burnt. Part of the town, called the "Felde," is entirely destroyed, as well as the postal establishment. The fire was caused by the bursting of a new oven at a baker's.

M. Scipio Volpicella has discovered at Naples the column which Robert of Anjou erected to commemorate his interview with Andre, of Hungary, in 1333. According to Vasari, La sculpture of the monument is of most miraculous workmanship for the age. It is probable that the bas-reliefs are from the designs of Petrarch, who sojourned at Naples from 1341 to 1343, and that they were executed by Masuccio.

The extension railway line from North Shields to Tynemouth was opened last week.

The Hamburgh papers announce a decline in the price of grain in that city and also in Holland. A still further diminution in price was expected.

A baker at Berne, in Switzerland, has succeeded in making very palatable bread from Iceland moss. It results from a scientific examination of this bread that, out of 102 parts, it contains 44½ of nutritive matter Bread made chiefly of potatoes is said to contain only 18 in the 100 parts of nutritive matter.

A Paris letter asserts that the King of the French has conceived a scheme for the formation of a railway from Corbeil to Fontainebleau, and he intends to make it at his own cost. This little line will present no engineering difficulty, having no tunnels nor viaducts, and being constructed in a straight line. It could be completed by the spring of 1848. With this new line the passengers would travel from Paris to Fontainebleau within two short hours.

On the 27th ult. a concert was given at Rome for the benefit of the distressed Irish. Adelaide Kemble (Sartoris), in unison with a number of amateurs, German, Russian, and Italian, were engaged in the work of charity; and the Spanish Envoy at Rome flung open the long deserted halls of the once gorgeous palace of his national embassy for their reception. Lord Ward paid for the lights, and Earl Compton sang, as did Countess Calergi, De Rongemont, Prince Wolkonsky, Count Castelbarco, and Miss Bruce, of Mayo.

Nettles were on sale in Preston, at 3d. a pound, during the last week.

The sum of £1000 was realized last week by the three days sale at the Cheltenham Bazaar, for the relief of the Irish poor.

The succession of Catherine Foster, for poisoning her husband, is fixed for Saturday, April 17th. She has confessed her guilt.

The Pope has commissioned a number of artists, from amongst the first in Italy, to execute, partly from original portraits, partly from medals and coins, the likenesses of all the Sovereign Pontiffs, his predecessors (258 in number), that these may be copied in mosaic, to adorn the Basilica of St. Paul, where a similar series perished in the fire. The pictures will afterwards be placed in the Vatican Museum.

The Emperor of Austria has conferred on the celebrated Jenny Lind the title of Singer of the Imperial Chapel.

On the 22nd of March a new theatre was opened at Gibraltar. The construction, the arrangement, and the decorations are said to do great credit to the liberality of the proprietors, and to the skill and taste of the architect, Mr. Brocedo.

A letter from Florence, of the 29th ult., says:—"At no former period has our town contained so many great personages as during the last few days. The Hereditary Grand Duke of Bavaria and the Duchess de Liegnitz arrived on the 22nd, and Prince Oscar of Sweden on the 23rd. The Princess Charles of Prussia is to leave on the 27th. The Turkish Ambassador, Check-Effendi, who obtained such a distinguished reception from the Pope, lately determined to visit Stuggalia, his Holiness's native town, on his way to Vienna. He was received with great distinction by the Pope's family, who gave him a grand dinner.

A mechanic of Carlsruhe has just invented a new locomotive, by which steep gradients of 2 feet in one mile may be surmounted. The adoption of such an engine would facilitate the construction of the proposed line from Carlsruhe to Switzerland.

The Poor-law Commissioners have stated that a vestry has no right to apply the parish rates to opposing a railway project.

An electric telegraph is about to be established along the railroad from Rouen to Havre, by which means Havre will be in direct communication with Paris.

Two little children last week in Plymouth-street, Merthyr, quarrelling for an orange, one, a little girl, became so excited, that she fell into a fit and shortly expired.

At the late Exeter Sessions, one Lee was tried for stealing a razor. After the Recorder had summed up, the prisoner begged to supply an inadvertent omission on the part of the Judge. "Gentlemen of the Jury," said Lee, "if you have any doubts, you are to give me the benefit of them." He was acquitted

A letter from Posen, of the 29th ult., states that the wheat crops throughout the Grand Duchy are remarkably healthy, and present every hope of a good and sufficient harvest.

The number of passengers to and from Boulogne and England, last week, was 1371; of these, 714 were from England—638 and Folkestone, and 76 direct from London; 657 left Boulogne for England, 656 going to Folkestone, and 101 direct to London. The total (1371) exceeds that of the corresponding week last year by 178. The passengers to and from Calais were 299 in number, being 33 more than during the same week last year.

Major Beniowski, the Polish refugee, was tried on Thursday, at the Middlesex Sessions, for an assault upon Mr. Urquhart, at the Freemasons' Tavern, on the occasion of the meeting held there on the subject of the annexation of Cracow. He was found guilty. Sentence deferred to next session.

It is believed in political circles that every effort will be made by the Government to bring the business of the session of Parliament to a speedy termination, with a view to a general election. We hear that it is considered not unlikely that the prorogation will take place some time in June, and the dissolution will immediately follow.

A letter from Leipsic, of the 27th of March, says:—In the course of last year there were conveyed on the German railways 1,544,229 passengers, and 31,584,934 cwt. of goods, which produced a total sum of 34,646,332 francs, which is 6,431,526 francs more than last year, that is about 40 per cent.

The King of Holland is so much better, that no more bulletins will be issued. The French Government has followed the example of England, and for sudden ill French subjects to accept letters of marque, which Mexico has caused to be distributed in great numbers in English, Spanish, and French ports in order to induce persons to arm privateers against American vessels.

The society formed some time back in Posen, for purchasing land, and letting it out at a moderate rate to poor Jews, in order to induce them to follow fixed labour, instead of getting their living by selling pedlar's wares, or other unrecognised pursuits, is continuing its operations with success.

The Dissenters of Bristol have purchased the Etna, an old man-of-war, for the purpose of a Floating Chapel, and it was formally opened by a number of ministers. Several sailors were present, and just before the proceedings were concluded, after an allusion had been made to a collection, a thorough Jack Tar sprung up, and, pulling out his purse, pushed his way towards the Chairman, handed it to him, exclaiming, "Here's a shot for your locker."

FOREIGN CORN PORTS.

ROTTERDAM.

The continued scarcity of grain in Europe renders her entrepôts of additional interest; and we resume our Illustrative series with a Port of Holland and one of Russia.

ROTTERDAM.

Rotterdam is the second commercial city of Holland: it lies on the north bank of the Maas, about twenty-four miles distant from the sea. It is more advantageously situated than Amsterdam; being nearer the sea; and the canals which intersect it are so deep as to admit of the largest vessels coming up to the quays and warehouses of the merchants. The city is built in the form of a triangle, the base of which extends along the bank of the Maas.

The commerce of Rotterdam, during the last twenty years, has increased more rapidly than that of any town in Holland. The exports and imports are similar to those of Amsterdam. The white Zealand wheat shipped here is of a peculiarly fine quality; and, it is the best market for madder and geneva.

Its ready access to the sea gives Rotterdam a great advantage as a port; and, since the separation from Belgium, it has been rapidly increasing in wealth and population, at the expense of its rival, Antwerp.

"The commerce of Rotterdam now chiefly depends on the connection with Batavia, and that trade at present employs about eighty of the finest merchant-ships in the world, of the burden of from 500 to 1000 tons. They are admirably equipped, and they make the voyage to and from India in nine months, upon the average. An increasing trade is carried on in sugar, coffee, and spices. The West India trade, formerly carried on with Surinam, is almost extinct. The trade in provisions is very great: much corn is brought down the Rhine from the interior of Germany; and, from the upper parts, contiguous to that river, a vast supply of timber for ship-building is conveyed."

The town is not fortified, but is surrounded by a moat; and along the Maas are many fine quays, with stately houses, and long rows of trees. Besides the great Church of St. Lawrence, there are many churches and chapels. The Stadhus, or Town Hall, is a large new building, with a composite portico. The Statue of Erasmus, and the house in which he was born, in the Breede Kerk Straat, are among the curiosities of the city.

ARCHANGEL.

The estimated supplies of corn from Russia have recently excited considerable speculation: hence, the history of its Ports is worthy of special notice

Archangel is the principal commercial city of the north of Russia, and lies on the right bank of the Dwina, about thirty-five English miles, where it falls into the White Sea. The harbour is at the island of Sollanbole, about a mile from the town. The bar at the mouth of the river has from 13 to 14½ feet of water: so that ships drawing more than this depth must be partially loaded outside the bar from lighters. The Dwina being a navigable river, traversing a great extent of country, and connected by canals with the Wolga on the one hand, and the Neva on the other, Archangel is a considerable depôt. The principal articles of export are grain, tallow, flax, hemp, timber, iron, potash, tar, and deals, superior to those from the Baltic. The quality of the wheat exported from Archangel is about equal to that from St. Petersburg.

Mr. Macculloch, in his "Commercial Dictionary" (edit. 1844), states "the trade of Archangel to have latterly been declining. It is much influenced by the demand from the more southerly parts of Europe, and especially from England, for corn. When a brisk demand is anticipated, oats are brought in large quantities from the interior, sometimes even from a distance of 1500 miles, in covered barques, capable of holding several hundred quarters."

Archangel is ill-built. In extent, it stands much on a par with Berwick-upon-Tweed. It has eleven churches, most of them built of wood. There is much ship and boat building going on here.

With respect to the Corn supply from Russia, it is remarked in the St. Petersburgh Gazette—

"Suffering under the scarcity of grain with which Europe is now visited, in consequence of a two years' failure of her harvests, the most urgently pressed countries of the West look imploringly to Russia, which the world is wont to regard as a rich store-house of corn. To how great an extent Russia has already answered these hopes, the commercial records of the various ports of the empire sufficiently attest. It may hence be imagined what an impression must have been produced, under these circumstances, by the report that the Russian Government had resolved to prohibit the exportation of grain. This report has, happily, turned out to be destitute of foundation. The manifesto of the Minister of Finance, in which it is declared that the Russian Government will not only not prohibit the exportation of corn, but, on the contrary, promote it in every possible way, will, we have no doubt, insure tranquillity on many sides, as it not only disavows the rumour in question, but, at the same time, exposes to view the possibility of considerable exports of corn from the ports of the empire during the ensuing shipping season."

The Easter Fairs.—On Monday the usual saturnalia held at this season commenced at Greenwich, Stepney, Wandsworth, Chalk Farm, the Chalk-road, Islington, and Brook-green, Hammersmith. Richardson's (now Nelson Lee's), Alzar's Crown and Anchor, and a host of minor candidates for histrionic and Terpsichorean fame, occupied their usual positions at Greenwich, which was thronged during the day with countless thousands from the metropolis. Stepney, the next in magnitude, was also equally well attended, and the others received a proportionate share of public favour: the whole of them being under the control of the police, who caused the amusements to terminate precisely at eleven.

Crimes in Gallicia. The Nazional has the following from the frontier of Gallicia, under date the 20th of March:—"This neighbourhood has become the scene of atrocious and repeated crimes. At Stanislaw, a village in the circle of Wadowice, a father and mother murdered their four children; the mother hung her daughter, aged sixteen. The want of food, no doubt, was the cause of this crime, so contrary to nature. At Budzow, near Izdenik, in the same circle, a peasant cooked his child that had just died, and ate of it. He himself died shortly afterwards At Andrychon a peasant, having deliberately killed four persons, in order to obtain possession of thirty florins, quietly set about his usual occupation of felling timber. Independently of this, incendiary fires are of frequent occurrence, and we expect all the farms of the nobles will be destroyed, one after the other. The authors of these crimes scarcely conceal themselves, and they are not backward in admitting their crimes. At Cracow and in Gallicia matters are in the same state, want and misery increase, especially in the vicinity of the Carpathian mountains.

The Journal d'Elbeuf mentions a fire which took place, on the night of the 30th to the 31st of last month, at an Inn at Orival. The author was certainly not an incendiary by profession A rat, spying that a lantern door against a stable wall was open, snatched the candle, lighted as it was, between its teeth, and carried it off into the hay loft, which was soon in a blaze.

ARCHANGEL.

MDLLE. ALBONI, AS "ARSACE." MADAME GRISI, AS "SEMIRAMIDE." SIGNOR TAMBURINI, AS "ASSUR."

IN THE OPERA OF "SEMIRAMIDE," AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—(SEE PAGE 234.)

NOOKS AND CORNERS OF OLD ENGLAND.

CUMNOR, BERKS.

THIS parish, about three miles nearly west of Oxford, was originally of great extent, and included both the Hinkseys and Wootton. The village is built on the brow of a hill, commanding an extensive prospect over part of the counties of Oxford and Gloucester. The manor belonged, from a very early period, to the Abbots and Convent of Abingdon, who had a house here which they used as a Lazaretto. At the dissolution of the Abbey, Cumnor Place was granted by the King to Thomas Pentecost, the last Abbot, for his life. This was the house which came into the possession of Anthony Foster, was enlarged by him, and made his residence after the Reformation. The death of the unfortunate Amy Robsart, Countess of Leicester, while under confinement here, has doomed the spot to lasting celebrity. The Hall House, as it was subsequently called, occupied a gentle eminence on the south side of the road towards the eastern end of the village, and abutted on the churchyard. The building, of various dates, was disposed in a quadrangular form, inclosing a court-yard, to which were attached a pleasure-garden and small park of about 26 acres. The Hall, 44 feet long by 21 wide, was in the centre of the west side of the quadrangle. The chimney-piece was ornamented with a shield, bearing I. H. S. between two mitres, and the roof was framed timber. At the northern extremity of this west side was a large room projecting beyond the line of the other buildings. Once this was a spacious chamber, the entrance to which was by a pointed arched doorway in the corner of the quadrangle, opening upon a flight of stone steps carried round a newel, which led to the apartment having but one window, the largest in the whole mansion, and which has been carefully re-erected at the east end of the chancel of Wytham Church, by the Earl of Abingdon. According to tradition, as well as Ashmole's "Antiquities of Berkshire," this was the identical room—"the Dudley Chamber"—occupied by the Countess of Leicester, who was secretly despatched here, by order of her husband, who was then aspiring to the hand of Queen Elizabeth.

CUMNOR.

The old clerk remembers the house well, having lived there as servant when a boy; he was upwards of eighty at the date of the sketch.

Mickle's touching ballad of "Cumnor Hall," and Sir Walter Scott's picturesque romance of "Kenilworth," will long continue to endear this locality to tourists.

Cumnor Church, called the handsomest Church in the neighbourhood, consists of a nave and north aisle; a chapel, at the east end of the south side, and a chancel with a tower, containing six bells. Against the north wall of the chancel, is the tomb of Anthony Foster; but none of the inscriptions on it mention his death, nor is there any parochial record to prove he died at Cumnor. In the churchyard is the base of an old stone cross. The annexed sketch of the Church was taken from the site of the old Manor House.

E. T. E.

INCIDENT AT THE LATE DRAWING-ROOM.—At the last Drawing-Room a remarkable circumstance occurred. The Turkish Minister brought his wife to Court, not shrouded and veiled up to the eyes, to screen her from the profane gaze of "dogs of Christians," and hurried secretly into the presence of a female sovereign, but hanging on the arm of her Ottoman Lord, and threading her way through the diplomatic crowd in a Court dress, not distinguishable from any other lady, though the Minister, of course, appeared in his national costume.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

No new piece was produced here on Monday, yet no theatre in the metropolis presented greater attractions. Mr. Buckstone's last drama of "The Flowers of the Forest" was performed for the fourteenth time, and was received with increased enthusiasm. It is in characters like that of the Zingara that Madame Celeste is completely at home: her "make up" is most picturesque and artistic, and the like praise may be awarded to Mr. O. Smith. The beautiful acting of Miss Woolgar and Mrs Fitzwilliam, in the first scene of the third act, was, as usual, loudly applauded.

We have engraved this scene, as affording one of the finest situations in the piece. In the foreground is a half-circular Gipsy's Tent, pitched under a row of chesnut-trees, the foliage reaching almost to the ground: a mattress, bundles, &c., and all the economy of the gipsy's tent, being shown. Bess (Mrs. Fitzwilliam) is discovered seated at the entrance of the tent, mending a basket; and Lemuel (Miss Woolgar) asleep within the tent. Bess wakes the gipsy boy, and, after his narration of a frightful dream, and its superstitious interpretation by Bess—all strikingly characteristic, especially her trace of "the mark of murder" in Lemuel's hand—he falls on his face, conscience-stricken; Bess is dismayed; and at that moment the face of Cynthia (Madame Celeste) is seen through the foliage, to the right of the tent, her eyes fixed on Lemuel and Bess. Cynthia's face is then withdrawn, a withered chesnut branch falls upon the stage, and frightens the guilty youth. At length Bess prevails upon him to disclose the cause of his terror; and we have this powerfully acted rencontre:—

Lem. Dear Bess, my Bright Bess, I do think if I were to tell you I should be happier and bolder. I will—I can't live any longer with this weight at my heart. You'll forgive me, and excuse me, if no one else will! (CYNTHIA again appears amongst the foliage.) Bess, listen, bend down your ear—I killed that man! Don't shrink from me yet, don't [CYNTHIA's eyes are now fixed with wild intensity upon LEMUEL.

(Lemuel then relates the murder; and this action follows:)

[Music.—CYNTHIA dashes through the foliage, the noise alarms LEMUEL, who darts into the tent, CYNTHIA follows him, drags him out, he falls on his knees, while she holds him with a firm grasp. BESS clings to LEMUEL.

Cyn. 'Twas you! You were the assassin! My father, too, the witness! Come away—you shall, and prevent the shedding of innocent blood. Struggle not—try not to escape—you are as safe in my grasp as a bird in the talons of a hawk!

Bess. Where would you take him? Let him be! Take off your hold! What, if he did do what he says, we care for none beyond our own people; take him not away! He's of our own blood! Lemuel, dash her to the ground!

Cyn. You cannot move! Your guilt makes you as weak as a child. Come with me, life and death are in my speed, think not to break from me, you know not the misery of madness and despair!

Lem. Bess, save me!

Bess. I will! Break from her and run! Call up the tribe!

Cyn. No, no: you may writhe, you may plunge, but I have you safe! Come away! Come! Come! Come!

[Music.—She drags him off, L., LEMUEL struggles violently, while BESS clings to him.

Bess (as they go off). You shan't hurt him! Lemuel, put out all your strength. Don't be afraid!

The Drama has been published, and we are happy to find by the author's statement that it is original: its story being adapted neither from tale, novel, nor any foreign source; while the manners and habits of the Gipsies, which he has gathered from reading, and the accounts from persons who have been much amongst them, he believes to be faithfully rendered. The casting forth a delinquent gipsy from his tribe is considered the heaviest punishment and disgrace that can be inflicted; while the ceremonial is usually most impressive, and conducted with great earnestness and form, and frequently in the presence of many hundreds of the strange race. This curse is given with great effect towards the close of the piece.

Altogether, this is, perhaps, the best drama Mr. Buckstone has ever produced, and we predict that it will have a long career of success. We do not greatly admire the characters of Messrs. Wright and Paul Bedford; they are too much in the caricatura style for the other dramatis personæ, though comic reliefs may be requisite.

The revived semi burlesque of the "Phantom Dancers" followed the melo-drama, and went off as well as ever; indeed, we rarely remember to have seen a piece so completely revived; usually, the oftener a performance is repeated, the less it is perfect.

SCENE FROM MR. BUCKSTONE'S NEW DRAMA OF "THE FLOWERS OF THE FOREST," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE.

The published drama of the "Flowers of the Forest," is dedicated by Mr. Buckstone to his "friend and old companion," Mr. T. Sidney Cooper, R.A., who was the youthful artist of "a certain Theatre Rural on the Sussex coast," where Mr. Buckstone was "the equally youthful actor of all-work." In the scenes of the "Gipsy Encampment," in the drama, the old white horse and black donkey are the work of Mr. Cooper's hand and brush; and very life like they are. The Dalliance throughout is a warm piece of bonhommie.

THE STATE OF THE REVENUE.

The official account of the Revenue for the quarter ending April 5, presents several gratifying results. There is an increase for the year upon every item of ordinary revenue except two, the Stamps and the Crown Lands; and in both the [illegible] quarter even item save two, the Taxes and the Crown Lands; and on these, also, the decrease is inconsiderable.

The increase in the Customs, is, £1,132,002 for the year, and £465,755 for the quarter; in the Excise, £561,372 for the year, and £26,467 for the quarter; in the Post-office, £52,000 for the year, and £4000 for the quarter; in the Miscellaneous, £129,273 for the year, and £1071 for the quarter. The increase on the income of the year is £1,838,168; of the quarter, £463,593.

The general result prompts confidence in the country's resources for struggling against the calamity by which it has been visited.

The comparative statement of the Exchequer charge for the last quarter is calculated to allay undue apprehensions of a monetary crisis, arising out of the arrangements for supplying the destitute districts in Scotland and Ireland. The total income for the quarter is £10,610,417; the total instalment of the loan of eight millions is £960,000; giving a total of £11,621,417. The total charge, including £3,360,000 of advances to Ireland during the quarter, under the Act 9 and 10 Vic., c. 107, is £14,022,636, leaving a surplus of £2,528,781. This surplus, [illegible] 5th January, 1847, gives an available total of £1,904,236. The amount issued, during the quarter just ended, out of the sum granted by Parliament out of the Consolidated Fund for Supply Services, is £5,461,196. So, the probable amount of Exchequer Bills required to meet the charge on the Consolidated Fund during the quarter does not exceed £3,466,960.

LOSS OF THE STEAMER "TWEED," AND SEVENTY-TWO LIVES.

We regret to state that accounts have arrived of the total wreck of the steamer Tweed, with the melancholy loss of seventy two lives; out of the entire crew and passengers, seventy-nine persons only having been saved.

It appears that the Tweed left Havannah on the morning of the 9th of Feb., for Vera Cruz and Tampico, having on board 1115 bottles of quicksilver, valued at £18,000; sixty passengers; and a supply of coals for H.M. steamer Hermes, stationed in the Gulf of Mexico. On the 10th and 11th it blew heavily from the north, and the weather being thick no observation could be taken. At thirty minutes past three, A.M. on the 12th, when the commander considered he was well to the southward of the ship's actual position, the look-out on the forecastle called "breakers a-head." Captain Parsons, who was then on deck, ordered the engines to be reversed, and the helm to put hard-a-starboard. The command was instantly obeyed; but the fore sail, fore-cryaul, and the fore-top-sail being set, and a heavy sea running, the vessel forged a head and struck with such force that the machinery was broken and the engines became unservicable. The ship continued to strike and roll heavily for half an hour, during which period several of the crew and passengers were swept from her decks. The survivors crowded to the port side of the vessel, when two of the cutters were lowered, but so overloaded that they immediately swamped, and but few of those on board contrived to reach the wreck. In a few minutes the Tweed separated in two parts, and the survivors were compelled to betake themselves to spars and pieces of wreck, clinging to which they were floated into smooth water, inside a reef, where they managed to secure themselves. When daylight appeared, it was found that the Tweed had been drifted, by a strong current, thirty miles out of her course, to the north, and was lost on the Alacrane Reef, which is [illegible] twelve miles long by seven miles broad.

The Admiralty agent, chief officer, and a boat's crew, patched up the mail boat, and sailed for the Campeachy coast, from whence a Spanish brig immediately went to the scene of the wreck, and received the commander and crew who were still on the reef. They were in a wretched condition; no clothes or anything saved. While on the reef the sufferings of the survivors were intense. They were for some time deprived of water, but were amply supplied with wine and brandy, saved as the casks floated by from the wreck; they also saved a barrel of oatmeal and three casks of flour, which they lived upon; and six men [illegible] the wreck. The crew and passengers were swept from her at different times by the violence of the wreck and constructed a stage, on which they remained, some sleeping, whilst others went out in search of food, and at suitable times joining in prayer for Almighty God for his continued mercies.

On the third day the poor creatures found a box of lucifer matches floating, and, after drying them, were able to light fires; and the engineers having [illegible] to cook and make biscuits. This added much to their comfort, though uncertain whether the final boat sent for rescue would ever reach ship or land. Most providentially, however, it fell in with the wreck, and took off the survivors on the reef from Sisal Roads, where, after landing the boat's crew, the brig proceeded to the reef, and, amidst much difficulty, succeeded in taking off several of the survivors, with whom she sailed for the Island of Carmen, where they remained under the [illegible] reef in two boats, brought by the Emulo, and got in safety to Perez. The brig then proceeded to Sisal, and, after remaining there seven days, she was chartered for Havannah, where the Lion was found on the wreaking. In a few minutes they have arrived, except the Admiralty agent, who was left in hospital at Havannah.

It is worthy of remark, that, had the Tweed struck at high water, not a soul would have been saved, the spot being one entirely covered. Providential as the accident may be attributed, first, to the captain not being able to get sights for some days accurately to define his position, a powerful current setting the ship boldly to the north, and a thick mist and haze hiding the reef, each in praise of the conduct of Captain Parsons. Throughout the whole of the trying scene, he did everything it was possible to do to save those who have so unfortunately perished,—never allowing a single one of the many applications to exceed that of his companions in wretchedness—never flagging for one moment in his endeavour to render his valuable services available.

It appears there were only three female passengers, all of whom were drowned. The last five men on the wreck lashed themselves together on a spar, and ultimately three of them reached the reef in safety.

LIST OF PASSENGERS AND CREW LOST IN THE ROYAL MAIL STEAMER "TWEED," ON THE 12TH INST.

PASSENGERS.—Mr Buchanan, Mr Xantidon, Gen. Chanler, Mrs Escudino, child, and servant, Messrs Bermeneta, Robinson, Hawkins, Hawkesley, Wilson, Gutierrez, Saavedra, Bermenie Mantpion, Serbran Guzarga, Yurgings, Fox, Portillo, Santo, Carvill, Gonzales, Ladies, Cofer, Mathews, Fannes, Tupois, Mrs. Jones, and son.

CREW.—Mr W. Crake, 4th officer; Mr P. A. Spence, midshipman; Mr. R. Varnell, ditto; Mr. Rogers, carpenter; W. Shotter, carpenter's mate; F. Mahon, quartermaster; Messrs A.B., J. Slade, do; D. Martin, do; J. Furze, do; J. Cove, do; F. Moore, do; H. Horbrow, [illegible] Hall, do; [illegible] Andrews, ditto; W. Wain, ditto; Lock-keeper; [illegible] Stone, fireman; W. Bliss, do; W. Hudson, do; J. Hadden, do; T. Keurp, do; J. Gregson, do; C. Trim, do; J. Newman, do; J. Alcock, do; J. Moody, do; W. Philpott, do; R. Bizen, waiter, G. Adams, do; T. Wilson, do; Mrs. Hawkesley, do; Miss S.E.H., J. Fayne, saloon cook; T. Benson, baker; W. Lee, butcher; W. Dyne, A.S. servant.

LIST OF PASSENGERS AND CREW SAVED IN THE ROYAL MAIL STEAMER "TWEED," ON THE 12TH INST.

CREW PASSENGERS.—W. Ellis, Esq. R. N. R. Pope, English; R. G. Purser, Mexican; D. O. Sedward, J. Jones, English; F. Probst, Gorman, F. H. Dimond, American; F. Castro, A. Fleyton, Spanish; T. F. Knox, English; T. H. Espino, Mexican, J. Hernandez, Juan Lobe, J. Miranda, Jose Solet, A. Palacio, Mr. Basel, Spanish.

CREW.—Captain Parsons; A. Gutierrez, J. T. Pira, J. Vargas, J. Sinaco, A. J. Rendulos, F. D. Purke, J. M. Ortez, T. Serafe, D. Schavert, D. Bermea, D. Bermea, Jun., Mr. Smith, Mr. Burt, Fireman; G. Lowes, fireman; T. Wallace, fireman; T. Cox, ditto; S. Harpis, trimmer; J. Hanney, ditto; G. Noyes, O. Hill, D. Wallace; C. Allum; J. Garnett, G. Parker, T. Morton, C. Stuart, storekeeper; G. Cope, waiter; G. Cox, waiter; J. Stewart; H. Nicholson, waiter; Lee, Marlow, waiter; J. Dawson, ditto; T. Ivatt, cook. Mr Quakman and W. Cooper, officer, and engine's boy, were not on board when the wreck took place, having previously landed.

Lieut. John Davies, R.N. Total, 72 passengers saved; 82 crew saved.

The Azacans are a group of small islands, the highest summits of a pretty extensive reef, about 70 miles from the coast of Yucatan, nearly due north of Merida. The spot is considered by navigators the most dangerous part of the Gulf of Mexico, the currents being strong and powerful in that region so frequently to carry vessels upwards of 40 miles out of their course in one day.

BIRTHS.

In Gloucester place, Lady Colthurst, of a son, still-born.——At Spondon-hall, Derbyshire, the Lady of Frederic Arkwright, Esq., of a daughter.——On the 1st inst, the Lady Ashley, of a daughter.——At Hopton Passenger, Bantz, the lady of the Rev. Wm. Webster, Curate, of a daughter.——At Harrow-on-the-Hill, Mrs Webster, of a daughter.——At Northchurch Rectory, Herts, the lady of Sir J. H. C. Seymour, Bart., of a son.

MARRIAGES.

At St. Pancras Church, John Peter Theobald, Esq., to Miss Matthews.——At Plumstead Church, Captain Rill to Rose Leigh, only daughter of Basil Heron Goldie, Esq.——At St. Mark's, Regent's-park, Alexander Shaw, Esq., to Henrietta Georgiana, daughter of James Henry Dundas Campbell.——At Balgowney, county Wexford, Robert Shapland Carew, Esq., to [illegible] the late Thomas Gordon.——At Bishop Hatfield, Herts, Captain Adolphus Arkwright, R.N., to Caroline Laura, eldest daughter of the late Major-General Sir Charles Ashworth, K.C.B.——At Brighton, by the Rev Alexander P. Birch, M.A., Henry Mary Hamilton, second daughter of the Rev. the Precentor of Chichester and the Hon. Mrs. Holland.——At Mary-le-bone Church, Thomas Gordon, Esq., to Miss Frances Elizabeth Nicol, T. Howard.——At St. George's, Hanover-square, by the Rev. James Reynolds Young, to Mary Ann, daughter of the late John Urquhart, Esq.

DEATHS.

At 16, Pall-mall East, Mrs. Edward Morton, in her 28th year.——At Blackheath, John Burford, Esq.——In Westbourne-terrace, Louisa Anne, the wife of Major-General Brotherton.——At Warwick-place Highworth Wilts, G. Hon Richard Warneford, relict of Lieut.-Col. Warneford.——At Bonn, Maj.-Henry Jones Grove, K. H. At Shackerwell-house, Captain James Burdett Neal.——At Hazlewood, F. Wilkins, Esq., late of Kinross Warwickshire, in the 85th year of his age.——On the 5th inst., in the 59th year of his age, Baldwin Leuga Dupre, Esq.——On the 5th inst., at Brighton, aged 67, Abraham Goodman, Esq., a son, on the 16th ult., Rosetta, his wife, aged 63.——At Frimley Surrey, Captain Alexander ——Charles Marlesson, Esq., of Pulse-hill. ——At Rottingdean, Thomas Beard Esq., aged 80.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday).—We have to report this arrival of a very moderate supply of English wheat during the present week, and the stands to-day were scantily filled with samples of both red and white. Owing to the thin attendance of buyers the demand for all the sorts was in a sluggish state at barely previous quotations. Essex and Kent fine descriptions being in foreign wheats, yet the holders refused to accept lower prices. Most of the late large arrivals of foreign barley having been cleared off the trade was steady at our last rates. There was rather more doing in malt, and most of the factors refused to sell, except at a trifle more money. Oats, beans, peas, Indian corn, and flour were very dull but not cheaper.

ARRIVALS.—English: Wheat, 3080; barley, 2250; malt, 1050; oats, 260; beans, 1040; peas, 1040. Foreign: Wheat, 2020; barley, 4690; malt, —; oats, 5430. Flour, 2910 sacks. —— barrels

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 72s to 78s; ditto white, 75s to 81s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 70s to 76s, ditto white 75s to 78s; fine, 80s to 86s; grinding barley, 40s to 44s; distilling, 47s to 50s; malting ditto, 50s to 54s; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 72s to 74s; brown ditto, 67s to 69s; Kingston and Ware, 75s to 76s; Chevalier, 77s to 78s; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 28s to 33s; potato ditto, 33s to 35s; Youghal and Cork, black, 29s to 32s; ditto brands, 34s to 36s; ditto, new, 24s to 26s; Galway, 24s to 26s; grey peas, 38s to 40s; maple, 40s to 42s; white, 42s to 44s; tick beans, 40s to 42s; harrow ditto, 42s to 44s; pigeon ditto, 44s to 46s; Suffolk, 44s to 46s; and peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, Essex, 37s to 39s per 196 lbs; Suffolk, —s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—There is a full average amount of business doing in clover and tarely seeds, as full prices. Otherwise the trade is in a very sluggish state.

Linseed, English, sowing, 48s to 50s; Baltic, crushing, 44s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 42s to 43s. Rapeseed, 35s to 37s per last. Coriander, 10s to 13s per cwt. Brown Mustard seed, 9s to 10s; white ditto, 8s to 10s. Tares, 5s 6d to 6s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, (new) £20 10s per last of ten quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £13 0s to £13 10s; ditto, foreign, £11 0s to £12 0s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £7 5s to £7 15s per ton. Canary, 7s to 77s per quarter. English, coarse, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s; whole, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s. Foreign, rod, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the Metropolis are from 6½d to 10d, of household ditto, 8d to 9d, per 4lbs loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 72s 1d; barley, 34s 8d; oats, 24s 8d; rye, 57s 7d; beans, 51s 6d; peas, 50s 10d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 75s 6d; barley, 32s 10d; oats, 25s 8d; rye, 56s 3d; beans, 57s 2d; peas, 56s 10d.

The Corn Trade.—[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

ILLUSTRATED EDITION—COMPLETE.

THE NEW TESTAMENT;

WITH UPWARDS OF

SIXTY ILLUSTRATIONS BY KENNY MEADOWS,

AND FOUR OTHER EMINENT ARTISTS.

A Large Copper-plate View of the Holy Land, and Notes, Historical and Descriptive.

London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. Sold by all Booksellers.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ONLY.

ORDER THE MAN IN THE MOON,

NO. 1, FOR APRIL,

Edited by ALBERT SMITH and ANGUS B REACH

LOLA MONTEZ.—Should this be the case of the fortunate damsels, she is requested to order the MAN IN THE MOON, for APRIL, of our Bavarian Agent.

WILLIAM HOWITT is recommended to buy a number of the MAN IN THE MOON, wherein he will find something that concerns him.

THE FAST DAY.—Exclusive particulars of the Fast Festival will appear in the MAN IN THE MOON of to-day.

M. ROGER DE BOUTEILLE means a prominent dish in the bill of fare of the MAN IN THE MOON for APRIL.

THE ALPHABET OF THE MONTH in the MAN IN THE MOON for APRIL.

DRAWING-ROOM THEATRICALS.—The first of a series, adapted for private performances, being "Guy Fawkes," a burlesque in one scene, in the MAN IN THE MOON for APRIL.

JENNY LIND.—The only authentic portrait of the great singer is in the MAN IN THE MOON for APRIL.

To be had at every Railway Station, Library, and of every Bookseller in the Kingdom. Price 6d. only. Office, 17, Warwick-lane.

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS: History of the Reigns and Medallic Illustrations of the Twelve Cæsars, from Julius to Domitian, bearing Portraits, their Dates and Mottoes, is just published by P. WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 66 Strand, London; price 1s., by post, 1s. 6d. Coins sent by post, Bought, Catalogued, &c.

TWENTY-TWO SHEETS of DRAWINGS, from Designs by Eminent Artists, to Illustrate the new Cheap Edition of PICKWICK, now publishing in Monthly Parts (four in each) price Fourpence; or, in complete sets, price One Shilling and Eightpence ! ! forming the cheapest Illustrated Work ever offered to the Public.

London: J. NEWMAN, 48, Walsing-street.

NEW WORK ON TURNING.

Now ready, in 4to, with plates 7s. 6d.,

THE HAND-BOOK OF TURNING. Containing Instructions in Concentric, Eccentric, and Eccentric Turning; also, various Rases of Chucks, Tools, and Instruments, and Directions for using the Rose-engine, Lathe, Vertical Cutter, and Circular Rest, with Patterns and Instructions for working them:

SAUNDERS and OTLEY, Publishers, Conduit-street.

EXPLANATION OF THE MINUTES OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION

This Day is Published, 8vo., 7s. 6d.,

THE SCHOOL, in its relations to the STATE, the CHURCH, and the CONGREGATION; being an Explanation of the Minutes of the Committee of Council on Education, in August and December, 1846.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street; and may be had of all Booksellers in Town and Country.

Just Published,

THE SHADOWLESS MAN; or the HISTORY of PETER SCHLEMIL. By CHAMISSO. A New Translation from the German of the Sixth Stereotype French Edition. Price only 6d. London: JAMES BOREL, 17, Portman street. Of whom may be had, a List of Popular Translations from the French.

FOR THE USE OF FAMILIES AT HOME AND TRAVELLERS ABROAD

This day, in a neat pocket volume, 380 pages, price 5s., neatly bound,

MONS. LEPAGE'S FRENCH COMPTEER, a Complete Conversation Lexicon, alphabetically arranged. The only work which furnishes the proper expressions in French for all subjects of daily intercourse. By Mons. LEPAGE, Professor of the Art of Talking.

The best book of its class ever published, forming a complete hand-book of conversation, for the use of travellers abroad and families at home.

London: EFFINGHAM WILSON, 11, Royal Exchange.

THE NEW OPERA HOUSE.—THE BUILDER, of SATURDAY, April 10, price 3d., or stamped, for country friends, 4d., contains a full description of the Interior, with Views of Covent Garden, Her Majesty's, and the Lyceum Theatres, and Plans of the latter, together with Sections and Details of the Proscenium, Stage, Boxes, &c. Office, 4, York-street, Covent Garden. Order early. An important series of Illustrations are in hand for ensuing numbers.

EPSOM FIRST SPRING MEETING, 1847, will take place on TUESDAY, 6th APRIL. The Stakes for the Trial Stakes at One o'Clock—Great Metropolitan Stakes at Two—Two-Year-Old Stakes at Three—Railway Stakes at Half-past Three—and the Surrey Hunt Stakes at Half-past Four.—Admission to the Grand Stand, Half-a-Crown.

AIR GUNS and AIR CANES.—An entirely new and further improved assortment of these portable and steadily destructive weapons, now on sale, adapted fully for killing Rabbits, Rooks, Sea Fowl, &c., with Small Shot, and Birds with shot. Fish with harpoons, &c. &c. Prices commencing at 35s. each, pump and spanner complete.—Selby, Gun-maker, New Oxford street—ELSDON'S FROM HOLBORN.

WATCHES and CLOCKS.—A Pamphlet, expaining the various constructions, and the advantages of each, with a List of Prices, will be forwarded, Gratis, by post, if applied for by a post-paid letter.—T. COX SAVORY, and CO., Goldsmiths, Parkstone, Dorset, and 47, Cornhill, London (seven doors from Gracechurch-street).

THE BEST ENGLISH WATCHES.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Watchmakers, No. 9, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, request the attention of purchasers to their stock of Lever Watches, which, for quality, they can recommend, as manufactured by themselves in their own house. In silver cases, with the detached escapement and jewelled in four holes, are four sizes and patterns, at 4 guineas each; in gold cases, with ditto, 12 cases, 10, 12, 14, and 16 guineas each. The very large stock offered for selection includes every description, enabling a customer to select that which is more particularly adapted to his own use

ORNAMENTAL CLOCKS.—Recently received from Paris, an unusually large variety of FOURTEEN-DAY CLOCKS, to strike the hours and half-hours in Enamel, Marble, and China. The designs, and the workmanship, are beautiful, and include a few of great merit in the style of Louis XIV. The price is four, five, and seven guineas each, and upwards.

T. COX SAVORY and CO., No. 47, Cornhill (seven doors from Gracechurch-street.) London

SILVER TEA SERVICES of New Patterns.—A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Working Silversmiths, 14, Cornhill, London, opposite the Bank, respectfully inform their customers that they have now designs in readiness for the supply of Services of the present improved taste, and that they are sold at reduced prices from those customary in the trade:

Cabriolet Pattern.			Thalia Pattern.
Strong Silver Tea-pot	£10 10 0		Strong Silver Tea-pot	£13 0 0
Ditto Sugar Basin	6 14 0		Ditto Sugar Basin	7 11 0
Ditto Cream-jug	4 16 0		Ditto Cream Ewer	5 15 0
Ditto Coffee-pot	14 13 0		Ditto Coffee-pot	16 17 0
Complete	£30 13 6		Complete	£43 10 0

A variety of upwards of 50 Silver Tea and Coffee Services may be seen in the Show Rooms, and on application will be forwarded a List, containing Drawings, with the Weights and prices of recent designs, will be forwarded to any part of Great Britain, Ireland, India, or the Colonies. Purchasers of silver plate exported free of Duty.

BOOK SHOOTING. — AIR-CANES and AIR-GUNS devested of all complication, and brought to perfection, now in general request for Rook, Rabbit, Waterfowl Shooting, and numerous other sports. They are loaded with rapidity, discharged without noise or recoil, and very portable. With balls they are effective up to 150 yards, for killing deer, game, vermin, &c.; with harpoons for killing fish, and, by recent great improvements, will throw small shot—for strength, distance, and accuracy—as to surpass anything ever before done with air. Letters, stating what sports they are for, ensure suitable sizes. Prices of these highly useful and surprising weapons complete, for pump and apparatus included. Trial on the premises. BLISSETT, Gun-maker (late to Ralph's), 313, High Holborn, near Chancery-lane.

GROSSMITH'S ARTIFICIAL HUMAN EYE MANUFACTORY, 179, FLEET-STREET (Established by J. B. Staith, 1790).—These superb game of art are made by William Robert Grossmith in a few hours, to fit, without operation or pain, in every case where the sight has been lost. They are recommended by all the medical surgeons as protective to the cavity and preventive of the wasting and closing of the lids: the colour is perfectly matched, the movement precise with the natural eye, and the most observers will not detect them from life. ⁂ Forwarded by post to all parts of the world.

THE PANKLIBANON IRON WORKS AND GREAT WESTERN EMPORIUM for STOVE GRATES, Kitchen Ranges, Kettles, and Fenders, general furnishing Ironmongery, in tinned copper, iron and bronze, and block-tin cooking vessels, bronze and block tables, japan tables, japanned and iron bedsteads; patent table lamps; iron and wirework for verandahs, lawns, &c.; brass and iron bedsteads; patent table lamps for candle or oil. Every article is warranted, and marked at the lowest prices, in plain figures, for cash only. Adjoining the Royal Mint, Nos. 1, 2, and 3, Royal-mint-street.

WINDOW BLINDS.—The Venetian Blinds manufactured by TYLOR and PACE can be confidently recommended as being made in the best manner, and they will season any climate. Prices, per foot of window, commencing at 2s. per square foot. T. and P. have completed a most extensive assortment of transparent blinds, comprising landscape scenery, including the Scotch lake, flowers, and various other devices, suitable for halls, staircases, and drawing-room windows, varying in price from 9s. per foot and upwards to Five, and Ten Guineas.—TYLOR and PACE, Patentees of the Fire-resisting Blinds, and Manufacturers of Gothic Wire, Spring Dealer, Venetian, and every description of inside and outside Window Blinds, 3, Queen-street, three doors from Cheapside. Detailed lists of prices forwarded on application by post free.

THE REGISTERED PALETOT of LLAMA CLOTH, the most fashionable coat for both the present and approaching seasons, still retains its same unbounded favour. Its lasting properties, graceful appearance, with every other requisite such general popularity. It has been made, by especial command, for their Royal Highnesses Prince Albert, Prince George of Cambridge, Prince Edward of Saxe Weimar, the Grace the Duke of Wellington, and for several Royal Visitors to the British Court. In London it can only be purchased of the patentees, H. J. and D. NICOLL, Court Tailors, 114, Regent-street, and 21, Cornhill. Agents for Liverpool, Dawson and Son, Bold-street; for Dublin, Geoge Macdone, Molesworth-street; for Birmingham, Warsung and Son, New-street; Carlisle and Son, George street, Edinburgh, and the principal tailors in other large towns.

CHILDREN'S FROCKS, COATS, and PELISSES; Infants' Cloaks, Hoods, Hats, and Bonnets; Long and Short Robes, French Cambric Caps, Infants' and Misses' Riding Habits, Leather Leggings, Gaiters, Shoes, and Boots, in every variety, suitable to Baby Linen, at SHEARMAN'S, 5, PINSBURY PAVEMENT. Several hundreds of Children Dresses constantly on view, from the useful indoor at 1s. 1d., to the full dress at 10s. 6d., to the rich and tasteful Silk Velveta, 84s., with every other article usually required for young family; thus obviating the trouble and inconvenience so long complained of in going from shop to shop. Juvenile Clothing by Apparatus. An illustrated Pamphlet, affording additional information, will be sent free, on receiving a paid letter.

CAUTION.—A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London, beg to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have not any connexion with any establishments bearing similar names, who to compounds of their own manufacture are the titles of "MACASSAR OIL," "KALYDOR," and "ODONTO,"—some under the falsified sanction of Royal and the Government Departments, with similar attempts at Deception, which they expose. Labels, Bills, Advertisements, and Testimonials, substituting fictitious Names and Address, for the real, of the Original Preparations. The only genuine "MACASSAR OIL," "KALYDOR," and "ODONTO," are "ROWLANDS," and the Wrapper of each bears the Name, "ROWLANDS," preceding that of the Article, with their Signature at the foot in RED INK thus—"A. ROWLAND & SON." Sold by them, at 20, Hatton-garden, London; and by all Chemists and Perfumers

FOUR FIRES FOR ONE PENNY !!! by EDWARDS'S PATENT FIREWOOD. It lights instantly, and saves money, time, and trouble. Sold by all respectable tallow and grocers. Families in the country supplied with 500, delivered in its carrier, on receipt of a post-office order for 10s., payable to Thomas Stevenson, No. 18 Wharf-road, City-road.

A CARD.—Mr. BROGH, ACCOUNTANT, HOUSE, ESTATE, and GENERAL AGENT, VALUER, SURVEYOR, and AUCTIONEER, No. 5, Paragon-place, near Temple-Bar, Strand, and No. 6, South Lambeth-place, Vauxhall, London. The great experience the advertiser has had in arranging difficult Accounts, and his large practice as Valuer, Surveyor, and Manager of Landed, Funded, and Property Estates, Stocks-in-Trade, and other Properties, give him confidence in asking for a portion of the support and patronage of his friends and the Public, and undertakes the Administration or the Transfer of Properties, promptly and properly attended to. N.B. References of the first respectability, and, if required, security to any amount can be given

TO LADIES.—A GENTLEMAN, Twenty-two Years of Age, who is now respectably connected, possessing a small capital, and having a general knowledge, offers his services as Amanuensis, Agent, Secretary, Accountant, or in any other capacity where confidence and capabilities would be required. To any Lady requiring the knowledge and presence of a Gentleman to manage the same, to receive the highest respectability can be given. Implicit confidence may be relied on. Address C. H. N., under cover to Mr. G. W. Wood, Bookseller, Cornhill, London.

NO. 61, GROSVENOR-STREET, BOND-STREET.—Messrs. MOSELEY, Surgeon-Dentists, have REMOVED from No 23, Haymarket. Their system of supplying ARTIFICIAL TEETH, ensures the power to masticate without lessening the taste of the palate by artificial covering, or injuring the adjoining teeth by use of wires. Their teeth are unchangeable in colour, and perfectly resemble the original. Decayed teeth permanently filled and rendered useful.

SCARBOROUGH.—SHARPIN'S CROWN HOTEL, ESPLANADE, Contiguous to the Saloon, Spa, and Cliff Bridge Pleasure Grounds? Families who are desirous of visiting this "Queen of British Watering places," during the Spring of the Year, are respectfully informed that a considerable reduction will be made in the usual charges at the above Hotel, during that time

A like the day previous will always ensure eligible apartments.

SILK FURNITURES, CARPETS, WOOL, DAMASKS, and CHINTZES.—SWEELL and CO are now SHOWING all their NEW CARPETS, India Damasks, Lyons Brocade satins, Splendissk Silk Tabarets, with the whole of their new tissue Curtains, and French and German Chintz Goods, in addition to several large lots of Patent Axminster and, Brussels Carpets, Persia Rugs, Chintzes, and Damasks for Curtains.—Compton's Road, 64, 65, and 66, Compton-street, Soho (and 66, and 67, Frith-street, Soho-square).

FRENCH CLEANING.—SAMUEL OSMOND and Co., Dyers, 9, Ivy-lane, Newgate-street, inform the Ladies that they clean Silk, Satin, Cashmere, and Mousseline de Laine Dresses, Shawls, Scarfs, Handkerchiefs, Bonnets, Parasols, Kid Gloves, and Satin Shoes, in the newest mode. They likewise continue to Dye Black every Wednesday. Bed Furniture and Window Curtains Cleaned, Dyed, and Finished. N.B. Establishment above a century.

INFORMATION of VALUE to LADIES.—BERLIN WOOLS, 9d. per Ounce, all colours.—Alteration of premises complete; system of low prices continued. Errorth ng for the Work Table: Furniture and Dress Fringes, Gimps, and Trimmings, of all kinds in stock, or made to any pattern, at the lowest price.—S. D ROGERS, Berlin House, 161, Borough (late Edgcomb)

OPERA, WEDDING, DINNER, and WALKING-DRESSES, EXTRAORDINARY CHEAP

Very Rich French Satins, for Dresses, 10s. 6d. per yard

The Richest White, Pink, Sky, and Lavender, Watered Silks, at 3s. 6d. & 4s. 9d.

Very Rich Glace, Striped and Checked Fancy Silks, at 2s. 6d.

The Richest Gaze, Damas, and Checked Pou de Soies, 2 wide, 6s. 6d. & 7s. 6d.

For the convenience of Ladies residing in the country, KING and SHEATH will send Patterns (free of expense). Address KING and SHEATH, 256, Regent-street.

LESSONS in MILLINERY and DRESS-MAKING.—MRS. BOWELL, of 304, Regent street, two doors from Margaret-street, Sole Inventress of the Newest and most Fashionable Method of Cutting, Fitting, and Executing in the most Finished Style, in Six Lessons, for One Guinea. The convenience of this mode can be fully substantiated by reference to Pupils.—Apprentices and Improvers Wanted.—Millinery Rooms.—Paper Models.

SHIRTS.—WILLIAM WHITELOCK, 166, STRAND, (established twenty-two years), solicits the attention of Gentlemen to the Shirts he supplies at Ready-made prices. Fashionable Shirts, made on the Corsaire and other new styles, from Marsland's Patent Long-Cloth, with fine linen fronts, &c., and are superior to those usually sold at 8s. 6d.; also all the Linen ditto, 10s. 6d.; usual price, 14s. 6d. Gentlemen waited upon in any part of London, or one sent as sample into the Country Post Free, upon receipt of the amount and is added as part payment of postage. The measure requisite is the neck, chest, and wrist tight.

TO SMOKERS.—CLARKE'S PATENT GLASS MORTAR LAMPS will be found invaluable, not only as a Night Light, but in the Divan, particularly where smoking is carried on, as they entirely do away with the necessity of extinguishing the cigar, and disk to receive the ashes. They are extremely cleanly, and without small smoke, and well adapted for hotels, &c., combining elegance, economy, and safety. Price of Lamps, 2s. each; mortars, 7d. per box, containing 8, 10, or 12 mortars, each to burn 10, 8, and 6 hours. May be obtained of the inventor, 50, A, Bungo-street, Regent's-park; or retail from all grocers, oilmen, and Italian warehouses in the Kingdom.

CLARKE'S PATENT MORTAR LAMPS and LAMP MORTARS. These incomparable Night Lamps are now manufactured in beautiful plain, coloured, and painted glass, and papier machés, which, with all the improvements that have been made in the Lamp Mortars, render them, without exception, the most economical and cleanly Night Lights ever brought before the public. Lamps, 2s. each; Mortars, 7d. per box, double boxes, 1s. 2d. each. CLARKE'S PATENT NURSERY LAMP.—This lamp burns the Patent Lamp Mortars, and will be found invaluable not only to the Nursery, but in the Bachelor's room; it will keep hot a quart of water, or a pint of water and pint of food, at an expense of one farthing per hour. Lamps, 2s. each; mortars, 1s. each. An excellent night lamp; it is entirely free from smell or smoke, and may be carried about with the greatest safety. Lamps and mortars retail from most respectable Ironmongers, Oilmen, and Grocers, in the Kingdom, and wholesale at the Inventor's, 50, A, Bungo-street, Regent's-park.

LONDON PAPER-HANGING COMPANY 42 and 43, Poultry, Corner of Old Jewry, London.—The Public are respectfully informed that the new Paper Patterns are now ready, comprising many hundred varieties, adapted to every style and case of Rooms, Halls, Staircases, &c. Neat and useful papers. One halfpenny per yard. A variety of Patterns from Three Farthings to One Penny per yard. Chintz and ornamental patterns, good colours and workmanship, Three Halfpence per yard. Damask, Satin, Grecian, and other designs, printed in six and seven rich and bri liant colours at Twopence per yard. One Penny per yard. Gothic and Tudor Paper, painted entirely by hand, without any repetition in the pattern, Twopence per yard.

GORDON and TOMES, Managers.

CLERICAL, MEDICAL, AND GENERAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Persons of all ages, and in every situation in life, with this Society on very moderate terms.

No extra premium is required for sea-risk, or residence in any part of Europe. Those wishing to visit, or reside in other parts of the world, may effect Policies at a small increase of Premium.

FOURTH DIVISION OF PROFITS

A detailed report (just published) of all the Bonuses declared—a statement of the LARGE REVERSIONARY FUND—the favourable position of the Society, and the terms on which it assures generally, can be obtained (free of expense) of any of the Society's Agents, or by addressing a letter to GEO. H. PINCKARD, Actuary and Secretary.

No. 78, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, London.

PROVISIONALLY REGISTERED.

SUBURBAN VILLAGE ASSOCIATION. Established for the purpose of Building Villages in healthy situations within a short distance of the Metropolis, and accessible by railways, consisting of Houses and Gardens for the residence of Artizans and others of moderate Income, at cheap Rents, including Railway Fare daily to and from their residences, and for enabling them to invest their savings advantageously, and become, ultimately, the owners of their Residences.

Capital £200 000 in 40,000 Shares of £5 each.

Deposit 5s. per Share.

Being the greatest amount authorised by the Act of 7 and 8 Vic. chap. 110.

Earl Denbigh	H. H. Lindsay, Esq., M.P.	W. Henry Smith, Esq.
Earl Somers	R. T. Cocks, Esq.	R. Monckton Milnes, Esq.,
Viscount Morpeth, M.P.	J. Toynbee, Esq.	M.P.
Viscount Easton, M.P.	Thomas Wyse, Esq., M.P.	H. Travers, Esq.
Hon. C. Howard, M.P.	Philip Rose, Esq.	T. Peter, Esq.
Hon. A. Cowper, M.P.	W. J. Tilley, Esq.	E. Hill, Esq.
Sir J. S. Johnstone, Bart., M.P.	Captain Colquhoun, Coldstream Guards	C. Hillyard, Esq.
	H. J. Emerson, Esq.	F. Fuller, Esq.

(With power to add to their number)

BANKERS.—Messrs. Strahan, Paul, and Bates, Charing-cross.

SOLICITORS. Messrs. Bridges, Mason, and Bridges Red Lion-square; Messrs. Cregg and Joyce, 22, Bedford-row.

ARCHITECT. W. K. Moffat, Esq., 9, Spring-gardens.

SECRETARY. W. H. Hepburne, Esq.

The object of the present Association is to carry out a plan which will offer to all those who now pay high rents for dwellings placed in crowded and unhealthy districts in towns, the means of enjoying, at a small increase in their expenditure, a residence in the country, with the same easy communication that they now have with their places of employment in the Metropolis.

This is proposed to be effected by the erection of dwellings at a distance of from four to eight miles from London, which will consist of a house, or set of houses, or cottages to each lot or acre, in healthy and pleasant situations, giving to each resident a good garden, and inciting in every instance habits of industry, regularity, economy, and comfort.

In laying out these villages, it will be the object of the Association to render them in every way attractive and desirable for their occupants. It is proposed to build in each village a church and school rooms, and to include lecture rooms, libraries, and reading rooms, with the grounds for recreation and manly exercises, &c., baths and wash houses, and such other establishments as may be found necessary for the health and comfort of the residents.

Each resident will offer to the classes proposed to be benefited, the best investment of their savings, as in addition to a solid security for 5 per cent., will afford them opportunity of becoming landlord or tenant on the most profitable terms; instead of paying, in the shape of rent, at the rate of 10 to 15, and in some cases, 20 per cent.

It is Committee have the satisfaction of stating, that the Eastern Counties Railway have already most liberally consented to the formation of one of these, and that arrangements are in progress with other companies, and that they are also offered land in most eligible situations on very moderate terms.

The Committee will consider themselves at liberty after the registration of the Company is complete, to commence operations when in their discretion the deposits on a sufficient number of shares shall have been paid up, and the responsibility of the shareholders will be limited to no number of their shares.

[FORM OF APPLICATION FOR SHARES.

TO THE

COMMITTEE OF THE SUBURBAN VILLAGE ASSOCIATION.

GENTLEMEN,

I request you to allot me Shares in the above Association and I hereby undertake to accept such shares as may be allotted to me, and to pay the requires deposits thereon, and to execute all necessary deeds when required.

(Name)

(Address)

Profession or Trade)

Reference to Employer or party of responsibility

Detailed Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares, may be obtained on application to the respective Solicitors, or to the Secretary, 9, Spring Gardens, London.

TWENTY POUNDS REWARD.—STOLEN, on FRIDAY NIGHT, April 2, from the premises of Mr. Ingram, 1, Clifford-terrace, Acton Vale, large BLACK DOG, of the Newfoundland breed. He is a very slight muzzle, but remarkably large, and perfectly black. Any person giving information that will lead to the conviction of the offenders (person or persons) shall receive £20, by applying to the said H. Ingram.—April 3, 1847

PURE ST. JULIEN CLARET, 28s. per Dozen; Pints, 18s.; Imported direct by HEDGES and BUTLER, Wine Merchants, &c., 155, Regent-street, can be confidently recommended. Also, some superior Gordon's Golden Sherry, 36s. per Dozen. On the receipt of a Post-office Order, or reference, will be immediately forwarded

TONIC ALE.—This splendid description of Bottled Beer is now in perfection. It is strongly recommended by the Faculty as possessing peculiar strengthening, promoting appetite, &c. Sold by most first and last Bottlers, secured by Bass's Patent Capsule. JOSEPH STOCKTON, Sole Agent, Stores, No 1, John's-mews, Bedford-row

DANCING TAUGHT, in the most fashionable style, by MR. WILLIS. 61, Brewer-street, Golden square. Private lessons on the Piano, Violin, Flute, Violoncello, Harp, Singing, &c. Mr. Willis attends Families and Schools in the Country. Terms and Testimonials may be had on application at the Academy.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London to purchase

ELEGANCE and ECONOMY in PAPER-HANGINGS.—French Satins, 2s. 6d. per piece; Flock, 6d. per yard; Panel Decoratives, Flowers or Oaks, as cheap as other Papers. Patterns Free. Established 20 years. W. CROSBY, 32, Lowther Arcade N.B.—Three doors from the Strand entrance.

JONES' £4 4s. SILVER LEVER WATCHES are selling at the Manufactory, 338, Strand, opposite Somerset House. They comprise every modern improvement, and are warranted not to vary more than half a minute per week. The great attention of price at once sets aside all rivalry, either of the Swiss manufacturers, or any other house. On receipt of a Post-office Order payable to John Jones, for £4 4s., one will be sent free —Read Jones' Sketch of Watchwork, sent free for a Twopenny Stamp.

CARRIAGES.—W. SIMS, 51, Great Queen's-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, presents his, and the public's thanks to the nobility and gentry who have so kindly patronised his Establishment for the manufacture and sale of the best descriptions of Carriages for the last 25 years. He has now the honour of informing them and the public that he has a considerable STOCK of New and Second-hand CARRIAGES of the best quality, and at a Brougham, and Barouche. W. SIMS will be happy to receive the inspection of his stock. Noblemen who are about to purchase carriages to an inspection of his stock

TORTOISE-SHELL COMBS.—J. PROUT, Brush and Comb Manufacturer, 225, Strand, London, respectfully invites the attention of purchasers to his unrivalled Stock of Tortoise-shell Combs; it is at present in fine condition, and, for variety, extent, and superior workmanship, is unequalled. Families residing in the country, and persons going abroad, can furnish themselves at this house with goods that can be depended upon for any climate, and at very moderate prices Orders per post faithfully executed. PROUT'S Brush and Comb Manufactory, 225, Strand, London, near Temple Bar Established 1820.

ROWLAND'S ODONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, a White Powder for the Teeth, compounded of the choicest and most odoriferous Botanicals of the Oriental Herbal, of inestimable value for preserving and beautifying the Teeth, and strengthening the Gums. Its truly efficient and fragrant aromatic properties have obtained its selection by the Queen, the Court and Royal Family of Great Britain, and the Sovereigns of the Continent. Price 2s. 9d. per box.—CAUTION.—To protect the Public from fraud, the Government Stamp, with the words "A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden," engraved thereon, is affixed on each box. Sold by them, and by all Chemists and Perfumers.

LONDON CARPET WAREHOUSE.—WAUGH and SON, Manufacturers, 3 and 4, Goodge-street (established 1785), invite the attention of the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, &c., to an inspection of their large and magnificent collection of Brussels, Royal Velvet Pile, Axminster, Patent Tapestry Turkey, Patent Felt, and every other description of Carpeting, of Scottish and English manufacture, comprehending the most tasteful and elegant designs, the colours and quality of which may be warranted, as they are manufactured under their immediate inspection. The many patronages and experience they have had, their establishment being exclusively for the sale of the article, purchasers can ensure carpets of permanent colours and durable qualities, and at reasonable prices

PROTOBOLIC HATS—JOHNSON and Co., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street. Hatters to her Majesty and the Royal Family, Patentees for a new and improved Hat, which, from its peculiar form, and the invention of the springs which is placed in the Crown of the Hat, giving free exit to heat and perspiration, and of a proved expansion, forming a series of small channels in the back part of the leather lining, by which air is admitted. The Protobolic Hat possesses the following advantages:—The action of the springs of air admitted by the perforations in the hat, by the opening and closing of the valves at the pleasure of the wearer—the impossibility of accumulation of heated and vitiated perspiration, the necessity of frequent cleansing, and consequent destruction of heated and vitiated perspiration, and the impossibility of accumulation of heated and vitiated perspiration, and consequent destruction of the hair, by the opening and closing of the valves at the pleasure of the wearer—the impossibility of accumulation of heated and vitiated perspiration, the necessity of frequent cleansing, and consequent destruction of the hair, and consequent baldness, coolness, cleanliness, and durability—and, lastly, their acknowledged comfort to all who suffer from headache, or who are in the habit of taking violent exercise.—Johnson and Co., 113, Regent-street, corner of Vigo-street; and Griffiths and Co., 10, Kensington Regent's-park.

METCALFE and CO.'S NEW PATTERN TOOTH-BRUSH, and SMYRNA SPONGES Dental Inquiries. For cure of the tartar, decay, and tenderness of the teeth, and gums, and for the prevention of the same, Metcalfe and Co.'s new pattern tooth-brush, and Smyrna sponges, are recommended.

HEADS OF THE MONTHS.—DRAWN BY KENNY MEADOWS.

APRIL.

Now through the cloud, where pipes the lark on high
His cheery melody, sweet April comes.
Strewing gay flowers, of many a varied dye—
Flowers, which her breath calls from their winter tombs.
Now beams to heaven the violet's dewy eye;
"The mountain daisy" modestly resumes
Her vesture prim; the primrose censes sigh;
And fragrantly the garden's beauty blooms.
Oh! cheerily the streamlet gurgles now,
Where coo the pigeons in the vocal grove
As April, though a cloud be on her brow,
Smiles, through her tears, the beams of hope and love.
Young Hebe of the months, propitious nymph,
Pour out on earth the fructifying lymph.

At thy approach, mild April, mother Earth,
Opens her bosom for the golden show'r,
Which fills her heart with hope and grateful mirth—
Bringing to Ceres' sons a plenteous dow'r.
From monarch oak e'en to the humblest flow'r
All nature hallows thee. Oh! may no dearth,
No bitter blight, or pestilential power
Sadden the homes of rural toil and worth.
Enough our isles have suffered. Let thy breath
Bear on its balm the boon of healthful life;
May Plenty triumph o'er disease and death,
And stricken lands once more with joy be rife.
We hail thy presence, Hebe of the year!
And oh! propitious be thy smile and tear.

L.

THE GREAT WILTSHIRE COURSING PICTURE.

By the courtesy of the Artists, we are enabled to present our Readers with an Engraving from the Great Wiltshire Coursing Picture, painted by Messrs. Barraud, which was run for at Amesbury, last month. Of the Picture itself, we need say but little, as the reputation of the Painters in this particular line of art is so well known. They have, on the present occasion, been highly successful, both in securing excellent likenesses of a considerable number of those gentlemen who are best known in the coursing world; and in producing a picture which, even to those not conversant with the sport, must be full of interest. Among the portraits which it contains are those of the Earl of Stradbroke, Sir Hesketh Fleetwood, Captains Wyndham and Daintree, Messrs. Goodlake, Biggs, Davis, Graham, Parkinson, Keys, Laurence, and Miller; as well as the portrait of the fortunate winner, Richard Bagge, Esq., of Lynn. The background represents that part of Salisbury Plain, on which Stonehenge stands, and which, independently of its interest to the antiquary, is considered almost unequalled as coursing ground. It is the property of Sir Edmund Antrobus, whose portrait is introduced in the picture, as also those of Sir Francis Astley and Mr. Mills, who, as well as Sir Edmund, liberally afford every facility to the pursuit of the sport over their estates.

The contest for the Picture excited an unusual interest. Sixty-four greyhounds were entered to run for it, twenty-seven of which were brought from Scotland alone, and many from Ireland. The weather was most favourable, which formed an additional inducement to a large number of visitors to share in the sport. On the first day, 32 dogs against 32; and on the second day, the 32 winners were matched against each other. The winners of the day had again to contend, until at last but two were left to run.

The following were the Deciding Courses for the Picture, on Saturday afternoon, March 20, as reported in Bells Life in London:—

I.

Mr R. Bagge's be b Twilight, winner of the Bentley Stakes, beat Mr Parkinson's r d Smuggler bit, winner of the Stonehenge Stakes.

Mr W. Etwall's r d Wyandotte, winner of the Derby Stakes, beat Mr Parkinson's f n Scentz, winner of the Druid Stakes.

II.

Mr. R. Bagge's Twilight beat Mr. W Etwall's Wyandotte, and won the Picture.

The Wiltshire Coursing Picture was valued at £300, and formed the chief prize. We understand it is to be engraved on a large scale; and it will, doubtless, be the means of recalling to many a meeting, which, for weather, company, and sport, and the interest it excited, will long be remembered as the Great Meeting at Amesbury.

Proposal of Sir John Ross to Reach the North Pole.—The following is an extract of a letter from Capt. Sir John Ross, R.N., to Capt. W. H. Smyth, R.N., President of the Royal Astronomical Society: "Sir,—I beg leave to submit the following plan and proposal to the President and Council of the Royal Astronomical Society, for their consideration:—The measurement of an arc of the meridian has long been a desideratum, and the failure of every attempt that has been made at Spitzbergen for this desirable object, as well as the attempt made to reach the North Pole, has been because the summer has been selected for that purpose; whereas the spring should have been the season chosen—namely, the months of April and May for both services, but which could not be put in execution by the means hitherto adopted. I have now to inform the President and Council of the Royal Astronomical Society that I have submitted a plan to the Admiralty for carrying into execution these double and desirable objects, by wintering at Spitzbergen, and employing my officers and crew under the direction of the talented son of the celebrated Professor Schumacher, whom I have engaged for this purpose; while, at the proper season, it is my intention to attempt to reach the North Pole on sledges drawn by Swedish horses, being a modification of the plan proposed first by Dr. Scoresby, and of which that highly talented and well-informed individual has given his most unqualified approbation. And, from the year's experience I have had in Sweden in that mode of travelling, I am safely assert, that there is no other officer in the navy that possesses these advantages so necessary to complete success, of which neither Dr. Scoresby nor myself has the smallest doubt. I have made this statement in the hope, that, when duly considered by the President and Council of the Royal Astronomical Society, they will be pleased to signify to me their opinion on the importance of the objects in question, and such a recommendation for its being put into execution as they may think fit."

Hampshire Wit. A Winchester man, a teetotaller, the other day asked a neighbour if he were not inclining to the Temperance Society; and he replied, "Yes; for when he saw the wine, his mouth watered."

THE AMESBURY COURSING MEETING PRIZE PICTURE—PAINTED BY MESSRS. BARRAUD.

London: Printed and Published at the Office, No. 8, Strand, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, by William Little, 198, Strand, aforesaid. Saturday, April 10, 1847.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 259.—Vol. X.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1847. [Sixpence.

THE OLD AND THE NEW.

BREAKING up a chain of historical associations is a process always reluctantly performed; men cling to the things of the past with singular fondness, no matter how inconvenient they become in the midst of changed times and circumstances. Time and the elements that hate all the works of men's hands, and wage continual war with them, are the great pioneers that clear the path in the van of improvement. To Fire, the destroyer of all things, we owe the New Houses of Legislature, in which the future destinies of this Empire, for good and ill, will be decided through ages to come. The feeling that invested the former fabric with so great an interest, still causes many to regret its loss; some, indeed, even in gazing on the purple and gold which now surrounds the pillars of the State, will not be comforted, but mourn over the Old Palace that sheltered the Saxon Monarchy, which, with Edward the Confessor, died beneath its roof, and then opened its doors to the Norman. These are things that, once lost, cannot be recovered; and the spell of antiquity is one of those that "breaks never to unite again." The feeling is more general than might be imagined; the mass of mankind feel a positive reluctance to having their shields scoured; but time and accident compel renovation. To necessity, not reason, we owe the New Houses of Parliament.

It will be long before men are reconciled to them, still longer before they become invested with "associations." The new creation may be better perhaps, in many respects, than the old one; but its interest is of a different kind. We cannot people the modern Hall with the shades of the dwellers who once gave it life; we must accept its convenience and its splendour without the influence that once gave dust and dinginess and narrow ways a spell over the mind, as if a portion of the greatness of the past lingered there—as if the link between us and the antiquity we invest with so many merits and virtues was not wholly severed. But the hour comes, either for decay, or the elements to do their work, and fabrics that have stood piled together, or have grown in incongruous accumulation out of each other according to the caprice and necessity of centuries, disappear in a single night, and the visible records of the history of a nation fade from the eye of men as utterly as the "smoke of the burning." But as the true interest they bore was drawn not from the fashion of the brick and stone that formed them, but from the spirit, energy, and courage of the men who worked there in their day and generation, so we turn forthwith from the past, and with efforts as stout as our ancestors used in like emergencies, create what will be interesting to those who will be to us what we are to the the Barons who drew up the Great Charter, and unconsciously secured the liberty of a people by first carefully getting and keeping every privilege to themselves. We shall become antiquities, and our sayings and doings will hereafter be quoted by the praisers of the past, who will shake their heads over innovations some five or six centuries hence, as the "wisdom of our ancestors;" the idea gives us a new sense of our importance; we are men of the middle ages; we are building for posterity; those who raised Westminster Abbey and the Hall of Rufus did no more; William of Wyckham was but an earlier Barry; we can see ourselves in illuminated books, drawn after the manner of Mr. Pugin's portrait, by Herbert; we shall be studied hereafter, and research will be bestowed on our costume; paletots and Chesterfields will take the place of the doublets and hose, and coats of mail; things may become curious that never possessed grace, and future Strutts and Meyricks may be puzzled as to the possible make of an Aquascutum, and be driven to despair to reconstruct an Antigropelos or an Idrotobolic Hat; Greek will afford them no help, for as education progresses it will become not only a dead language, but a buried one.

Seriously, it is as well sometimes to consider the other side of the question, and to ask what time is bringing us, and what we are ourselves leaving to the future. Regrets for what has vanished are proverbially useless; every age voluntarily separates itself in life and thought from its predecessors, and could not cling to old habits and modes of feeling, even if it would. And the sorrow with which we regard the passing away of old objects—castles on the Rhine, Elizabethan mansions, Houses of Parliament, and the like—is wholly an unselfish one. It humbles us to be made feel so forcibly the truth of the poet's question—

> What is there that will last?
> All things are taken from us and become > Portions and parcels of the dreadful past.

But as change and renovation are the destiny of the world, it is better not to give the past more power over the present than it deserves, or is entitled to. Wherefore we have succeeded in persuading ourselves, and would endeavour to persuade the reader, that much of what is called the greatness of men and things in the past, is our own mistake, more than their merit. We see them through the mists of time, and glasses cunningly smoked by historians to give their own tinge to events and persons; and men are always ready to give credit to any amount, to any age but their own, to any individuals except their contemporaries.

We have no "great man" sighs a Disraeli, looking towards the East like a Sun-worshipper. What if we do not require great men, and that the mass progresses with a general sense of its own wants and evils, and the remedies for them, that enables them to do the work of their era without the exceptional minds that could impress themselves on the past! Things are sometimes great by comparison with the smallness of what surrounds them; our leading minds are not, perhaps, so much above the standard of the many as some that could be named from former times. But closer examination than is generally given to the actions of the great of the past, will raise strong doubts whether they were so directly commanded by intellectual power as a man who would be great must do at present.

A Wolsey had no hostile majorities to call him to account, and feel the moment his master's avarice was excited, and then he was squeezed dry and thrown away like a sponge. There was no self supporting greatness there. Richelieu ruled by craft and cruelty, the lowest of all human means of influence; the guillotine of the Revolution was little more than a repetition of the basis of his policy which was to kill all he suspected, or who stood in his way; yet Richelieu is reckoned a great man by those who cannot find words to express their horror of the Reign of Terror. One by one the names of history could be stripped of their greatness if they were coldly and exactly judged.

It is possible to believe then, after all, that the roof of the new Houses of Parliament will close over men as able as any that have sat under the shadow of the old one. We do not know that even the Peers may not compete with their fathers, though in former times they made more noise than now the Commons, rising like a tide, have overflowed, and driven them from the exclusive possession of a great deal they once held as their own. There are four or five great lawyers among them, three of whom have filled the office of Chancellor. Open Lord Campbell's "Lives of the Chancellors," and compare either of them with the awfully great men the ancient Lord Chancellors are supposed to have been. Why the talent and learning and toil required to fill the office now would have set up ten Chancellors of the middle ages: in honesty and rectitude the superiority is decidedly with the moderns. We can balance a Marlborough with a Wellington, who has commanded at Paris like Henry the Fifth—another notability of the past.

THE NEW HOUSE OF LORDS.—MR. DYCE'S FRESCO OF "THE BAPTISM OF ST. ETHELBERT," OVER THE THRONE.

(SEE PAGE 245.)

We are thorough disbelievers in all the croaking about the degeneracy of the age, a practice happily growing out of favour. We can do all our ancestors did, and a great deal more; we can build Houses of Parliament, plus Thames Tunnels and Great Western Railways; and but that we have too decided an utilitarian turn for boldness in art where no profit can be made of it, we would answer for it our architects and engineers would produce edifices to which Westminster Abbey and St. Paul's would be but trifling matters. But our energy goes another way, and we are more likely to run a tunnel under the Atlantic than to surpass them. The age of great Cathedrals is gone, Victor Hugo says. We doubt if the age of great Palaces is not gone also. If the people would spend forty millions, they might rival Versailles, and lodge the Three Estates of the Realm under one roof. We have hardly spent two millions on our last great public work, and we are beginning to be frightened. A Railway Company would raise five times the sum in a month or two, and think it nothing extraordinary; and that is the greatness of the age; it is of a different character than of yore, but it is greatness still.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE

PARISIANA.

(From our own Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday.

In the Chamber of Deputies, an attempt has recently been made to repress the Roman feuilleton, so obnoxious by its immorality, by making a law that those journals alone should be taxed by Government which had Roman feuilletons. This bill was thrown out, it being opined that the proper censors—the readers, and that would be a sufficient guard for their wives, daughters, and young relatives, to prevent the circulation of such immoral works all other means of repression were vain. A voice was heard during the discussion, exclaiming, "The real cure will be found in cens." That clever writer, Bibliophile Jacob, professes that the new historical work of Lamartine, "The History of the Girondins," in which a truthful subject is treated with so much ability, and still so fascinating a style, should be entitled the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Feuilleton," as it cannot but create a distaste for the prurient trash of the latter's style. In the meantime, the real feuilleton of the Press of France is chief instruction and glory in showing itself in the noblest colours. Barring the theatrical feuilletons, the only that appear and regard present society figure in La Presse. There appear charming causeries and delicate satires, signed Vicomte Delamay, but written by the wife of the proprietor—Mdme. de Girardin. She is one of the best poets, and one of the wittiest women of France. She has always a repartee ready. For instance, at the Count de C——'s, the other night, a lady was enquiring, in all the display of things at the Longchamps Promenade (on that stormy day, Friday in Easter week), what she considered had been best and most appropriately worn? "Umbrellas!" drily answered Mdme. Girardin. Her last feuilleton has created immense sensation in Paris: it contains the most spirited attack on the prevailing vanities of the ladies of Paris; and as to admonition it joins ridicule—the chiefest weapon of our country, her triumph has been complete. She first attacks the blue-stocking mania, and next the artificiality of our fair Parisians. Portraits are executed in her descriptions. The fashionable leaders and their imitators are in a panic. All the literary ladies have set to professing they possess no knowledge. All the young ladies are become absurd of Nature. May they fulfil intimately the description of Madame Girardin, who says that the prototype of a real lady is to be always natural and unaffected, and to wear her talents, her accomplishments, and her learning, as well as the newest and finest dresses, as if she did not know she had them about her. They could have no better Mentor than Madame de Girardin, who knows the Parisian sisterhood so well—and goes about uttering such awful truisms as the following she let off at a soirée the other night: "In Paris pretty women kiss one another on coming into a room, because it is a graceful custom: they do the same on going away, because they are delighted to lose sight of one another."

While at such are the lessons given by pen, and in joke, there are some here imparted by Providence, which are of the most serious nature. The misery raging in Paris, and in the country among the peasantry, is pretty appalling. The Bureaux of Charité are besieged by immense crowds of respectable persons, soliciting bread at the reduction of a few centimes, whilst in the provinces the peasants go armed and dread by force, by fear and by right. Death, last week, the money drawn out of the saving banks exceeded by 400,000 francs the sum deposited in them. The middle classes participate in this suffering the proof of which is, that there were, the last week, fifty-nine bankruptcies recorded. Still, strange to relate, the current of things in the sphere above appears nowise to change. Marriages are announced on all sides in the fashionable world; the most interesting to its votaries is that about to be made Salvati, third son of Prince Borghese, and Mdlle. de Fitzjames, daughter of the Duke and orator of that name, and one of the last descendants of the house of Stuart.

At the same time, never were more new dramas of every description given at the theatres. In vain even the Government journal, the Lebatz, draws the most sombre description of the misery regards food; the remedy for all in France is oblivion of hard facts in soft heedless pleasures; even in the ... of the Revolution, when no man or woman knew how long he would keep his or her head on his shoulders, it became the fashion to wear one's hair, à la victime—that is to say, short cropped ready for the guillotine—and in this costume every one danced. The Grand Steeple-Chase has made every one here horse-mad for the time. The head mad, I beg to suggest respectfully, were not your countrymen; 1500 came to Paris to witness this performance, which took place in the most inclement of weathers, in the most swampy place near Paris. I am heart and soul opposed to steeple chases, in which men expose their lives wilfully, and, at the same time, torture the noblest of the animals given to us for our use by Providence. But, if such mad-cap perpetrations must take place, surely you manage these things too well in England to heed crossing the Channel to see them here. If there were some benefit to interns inant good understanding in the mixture of English and French gentlemen (and they united even as umpires of the day, Sir Wm. Massey Stanley being one judge, and Baron Leconteulx his colleague) the good effect was destroyed by the very natural victory or your countrymen over the ill-managed steeds of our Parisian horses, and over the acrets they buy in England for racers and hunters. What is certain is that you will never render us sportsmen of your school. We ... the natural denizens of towns; you, of the country. The first idea of an Englishman when he grows rich is to get out of town—out of London for as ... or eight months of the year; the first use of newly-acquired capital ... by a Frenchman is to secure himself a permanent abode in Paris. Louis XIV. once said "L'Etat c'est moi!" Paris now says, "Paris c'est la France!"

FRANCE

It will be seen by our Spanish news that considerable sensation had been ... at Madrid by the departure of M Concha, who was reported to be charged with the mission of endeavouring to induce Maria Christina not to return to Madrid for the present. M. Concha has arrived in Paris, a fact which, of course, is looked upon as one of significant importance

A private letter from Paris ... M. Concha arrived here yesterday ... Christina (through the Chargé d'Affaires of Spain), and his desire to be received by her Majesty. "In what character does he come?" she asked; "if in a public one, I will receive him—even in your presence if as a private individual, I shall be at home for him at ten o'clock to night." He presented himself on Monday night, indicating that his mission was a private one, and, in fact, such it was. He came to advise that she should relinquish her reported intention to return to Spain."

An accident happened on Monday, on the Rouen Railway, a few yards from the bridge of Asnières. An express engine ran into a luggage-train containing passengers, which had stopped near the bridge for the purpose of gathering the passengers' tickets. There is a curve just at this portion of the road, and the express engine, not seeing the luggage-train with fearful speed into it. The shock was ... She. One of the third-class carriages was smashed, and the persons in it thrown on and wounded, more or less seriously. Many were only bruised; but the number of wounded was six, having legs and arms broken, besides other injuries. As for the train itself, the carriages had all been forced into a heap by the concussion. Curious to say, the engineer and stoker of the express engine received no hurt

The illness of Lord Cowley has again taken an unfavourable turn. Great apprehensions are entertained as to his recovery.

At the meeting of the Chamber of Deputies on Monday, the Minister of Public Instruction introduced his long promised bill, relative to the system of secondary instruction

Countess de Brosson has arrived in Paris, from Madrid. She is accompanied by part of her household, and by her infant son, who was created Duke de Santa Isabel, by the Queen of Spain.

On Monday the letters patent whereby the Duke de Rianzares (M. Munoz) has become a naturalised Frenchman, under the title of the Duke de Montmoro, were enrolled in the Cour Royale. M Moreau de la Rochette was also admitted to take the oaths prescribed by the Charter on his being created a Baron

The Chamber of Deputies voted on Monday, by a majority of 219 to 27, the project of law authorising the Government to return by gradual instalments to the railway companies the guarantee funds deposited in its hands in proportion to the progress made in the works

Count de Montguyon, Peer of France, died last week, after a long and painful illness. He was formerly Chamberlain of the Emperor Napoleon, and in 1830 was a member of the Chamber of Deputies, in which capacity he took part in all the events of the Revolution of July

General Donmerc died at Paris a short time ago, at the advanced age of eighty He served in all the campaigns of the Republic and the Empire, and particularly distinguished himself as Colonel of the 9th Cuirassiers at the battles of Eylau, Friedland, and Wagram, at which last he was promoted to the rank of General of Brigade.

A grand dinner was given at the Tuileries last Saturday. Among the company were the Marquis and Marchioness of Normanby, the Marquis and Marchioness of Aidesbury, Earl and Countess of Hardwicke, Lord and Lady Granville, Earl and Countess Wilton, Lord and Lady Holland, Mr and Mrs Standish, Count Kelmansegge, Hanoverian Minister to the Court of St. James, Colonel Romilly, Miss Barrington, Dr. Hawtrey, General Fox, Lady Mary Fox, Count Louis de Noailles, &c.

Late on Sunday night the French Government received despatches from Algeria, bringing the intelligence that Abd el-Kader had again made his appearance within four days' marsch south of Miserah: that he had already been joined by several tribes Immediately on the arrival of this news, M. Hamon, sous-chef of the cabinet of the Minister of Foreign Affairs, was ordered to start for Tangiers on a special mission. He went by Madrid, to which city he took despatches

We are sorry to find that there has been a reaction in the corn markets in ... once, and that the price of grain has again risen. "In all the markets of the ... radius of supply," says La Réforme, "another strong rise has just declared ... If in grain. It varies generally from 2f. to 4f. per hectolitre. In not one of the markets has there been a sufficient supply for the local consumption. On other points beyond the radius there has also been a decided rise. Another decline in the Paris radius has reached for a month past on the most extreme points, it is to be feared that this fresh rise will also act on the departments where, in general, the supplies of wheat brought to the markets have continued feeble. On the other hand, it is unfortunately certain that our ports, far from being over-supplied with grain, have seen the arrivals materially diminish."

The Journal des Débats publishes an interesting analysis of the new Customs Bill, presented to the Chamber of Deputies by the Government. It says: "The bill on the Customs, presented on the 21st ult., to the Chamber of Deputies, by the Minister of Commerce, is a modest proposition in itself, which, however, possesses an essential character. It is a step in the path of Free-Trade. The modifications that it makes in the system of the Customs are of no great importance, but they are in the sense of liberty. Prohibition is suppressed with respect to a small number of articles, none of which are remarkable. They are as follow:—"Grand chicory, worked-crystal, curcuma in powder, tannin, and those specially specified in the tariffs, hair-twine, other than that of goats, cows, and dogs, nankeen by foreign vessels (the entry was permitted by French ships), different secondary chemical articles, hardware goods other than those described as mercery, tissues of bourre de soie, Cachemire fashion, tissues of Cachemire fabricated by the spindle in countries out of Europe, tissues of horsehair not mentioned in the tariff, tissues of the bark, wool, or nettles, &c.; tissues of silk, tissues of Silk of India, and of countries out of Europe, not imported directly (the direct importation was permitted). Each of these prohibitions is replaced by a high duty. The duties are not considerable in themselves, none of which has scarcely greater importance; lastly, and what is more serious, what is the really practical part of the bill, 398 articles have been struck out of the tariff With the exception of about 20, they are all pieces of little interest."

SPAIN

A most intense sensation has been created in the capital by the unceremonious dismissal, by the Queen, of several individuals connected with the Royal Household. The ceremony resembled a constitutional. The disgraced courtiers were the Marchioness de Santa Cruz, Camerara Mayor; Don Pedro de Egana, Intendiente of the Palace; Don Rubianes, Commandant of the Halberdiers; Colonel Gunse, a Lieutenant of the same corps; and the Count de Cumbres Altes, a Gentleman of her Majesty's Chamber. Various statements are given in the Madrid papers of the causes of this domestic commotion. Some ascribe it to the Queen's anxiety to rid herself from persons under the immediate influence of her mother and the French Court; others allege that her Majesty had the more readily dispensed with their services, because her Royal Consort highly approved of them. That M. Pacheco and his colleagues of the Ministerio, was, however, owing to the dismissal of the above-named Palace dignitaries, seems quite positive. The Marchioness de Santa Cruz and the Count de Cumbres Altes behaved so insolently to the Queen, that the Ministers were forthwith summoned to the Palace. General Mazarredo and M. Salamanca were the only two who could be found. They immediately attended, and insisted upon the commands of the Queen being at once complied with. The result was an explosion of indignation from the Marchioness of Santa Cruz, which the two Ministers bore with the patience of gallant gentlemen when attacked by a lady. The resistance of the Count de Cumbres Altes, who, as the principle of the Ministerio, was, however, obliged to be borne so meekly. Having expressed himself in a disrespectful manner with regard to the Queen personally, and his companions M. Egana and M. Rubianes having joined him in declaring that they would not obey the orders of La Reine Regin, he was told that there was placed in arrest. M. Egana, however, has written a letter to one of the Madrid papers, denying the statement, in regard to the arrest, so far as he was concerned. The affair was ultimately arranged as follows. M. Egana and M Rubianes consented to surrender their places at discretion, the Count de Cumbres-Altas was deprived of his, and moreover ordered to depart for Valencia, to which place he was sent off at once, under a guard of soldiers; and the Marchioness of Santa Cruz was prohibited with her husband from She gave up her place, but retains her salary. The Countess of Montijo has been appointed Camerara-Mayor instead of the dismissed Marchioness.

Since the above was written, another change in the Spanish Court more frequently than ever in public, the absence of her Consort being much remarked, although she was often accompanied by his father, the Infante Don Francisco de Paula.

The Queen, accompanied by her sister, gave the bull fight on the 5th inst. It was the first of the season. She was very simply and appropriately dressed, with a white mantilla, and a rose in her hair, and looked remarkably well. She was cheered to the echo by the vast assemblage of spectators, as she took her seat beside the Plaza de Toros—"Viva la Reina Hire! Viva la Reina Constitucional!" were shouted on all sides, and the Queen several times stood up and bowed in return. The performances kept every one in great excitement, and many of the bulls were shocking bad ones; and though an extra one was brought forward, making seven in all, there was not a single horse killed in the ring. The vast enthusiasm displayed by the Queen's subjects on her appearance in public ... re, and the marked change in the popular feeling must be very grateful to her, as it shows that the people appreciate her firmness and liberal spirit

The public mind was greatly excited throughout Madrid on the day of the 7th by the following circumstance:—A Cabinet Council had been held in the Palace on the 6th, in consequence, as was reported, of intelligence which was received by the Government from Marseilles, that Queen Christina was to leave Paris for Madrid on the 8th inst., and that the object of her voyage was to cause Queen Isabella to be declared incapable of directing the affairs of the State, and to transfer the Sovereign power to the Duchess of Montpensier, as Regent. The Government, it was said, immediately decided that Queen Christina should not be allowed to enter Spain, and that General Don Manuel de la Concha should be despatched immediately to Paris, with orders, in case he should meet the Queen-mother on the road, to persuade her to return, seeing that the gates of Madrid would be closed against her; but that, in case she should persist in entering Spain, then Gen. de la Concha should produce his full powers and arrest her What is certain is, that immediately after the Cabinet Council in the afternoon of the 6th, Gen. de la Concha was sent for by the Ministers, and started immediately for Paris, accompanied by Don Joachim de Zayas, the Commandant of the Riaimayor

The Madrid Gazette of the 8th, contains a Royal decree dated the 5th, declaring that M. Francisco Martinez de la Rosa ceases to be Ambassador, Extraordinary, Plenipotentiary to the Court of France, and another decree, also of the 5th, nominates General Narvaez, Duke of Valencia, to the post. Two other decrees of the same date nominate D. Lopez de la Torre y Gil, Ambassador at Lisbon, and appoint M. Gonzales Brave, member of the Royal Council, in his place.

On the 7th her Majesty went out in an open carriage and pair, which she drove herself. She was accompanied by her sister-in-law, the Princess Josephine, daughter of Don Francisco de Paula, and Don Francisco rode by the side of the carriage on horseback. A large crowd had assembled in front of the palace when her Majesty left it, and she was received with loud shouts of "Long live the Constitutional Queen." In the evening her Majesty went to the theatre with her sister-in-law, and she was received there also with acclamations. The King was not with them on either of these occasions.

General Serrano has been permitted, as his own request, to leave Madrid for Andalu ia, until his health is re-established, and until the proceedings taken against him shall be brought to a close.

It is stated that M. Salamanca, the new Minister of Finance, is engaged on a gigantic measure for the regeneration of public credit. He contemplates selling all the church and monastic property in the kingdom, and applying the proceeds to the payment of the interest due on the debt in the first instance, and to the extinction of the debt itself afterwards. The clergy are to be indemnified by a revenue amounting to three per cent. on the capital realised by the sale of the church property.

Bayonne letters of the 9th inst. state that M. Olozaga had left in the morning for Madrid.

PORTUGAL

Accounts have reached us from Lisbon to the 5th, and from Oporto to the 8th inst. The news received is of no decisive character. There is, however, nothing of importance. No change of any consequence had taken place in the position of the belligerent parties. There had been indeed some movement of troops. An expedition sent to the Algarve had landed, it was said, at Faro, and was about to march to Evora, to join the Conde Mello; and in Oporto itself some misunderstanding had arisen between bodies of the insurgents, but it was only slight, and soon arranged. The principal feature, however, of the news is, that the Queen's cause seemed to lose ground, and that its weakness was too palpable to be concealed. There was some rumour of concessions to the people of Oporto, to the exclusion of that portion of Lisbon that belongs to the Miguelite party, but there was little likelihood that the terms of the Royalists would be accepted if offered, and the cause of the insurgents only seemed the more improving. The blockade of the Douro was rendered more complete by the arrival of arms and ammunition for the Junta, had entered in defiance of the Royalist squadron, and another vessel with arms despatched to the popular General, Sa da Bandeira, had left in a similar manner.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM MEXICO.

The Hibernia has arrived at Liverpool from Boston and Halifax, bringing the usual mails of the last mail, and important accounts of a severe engagement between the American forces, under General Taylor, and that of Mexico, under Santa Anna

The scene of the action was at Buena Vista, a hacienda about six miles west of Saltillo. The fighting commenced on the 22nd of February, and ended on the 23rd. Santa Anna retired to Agua Nueva, a distance of ten miles.

The accounts come simultaneously from American and Mexican sources. The American statement is from Dr. Turner, of the United States army, who came from Monterey to Matamoros, and there published the intelligence, which came thence to New Orleans in a sailing vessel. Dr. Turner states in substance that the Mexicans lost from 4000 to 5000 men on the field, Santa Anna's adjutant general, and many officers and men, being taken prisoners. The American loss was said to be 700 killed and wounded. Among the killed are Colonels Yell, of Arkansas; H. Clay, jun., of Kentucky; and 60 other officers. The estimate of the number of the opposing forces, about 20,000 Mexicans to 5000 Americans, is not stated differently by this account. Subsequent to the action Santa Anna retreated to Agua Nueva to refresh his troops, and Taylor remained master of the battle field. The Mexican account is from the pen of Santa Anna himself, and is as follows:—

"Camp near Buena Vista, Feb. 23, 1847.

"Excellent Sir—After two days of battle, in which the enemy, with a force of 5000 to 9000 men and 26 pieces of artillery, lost five of his positions, three pieces of artillery, and two flags, I have determined to go back to Agua Nueva to provide myself with provisions, not having a single biscuit or a grain of rice left. Thanks to the position occupied by the enemy, he has not been completely beaten; but he left on the field about 2000 dead. Both armies have been cut to pieces, but the trophies of war will give you an idea on which side has been the advantage.

"We have struggled with hunger and thirst during forty hours, and if we can provide ourselves with provisions we will go again to charge the enemy. The soldiers under my command have done their duty and covered the honour of the Mexican nation with glory. The enemy has seen that neither his advantageous position, nor the broken nature of the ground, nor the rigour of the season (for it has been raining during the action), could prevent the terrible charge with the bayonet, which left him terrified.

"SANTA ANNA."

The Matamoros Flag, of March 23, has the following version:—General Taylor, while at Agua Nueva, twenty-two miles from Saltillo, with 5000 men, was attacked on the 22nd ult., by a Mexican force of 15,000. Finding that he could not maintain his position, he made good his retreat to Saltillo, covering his waggon train. Here a severe engagement took place in the streets, in which the Mexicans suffered a heavy loss. After destroying what of the public stores he could not transport, he continued his retrograde movement on Monterey until he reached the Rinconada Pass, where he was again attacked, but successfully defended himself. Here all the rumours, reports, and letters leave him. Once in Monterey, and he would be safe; but his ability to accomplish this march was altogether problematical, as the Mexicans were swarming in every direction.

IRELAND.

THE WHEAT AND POTATO CROPS.—The Irish papers give very favourable reports both respecting the wheat and potato crops. The Carlow Sentinel says there is every reasonable ground for anticipating a good harvest. More than the ordinary breadth of wheat is sown, and, even at the present moment, there is a greater quantity of land under tillage than last year. The farmers are planting potatoes generally, and seem to have little, if any, apprehension of failure. The Cork Reporter says it has learned from various sources that no symptoms of disease in shoots or sets of potatoes are as yet discovered. The indications are promising, so far as the present healthfulness. The potato has not for many years been known to sprout more vigorously. The Kerry Examiner has a paragraph to nearly a similar import, and private letters express surprise at the quantities of seed potatoes now forthcoming.

RELIEF WORKS IN IRELAND. A return just presented to Parliament, shows that the gross total number of persons employed on the relief works in Ireland, during the week ending the 27th of March, 1847, amounted to 679,023, and the total cost, &c., to £286,315.

M JULLIEN'S QUARREL AT DUBLIN.—M. Jullien has recently been entertaining the citizens of Dublin, at the Music-hall, Abbey-street, and has got into a quarrel. On the night of yesterday week, Herr Pischek, with M. Jullien, was called on to repeat a song. The leader refused to permit him—the audience got angry, and M. Jullien called them "a sixpenny mob." They retaliated by groaning, hissing, and finally broke some of the benches. Next night the "sixpennies"—by the by, the admission is a shilling—mustered in great force, and though M. Jullien was all submissiveness as to encores, yet as he did not apologise he was attacked. A rotten egg was broken upon his forehead, and, as he turned round, an orange struck him on the cheek. Some of the disturbers were removed by the police, and quiet was restored.—On Monday morning, Mr. Henry Watson, attorney's apprentice; Mr. Henry Mc. Intosh, medical student; and Mr. John Treacy, ..., College, were charged, at the Dublin Police-Office, with violence and disorderly conduct at the Music Hall on the night of last Saturday. Two policemen deposed to the disturbance on that Saturday night, and that the prisoners were aiding and abetting. The charge against Tracy was not proved. Dr. Kelly said he should fine Mr. Watson 30s., or fourteen days' imprisonment, and Mr. Mc Intosh 10s., or one day's imprisonment. Dr. Kelly added that if Mr. M'Intosh had proceeded against them for injury done him by their conduct, the consequence would be much more serious Mr. M'Intosh said he had no wish to punish the parties further, as he had suffered the real injury and loss from their unreasonable conduct. He feared it would be hard to get M. Jullien to form another engagement in Dublin Dr. Kelly: The same motive that induced M. Jullien to come to Dublin on this occasion, namely, pecuniary profit, would bring him back again—namely, self interest. Although he was obliged to punish these young men for transgressing the law, yet he would not hesitate to say that anything more insolent or in worse taste he never heard than that M. Jullien should stigmatise an audience, or any part of it, who came to patronise and support him, as a "sixpenny mob"

MURDER BY A BOY.—The following is an extract of a letter dated Drogheda, April 12: "A shocking murder of a boy was committed on Friday night last. Sir Alan Bellingham has a number of boys employed in trifling works on his demesne; one of them was discharged about 15, the other 12; they got their wages on Friday night, the younger receiving about 7s. The elder, who had been engaged in laying or cutting down quick hedges, was seen in the yard on Saturday evening sharpening a billhook, which he had been using at his work, and, being observed to laugh while engaged in the operation, he was asked the reason, but gave no answer. The younger boy did not go home that night, and was not identified as the one charged the preceding evening by the elder boy, together with a knife. The mother of the supposed assassin admitted that for some time back her son was afraid that the murdered boy would discover what he only knew, that he (the alleged murderer) was the culprit of stealing eggs from Sir A. Bellingham's poultry-yard. The young miscreant was committed to Dundalk gaol on the capital charge.

DREADFUL MURDER AND ARSON.—On Saturday night week two murders were perpetrated at Kiltankin, in the county of Tipperary, within eleven miles of Cahier. A man named Michael Brien went to Clogheen, to sell oats, and, having disposed of it, he returned home. In the evening, two acquaintances of his, named William and Lawrence Cull, came to his house, and, after remaining some time, they departed. Brien and one of his daughters went to bed, and another daughter, aged ten years, remained sitting by the fire. In some time after, the Culls re-entered the house, and took their seats by the fire. The daughter who had gone to bed meanwhile fell asleep, but was soon aroused by the crackling of fire. She immediately got up, and found her sister burned to death. She then called her father, but he made no reply, and, being almost suffocated with the smoke, she left the house. In a short time, it was ascertained that the latter was also dead. The price of the oats we have spoken of. An inquest was held on Monday. Doctor Bagwell examined the bodies, and found two ... were fractures on Brien's head. A verdict in accordance with the facts was returned, and both the Culls have been committed.

MELANCHOLY STATE OF THE COUNTY OF CORK The Cork Reporter gives the following lamentable sketch of the state of the southern and western baronies of that extensive county:—"The climax of poverty and misery has arrived. The peasantry are absolutely rotting off the surface of the earth. The living are swept off in the south-western baronies by pestilence, and the dead lie unburied, emitting away in this warm season where they drop and die. The unfortunate beings who took refuge under the bridge at Ballinhassig, died there, and there still their bodies lie, none venturing to approach them. On the verge of the coach road, that runs in that neighbourhood, a body lay exposed for days; and the highways, dykes, and cabins of the south and west are darkly dotted with corpses blackening in the sun, or filled with masses of reeking putrefaction." Yet, according to the Government circular, issued on Saturday, all the relief works are to be stopped on the 1st day of May next.

A Correspondent has forwarded for our Engraver the annexed sketch of the manner in which Pay Clerks travel in the county of Kilkenny

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY

The House of Commons resumed its sittings to-day. It was chiefly occupied with the affairs of the army

NEW MEMBER.—Lord Charles James Fox Russell took the oaths and his seat for Bedfordshire.

MEDICAL OFFICERS IN THE ARMY.—On the order of the day for going into Committee of Supply, Sir HOWARD DOUGLAS called attention to the grievances of medical officers, surgeons, and paymasters of regiments, who have not been included in the warrant issued in July, 1846, for an improved retirement to a limited number of medical officers, and all officers of regimental staff, to extend to them in limited numbers the benefits conferred by warrants dated 1840, to limited numbers of officers of all other branches and arms of the service.—Mr. FOX MAULE declared he disliked the arrangement as recently made by his predecessor in office, upon the cases brought forward by the honourable and gallant officer. The motion was not carried any further.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE CONDITION OF SOLDIERS.

Sir DE LACY EVANS moved an address to the Crown, for an inquiry into various subjects connected with the Army, particularly as regarded soldiers' rations; commuted pensions; barrack-accommodation, and decent quartering of married non-commissioned officers and privates; claim of old Peninsular officers who had sold their commissions, to the medal; and that of retired officers to the advantage of the brevet, from which they had been excluded. Also, as to the expediency of modifying the system of promotion by the purchase and command of regiments; and why it was that general officers of the Engineers, Artillery, and the East India Company's Army were ineligible for appointments on the general staff without their services might be available. Also, as to the warrant of the 1st of May last, regulating the pay of the higher class of officers, and the system pursued in respect to the Military College of Sandhurst.

Mr. FOX MAULE declined to follow the honourable and gallant General through the multitud.nous details upon which he had touched - details which embraced every alleged abuse in the service, and every claim advanced on behalf of the Army. The right honourable gentleman recapitulated the several measures which have lately been taken to improve the condition of the Army and to promote the efficiency of the military service.

Colonel LINDSAY, Mr. Hume, Mr. Williams, Captain Pechell, and Mr. Ward addressed the House, after which the motion was withdrawn, and the House went into Committee of Supply.

THE NAVY ESTIMATES.—As soon as the House went into Committee, the Government brought on the Navy Estimates. The sum of £43,270 having been proposed for wages to artificers employed in the establishments abroad, Mr. WILLIAMS drew attention to the inefficient state of several of the ships in commission, and said the annual estimates were much swelled in amount as regarded the naval department, by a system of gross jobbing in the dockyards. Lord JOHN RUSSELL admitted that the dockyards had too often been the scenes of very wasteful expenditure, and gave very credit to the Government for the exertions it was making to put a stop to a system of extravagance alike injurious to the revenue and to the public service. Our naval architecture was decaying, and he thought that none but scientific men should be employed as officers in the dockyards.—Mr. WARD said that the subjects adverted to were receiving the serious attention of the Government.—Sir C. NAPIER was glad that Government had become alarmed at the steam-in question, and that its attention was directed to a remedy.—Captain GORDON was sorry that the School of Naval Architecture had been abolished, and hoped the Admiralty would consider the propriety of having it re-organisation.—Mr. HUME condemned the whole system of Sir William Symonds, and said he believed he had never built a good ship, nor one which had at all answered to its lines of flotation. It was contrary to common sense to allow such a state of things to continue, or to imagine that ship-building was the only art in the world to which science could lend no sort of assistance.—Captain BERKELEY denied that Sir William Symonds had ever built a good ship of war, though he admitted that he had failed in his construction of line-of-battle-ships. He had done good service in getting the country out of the old plan of ship-building, although he had carried his own plan too far. The committee of reference now recommended the adoption of a medium between the old system and the new. After some observations from Lord INGESTRE, Sir C NAPIER said he confined his condemnation of Sir William Symonds's ships to his line-of-battle ships and steamers.—After a short conversation, in which Captain Pechell, Mr. Hume, and Captain Plunkridge took part, the subject dropped.

The House was engaged till past one o'clock in the morning in the discussion of the various estimates proposed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. TUESDAY.

The House sat for only about three hours, and the business was not important.

THE DUKE OF GREECE.—Lord JOHN MANNERS gave notice that, on the 27th inst., he would bring the condition of Greece before the House.

THE GOVERNMENT EDUCATION MEASURE.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE gave notice that, on the proposal for the Education vote in the Miscellaneous Estimates, he would move that, previous to any sums being voted to carry into effect the Education scheme proposed by the Government, a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the expediency of not proceeding with the said scheme until the public mind was consulted, and to report whether the regulations contemplated would not confer undue influence on the Crown, and invade the constitutional functions of Parliament, and the civil and religious rights of the people.

REGISTRATION.—Mr. WALPOLE obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the law for the registration of persons entitled to vote in the election of Members of Parliament for England and Wales, pursuant to suggestions contained in the report of the Committee on Votes of Electors.

EXPENSES OF THE NEW PALACE AT WESTMINSTER.—Mr. HUME moved for a return of the various expenses incurred in the erection of the New Houses of Parliament.—Mr. BALFOUR seconded the motion. He believed that before the building was completed, a sum of not less than £2,000,000 would be expended, and he thought that it was high time that Parliament should exercise some control over the expenditure of so large a sum of money.—The motion was agreed to.

FEVER (IRELAND) BILL. This bill was, with some amendments, read a third time and passed.

The House adjourned soon after seven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House met to-day at twelve o'clock, and sat till six.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC RELIEF BILL.

On Mr. WATSON's motion to go into Committee on the Roman Catholic Relief Bill,

Sir R. INGLIS moved, as an amendment, that the House should go into Committee that day six months. The hon. baronet deprecated in the strongest terms any further concessions to the Roman Catholic Church, and all direct encouragement such as that proposed by this bill to the Jesuits. He considered this measure to be one designed to undermine and subvert the Established Church, and which would imperil the right of the present Royal Family to the throne of these realms. Considering the small majority by which the second reading had been carried, he did not think he could be charged with any factious opposition by dividing the House on the question to go into Committee.

Mr. LAW seconded the amendment

The EARL OF ARUNDEL, in supporting the motion of Mr. Watson, said that a struggle was going on between Catholicism and Protestantism, and he had no doubt of the result. He had no doubt but that ultimately Protestantism would become extinct, and that Catholicism would be in its ascendant long after the Church of England had passed away and had been forgotten.

Mr. PLUMPTRE said the noble Lord had spoken out very plainly, and he honoured him for having done so. The Protestants of the kingdom would now understand the contest, and be prepared to meet it. As to the result he had no doubt, for Protestantism was founded on a rock which could not be successfully assailed.

Lord H. VANE thought he could be charged with any factious opposition by declining the House on the question to go into Committee.

Several other hon. members spoke for and against the bill,

Mr. WATSON replied to the objections urged against the bill, and the House divided—

For going into Committee	148
Against it	187
Majority against the bill	—39

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

NEW MEMBER.—Mr. Finney took the oaths and his seat for the Eastern Division of Somerset, in the room of the late Colonel Gore Langton.

THE GOVERNMENT EDUCATION MEASURE.—A great many petitions were presented on the subject of the Government plan of education.—Sir J. GRAHAM intimated that it was intended not to afford any aid for the purposes of education where the authorised version of the Bible was not used.—Lord J. RUSSELL entered into a short statement of what was intended to be done by the Committee of Education in accordance to the minute which they had issued in 1846; a minute was then agreed to in relation to the National Societies' Schools, and the British and Foreign Societies' Schools, and on other subjects relating to education, which minute he noble friend the Marquis of Lansdowne was prepared to carry out. In coming to this resolution, it did not preclude the Educational Commissioners from coming to and issuing other minutes and regulations if they thought it advisable so to do.—Mr. T. S. DUNCOMBE said the question created much interest in the public mind. He therefore wished to ask the noble Lord if he intended to proceed with the education scheme on Monday next. Lord J. RUSSELL said, it certainly was his intention to proceed with the resolutions relating to education on Monday next.

WRECK OF THE "THETIS."

Viscount INGESTRE moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the circumstances relative to the recovery of treasure and public stores sunk in her Majesty's late frigate Thetis, off Cape Rio in 1830. He did not want the Treasury to pay away money as a gift, but to render up that which had been unjustly obtained from a body of men who exerted themselves most laudably in saving a vast amount of treasure from the wreck of her Majesty's frigate Thetis. She was sunk in water from six to thirteen fathoms deep; and, had it not been for the exertions, bravery, and mechanical skill of Captain Dickenson, £137,000 would have been lost. It was his intention so long ago as 1844 to have brought this subject under the attention of the House. But he was prevented by his hon. and gallant friend the Member for Ripon, who was of opinion that discussion might prejudice the cause, as he believed that the Board of Admiralty would do justice to those brave men.

Captain PECHELL thought this to be of all the cases he had ever heard the most extraordinary. One of her Majesty's ships, when on a cruise, was wrecked on a dangerous coast, and the stores and specie on board were at risk. The Admiral on the station gave orders that every exertion should be made to save the specie and stores, and Capt. Dickenson was the officer who had the duty in charge, and who had exerted himself in a manner the most exemplary. After several months' sufferings and privations of the severest kind endured by the crew at work in the wrecks, a very considerable sum of money was saved from the ship. The Board of Admiralty handed over one-third of the whole to Captain Dickenson and his officers, who felt in some degree satisfied with the decision. But now came a most extraordinary charge: the Board sent in a bill, which [illegible] tax. The other night the excessive charges and extortion of the Admiralty Ecclesiastical Courts had been exposed, but he would say this bill of the Board of Admiralty, of 1831 and 1832—he did not know who they were—was of a worse character. It was not only abominable extortion, but gross robbery. (Hear, hear.) Thirteen thousand pounds were charged for the wear and tear of these vessels, and they also charged for the time the ships were employed on other service for the victualling of the men.

After some discussion the motion was rejected on a division, by 53 to 32.

THE ARMY SERVICE BILL. The remainder of the evening was occupied with the consideration of this Bill, the third reading of which was carried on a division.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COMMENCEMENT OF EASTER TERM.—Easter Term commenced on Thursday morning, but it was not attended with the ancient ceremony of the Judges, Queen's Counsel, and other dignitaries of the law, breakfasting with the Lord Chancellor, and afterwards proceeding to Westminster Hall in state. The old custom of the Sergeants and Queen's Counsel appearing in full bottomed wigs and Court dresses on the first day of every term has also been dispensed with, and on this occasion the Judges and barristers of all the courts appeared in their usual forensic wigs and gowns. Nothing of importance occurred in any of the courts

THE GREAT WESTERN AND THE NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANIES.—A long argument has taken place in the VICE-CHANCELLOR'S Court, in a case, Wrigley v. Alston, between the Great Western Railway Company and the North-Western Railway Company, or rather between their respective partisans in the Birmingham and Oxford Junction Railway Company. The case was first brought before the Court on the 1st and 2nd instant. It was introduced upon the demurrer of the Birmingham and Oxford Railway Company to a bill by five of the shareholders against the Company and its Directors, complaining that the Directors had refused to allow four of their body to retire in the month of February last, in the order of rotation in which that number should have retired, under the provisions of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act; and that the present Directors were therefore an illegally constituted body, and that they were prosecuting a bill now before Parliament for the sale of the Company to the Great Western Company, whereas the great body of the shareholders were opposed to that measure, and supported an union with the North-Western Company, which the Directors resisted. To this bill the Company and the Directors severally demurred. The argument upon the demurrer of the Company turned upon two points; first, the constitution of the bill by a few shareholders in their individual capacity; and secondly and principally, the construction of the two acts of Parliament, the special act for this Company and the General Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, the two acts being irreconcilable in their language upon the subject of the retirement and rotation of Directors.—The Vice Chancellor, on Tuesday, recapitulated all the points of the argument, and gave his judgment that the demurrer must be overruled.

COMMITMENT UNDER THE NEW SMALL DEBTS ACT.—At the WESTMINSTER COUNTY COURT, on Tuesday, an order of commitment was made under the following circumstances. The defendant, Mr. Francis Blackall Jones, a gent.eman residing at the Palace Chambers, St. James's-street, was formerly summoned to this Court for a sum of £3 17s. 9d., due to the plaintiff, and not appearing, judgment was given, and an order made upon him for payment of the debt and costs, amounting together to the sum of £4 6s. 9d. This order the defendant took no notice of, and under the new act the plaintiff took out a fresh summons against [illegible], which came for hearing on Tuesday. The defendant, although personally served with the fresh process, which is required by the act, did not attend, and the plaintiff applied to the Court for his commitment under the 98th section. The learned Judge said that, as the first application for a commitment under the new act, on an unsatisfied judgment, it would not be out of place to read the 98th section, so that defendants might know the power invested in the Judge. The learned gentleman then read the section, which, after giving power to plaintiffs to take proceedings against defendants on unsatisfied judgments, goes on to state that the Judge shall have power to examine the defendant upon oath as to his means and expectations at the time he contracted the debt, and that if the party so summoned shall not attend or shall not give sufficient excuse, or refuses to be sworn before the Judge, or in the opinion of the Judge has obtained credit under false pretences, or has wilfully contracted such debt with intent to defraud, the Judge shal. have the power to commit such person to the common gaol or House of Correction, or any prison that may be approved of, for any period not exceeding forty days. The defendant stands committed for forty days, but under the 90th section he can release himself before that term expires, if he pay the debt and costs. This imprisonment will not release him from the payment of the debt.

COUNTRY NEWS.

EAST SOMERSET ELECTION.—Mr. Finney was on Saturday last elected, at Wells, for East Somersetshire, in the room of the late Colonel Gore Langton. There was no opposition. Captain Scobell nominated Mr. Finney, and the Hon Major Boyle seconded the proposition. Mr. Finney, in his speech of thanks, expressed himself hostile to the principle of Protection.

REPRESENTATION OF EAST SUSSEX.—Viscount Cantilupe has issued an address to the electors of the Eastern Division of Sussex, declaring himself a candidate at the ensuing election. He holds himself unpledged; is an advocate for religious toleration; and is prepared to support the repeal of the Malt-tax ANDOVER ELECTION.—Mr Chubb has issued an address to the electors of Andover, announcing his intention of appearing as a candidate for the representation of the borough upon a Dissolution.

STATE OF LIVERPOOL.—The person employed by the parish authorities of Liverpool to provide coffins for the poor creatures who are dying daily from starvation or fever, states that he supplies more than 200 of these fragile tenements every week. He further stated that he received an order for 36 dozen on Thursday (last week).

From the 1st of February to the 6th of April, there arrived in Liverpool, from Ireland, 48,812 persons. There are now on the parish books 11,000 Irish getting relief. The number of emigrants expected in January is 29,000.

SHEFFIELD.—The Town Council of Sheffield, a ter a very long debate, resolved on Wednesday, by a majority of 38 to 10, to petition the House of Commons in favour of the Government Plan of Education. The Mayor spoke in favour of the petition, but, according to the usual custom, did not vote, or the majority would have been 39, or about 3 to 1.

FATAL ACCIDENT TO A MAGISTRATE AT DEVIZES.—A Coroner's inquest was held at Devizes, on Monday, before Mr. Whitmarsh, on the body of Mr. E. F Colston, in Roundway Park, a magistrate for the county of Wilts, and a justice of peace for Devizes, who met with his death under the following distressing circumstances From the evidence it appeared that on Friday morning the unfortunate gentleman went into the park to see the labourers who were at work. He was last seen by a workman proceeding in the direction of some newly formed fish ponds, and in the course of an hour the man passing the fish ponds perceived something in the water, which he discovered to be a corpse, and on obtaining assistance it was got out and identified. Mr. Jones, a surgeon, was in attendance, but life had fled. It was explained to the jury that the course the deceased took to the ponds led over a bank more than 20 feet high, and either from apoplexy, to which he was predisposed, or from giving way, he must have fallen down into the pond. The jury, in the absence of positive evidence, returned a verdict of "Found dead." The event has created the deepest sensation in the neighbourhood.

STRANGE SUICIDE OF TWO LOVERS, AT LEEDS.—The Leeds Mercury gives an account of the suicide of a young man and woman in humble life, which was committed after the approved French model. The two suicides were named Joseph Bolland and Maria Wilson, the former 19, and the latter 17 years of age. On Wednesday morning (last week), they left their home, and made a round of visits to their friends. They breakfasted with one relative of the deceased female, took tea with another, and spent a cheerful evening with a party of young companions. These they represented as farewell visits to each, clinging to their relatives that they were going on tramp to Harrogate, and to their companions that they were going to France, where employment had been offered them. With the latter they seem to have had an evening of unbroken enjoyment—eating, drinking, and singing, with all the incidents of a merry-making. In the morning they intimated to their relatives a probable farewell for ever; in the evening, they left their companions with embraces of affection and pledges of friendship, and within half-an-hour rushed together to a watery grave, and were found on the morrow clasped in each other's arms, in the river Aire, and bound together by handkerchiefs that had previously been the reciprocal tokens of affection. At the inquest, the jury returned a verdict to the effect—"That the two deceased persons destroyed themselves, and were at the time in a sane state of mind."

SCOTLAND.

THE CALEDONIAN RAILWAY STATION.

The foundation stone of the Caledonian Railway Station, at the Edinburgh Terminus, was laid with Masonic honours yesterday week, by Grand Lodge of Scotland, his Grace the Duke of Atholl, grand master mason, assisted by the other officers of the Grand Lodge—in presence of the Lord Provost and magistrates of Edinburgh, and the directors of the Caledonian Railway.

When the ceremony had been lowered into its place, and the usual masonic ceremonies had been gone through, the Duke of Atholl addressed the assemblage. His Grace congratulated the directors of the Caledonian Railway, his brother masons, and the inhabitants of Edinburgh generally, on the work they had thus commenced. He need not enter on the merits of the Caledonian Railway; they would speak for themselves and no words of his could enhance the merits of such an undertaking, which would open up a direct and speedy communication between England and Scotland.

Mr. John Stephenson (the contractor) addressed a few words to the assembly, and expressed a hope that by the end of this year, or at all events very early in the beginning of next, passengers would be able to leave Edinburgh in the morning, and dine at London on the same day.

EPITOME OF NEWS.—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

It appears from the report read at the meeting of the shareholders of the Paris and Strasburg Railway a few days ago, that the sections of Paris to Epernay, 87 miles; Nancy to Metz, 36 miles; and Surreburg to Strasburg, 44 miles; will be opened during the summer of 1848

According to private accounts from New Orleans there had been a skirmish in New Mexico, on the 25th of December, between a United States force of 600 men, under Colonel Doniphan, and one of 1100 Mexicans, ending in the defeat of the latter. The Mexican troops were from Chihuahua

The New York papers mention that the winter at Santa Fé was the coldest ever known in that region. Nine United States soldiers had been frozen to death in that town; and it was feared that a body of 120 teamsters, who had left Santa Fé in November for the United States, had perished from the inclemency of the weather. Typhus fever had also swept off the men daily.

The German newspapers state that Professor Schonbein, the inventor of the cotton-powder, has discovered a new composition which produces the same effects as the inhalation of ether, without causing any danger. The nature of the new invention is not described.

We hear from Constantinople that on the 22nd ult. the newly-constructed Government silk manufactories at Brussa, were consumed by fire. It is supposed the damage exceeds £300,000.

It is the intention of the Directors of the Great Western Railway to set apart one division of a first-class carriage in every train for the exclusive accommodation of ladies who travel without a male companion.

The two young men, Lawrence and Schnitz, who were last week examined at Marlborough-street on a charge of picking the pocket of Miss Hammond in an omnibus, have since been convicted at the Central Criminal Court, and sentenced to seven years transportation.

A grand exhibition of works of the Fine Arts is to be opened at Amsterdam on the 3rd of May. Foreign artists will be allowed to exhibit.

The municipal authorities of Berlin having announced to the King of Prussia their desire to give a grand banquet to the members of the Diet, his Majesty replied that with the misery that existed, it would be better to spend the money in more useful objects. It is consequently believed that no fête will be given.

Mr. Brooke, so well known as the enterprising traveller and successful settler in the Indian Archipelago, has been appointed Commissioner and Consul-General from England to the Sultan and Independent Chiefs of Borneo. Mr. Brooke will reside at Sawarak.

There was a riot at Rome on Palm Sunday, on account of the dearness of provisions. A mob of 600 persons attempted to pillage the bakers' shops. There was a great outcry against Cardinal Gizzi, who had not prevented the exportation of corn.

The foundation of a grand new theatre near the Körnthmer-Thor, at Vienna, has been laid. The theatre is to bear the name of the National Theatre, and is to be fitted up on a scale of great magnificence. It is to be finished in two years.

The Plymouth Journal notices that in several towns potatoes have become plentiful, and the greater portion of fair quality. Prices at Salisbury were on Tuesday week full 4s. per sack lower than the previous week.

The late Member for Canterbury, James Bradshaw, Esq., who died on the 4th ultimo, had executed his will on the 27th of January previous, appointing his wife (formerly Miss Tree) sole executrix, and leaving her all his property of every description. The personalty was estimated at £30,000

A new and simple mode of producing insensibility to pain, by the use of ether, was tried with success last week by a dentist at Macon (France). A young and very nervous woman, having two of her molar teeth taken out, he inclined her head over a large basin, into which he had put about an ounce and three quarters of ether, and in less than three minutes the desired effect was produced by the vapour entering her mouth, and the operations performed without her feeling the least pain.

The Cobden fund, according to the lists published at Manchester, now amounts to nearly £70,000.

At Liverpool alone, within the month just closed, and chiefly towards the close, bonds 186,164 bushels of peas and beans, upwards of 127,000,000lbs. of bread stuffs were imported from foreign countries

The Members of the Committee of the Orleans and Vierzon Railway last week visited the works from Orleans to Bourges, which were found to be pushed forward a state as to leave no doubt that this portion of the road may be opened on the 1st of July

Last Saturday the cargo (guano) of the Oregon, from Patagonia, the first vessel which entered the Birkenhead Dock, was offered at public auction. There was a spirited competition for the first lot, which was sold at £9 5s. per ton, including bags. About 60 tons were sold altogether, down to £5 12s. 6d.

A letter from Constantinople mentions that the Sultan upon hearing of the sufferings of the Irish, caused to be handed to the Hon. Mr. Wellesley £1000, to be disposed of by him as he may think proper towards their alleviation

Letters from Alexandria of the 29th ult., announce that on the 22nd upwards of 40 vessels laden with corn sailed from that port, mostly bound for Malta and Gibraltar

A very lamentable description of the island of Madeira is given under date of the 20th ult. There was a very great scarcity of food, which was exorbitantly dear, and there had been many deaths from starvation. There had been a fine rallying cry of the rioters "Sustain the Queen and Her Majesty." It was feared that there would be a complete famine before bread could be obtained from England.

The correspondence from St. Petersburg of the 28th ult. refers to the perfect glut of wheat in the markets of the Russian capital. There was on hand a superfluity of supply sufficient to load 900 or 1000 vessels. In the markets of Russia foreign orders to the extent of 3,000,000 of hectolitres had been executed.

A letter from Breslau, of the 3rd, says:—"In the month of March, 1846, Mr. Ronge was condemned to a month's imprisonment, for having preached at Magdeburgh without the permission of the authorities. The day before yesterday Mr. Ronge rendered himself a prisoner. Upwards of 2000 persons accompanied him on his passage, crying 'Ronge for ever!' 'Religious liberty for ever!' but this demonstration gave rise to no disturbance."

The Emperor of Russia has just given orders that the works of the railway from St. Petersburgh to Moscow shall be pushed forward with the greatest activity, and that the number of workmen at present employed shall be increased to 60,000 soldiers. It is stated that this great railway will be entirely comp eted in the course of the autumn of next year, and, perhaps, even sooner.

A letter from Naples, of the 29th ultimo, states that the poor of that city are suffering dreadfully from the high price of provisions, and that when the King appears in public he is surrounded by objects of misery imploring for relief, which he bestows with a liberal hand.

On the 17th ultimo, Suetozer, son and heir of the reigning Prince Alexander Karageowitz, of Servia, died at Belgrade, in his 7th year. There is another son living.

On Tuesday, the metropolis was completely glutted with mackerel, to such a degree was the supply that six and eight were sold for a shilling. Towards evening the prices were reduced, when twelve, and, in some instances, fourteen, were sold for the same amount. The principal portion arrived from Teignmouth by the South Devon and Great Western Railways, and the remainder were sent up from Brighton and Southampton.

Arrangements are being ma le by the Postmaster-General for causing all letters to be stamped with the dated stamp of every office through which they pass. Hitherto they have been posted and stamped where they have been delivered. The new arrangement will facilate the detection in any particular office at which any delay or error in the transmission of correspondence may occur.

A shepherd in the county of Caithness lately lost two or three of his master's sheep, and, being determined his employer should not be a loser in the matter, stole the same number from a neighbour, for which he has just been committed to the gaol of Wick.

By the Bellona, arrived in the Clyde, we have news from New York to the 17th ult. The only intelligence of interest relates to a report which had reached that city from Pernambuco of hostilities between the blacks and whites at Maseios. Little credit was given to the report.

During the week ending on Sunday last, the number of persons passing and repassing between England and France, was—At Boulogne, 1373; at Calais, 840; total, 2213.

The Prince of Leiningen is detained at Munich, owing to indisposition. His Highness is about to proceed to London in order to accompany his augnst relative, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, to Germany in the course of the summer.

The Swiss journals contain a manifesto by the seven Catholic Cantons, remonstrating against the suppression of the convents under the decree of the Grand Council of Argau of 17th January, 1841. The schism between the majority and minority of the Confederation becomes daily more and more wide, and everything presages serious events.

A distressing event, connected with the loss of the Tweed, occurred at Southampton last week. A poor woman, the wife of one of the crew of that ill-fated vessel, the mother of six children, dropped down dead on being told abruptly by a neighbour that the Tweed was lost, and that all hands had perished. What renders the circumstance the more affecting is, that the husband arrived safely at Southampton in the Avon packet, being one of the persons whose lives were so providentially saved.

Sir W. Gossett has not yet sufficiently recovered from his late indisposition to resume his official duties in the House of Commons. The hon gentleman a few days since left Hastings and proceeded to Leamington, where he is now residing, for the benefit of his health.

The following arrivals of potatoes from foreign countries took place in one day at the commencement of the present week.—From Hamburg, 16 baskets; from St. Sebastian, 2879 quintals; from Harlingen, 159 bags; from Rotterdam, 35 tons weight; and from New Orleans, 80 barrels.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

We this day present to our readers two Illustrations from the charming ballet of "Thea," first produced, two or three weeks since, at Her Majesty's Theatre, and performed on Saturday and Tuesday last. The one is the portrait of Marie Taglioni. It is a good resemblance, and will give some idea of the marvellous grace and elasticity which have already raised this young girl to so high a rank in her art, while she yet preserves that almost infantile ingenuousness of face and look, which imparts to her performance a triple charm. The other represents the final scene of the ballet, which is as novel in effect as it is beautiful. Marie Taglioni, Rosati, and Paul Taglioni, are encircled by flowers, while the attendants of the Floral Goddess are twining gay garlands on either side. The most remarkable effect is that produced by the gradual advance of the whole group to the front of the stage, the illumination increasing till the whole is enveloped in a perfect blaze of light.

MDLLE. MARIE TAGLIONI.

This theatre, which re-opened its portals on Saturday last, was to have commenced its after-Easter campaign with "L'Elisir d'Amore," but the great basso, Labache, who was to have made his reappearance that night, was seized the day before with a cold, which rendered his execution of the part of Dulcamara impossible; and by an admirable piece of operatic management, Verdi's new opera, "I Due Foscari," promised for a week later, was substituted for the "Elisir," and got up with a perfection, and performed with a spirit and ensemble which bore no trace of the hurry in which its performance was prepared. To each and all of those who took a part in the opera, the greatest praise is due; the least unwillingness or want of zeal on the part of any, would have had a fatal effect; but actors, choruses and orchestra, stage dressers, and mechanics, were all equally au fait in their several vocations, and seemed to have leagued together to prove the efficacy of the present system of management at this theatre.

The plot of "I Due Foscari" is taken from Byron's well-known play; and closely adheres to the facts as they are given us in the history of Venice. It is a truly Venetian subject—a story of cold-blooded tyranny and oppression on the one hand, and of helpless and persecuted innocence on the other, to which the grave and solemn character of much of Verdi's music is well adapted; while its dramatic power gives an effectiveness to the whole, which the anti-dramatic genius of Byron had left wanting. The treatment of "I Due Foscari" is, in many respects, different from that of the other of his operas (especially "Nino" and "Ernani") which have been brought out here. The bringing into prominence of the solos and duets, and the consequent distinction of importance of the choruses and concerted pieces, are more in accordance with the general practice of Italian composers, and likely to be more generally popular. For ourselves, though we greatly admire the fine morceaux interspersed throughout this opera, we cannot concede that they should take precedence of those masterpieces of composition, the finales and choruses of "Nino" and "Ernani," in which the genius of the composer has taken its loftiest flight. He has, however, shown in "I Due Foscari," that he possesses genius for the lighter and more popular style of composition, as well as for that generally thought to be his forte; and that he can write tunes to compete with any of the Donizettian school. As a dramatic work, "I Due Foscari" appears to us far more complete and more impressive than any of the other operas of Verdi's given here.

The most important character in this opera is that of the old Doge. Powerless, though with all the semblance of power, unable to stretch forth a hand to save his innocent son from exile and death, and even compelled to join in his sentence obliged with his own hand to seal the unhappiness of himself and those he loves best—and then, and only then, stripped of that rank and dignity to which he has sacrificed everything else—this character is an essentially dramatic one; and never could it find a more admirable impersonator than Coletti, whose performance throughout this opera is surpassingly excellent. From the beginning to the end the character is faultless sustained by him: in his hands, the old Venetian noble never, in the moments of the greatest passion, forgets his stately pride and dignity of deportment. The exquisite feeling with which he sings is undisfigured by a taint of exaggeration; and in the last scene he winds up the enthusiasm of his audience to the highest pitch. Seldom do we hear a burst of admiration so spontaneous and universal as that which interrupted his song in this scene, in which his splendid voice—so clear, so full, so steady, and so entirely under his control—produced an effect not easily to be forgotten. The qualities which Coletti displays in this opera—the power of voice, the admirable taste—are available for every part, and he has already evinced them in "Nino" and "Lucia," but here they display themselves with more than their wonted effect, the music, as well as the character of the part, being specially adapted to him. His very appearance was worthy of study: he wore his splendid and excellently chosen dress with a dignity that had nothing of stage-trick about it.

The part of the prima donna in this opera is, though an arduous, not exactly an advantageous, one: it was, however, selected for the début of a lady who has already appeared at concerts in England, and is well known on Continental stages in Germany and Italy—Madame Montenegro. It must have been no inconsiderable trial of nerve to this lady to make her first appearance before the fastidious audience of this great theatre a whole week before the time specified for her début: and no one could wonder at the extreme tremor and emotion under which she was clearly suffering throughout the opera; surmounting it, however, at intervals, as, for example, in the fine duet with the Doge, the quartet in the second act, &c.; sufficiently to give evidence of great musical feeling and science, of considerable facility of execution, and of the possession of a voice which, though apparently somewhat unequal in point of tones, possesses notes of remarkable sweetness, and of a most touching quality. Her genius as an actress is unquestionable; she is full of energy, and, in person, is dignified, commanding, and graceful. Her costume was splendid, and most true to the Venetian type; as, indeed, were those of all the personages on the stage.

These were the impressions produced by the first night's performance. On Tuesday, however, her tremor having partially subsided, she gave evidence of a skill and taste, and an impassioned feeling, which raised her tenfold in the opinion of the audience. And here let us add that, admirably as "I Due Foscari," went off the first night, on Tuesday it was given with a spirit which threw the Saturday performance quite into the shade. If the artists engaged in it had been for years in the habit of performing it together, they could not attain a more complete ensemble.

By common consent, Fraschini is allowed to have sung the part of Jacopo more finely, as a whole, in this opera, than any other in which he has appeared on our Anglo-Italian stage. In the other operas in which he has performed, his voice has truly, at intervals, come forth splendidly, but his performance has been unequal. Here he sings admirably throughout, while he seems to have conquered that apparent difficulty in the eliciting of his notes, which he occasionally evinced before—the consequence, probably, of a first acquaintance with our English climate.

His voice is apparently indefatigable; he never seems, like most great tenors, to manage or keep it in reserve for the moments requiring special effort; from beginning to end, he gives forth the full volume of voice, which, in spite of this, never fails at the critical moment. The enthusiastic energy which characterises his singing, finds full scope in this opera, in which he called forth, throughout, the warmest applause.

It is difficult to witness anything more dramatic or more dramatically executed than the quartet of the second act, in which Jacopo and Lucrezia denounce Loredano for his malignant persecutions, and the old Doge endeavours to reason his exasperated son and daughter into prudence. Here the well known energy of the Tenor della Malebranca produced an electrical effect; and he was admirably seconded by Montenegro, whose dramatic genius displayed itself in a remarkable manner.

This quartet produced an immense effect. On Saturday it was repeated, amidst enthusiastic applause; and it was rather the fault of the artists than of the audience that it enjoyed not the double encore still lately a most unusual honour. In consequence of the numerous encores was not complied with.

Novelties succeed each other so rapidly that our space fails us to do justice to the remaining features of the performances of the past week, and especially to the rentrée of Mdlle. Lucile Grahn, who seems to gain in spirit and in elasticity of movement every time we see her. Her Bacchante is a truly classical and poetical delineation of a subject, which, brought into the sphere of realism, would be anything but attractive. We have many times noticed the admirable grouping in this divertissement, which strikes us with renewed force on every fresh performance.

Mdlle. Grahn likewise appeared in a new ballet on Thursday, another composition of Paul Taglioni. The following is the ground-work of the plot:—

Orithea, an Amazon Princess, conquers in battle Alcesta, a young and valiant warrior, whom she takes prisoner, and with whom she falls in love. The Queen of the Amazons indignantly opposes a union which will rob her of the bravest of her female warriors, until she discovers in Alcesta a long lost son and the ballet concludes amidst universal festivity.

The ballet was preceded by "I Puritani," with a cast including Castellan Gardoni, Lablache, and Coletti.

TABLEAU FROM THE NEW BALLET OF "THEA," AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE

THE NEW HOUSE OF LORDS.

DRAWN AND ENGRAVED BY JOSEPH LIONEL WILLIAMS.

SPECIMEN OF PANELING.

THE Rebuilding of the Houses of Parliament, or "the Palace at Westminster," is the most important architectural work which has been undertaken in this country since the re-edification of St. Paul's Cathedral. So colossal a pile of building has not been erected in London since that period; nor so magnificent a specimen of Gothic architecture in England since the construction of Henry the Seventh's Chapel. And, it may be added, that in arrangement, detail, warming, and ventilation combined, so perfect a structure was never before planned, as far as can be judged from the recorded art of past ages, or the experience of our own time.

The progress of the noble work has, from time to time, been chronicled in our pages; though but thrice by illustration. In the first volume of our Journal will be found an Engraving of the state of the building in December, 1836; in our third volume, (No. 174,) is the amended Plan of the Principal Floor; and, in the eighth volume, (No. 195,) is a series of Sketches of the exterior of the building, with its state about fifteen months since. We have now a more pleasing picture to present to our readers—the completion of a portion of the magnificent interior—the New House of Assembly for the Peers. This, it is true, is but a portion of the architect's labours, as a single glance at the Plan will prove: it is, however, the most elaborate specimen—the artistical nucleus, as it were, of the superb and stupendous whole; and, on its successful completion, the architect will, undoubtedly, receive the congratulations of the Government and the nation. His progress has been beset with difficulties surmountable only by genius of the highest order; the retrospect would, however, be of less interest to our readers than the details of what is here accomplished; and this, after a few data, we shall proceed to describe.

The old Houses, Libraries, &c., were burnt down October 16th, 1834, strangely replying to the question of Sir John Soane six years previously, while contemplating the length of lath and plaster—"Where would the progress of a fire be arrested?" Temporary accommodation was then provided among the ruins or the sitting of the Houses; but many months elapsed before the plan for rebuilding was matured. This being decided on, 97 sets of designs, containing not fewer than 1400 drawings, were furnished in four months; and Mr. Barry was, at length, selected as the successful competing architect, in the spring of 1836. It was not, however, until January 1, 1839, that the excavation for the river wall was commenced; and the building of the wall in March following. The Speaker's House and Parliamentary Offices were begun in 1840; but it was not until the middle of 1841, that any important progress had been made in the superstructure. Reference to our No. 195 will afford the reader a glimpse of the state of the works in January, 1846.

We shall now describe specially the portions of the House of Lords which we have this week Illustrated: the details being from our Artist's notes made during his frequent visits to "the House."

THE EXTERIOR.

THE exterior of the House of Lords presents no enriched architectural features; but its massive walls are well proportioned, and please the eye by their solid appearance. As seen from the House Court, the exterior shows a low and boldly embattled portion, resting on an arcade of flattened arches, with windows of square form, traceried, and having moulded weather-tables; a string-course, with pateræ, runs along above the windows. This portion serves as the Corridor of the House, and projects many feet from the side of the main building. Above this, the six finely-proportioned and traceried windows of the House are seen, and between each a plain massive buttress. The windows have weather-tables; and a string course, with pateræ, decorates the walls above the windows. Lofty battlements crown the whole.

THE INTERIOR.

(See the two large Engravings at pages 248 and 249.)

The Interior of the House of Lords is, without doubt, the finest specimen of Gothic civil architecture in Europe: its proportions, arrangement, and decoration, being perfect, and worthy of the great nation at whose cost it has been erected. Entering from the Peers' Lobby, the effect of the house is magnificent in the extreme; the length and loftiness of the apartment, its finely proportioned windows, with the gilded and canopied niches between them; the Royal truly Royal Throne, glowing with gold and colours; the richly-carved paneling which lines the walls, with its gilded and emblazoned cove, and the balcony, of brass, of light and elegant design, rising from the canopy; the roof, most elaborately painted; its massy beams and sculptured ornaments, and pendants richly gilded, all unite in forming a scene of Royal magnificence as brilliant as it is unequalled

The House of Lords is 90 feet in length, 45 in breadth, and of the same height. In plan, the House is divided into three parts; the northern and southern are each considerably smaller than the centre, which constitutes the body or floor of the House, wherein are the Woolsack, Clerks' Tables, &c.; and on either side the seats for the Peers, in rows. The southern or lower part of the House in which the Throne is placed, and is also for the accommodation of distinguished foreigners, and others; whilst the northern has the Bar for its boundary, and is for the accommodation of the House of Commons, when summoned to the Upper House, to attend her Majesty or the Royal Commissioners; and where, also, counsel stand during judicial investigations. The House is lighted by twelve lofty windows, six on each side; each divided by mullions and transoms into eight lights; the upper rows subdivided, and all filled with quartrefoil tracery. The splay of the jamb of the windows is ornamented by painting; the words "Vivat Regina" being many times repeated round them, having between each word a quatrefoil, alternately blue and red. The windows will all be filled with stained glass, representing the Kings and Queens both Consort and Regnant—of England, standing under canopies of elaborate design. One window is already put in, and the effect is remarkably gorgeous. It shows figures of William the Conqueror, his Queen Matilda, William the Second, Henry the First, his Queen Matilda of Scotland, and Stephen and Queen Matilda and King Stephen and his Queen Maud. The style of colouring is that which was in fashion from the middle to the end of the fifteenth century.

At both ends of the apartment are three archways, corresponding in size and mouldings with the windows; and on the surface of the wall, within the arches, frescoes will be painted. The arch over the Throne is already filled by Mr. Dyce's fresco, "The Baptism of St. Ethelbert." The archways at the northern end of the House are very deeply recessed, thus affording space for the Strangers' Gallery. Between the windows, the arches at the ends and in the corners of the House are niches, richly canopied; the pendants within which are supported by demi-angels holding shields, charged with the armorial bearings of the Barons who wrested Magna Charta from King John, and whose effigies, in all eighteen, will be placed in the niches. The demi-angels, pillars, pedestals, and canopies, are all gilded, and the interiors of the niches are elegantly diapered. Above the niches are corbels, whence spring spandrils to support the ceiling. These spandrils are each filled with one large and two small quartrefoils, deeply moulded, and having roses in their respective centres. Similar quartrefoils fill the spandrils over the windows, and all are elaborately gilded.

THE CEILING.

The Ceiling is flat, and is divided—by tie-beams of great bulk, on each face of which is sculptured "Dieu et Mon Droit," twice repeated into eighteen large compartments; these are each again divided, by smaller beams, into four, having in their centres lozenge-formed compartments, deeply moulded. Different devices and symbols, carved with the utmost delicacy of touch, fill the lozenges, and all of them are gilded. Amongst the devices, and immediately over the Throne, is the Royal monogram, crowned, and interlaced by a cord, the convolutions of which are so arranged as to form loops at the corners; which similarly crowned and decorated, the monograms of the Prince of Wales and Prince Albert fill the lozenges over their respective seats. The cognizances of the White Hart, as Richard the Second; the Sun of the House of York; the Crown, in a bush, of Henry the Seventh, the Falcon, the Dragon, and the Greyhound, are in some of the lozenges; whilst the Lion passant of England, the Lion rampant of Scotland, and the Harp of Ireland, fill others. Sceptres and orbs, emblems of regal power, with crowns; the scales indicative of justice; mitres and crosiers, symbols of religion; and blunted swords of mercy; add their hieroglyphic interest: while crowns and coronets, and the ostrich plumes of the Prince of Wales, form enrichments more readily understood, and equally appropriate. These devices are encircled by borders, some of roses, others of oak leaves; but the greater part with foliated circles, having cords twining round them and the symbols in admirable intricacy; and all of them are most elaborate in workmanship; indeed, so minute in detail, that an opera-glass is required to detect all their beauties. In the vacant corners between the lozenges and the mouldings of the beams, the ceiling is painted of a deep blue, and surrounded by a red border on which are small yellow quatrefoils. Within the borders are circles, Royally crowned; and from them proceed sprays of roses, parallel to the sides of the lozenges. The circles contain various devices and shields: amongst the former are the rose of England, the pomegranate of Castile, the portcullis of Beaufort, the lily of France, and the lion of England; and in the latter are the fanciful armorial bearings of those counties which ages since composed the Saxon Heptarchy. Where the lozenges are filled with the mitre, the circles are gules and charged with a cross; and issuing from the circle are rays, instead of sprigs of roses. At the intersections of the tie-beams are massive pendants, moulded, and carved to represent crowns; and lesser pendants, or coronals, similarly carved, are at the centre of each tie-beam: whilst richly carved bosses are placed at the junctions of the smaller ones. The under surfaces of the pendants are sculptured to represent roses. The whole are gilded and enriched by colour. The ceiling is, as may be inferred from this imperfect description, most striking in its appearance; the massy tie beams, apparently of solid gold, so richly delight as they are with that precious metal, and the minute carving which fills up the lozenge-formed compartments, aided by the glowing and harmonious colours of the devices, painted on the flat surface of the ceiling—all produce an absolutely imposing and gorgeous effect.

THE PANELING.

Below the windows, the walls of the House are covered with oak paneling, elaborately wrought.

From the floor, about three panels high, the pattern of the paneling is the style termed "napkin;" having, in the angles formed by the folds of the drapery, at the upper and lower parts of the panel, V.R., with an oak wreath and cord intertwining. The fourth row of panels from the floor has open arches, with crockets and finials; quatrefoils and tracery subdivide the arches, whilst in their bases runs a beautiful flower ornament. At every third panel is a pillar exquisitely wrought, and crowned with a small bust of one of the Kings of England. The busts of the very earliest Kings are, of course, imaginary: but those for which authorities could be found, are perfect specimens of portrait carving in wood, so truly is the resemblance between them and the originals carried out, in every little point. The pillars in the southern division of the House, have pedestals affixed to them, on which are lions, sejant, holding shields emblazoned with the arms of England. Between the other panels are very slender angular-shaped pilasters, wrought in delicate workmanship. Above the panels, between each bust, runs the following inscription—"God save the Queen," in open worked letters of the Tudor character: above this runs a pierced bratishing of trefoils, of great lightness of design and delicacy of execution. A canopy springs from this bratishing, and is supported by moulded ribs arching from the pillars and pilasters. The upper parts of the spaces between the ribs are filled with richly traceried arches and quatrefoils; and the surface of the canopy is gilded, and decorated with the armorial bearings of the various Lord Chancellors of England, from Adam, Bishop of St. David's, in 1377, to the present Chancellor, Lord Cottenham. These escutcheons present a remarkably rich and antique decoration; and, since all are helmeted, crested, and mantled, the variety of colours so displayed, the mantlings partaking of the chief colour in the shields, is very striking. The arms of the various Sovereigns under whom the Chancellors have held office, are also painted in all their glowing emblazonments.

At the northern end of the House, the episcopal arms fill the spaces of the canopy. The front of the cove, or canopy, is moulded, having trellage in its lower moulding, and at every space corresponding to the pillars of the paneling is a small carved pendant: above it is a lion's head in strong relief, and thence spring the standards to the brass railing of the Peeresses' Gallery. This railing is of simple but exquisite design; having a series of roses, deeply wrought and foliated, running along its base. The standards are partly twisted; and between each runs a twisted rail, supported by segments of arches, foliated. A twisted rail passes along midway between the base and the top: and where all the rails and arches join each other, knobs, richly enamelled with colour and gilding, give features to the latter: they support a cornice with pateræ, and embattled. Above the cornice, a richly carved, foliated bratishing runs all round the House, whilst at intervals, corresponding to the pillars, tall finials give diversity to the outline From the finials at the angles of the windows rise the massive branches for the gas lights: they are of bold and graceful form and terminate in a coronal, whence the light issues.

THE THRONE

The centre of the southern end of the House is occupied by the golden Throne, and on either side of it, below the Peeresses' Gallery, is a doorway, the spandrils of which are highly enriched, leading into the Victoria Lobby. We shall defer our description of the wonderful variety and beauty of the decorations of the Throne till a succeeding number, when we shall give a complete representation of it; for to attempt to convey an idea of the details without pictorial help would be futile. Two candelabra, of most exuberant richness of design, stand on either side, a few paces in front of the Throne, and these we shall illustrate, in picture and words, in our next.

THE REPORTERS' GALLERY.

The northern end of the House has the Reporters' Gallery over the principal doorway in its centre; and, on either side, three small arches under the Peeresses' Gallery, each of them, having a sunken panel above the arch, containing symbols of the Virtues, &c., held by angels. The Strangers' Gallery is above the Reporters', and, as before-mentioned, is placed in the recesses of the great arches.

EXTERIOR OF THE NEW HOUSE OF LORDS, FROM THE HOUSE COURT.

The Reporters' Gallery is most convenient, both in its arrangement and ease of access, the comfort of the gentlemen of the Press having been well studied. The Gallery is approached by a staircase on the west side of the Peers' Lobby. From the floor of the House, the appearance of this Gallery is eminently beautiful. It projects several feet from the wall, and is supported by five arches, three in the front, and one at each end; the central arch in the front being of wider and loftier span than the others, which have small bas-reliefs of angels holding wreaths, within which are symbols of two of the virtues, in sunken panels above them. Above the arches springs a canopy similar to that round the other parts of the House, divided into compartments, traceried and gilded also; the compartments over the centre door having within them the coat armour of the Saxon, Norman, Plantagenet, Tudor, Stuart, and Hanoverian houses, painted upon shields; whilst in the compartments over the side doors are the arms of the Archiepiscopal sees, and some of the Bishoprics, in continuation of the series of Episcopal arms, emblazoned at this end of the room. The front of the Gallery is divided into three compartments, by buttresses, which are carried up in panels and crowned with poppy heads, to correspond to the doorways beneath; within them are sunken panels most beautifully ornamented with deeply sculptured arches and quatrefoils, and gilded; in lozenges of decorative form and foliated, the badges of different Sovereigns of England are painted, whilst at the lower part of the panels a foliated bratishing is introduced. There are two ranges of seats in the Reporters' Gallery, and the front one has accommodation for ten persons, for whose use inkstands are sunk in a shelf. The arches under the Gallery, and the three small arches on either side of it, are hung with the richest and brightest red velvet; and a desk, the face of which is exquisitely enamelled, in colours, stands on a bracket in front of the Gallery. The case is beautifully carved, the central front gable crocketed and finialed; whilst small buttresses, with pinnacles are on either side.

THE BAR.

The Bar is about nine feet wide and three deep; and, on its outer and inner fronts and sides, it is ornamented by small sunken panels, having two rows of quatrefoils and arches wrought within them. At each corner of the Bar is a massive post, having on its outer faces the monogram, V. R., within quatrefoiled circles; and a narrow panel with pateræ, likewise on each face. The angles of the posts are ornamented by a reversed ogee moulding. The two lesser posts of the bar are crowned with small figures of the lion and unicorn holding shields; and the two outer are terminated by a cap, having battlements wrought on it.

Affixed to the wall, on the right hand of the Bar, is the enclosed and elevated seat of the Usher of the Black Rod: it is paneled and decorated in corresponding style with the extreme ends of the Peers' seats, which have panels of extremely intricate design, of vine, rose, and thistle patterns, beautifully sculptured and pierced, let into them. The extreme ends of the seats rise in steps, corresponding to the steps on which the seats are elevated, and at their corners are badges of some of the Royal houses of England; the white hart, dragon, greyhound, &c. These figures are beautifully carved.

THE CORRIDORS.

On each side of the House are two doors, one near either end, leading into corridors. The doors are paneled in the lower part, and filled with open worked arches in the upper, which are glazed with plate glass.

The Corridors are very handsomely paneled, and ceiled with oak, and extend the whole length of the House. Their appearance is singularly rich and effective, the warm colour of the paneling harmonising thoroughly with the stained glass and the rich blue of the carpet: the windows are square headed, divided by mullions, and traceried. The glass is richly diapered; and in labels running diagonally, the motto "Dieu et Mon Droit" is many times repeated. In recesses opposite to the windows are seats cushioned and covered with red leath r. In the recesses, also, are branches for gas, and opposite the doors leading from the House, globe lights hang from the ceiling.

Above these principal Corridors are others, destitute of decoration, whence ingress is obtained to the Peeresses' Gallery. This upper Corridor is lighted by small quatrefoil-shaped windows, and gas-lights are pendant from the roof.

CANDELABRA, FURNITURE, &c.

Two magnificent Candelabra of brass rise from the posts at the end of the Peers' seats. They are about twelve feet and a half high, and consist of a shaft, ornamented with a leaf pattern, and supported at the sides by short pillars, crowned with fleurs de lis; at about eight feet from the ground, the shaft has eight flying buttresses projecting from it, each with tracery and pinnacle work, and from them, in graceful curves, spring out branches, with sockets for lights. Oak trellage is with fantastic circumvolutions about the branches. Above this series of lights, four others, of lesser dimensions, add their intricate forms to the general richness, and the whole is crowned by a single light, rising from the centre. The workmanship of these Candelabra is most elaborate, and is worthy of their exquisite design.

The seats for the Peers are extremely comfortable, being thoroughly well stuffed. There are four rows of seats, each disposed in three ranges, so as to allow of free passage up the alleys that run between the ranges.

The carpet is of deep blue, ornamented with roses in gold colour.

MR. DYCE'S FRESCO

(See the front page of present No.)

Mr. Dyce's fresco of "The Baptism of St. Ethelbert" is a fine specimen of his great abilities. It represents the King, a semi-nude figure, but crowned, kneeling before St. Augustine, who is attired in an alb, and over which is a mantle, gilded. St. Augustine has a small portion of his left hand, and with the right seems to the act of pronouncing benediction. A youthful monk on his right hand holds an open book. An attendant is about to place the Royal mantle on Ethelbert's shoulders, and the Queen, Bertha, wearing a circlet, is looking on the ceremony with an expression of intense interest. In the background, in an elevated part of the Chapel, is a mingled group of men, women, and children, all apparently watching the ceremony with the deepest attention. The artist has, on some steps leading to the elevated portion before mentioned, is haranguing the people, and evidently persuading them also to embrace Christianity and be baptized.

GENERAL SUMMARY.

The representations we give this week illustrate the Interior of the House of Lords, in its chief points. In the view from the Bar, the exquisite details of the Throne may be seen in the centre of the Illustration; and above it, a faint idea of Mr. Dyce's fresco. The ceiling is detailed in all its minutiæ, as far as it could be given without the charge of confusion. The details of the Bar, the candelabra, &c., are faithfully rendered; and the paneling, Peeresses' Gallery, doorways, &c., are as carefully elaborated as their small size would allow.

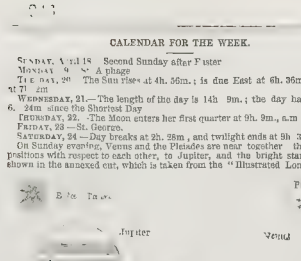
The other view, of the Reporters' Gallery in the New House, shows the Reporters' Gallery, with its intricate details; the Strangers' Gallery; the roof, from another point of view, in detail: the Woolsack, and seats for the Peers; the Bar, with its lights, &c.; and the richly-carved panels at the ends of the Peers' seats: and thus it will be seen, ALL the principal features of the House, and many of its lesser beauties, are elaborated and shown. The other Illustrations speak for themselves.

To Charles Barry, Esq., our most especial thanks are due, for the great readiness with which he has granted our Artist free permission to make as many drawings as we might require for a complete Illustration of this national building. To

(Continued on Page 247.)

CALENDAR FOR THE WEEK.

SUNDAY, April 18 Second Sunday after Easter
MONDAY, 19 A phage
TUESDAY, 20 The Sun rises at 4h. 36m.; is due East at 6h. 36m.; and sets at 7h. 2m.
WEDNESDAY, 21.—The length of the day is 14h 9m.; the day has increased 6. 24m. since the Shortest Day
THURSDAY, 22. The Moon enters her first quarter at 9h. 9m., a.m
FRIDAY, 23.—St. George.
SATURDAY, 24.—Day breaks at 2h. 28m, and twilight ends at 9h 30m.
On Sunday evening, Venus and the Pleiades are near together their relative positions with respect to each other, to Jupiter, and the bright stars near, are shown in the annexed cut, which is taken from the "Illustrated London Almanack." After Sunday, Venus will be moving to a point between Beta Tauri and Jupiter These objects form a beautiful group at present



TIMES OF HIGH WATER AT LONDON BRIDGE,
FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 24

Sunday		Monday		Tuesday		Wednesday		Thursday		Friday		Saturday
M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A	M	A
h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m	h m
56	4 18	4 39	5 0	5 22	5 44	6 6	6 30	6 57	7 25	7 55	8 24	9 14	9 49

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"A Subscriber," Brighton.—The cause of the late insubordination in Heriot's Hospital was not the "Monitor System." It arose out of a series of petty discontents among the boys, the grounds of which were never very clearly explained. Fifty-two were expelled; but, after an enquiry by the Lord Provost and the Hospital Committee, twenty-three of the lads were restored. Most of, if not all, the young rebels were subsequently forgiven, and re-admitted. None of the teachers were dismissed

"Mr. G." is thanked for the offer of the Wailing-street Antiquities; though we have not room to engrave them. The Sketch shall be returned if the requisite address be forwarded

"Organ." There is no authority for altering the spelling of the names in question.

"W. B." is thanked for the offer of the Series of Papers; but, we have not room for such subjects

"Pedagogus" should apply to Messrs. Souter and Law, School Library, Fleet-street

"T. R. J. H."—We do not entertain questions as to Billiards.

"A Constant Subscriber," Dublin.—Mr. Buckstone's new drama, "The Flowers of the Forest," is published at One Shilling.

"A Friend at Home."—We do not see the probability of a single suggestion further altering the object in view

"J. W.," Wolverhampton Miss Acton's "Modern Cookery," price 7s. 6d., is a capital work.

"O. G.," Dublin, should consult Murray's "Hand-book of France," for much information that may be useful to a person about to settle in that country.

"Ignoramus," Liverpool, is correct in his surmise.

"W. C. H." is thanked; but, we have not room for the Lines.

"A. B. J." Dover-street, should submit the MS., fairly copied, to a London Publisher: the real name will be required by him, though it may not, of necessity, be published.

"S. B."—"Taylor's Short-hand, improved by Hardcay." Our estimate of Phonography is stated at page 105 of the present Volume.

"Verdun," United Service Club Thanks.

"M. A. S." Iberia can be had at Chap. Lords is reprinting, and will be ready very shortly

"Liberator" will see that the late Steeple-Chase, in France, is not a fit scene for illustration in our pages

"A. Z." had better submit the case to a Solicitor.

"A Practical Potter."—Such information as our Correspondent desires respecting London Sights is given in our Journal at holiday seasons; and incidentally, as novelties arise.

"Inquirer."—A good copy of Boydell's Edition of Shakspeare may be bought for Ten Guineas.

"I [illegible] Gentleman." The Garrick Correspondence, published a few years since, is stated in part by Mr. Upcott.

"L. L." To loosen a tight stopper, set the decanter up to the top of the neck in hot water. We must decline replying to the second question.

"A Lady Subscriber."—The price of "The German Christmas Eve" is 10s. 6d

"P. P." The right of nominating to the living of St. Mary Woolnoth, Lombard-street, is exercised by the Chancellor alternately with the Goldsmiths' Company For further details, see Godwin's "Churches of London," vol. ii.

"Kingston." We cannot undertake to inquire as to the responsibility of Advertisers

"A. B."—The opening Paisley Athenæum was to be celebrated by a Soirée on Tuesday last; Provost Murray, President, in the Chair.

"A Correspondent" is thanked for the Sketch, &c. of Bluefield, the capital of the Mosquito kingdom; but, the subject does not appear to possess any immediate interest

"D. E." Fareham. Thanks

"G. T. N.," Liverpool. The first subject suggested has already been copiously illustrated in an early Volume of our Journal. The second subject is but an unpicturesque one. Our Correspondent is thanked for his reminders

"Canalicus," Greenwich.—We have not room for the suggested changes

"A Disputant."—Innate Ideas are ideas or principles supposed to exist in the mind from the first moment of its existence, and to be developed along with it. Locke, however, has taken much pains to refute this doctrine.

"R. W.," Brecon.—There is a Philological School Society at 38, Gloster-place, Newroad.

"Pecator" should consult the explanatory pamphlet on the Government Education Scheme, published by Murray.

"A Correspondent."—The remaining Prisons in London and Southwark in which Debtors are confined are the Borough Compter, Whitecross-street Prison, the Queen's Prison, the Surrey County Gaol, and Westminster Bridewell.

"J. F. R." The Metropolitan Police Force consists of 18 Superintendents, 13 Inspectors, 487 Sergeants, and 4181 Constables

"A Constant Reader."—Drawings on Wood, for Engraving, are made in pencil, and occasionally strengthened with Indian ink

"Pious," Bedale Mr. Paul, 41, Tower-street, Westminster.

"The Lines by Tyro."—We have not room

"A Constant Reader" is thanked; but we have not room for the Riddle. Lord Rosse's Leviathan Telescope is engraved in No. 155 of THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS

"B. L. No lady can bear a crest. A son cannot quarter his mother's arms unless she was an heiress; nor can he introduce into his shield any device to mark his descent from his maternal ancestors.

"Anglesea." Of the House of Hanover

"A Subscriber from the Beginning" will find his query answered above.

"A subscriber." A son is entitled to use his father's crest at any period of life

"C. D. Sir William Segar was made Garter King of Arms in 1603, on the removal of Sir William Dethick in that year.

"A Constant Reader." The Comet was visible all day on the 30th ult.: it was observed by Mr Hind himself, and was seen by two gentlemen, one in Anglesea, and the other in Devon, who found it from the plans we gave in our Paper of the 27th. The day was cloudy; or, probably, it would have been seen by many persons with the naked eye

"H. M.," Albany. The "predicted" Coldest Day was Jan. 20, 1838.

"T. J. L."—Apply, with the old Almanacks, to Mr. Maynard, bookseller, 8, Bartlett-court, Leicester-square.

"A Subscriber to the Art-Union," Edinburgh. Prizeholders receive intimation of the fact by next post; and are allowed to select for themselves. The Engravings for the current year are complete, and are about to be electrotyped

"A Constant Subscriber" had better consult a Sol olor, or a Brahor

"C."—The Peninsular Medals are in preparation; but we cannot name the time for their distribution

"T. F.," Brighton. "Walker's English Dictionary," improved edition, printed in Scotland

"James" "The lady is an accomplished dunsense.

"Farmer Lea." "The Penny Magazine" is no longer published.

"A Constant Subscriber."—"Semivamde" is five syllables. "Hide" is an old law term for a quantity of land, not exactly known; but, probably, determined by local usage

"X. X."—Moisten with a teafon of lee. sprus of wine, a teaspoonful of muriatic acid, and a pint of water.

"Curious," "Lassy," and "E. S.," Welton.—We cannot spare room to reply to your inquiries.

"An Old Subscriber" The paper shall be sent, on receipt of the remittance.

"P. C. P." The Panorama may be purchased. The s is pronounced in both names.

"R. W.," Manchester. We cannot interfere with wagers.

"Alexander." "Hand-book of Anatomy for Artists," published by Highley and Co., Fleet street.

"A Constant Subscriber." The husband will be liable

"A Coal Engineer," Ilfracombe The paragraph in our last, relating to the Locomotive to work up Gradients, was copied from another Journal: 1 in 22 is, probably, intended

"B. H. C.," Bristol.—The price of the only edition of Joanna Baillie's Dramas is 36s in 3 vols

"Bramboche," Bristol. Apply to a respectable Dentist.

"Remonontarus." 1. A Restaurant—whose price varies from 10 to 26 guineas. 2. We do not know. 3. If the observations of stars were made between the years 1800 and 1840, the Astronomical Society's Catalogue will be the best; but, for all observations taken after 1840, the constants in the British Association Catalogue should be used in their reductions

BOOKS RECEIVED DURING THE WEEK.

Chess-Player's Magazine, Nos. 1 to 3.—— Dr. Readers on the Remediable Evils of the People.——Burns' Cabinet Library for Youth, 3 vols

Music.—The Sea Nymph's Song.——Happy Days Gone By.——Within a Mile of Edinburgh. Lanier's Promenade Waltzes.—— The Ivy Green, by Czerny. ——The Fontainebleau Quadrilles.——Henri Herz; Six Grandes Valses.

 The Ceiling of the Royal Italian Opera will be engraved next week; with the Ceiling of Her Majesty's Theatre.

THE NEW HOUSE OF LORDS.—Next week, we shall resume our ILLUSTRATIONS of this Superb Edifice, with a View of the PEERS' LOBBY and the BRASS GATES, which it has been found impossible to complete in time for the present No. The No. for next week will, also, contain the VICTORIA LOBBY; the ROYAL THRONE, CANDELABRA, State Furniture of the House, &c.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 17, 1847.

WHEN the Government included the City of London in its measure relating to the Health of Towns, it is to be presumed it reckoned on a noisy, if not a strong opposition. Lord Morpeth, taking a step in advance of Lord Lincoln, has ventured to subject the "Great Metropolis" to the system proposed for the rest of the kingdom; and the wrath of the authorities is extreme. The parochial mind of Marylebone, and the corporate intellect of the Common Council, are alike arrayed against cleanliness; both bodies being, to use Hamlet's phrase, "spacious in the possession of dirt," are quite unanimous in defence of it, and the vested interests connected therewith; one spirit of Sir Peter Laurie informs the Parish Vestry and the Corporation; and, for gutters choked, sewers full, and streets unswept, there will be no lack of champions. The poor of Marylebone are "comparatively healthy;" and, in twenty-five years, the Corporation of London have spent £70,000 in widening streets; what more can an unreasonable world require? Has it not, also, dug sewers in profusion, in the North of the Town—indeed, more than are used; and, (there being money to be made by it), does it not pave and unpave all the great thoroughfares, on an average, twice a-year? A Government that can interfere with such competent and zealous functionaries must be possessed by the very demon of intermeddling, and is to be resisted at all hazards. So, the old cries that have been used against every improvement in the bloodiest laws and most hateful systems, are raised against sanatory regulations. Cleanliness is pronounced unconstitutional; freer supplies of water are un-English; the application of modern science in the battle with old physical evils, is a dangerous innovation. We frequently hear of the dust of antiquity as a venerable and respected thing; but mere dirt, however old, should not be allowed any immunity from broom and shovel. As the wisdom of our ancestors was not called on to deal with two millions of people crowded together in one city, it cannot furnish us precedents; and in this, as in many other things, we must act for ourselves, by our own experience. An old has to be gained, and for that there must be means; from taking those means, we must not be scared by the exploded outcry of "unconstitutional." On the contrary, pure air, and good water, and clean dwellings, are among the most constitutional of earthly things.

We hope the Government will persist in subjecting the City of London to the provisions of the Act, such as they may be after the supervision of Parliament. Nothing has injured the Metropolis so much as the continual exemptions it has claimed and extorted by the weakness of successive Governments from the changes that have affected other Corporations and communities. It is difficult, doubtless, to "put a hook in the nose of Leviathan," and those who do it must expect a hard struggle with the monster, that never shows any activity except when there is an attempt to make him move. The Corporation of London is an overgrown obstruction, crusted all over with ancient abuses, that have grown up through centuries of undeserved forbearance on the part of those whose duty it is to lop and prune in behalf of the common good. Every measure touching its own improvement, the City of London resists, contending that it governs itself, which is a fact; and that it does it well, which is a fiction. It was exempted from the Corporation Reform Act, and what is the consequence? Its Corporate offices are carefully shunned by the merchants and the best class of traders of the City, and fall into the hands of small hustlers of the parish vestry stamp, or "parlour orator" school-men, of whom the least that can be said is that they are unknown; if heard of at all, it is too often in connection with some squabble or dispute, from which the highminded and honourable turn away with something like disgust. At the present moment, we firmly believe the "Corporation" is far beneath the average of the intellect, principles, and opinions of the City, instead of being what it once was, and still ought to be, the representative of them. Nothing can stand still in a world of movement without degenerating, and society has left the Corporation of London behind in its progress. By degenerating, it loses its position in public opinion, which, after all, is the great source of preeminence; this is the reason the Corporation of London no longer "leads," as it undoubtedly might do; its small factions and anomalous constitution, throw it out of men's sympathies; other matters we need not allude to, deprive it of men's respect; and the public is not at all surprised to see it array itself against a measure imperatively called for. It is consistent with itself in that opposition, but it will not avail.

THE refusal of the agent of the Cunard line of American steamers to give a berth to Mr. Frederick Douglas, a coloured gentleman, after he had duly paid for the accommodation, has excited some attention. It is one of the very few instances in which the feeling the American entertain for all men of the Negro race has been exhibited in England, where it is nearly incomprehensible. The only tests men are put to in society here are personal manners and deportment; the only distinctions recognised are those of rank, wealth, and education; the treatment a man meets with depends wholly on his conduct as an individual. A Peer misconducting himself in a drawing-room would be shown down stairs; if in a public place, he would be lodged in the station-house; if he disgraced himself as a member of society, he would be "cut" by all decent people over afterwards. And putting a social ban on any one race or class, without distinction, is a thing unknown, save in the land that places the equality of the rights of man among the fundamental principles of its constitution.

In the present case explanations of the fact have been given by the Liverpool agent of the Company, and Mr. "Charles M. Burrop (of Asgill, Virginia, United States), Head Manager of the Cunard Company of Liners." The first throws the exclusion partly on the personal conduct of Mr. Douglas in a former voyage, when he was the cause, "whether intentionally or unintentionally on his part, of producing, by the observations he made use of, serious disturbance on board, which required the authority of the Captain to quell." It is easy to perceive of what nature those observations were; and if he disturbed the peace and good order of the ship it is a fair and substantial reason for a regulation of some kind, to be decided by the circumstances. But the "Head Manager," from "Asgill, Virginia," says not a word of the alleged misconduct, and throws the whole exclusion on the aversion to the Negro race, which he paints with all the vividness of the latitude of "Virginia." We rejoice in the conviction that no Englishman could write so unchristian, so disgusting a letter: if there is anything in it worse than its flippant arrogance, it is the effrontery with which he asserts that the antipathy of race is as strong in England and among Englishmen as in America. We totally deny the fact. A man of colour in England is on the same level precisely as those of his own rank in fortune and education: he is excluded nowhere merely on account of his race. We have seen Mr. Douglas, who could not be admitted to the saloon of the American liner, moving in an elevated section of London society on terms of perfect freedom and equality. And as the matter is so completely a personal one, we may state that Mr. Douglas is not a Negro, nor black; he is of the mixed race, the white preponderating, and he is a gentleman in manners and education.

We do not believe that any Englishmen would behave differently in their own houses and places of meeting, and on board a steamer: that some may have become tainted by a long residence in America, and that others might be led to "do as others do," is possible; but the statement in Mr. Burrop's letter is incredible of any English gentleman. The objection raised upon the sense of "smell" is a very old and very contemptible one; the lazy, the poor, and the dirty of all races are alike: there is many a white man with whom we should wish to avoid close contact, and of whom we should carefully keep to windward in summer; but the antipathy is no stronger than soap, water, and clean linen would remove. We would match a dirty Spaniard, Italian, or German, for variety and intensity of odour, against any Negro Virginia could produce; but a Spanish, Italian, or German gentleman is not therefore to be excluded from society. It was an old opinion that the Jews carried a bad smell with them; and they were once under a social ban; so the assertion seems to be made only of proscribed races—any reason for oppression being welcome to the tyrant. But, as the Jew rose in the social scale, his curious theme smell departed; Christians sit at the banquets of Baron Rothschild totally unconscious of the existance of a popular belief that Sir Thomas Browne thought it worth a chapter in his "Vulgar Errors" to expose. If mere colour is the cause of the exclusion, what would Americans say to the honours and titles given to the Rajahs of the East, and the native merchants and bankers of India, the Mohun Roys, and the Dwarkanath Tanjores; instead of sitting at the tables of the rich and noble, and being made Baronets, they would, in the Land of Liberty, run a smart chance of being tarred and feathered. But we believe there is a curious inconsistence in America on this matter of colour; while any tinge of Negro blood is hated and despised, any mixture of the native Indian race, though equally dark, is rather a subject of pride, and is highly esteemed!

Since writing the above, it has been proved that no such person as "Mr. Charles M. Burrop, of Asgill, Virginia, U.S.," is known to the Company; the letter is, therefore, an impudent calumny on Englishmen; but such sentiments deserve denouncing. The Company will permit no such scene to occur again.

THE WEATHER.

The past week has been fine and seasonable, with the temperature a little above that of the season: occasional showers of rain have fallen, and vegetation has advanced considerably.

Friday was windy, the sky about one half covered by cloud, and its average temperature was 46°; this day was followed by a warm night. Saturday was fine with sunshine in the morning: the sky was principally cloudy during the day; some rain fell during the afternoon; its average temperature was 46½°. Sunday was a cloudy day with gentle rain falling frequently; its average temperature was 50°; this day was followed by a very warm night Monday rain was falling early in the morning; the sky was principally covered with cloud during the day; its average temperature was 55°, being the warmest day since 1846 (Oct. 16). Tuesday, rain was falling early in the morning, the day was cloudy throughout, but the wind was principally from the East, and the evening was cold; the average temperature of the day was 45½°, being 12½° less than that of Monday. Wednesday, the morning was bright and fair; the day, however, was cold. The sky was nearly covered by clouds all the day; its average temperature was 43°. Thursday was a cold day, the wind being principally from the East; some hail and rain fell at different times during the morning; the average temperature of the day was 43½°. The average temperature of the week was 47½°, being something above that of the season.

The extreme thermometrical readings each day were

Friday,	April 9,	the highest during the day was 53½ degs., and the lowest was 39 degs.
Saturday,	April 10	.....	36
Sunday,	April 11	56½	.....
Monday,	April 12	55½	47
Tuesday,	April 13	51½	39
Wednesday,	April 14	51	35
Thursday,	April 15	52½	34½

Blackheath, Friday, April 16, 1847. J. G.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RETURN OF THE COURT TO LONDON.

On Monday afternoon the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Royal children, returned to Buckingham Palace from Windsor. The Queen, it is understood, does not intend returning to Windsor Castle before the 1st of June (Ascot Races); but it is probable that her Majesty and the Royal family will pass a week or two at Claremont previous to the birthday drawing-room.

The Queen and Prince Albert visited her Majesty the Queen Dowager, on Tuesday, at Marlborough House. Her Majesty and Prince Albert, attended by the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe, Hon. Miss Kerr, Hon. Miss Cavendish, Lord Byron, Major-General Wemyss, and Captain the Hon. A. H. Gordon, honoured the performances at her Majesty's Theatre with their presence in the evening

Her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert, Lord John Russell, Earl Forfescue, Earl Spencer, Lord Wilcoughby de Eresby, and several of the ladies of the household, visited the new Houses of Lords, on Wednesday, shortly after twelve o'clock, for the purpose of viewing that part of the new Palace at Westminster, previously to its being taken possession of by the Peers on Thursday evening.

HER MAJESTY'S DRAWING ROOM.

The Queen held her second Drawing-room for the season on Thursday. Shortly before two o'clock her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert, and attended by a general of the great Officers of the Household, left Buckingham Palace, and, escorted by a detachment of the Life Guards, proceeded through the Park to St. James's Palace.

The Drawing Room was attended by the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, Great Officers of the Household, and Members of the Cabinet, who arrived in state The attendance of the Nobility and Gentry was very numerous, and the splendour of the equipages and liveries of the servants attracted general attention.

The day, though cold, was rather fine. A great number of persons congregated to witness the pageant, who loudly cheered the Sovereign and her illustrious Consort as they passed from Buckingham Palace to St. James's. Her Majesty appeared in excellent health.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.—His Grace's son (the Marquis of Douro) intends next month to visit the Scottish estates of his father-in-law, the Marquis of Tweeddale, in the county of Haddington. He will be accompanied by the Duke of Wellington, who will remain at least one day at Berwick, in order to enjoy the society of a distinguished military character in the vicinity, whose gallant conduct in Spain very speedily secured him his Grace's approbation and patronage.

Sir ROBERT PEEL. Sir Robert Peel arrived in Blackburn last Monday night, per railway The Right Hon. Baronet travelled in an open carriage placed on a truck, and was only attended by a single servant. He passed the night at the hotel.

DEATH OF THE DOWAGER LADY BROWNLOW. The Dowager Lady Brownlow expired on Tuesday afternoon, at her residence in Hill-street, after a short illness, in the 81st year of her age. The deceased lady was only daughter of the late Sir Henry Banks, and married, on the 31st of August, 1775, the late Lord Brownlow.

PRESENTATION OF PLATE TO VISCOUNT TORRINGTON. A very splendid service of plate, to be presented to Lord Torrington by the proprietors of the South-Eastern Railway Company, in testimony of the regard for the services he has rendered them as a director, &c., has been completed at the manufactory of Messrs. Hunt and Roskell. It is valued at 3000 guineas, and includes, besides the usual service for the dinner table, candelabra, and costly ornamental decorations. The designs of these, and of some of the other pieces, are peculiarly chaste and finely modelled. The four seasons are introduced, together with the forms of birds and sylvan animals. The whole of the designs are by Mr. Brown.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

Their Lordships met again to day, but the sitting was a very short one, and was almost entirely confined to the presentation of petitions.

The Army Service Bill was introduced by Earl Grey, read a first time, and ordered to be read a second time on Monday week

The House adjourned till Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. FRIDAY.

WRECK OF THE "TWEED."—In answer to a question by Mr. MUNTZ, Lord J. RUSSELL said, Lord Auckland had taken into his consideration the gallant and generous conduct of Bernardo Campe, captain of a Spanish brig, in his endeavours to afford assistance to the passengers and crew of the unfortunate Tweed, and his Lordship had recommended that the captain should have presented to him a sum of £500, as a reward for his noble services; which recommendation her Majesty's Government intended to carry into effect. (Cheers from both sides of the House.)

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND).

Lord J. RUSSELL moved the order of the day for the third reading of the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill

Mr COLEY opposed the bill, particularly objecting to the measure of out-door relief

Lord Jocelyn, Mr. Trelawney, and Sir Walter James supported the bill.

A long discussion ensued, in which several Irish members took part, but the arguments were chiefly a recapitulation of those used at the earlier stages of the bill

Sir G. GREY made a short speech, in the course of which he said it was not necessary to go at length into the subject, as there was a general feeling in favour of the bill, and the objections already made to it had been fully discussed. He admitted that out-door relief would not cure the evils complained of in Ireland, but contended that such a measure as the present would induce the landowners and occupiers to use their exertions to procure employment for the poor.

Lord G. Bentinck, Mr. Labouchere, and Mr Goulburn next addressed the House. The debate proceeded for a long period, and, ultimately, the bill was read a third time and passed.

The Landed Property (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

EPSOM SPRING MEETING. FRIDAY.

The Derby Stakes

Gabbler	..	..	..	..	..	1
Rob Roy	..	..	..	..	..	2
Tragical	..	..	..	..	..	3

The Great Metropolitan Handicap

Mr. Gregory's Clermont	..	..	..	..	1
Mr. Moore's Woldog	..	..	..	..	2
Lord Chesterfield's Bro. to Stitch	..	..	..	..	3

Won by a neck.

The Two-year-olds Stakes.

Antelope	..	..	..	..	1
Chippeway	..	..	..	..	2
Grist	..	..	..	..	3

Won by a length.

ANOTHER FATAL STEAM-BOAT ACCIDENT.—We are sorry to say that an account has been received at Liverpool, stating that the steam-ship Orana Vita, Capt. Baden, which left that port on Tuesday evening for Drogheda, whilst on her voyage, about half across the Channel, took fire Sixty-nine were saved in either the boats or a small sloop, which rendered assistance, and arrived at Dublin on Wednesday. The captain, with, as is supposed, several others, were lost. The Orana Vita was burnt to the water's edge, and the body of her unfortunate commander was afterwards found floating in a life-preserver, but dreadfully burnt. It is stated, that at least seventy-four were on board when the steamer left the river. The accounts so far received are exceedingly meagre.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

OPENING OF THE PRUSSIAN DIET.

A most important event took place at Berlin on Sunday last—the opening of the United Diet of Prussia, by King Fredrick William the Fourth. The ceremony was a very grand and magnificent one. The arrangements for the admission of the several Courts of the assembled Parliament (as they are henceforth to be called) were provided; and the Royal Speech was delivered in the Great White Chamber of the Palace, in the presence of the whole Diet, the Royal Family, the diplomatic body, and of all that is most illustrious in the kingdom.

The Speech in which the King inaugurated the Assembly was a long and remarkable one. His Majesty commenced by congratulating his subjects upon the occasion which had called them together, and after an eulogium upon his deceased father, explained the reasons why the promised Constitution had been so long delayed. His Majesty then made this profession of his Constitutional feelings and desires:—

"As the heir of an unweakened Crown, which I must and will hand down unweakened to my descendants, I am perfectly free from all and every pledge with respect to what has not been carried out, and, above all, with respect to that from the execution of which his own true paternal conscience preserved my illustrious predecessor. I will not, however, conceal from you that all the separate parts; an edifice of justice has been built upon it, oaths have been sworn on it, and it has, all unfinished as it is, maintained itself as a wise law for twenty-seven years. From which I proceed, with the firm heart, indeed, but with the freedom of my kingly prerogative, to its final completion. I am, however, the irreconcilable enemy of all arbitrary proceedings, and must have been a foe, above all, of bringing together into one body an only fictitiary assembly of Estate Orders, which should deprive the noble creation of the King, my dear father, I mean the Provincial Diets, of their value. It has been therefore, for many years, my fixed and immovable resolve to let no assembly, ordained by law, by the fusion together of the Provincial Diets. It is formed; I have recognised your claim to all the rights flowing from that law; and, far beyond—far beyond all the promises which my father, of blessed memory, I have granted you, within certain necessary limits, the right of granting taxes—A right, gentlemen, the responsibility of which weighs far more heavily than the honour which it conveys. In no case, in this assembly will new debts, or important periods in the existence of our State, which are treated of in my patent of February 3rd. As soon as those periods occur, I will assemble the Diets on each separate occasion round me, in order to deliberate with them for the welfare of my country, and to afford them an opportunity for the exercise of their rights. I have, however, reserved the express right of calling together these great assemblies on extraordinary occasions, if I deem it good and profitable, and I will do this willingly and at more frequent intervals, if this Diet gives me the proof that I may act thus without prejudice to higher Sovereign duties."

The points touched upon in the course of the King's Speech may be summed up thus: His Majesty alluded to various local measures of improvement, and proclaimed the principle of complete religious freedom to all sects; he grants the publicity to proceedings in the civil and criminal courts of justice; and the Prussian Envoy at Frankfort has been instructed to bring before the Federal Diet the question of the liberty of the press, with a view to the complete execution of the pledge contained in the 18th article of the federal compact of Germany.

Entire freedom has also been secured to the publication of the debates, with the names of the speakers

His Majesty thus enunciated his views as to the relations between himself and his people:—"Noble Lords and trusty Orders,—I am forced to the solemn declaration that no power on earth will ever succeed in moving me to change the natural, and in our case, a providential relation between Prince and people into something merely conventional or constitutional, that, once for all, I will never suffer a written sheet of paper to force itself in, as it were a second providence, between our Lord God in Heaven and this people, in order to rule us with its paragraphs, and to replace by them our ancient and time-hallowed trust reliance on each other. Between us be truth. From one weakness I feel myself entirely free: I have not the idle ambition to be—who could do so?—the author of history aright? I strive alone to fulfil my duty so as to satisfy my understanding and my conscience, and to deserve the thanks of my people, even though it be never my lot to obtain it."

A satisfactory picture is drawn of the national resources:—"The extinction of the national debt is progressing. The taxes are diminished, the finances are put in order, so as to day the happiness to offer the provinces, for the use of their treasuries, a donation of 2,000,000 rix-dollars."

His Majesty made a touching and solemn avowal in reference to religion:—"One avowal I am in these days unable to suppress, bearing in mind the frightful attempt to defraud my people of its holiest jewel—its faith in the Redeemer, Lord and King of itself and of us all. This avowal is as follows—(here his Majesty arose, and spoke the words standing, and with right hand uplifted):—'I and my house, we will serve the Lord.'"

Then follows an eloquent passage indicative of the mode by which the King formed his opinion of his people:—"Noble Lords, I do not exhaust the feelings of my people in the green gates and huzzas of the festivity; still less in the praise and blame of the press, or in the doubtful, sometimes criminal, demands of certain addresses, which are sent to the Throne, and States, or elsewhere. I have read them with my own eyes in the touching thanks of men for benefits scarcely promised, and scarcely begun; here, where broad districts of land stood under water; there, where gaunt poverty recovered from hunger. In their fine joy, in their wet eyes, did I read their feelings three years ago, when the lives of myself and the Queen were so wonderfully preserved. There is truth—and in my words is truth—when I say it is a noble people; and I quite feel the happiness of presiding over such a people. And your hopes will understand me, and accord with me, when in this great house I urgently call upon you:—'Be worthy of this people!'"

His Majesty then professed his ardent attachment to his people in these terms:—"I remember the axiom of a Royal friend, 'Confidence excites confidence.' That is this day my happiness. That my confidence in you is great I have proved by my words, and sealed by my act. And from you, my Lords, I expect a proof of confidence in return, and, in the same manner, by acts. God is my witness, I approach you as your true friend, best, and most faithful friend; and I firmly believe that, amongst the hundreds before me, there is not one who is not resolved at this moment to preserve that friendship."

His Majesty concluded his remarkable speech as follows:—"So, then, Princes, Counts, and Lords, dear and faithful orders of Nobles, Burghers, and Commons, while you proceed with God's help to your task, you will, I am certain, in this moment, when all Europe is gazing on you, and through all the future labours of the Diet, prove yourselves true Prussians; and that one thing, believe me, will not be absent namely, God's blessing, on which all things depend. Out of our unanimity it will descend on the present and future generations, and I hope on all our glorious German fatherland in one broad stream, beside which we may dwell in peace and safety, as by the sea-shore of the blessing-bringing waters that encircle the earth. And now once more, and out of the fulness of my heart, welcome!"

FRANCE

The Courrier Français contains the following rather doubtful information:—"A letter from St Petersburgh, dated the 2nd, announces to us that the Emperor of Russia is seriously ill, and that his journey to Warsaw is indefinitely postponed. This fact is certain, but it is kept within the walls of the Winter Palace, but has, no doubt, already come to the knowledge of M. Kisseleff. This news, the authenticity of which we guarantee, perfectly contradicts the letters in the Presse, which announced the approaching arrival of Nicholas in Paris."

Mr. O'Connell arrived at Lyons on Sunday last.

The three unhappy men who were condemned to death at the assizes at Buzançais, for the part they took at the riots some months back, were executed on Monday last, notwithstanding the appeal made in their behalf, both by the Press and by many humane persons. No less than four regiments of soldiers were necessary to keep the crowd away from the scaffold.

POLICE.

FORGERIES ON THE LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

A young man of very respectable appearance, named Horatio Nelson West, was brought before the Lord Mayor, at the MANSION HOUSE, on Tuesday, charged with having been concerned in forging a great number of documents, purporting to be shares in the London and South-Western Railway Company. Another person, named William Farmery, was also put to the bar at the same time, upon suspicion of having been concerned in this offence.

Mr. Clarkson, the barrister, appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Humphreys attended for the prisoner West. The second prisoner was undefended.

The learned counsel for the prosecution briefly stated the case, which, he said, would be brought forward at the instance of the Directors of the Company. Application had been made to the proprietors of the New Money Market by letter, addressed from Portland-place, to sell a number of shares, and it was strange enough that those shares were found to be forged upon the discovery of another offence, committed by the perpetrator, who received in payment of a cheque £40 more than he was entitled to, and appropriated that sum to his own purposes.

Mr. James W. Stevens, partner with Mr. Luke James Hansard, said:—"On the 8th of March, about three or four o'clock in the afternoon, I received a letter by the hands of a messenger, a person of shabby appearance, enclosing fifty shares in the London and South-Western Railway Company, and purporting to come from a gentleman named Craven, of Portland-place. In consequence of the directions contained in that letter, I got the shares verified the following morning at the office of the Company, and they were disposed of by Dr. Henry Clark, of Southampton. Observing there was no number mentioned in the letter, I asked the messenger what number it was in Portland-place, and he without any hesitation said, 'No. 11.' On the 8th of March the same messenger brought the letter I produce, purporting to be from the same gentleman, and requesting to know whether the fifty shares had been sold; and I sent him back an answer stating that the sale had taken place according to the instructions. About a week after I produce, purporting to be from the same gentleman, and requesting to know whether the fifty shares had been sold; and I sent him back an answer stating that the sale had taken place according to the instructions. About a week going to post the letter advising him of the sale, the same messenger came and handed me another letter, requesting the amount of the proceeds. I wrote an answer, stating to him that we had not as yet received the proceeds of the sale, but that as soon as we received the money we would forward it to him. On the following morning we received another letter, stating that Mr. Craven expected when he sent to us that we were agents in cash transactions alone, and requesting that a cheque for the amount should be at once transmitted to him. As I received intimation that I might have the amount that day, I determined to call myself at Portland-place and leave the cheque for Mr. Craven, and just as I was going out of my office for that purpose I met the messenger at the door, put a cheque for £259 7s. 6d. into an envelope, sealed it, directed it, and gave it to the man to convey to his master. On the following day the clerk of the banking-house at which the cheque was paid, called, and said he had overpaid the cheque £40. In consequence of this communication, I was induced to send for the prisoner West, who called twice at my office, but I happened to be out. In about a week, however, I saw him, and I asked him from whom he had obtained four £10 Bank of England notes, which I named to him, and I told him that our bankers had paid that amount too much, and that the notes had been traced to his possession. He said that the second prisoner, who stands next to him at the bar, and one Mr. Wilson, whom he did not know, came to his office to transact railway business, and that one or the other of them gave him the notes, as the second prisoner owed him some money in another transaction. I pressed him to say which of them had given him the notes, and he said the second prisoner. West gave back the £40. I told him, 'Why do you trouble yourself about it, and why don't you make the second prisoner pay you what you have given up?' He said 'This Mr. Wilson is one of the Hall of Commerce chaps, and I know nothing about him, and I do not like his appearance,' or something of that kind. I asked him 'If he had any objection to walk with me.' He said 'he was perfectly willing.' I wished West to identify Wilson, and he walked with me to the Royal Exchange. I told him we had sent the shares to the Company, and found they were genuine, and therefore we had nothing more to do with it.

Daniel Forrester, the officer, stated that, in consequence of the information which he had received about the overpaid £40, he took some steps in the case, and he received information from Birmingham, which induced him to look after West. He found that there had been an exchange of money at the bank, part of which was of the sum drawn from the banking-house of the late witness for gold. West said he had received the £40 of the second prisoner and a man named Wilson, and the second prisoner came into West's office at the time, and said he did hand some money to West, as that he and Wilson had some joint money transactions, and he had received change from Wilson, and gave it to West, to whom he owed it. In the course of conversation with West, witness was told by him that he had been at Ely, but that he had not been at Birmingham for two years and a half. Witness said to him, "Mr. West, you have been at the post-office in Moor-street, for letters in the name of Perry," and he denied it. He said he had been there, and he had bought a knife and a ring there. The man from the post-office at Birmingham identified him as the person who had called for letters in the name of Perry

Mary Ann Dingley, of No. 124, Moor-street, Birmingham, said: I know Mr. West by the name of Perry, and he came and lodged in my house from the 15th March, with the exception of one single night, the 26th, to the 2nd of April.

Mr. John Brown, in partnership with Mr. Thomas Price, shareholder, said: I received a letter from a person of the name of Perry, requiring us to sell some shares, and we sold them; and, on the 22nd March, we remitted to J. Perry, 124, Moor-street, Birmingham, bank notes to the amount of £140; one, No. 94538, of £100, is one of the notes. The shares produced, Nos. 1411 to 1415, are parts of those which we sold for Mr. Perry.

Mr. Alfred Morgan, treasurer to the London and South-Western Railway Company, looked at the shares produced by the last witness, and stated that they were forgeries. The five shares purport to be £50 shares. A great number of forgeries had been detected, to the amount of £2500

Mr. Charles Morgan, solicitor to the Company, said he had reason to believe that he should soon have very important witnesses to produce to show the ramification of the system of fraud.

The prisoner Farmery said whatever fraud might be proved, he had nothing to do with it. He begged to be allowed to put in bail. He did not care about the amount. He had certainly been unfortunate enough to engage in shares, to have many dealings in them; but of dishonest dealing he solemnly protested he knew nothing. If he had been imposed upon now he could not help it. He had a house full of children, and he hoped he should not be left to starve. He did not want to skulk

Mr. Humphreys did not object to a remand in the case of his client West.

The Lord Mayor said that he should remand West till next week.

Farmery underwent another examination on Wednesday, when some evidence was produced against him of such a character that the Lord Mayor ordered him to be remanded, and refused to take bail for his appearance.

GOODS STOLEN FROM THE LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

On Monday, Mr. Rawlinson was occupied, at MARYLEBONE OFFICE, for nearly two hours in the investigation of a charge against a number of persons who had been taken into custody for having been concerned in stealing property to the amount of nearly £600 from the goods warehouse of the London and North Western Railway, on the morning of the 5th inst. The property, which was nearly a ton and a half in weight, consisted of silks, satins, and a variety of Manchester and other drapery goods.

The names of the prisoners were John Freer, William Martin, Henry East, Samuel Freer, John Cheny, Joseph Taylor, James Taylor, Joel Taylor, Joseph Cooper, and William Pelin.

A great deal of evidence was given, from which it appeared that several of the prisoners had carried off from the terminus a quantity of goods in a van, and that they had no right whatever to do so.

Other evidence was gone into touching the robbery, and the six prisoners first named were remanded till Tuesday next; the remaining three were discharged on their promising to appear on the day named.

On Tuesday Charles Austin, a well-dressed young man, was charged by Sergeant Dubois with being one of the principal receivers of the stolen property. Having taken him into custody, he searched his lodgings, where he (Dubois) found several watches, together with a number of duplicates for property of different descriptions, to a large amount. The prisoner, who said he knew nothing about the robbery, was remanded with the rest of the prisoners.

SUDDEN DEATH.—On Tuesday evening week, a festive party given by Lieutenant-Colonel Fitzmaurice, at his residence, in Berkeley-square, Cheltenham, was shocked by the awful and sudden death of one of the guests, a young lady named Quinelar, who had formerly been a governess in the family. The deceased had after supper danced a quadrille, and had just partaken of an ice, when she suddenly fell, taken back, became speechless, and in a few minutes afterwards was present as one of the party she expired within a few minutes. Death was caused, it is presumed, by effusion of blood on the brain An inquest was held by the deputy-coroner, when the jury's verdict was "Died by the visitation of God."

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—About nine o'clock on Monday evening, as Mr. Collier of No. 31, Upper Marylebone-street, was returning by the footpath leading from Hampstead Church through the fields to the Swiss Cottage, he was stopped by four men, who bound his hands and feet with cords, and took from his trousers-pocket £1 17s. 6d. in gold and silver, and also a parcel of lace, with which they decamped, leaving their victim bound hand and foot. Mr. Collier is only able to describe two of them, viz., one about 30 years of age, thin, dressed in knee-breeches and stockings, and a hat: he was an Irishman. The other, about 45 years of age, middle height, and stout, dressed in flustain, and had a black mask on his face.

THE NEW HOUSE OF LORDS.

(Continued from Page 245.)

Mr. Quarm and Mr. Crace also, we are much indebted, and here acknowledge our obligations

In our next Number we shall describe and illustrate the two magnificent Lobbies of the House, the Victoria and the Peers', but are concluding this portion of our account, we must not omit to mention the names of some whose efforts have so ably seconded the master mind of the Architect. The decorative portion of the ceiling, the armorial blazonries, and other polychromatic ornaments, attest the skill of Messrs. Crace in sumptuous enrichment: the architectural members, the angels holding shields, &c., were modelled by Mr. Thomas; while the brass Gallery, the Candelabra, and indeed, all the brass work, of beautiful and elaborate detail, are by Hardman, of Birmingham, who has also furnished the exquisite stained glass of the windows. To Mr. Quarm, the Clerk of the Works, the greatest economia are due for the skill he has displayed in superintending the erection of this, LITERALLY ROYAL PALACE OF WESTMINSTER

Next week, we shall describe Mr. Barry's mode of Warming and Ventilating the House; together with various objects which the extent of the above details precludes our inserting in the present Number.

On Tuesday evening there was an experimental illumination of the House, which was perfectly successful.

VISIT OF HER MAJESTY.

The fittings of the House, save a few minor points, were finished by Tuesday evening; and by Wednesday, at noon, the superb edifice was prepared for the inspection of her Majesty. Mr. Barry had received notice of the Royal visit, as had Hkewise Sir Augustus Clifford, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod: and Mr. Pulman, the Yeoman Usher, who likewise holds the office of Norroy King-at-Arms At twelve o'clock, three of the Royal carriages arrived at the Queen's entrance, and her Majesty alighted, with her Ladies in Waiting, together with the Lord Chamberlain, the Lord Steward, &c. Prince Albert accompanied the Queen; and, it was evident to all present that her Majesty was hardly prepared for the graceful, chaste, and subdued magnificence of Mr. Barry's chef-d'œuvre. The Queen inspected every portion of the House, and, says the Times, "took up her station for a few minutes in almost every point of observation from which the House could be viewed, and from each successive inspection appeared to derive unalloyed satisfaction: no term of praise seemed too strong to bestow upon the architect who designed and the artists who executed this superb portion of the edifice. The best proof of the interest and pleasure which it afforded to the Queen was to have been traced in the evident delight with which she traversed all the completed portions of the building. Over the Throne there is a small private box—we know not how otherwise to describe it—in which, during the deliberations of the House, two or three ladies might ensconce themselves. Her Majesty very leisurely examined it, and for some time placed herself within it. This private view taken by the Queen lasted from twelve o'clock till about a quarter past one; when she departed in the same unpretending manner in which she arrived, without any state or ceremony

"The persons present were strictly limited to the attendants of the Court, to half a dozen officials connected with the House of Peers, to the architect, Mr Barry, and to Mr. Grissel, of the house of Peto and Grissel, who are the principal contractors for the works. Mr. Barry, as might be expected, attended her Majesty over every part of the building, and appeared to receive from the Queen every mark of the most gracious condescension."

OPENING OF THE HOUSE.

On Thursday, the magnificent Chamber in the new Palace of Westminster, appropriated as the place of meeting for the upper branch of the Legislature, was occupied for the first time by their Lordships. The House assembled at half-past four o'clock; and, on our admission after prayers, we found a considerable number of Peers already present. The Lord Chancellor had taken his seat on the woolsack, and was in conversation with several noble Lords; while groups were standing here and there, surveying the noble apartment, and conversing with each other on the effect of its general appearance. early a quarter of an hour elapsed before any business was attempted; all present being engrossed in the contemplation of the truly gorgeous spectacle which had opened before them.

Before five o'clock the number of members in attendance had become much greater than usual. The Duke of Wellington entered the House exactly at that hour, dressedin full military uniform, but wearing a close cloak above, and took his seat on the cross bench-, nearly in the same relative position to the woolsack as that ordinarily occupied by him in the old House. Lord Brougham arrived at about the same time as the noble Duke; and soon after, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Earl Grey, and other members of the Government took their seats on the Treasury Bench. Lord John Russell was present for a short time in the body of the House, and, afterwards, also in the alley for Members of the House of Commons. The Episcopal Bench was much better filled than usual; and the steps of the THRONE (which was uncovered) were crowded with the sons of Peers and distinguished strangers, while in the galleries allotted to the members of the House of Commons a considerable body of gentlemen from that House were seated. The Strangers' Gallery had also its quota of visitors; and, as a matter of course, the gallery, set apart for the accommodation of reporters, was filled with the representatives of the press. It is not our part here to describe the appearance of the new House; but we may be permitted to say that but one feeling of admiration pervaded all who had the privilege of being present on this interesting occasion.

Prayers were read by the Bishop of St. Asaph.

Shortly after the Lord Chancellor had taken his seat on the Woolsack Lord CAMPBELL rose for the purpose of addressing the House. His Lordship, however, was, by an accident, deprived of the honour of being the first person to bring forward any business in the new House, for, before he could commence his address, the Usher of the Black Rod announced a MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, whereupon Mr. Greene and other members were called in and brought up several bills. This was the first public business transacted in the new House of Lords.

GOVERNMENT EDUCATION SCHEME Lord CANBELL presented a petition in favour of the Government Education Scheme. The petition stated that the plan was likely to be of service to the country.

Lord REDESDALE presented petitions against the new LAW of Settlement; but the designations of the petitioners were not heard in the gallery, in consequence of the conversation carried on in the body of the House.

Lord LETTELTON presented petitions against the new LAW of Settlement, and praying for the establishment of a national rate for the support of the Poor.

The Marquis of RICHMOND presented a petition from Aberdeen against any alteration in the Navigation Laws. The noble Duke also presented petitions from places in the count of Suffolk, and elsewhere, against the new Law of Settlement.

Lord FORTESCUE presented petitions for the abolition of capital punishments.

Several noble Lords, who were not at all heard in the gallery owing to the conversations in the House, and the ear being unaccustomed to the echo, also presented petitions.

Lord BROUGHAM came to the table to present petitions, but finding that he could not make himself heard, he turned round towards the members of the House of Commons who were assembled below the bar, and said, that unless there was immediate silence, he would state to the House that there were strangers present, and he would move that the space below the bar be cleared. (A laugh.) He had a question to put to the Government, and it was of pubac importance that he should be heard. He had to present a petition from Liverpool, complaining of the increasing influx of Irish paupers into England. The noble Lord then put a question to the noble Marquis, the President of the Council, respecting the intentions of the Government on the subject, but the precise terms of the question were not collected in the gallery. The noble Lord also presented several petitions against the Government Plan of Education. He was understood to say that he did not altogether concur in the prayer. He then presented a great number of petitions with the contrary prayer, in favour of the Government measure

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE, who was very imperfectly heard, apparently in consequence of the most distinct speakers being unable to accommodate their voices sufficiently to the enlargedarea and altered structure from that in which they had been for years accustomed to speak, defended the course taken by the Government in respect to Irish relief and the question of national education.

Lord BROUGHAM made some observations in reply, which were, for the most part, inaudible, and, it appeared, from the same cause.

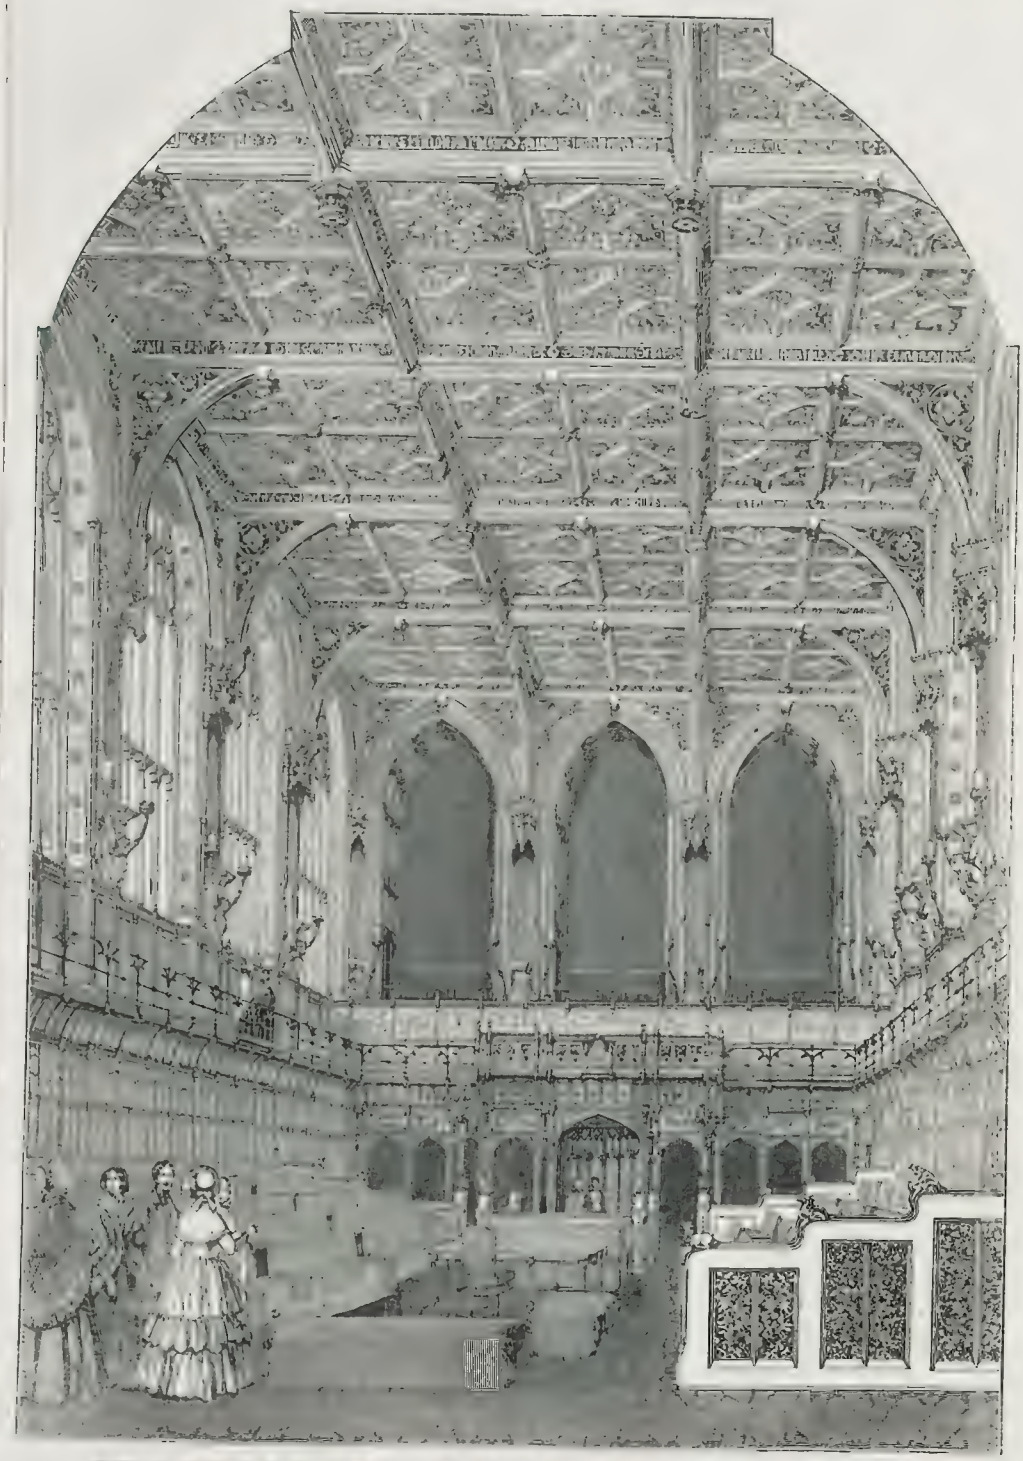
Lord BEAUMONT said that whilst it was required that the children of Roman Catholics should read the version of the Bible called the authorised one in the public schools, the Roman Catholic clergy would not consent to the attendance of those children in such schools. The effect of this scheme of the Government would be to tax the country at large for the support of a system of education from which one class of the people would be totally excluded

Lord STANLEY presented a great number of petitions against the Government measure of education, but stated that he did not agree with the petitioners

After a few words from the Marquis of LANSDOWNE in explanation, the conversation dropped.

No business was transacted but the presentation of petitions, and the House adjourned at an early hour.

(See the Engravings on the two following pages.)



INTERIOR OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS

From the South.

NEWSPAPER

INTERIOR OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS

From the Bar.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

After three performances of Rossini's "Semiramide," Donizetti's "Lucia" was produced on Tuesday, to introduce an entirely new troupe, comprising Madame Persiani as the heroine, Salvi as Edgar, Ronconi as Ashton, and Formisi as Bide-Bent. We may also mention that the insignificant parts of Buckhurst and Raymond, were filled by Lavia and Tilli, two excellent second rate tenors, thus accounting the pledges in the prospectus of a perfect ensemble. The execution of Donizetti's masterpiece was a second lyric triumph, and if it cannot be called perfect, it was only because of the severe heartsores of Ronconi, for whom an apology was made at the end of the first act. Madame Persiani's Lucia is European in fame. It is distinguished, not only for the marvels in executive power, but also for its exquisite sensibility and refinement of style. Her voice seems to have gained in volume. Her taste and fancy in the choice of ornaments are well known, and never did she execute more daring feats than at her return on Tuesday She was welcomed with enthusiasm; and the applause bestowed throughout the opera was unbounded. The opening cavatina, the duo with Edgar, the touching scene of the signing of the contract, and the finale scena were well sung and acted.

Salvi, the new tenor, created the most powerful sensation, and at once established himself in public favour as an artist of the first rank. He is tall and commanding in figure, with regular and handsome features. His organ is of extensive range, and flute-like quality. His use of the falsetto is so exquisitely managed that it appears part and parcel of a natural voice. In note voce passages, there is a finish and delicacy in his execution than we have never seen approached by any artist. As an actor, he is fervent, dignified, and impressive; looking more to the general effect on the whole, than to those points of startling power. Thus the light and shade in the malediction scene was beautifully conceived; and in the prostration of mind, and breaking of the heart, of the "Fra Poco," Salvi exercised an influence over his audience, the result only of genius of the highest order

Ronconi has yet to be judged as a singer, but his histrionic ability was unquestionable; his look of defiance, at the finale of the second act, at Edgar, was very effective.

Polonini, the new basso, has a rich sonorous organ, and is an excellent musician, rendering essential service in the concerted pieces.

The orchestral accompaniments and the choruses were executed to perfection, and, taken altogether, this performance of "Lucia" was one of the best we have ever heard. The mise en scène was beautiful. The castle by moonlight, in the last act, by Grieve, was received with several rounds of applause.

The opera was repeated on Thursday evening, and Tamburini was announced for his original part of Ashton, in place of Ronconi, who has not yet recovered from his hoarseness; but, on the morning, Tamburini, affected by the rigours of the climate, was seized with an attack of relaxed throat, and Ashton was then given to Signor Ley. It is fortunate that the strength of the company can provide for any contingency.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

On Friday night, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was performed for the first time in London, at Exeter Hall, but at our hour of going to press, we find it impossible to give a notice, until the ensuing week, of its reception. We were present, however, at the rehearsal on Wednesday evening, and are thus enabled to vindicate the principal alterations the gifted composer has made in his work since its triumphant production last autumn at the Birmingham Festival. On the entrance of Mendelssohn into the orchestra on Wednesday night, he was tremendously cheered by the amateurs and artists. The changes will strike the latter more than the former; in numerous instances the alterations are very slight, not affecting the form nor the ideas, but simply technical improvements. The latter part of the chorus, "Help, Lord," has been rewritten. At the close of the recitative chorus, "The deeps afford no water," there is a little alteration. The air, "If with all your hearts," sung by Mr. Lockey, is slightly altered. The latter part of the double chorus, "For He shall give his angels charge," has been rewritten. The recitative, "Now Cherith's brook" (Miss Dolby) has been slightly altered. The recitative and duet, "Give me thy son," (Miss Birch and Mr. Phillips), has been re-written, although the general features of the first version may be traced throughout; the latter part in duo "Thou shalt love the Lord," is new. The chorus, "Blessed are the men," may be almost considered as re-written, though still the character of the first version remains. The recitative and chorus, "As God the Lord," has been slightly altered. The chorus, "Baal, we cry to thee," is as at first. The recitative and air, "Draw near" (Phillips) has been altered. The quartet, "Cast thy burden," are entirely new as to words, and the notation has been altered slightly, but the characteristic traits remain unchanged. The recitative, "O thou, who makest," has been slightly changed. The chorus, "The fire descends," has been greatly altered in detail, without change in the character. The air, "Is not his word," has been re-touched, as also the air, "Woe unto them," both sung by Phillips. The recitative, "O man of God" (Lockey), is new, but the chorus of thanksgiving, after the miracle of the falling round, remains unchanged in all its glory.

In the second part, the air, "Hear ye, Israel," in B Minor, three-eight time, sung by Miss Birch, has been re-constructed in many parts, and portions are new, although the general ideas remain. The chorus, "Be not afraid," appears in a new dress, but is of the same fashion as the former. The recitative, "The Lord hath exalted," is altered. The solo and chorus, "Have ye not heard," the conversation between the Queen and the people, has been re-written, as also the chorus, "Woe to him." The recitative, "Man of God," is new. The air, "It is enough, O Lord," (Phillips), has been re-written upon the plan of its first version. The recitative, "See, now he sleepeth," has been altered. The trio, "Lift thine eyes," (Miss Kirkham, Miss Duval, and Miss Dolby), is new; it was sung as a duet formerly. The chorus, "He watching over Israel," has been slightly retouched. The recitative, "Arise, Elijah!" has been newly written. The air, "O rest in the Lord," (Miss Dolby), is not touched. The recitative of Elijah, "Night falleth," has been altered, and the chorus, "Behold! God the Lord passed by," retouched very carefully. The recitative, "Above him," is new, and beautifully introduced for the following quartet (Miss Birch, M ss Kirkham, Miss Dolby, and Miss Duval), "Holy! holy." The chorus, "Go return upon thy way," is new. The air, "To the Mountains," (Phillips), is very little changed. The chorus, "Then did Elijah," is altered here and there. The air, "Then shall the righteous," (Mr. Lockey), is as at first. The recitative, "Behold! God hath sent," has been slightly altered, as also the chorus, "But the Lord." The lovely quartet, "O come every one," is as before; but the concluding chorus, "And then shall you light," are entirely new, both as to words and music, ending in a grand fugal climax.

Mr. Bartholomew, the author of the English version, has had an onerous task to fit the words to the new notation, but he has adhered very closely, with great skill, to the scriptural texts. Standigl, Miss Hawes, and Madame Caradori are not included in the present cast, as at the Birmingham Festival—Phillips, Miss Dolby, and Miss Birch replacing them.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The great feature of the third scheme was the C Minor Symphony of Beethoven, which was executed with unprecedented vigour, the new readings of Costa telling to the manifest advantage in the certitude of the attacks. The introduction of Mozart's Symphony in D, op. 88, for the first time at these Concerts, was a wonderment that such a work should have hitherto passed unheeded. The Andante is one of the loveliest of movements, brimful of elegance and melody: it was rapturously encored. There is no minuet and trio in this work: the third is, with its wonderful imitative parts so closely worked, and its melodious imagery, again raised a demand for a repetition, which, however, the Conductor did not comply with, as it was an overwhelming demonstration only excuse, the Minuet and Trio being one of the overtures were the picturesque "Preciosa" of Weber, and the lovely "Lodoiska" of Cherubini: both went with the highest precision. Spohr's Concertante in A, op. 48, for Two Violins, played by Blagrove and Willy, was the one given last season by Sivori and Sainton. The Andante was finely rendered, but the Rondo lacked high finish and certainty. Blagrove and Willy are two of our best violinists, unquestionably; but neither school is one of the great order. Spohr's Quintett's fourth Pianoforte Concerto in F Minor, op. 19, was welcomed as an old friend. It was delightfully performed by the accomplished composer, especially in the Barcarola, a poetical movement, ludicrously scored, the flute bit, so finely interpreted by Ribas, being quite a gem. The vocal selection comprised Rossini's duo, "Dove Vai," sung by Manvers and F. Labische; Beethoven's terzetto, "Tremate," by Mdme. Caradori Allan, Mr. Manvers, and Signor F. Labische; and Auber's scena, "Plaisirs du rang Suprême," by Mdme Caradori: but the instrumental performance seemed to kill everything on this occasion.

THE MUSICAL UNION.—At the second meeting on Tuesday afternoon, at Willis's Rooms, Onslow's Quintet in D No. 5, for two violins (Deloffre and C. Ribas), viola (Hill), and two violoncellos (Platti and Pilet), was charmingly played, Platti disengaging himself in the larger, and Deloffre in the minor and trio, well sustained throughout by the other able executants. Lindsay Sloper, aided by Deloffre and Pilet, gave an artistical reading of Beethoven's Trio in E flat, op. 70. Mozart's Quartet in D, No. 19, concluded this fine selection

MUSICAL ARRIVALS.—The two brothers Helmsberger, sons of the Philharmonic and Opera Leader in Vienna, have arrived in London; both are distinguished violinists. Standigl, the great bass, came to town with them, accompanied also by Hoelzel, the composer and vocalist, and Mr. Gregg, an English basso. Pischek is now on a tour with Julien, and has sang with immense success in Dublin, Liverpool, Manchester, &c. Mendelssohn's pupil, Joseph Joachim, the young Hungarian violinist, arrived on Monday. Madame Dinglestadt (Jenny Lutzer,) will make her début at the Ancient Concerts, on Wednesday next. Mademoiselle Modena de Bondi, the niece of Madame Garcia, the mother of Malibran and Viardot Garcia, has arrived in London for the season. Vieuxtemps, the violinist, has also arrived. Willmers, the Danish Pianist, is expected daily

MR. WILSON'S SONGS OF SCOTLAND.—On Monday night at the Music Hall, Store-street, this great illustrator of Scottish melody, began his agreeable entertainments for the season, and the crowded state of the room proved his undiminished popularity

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.—The programme for Friday's Concert included Ayda's Symphony in C letter Q, and Mendelssohn's A minor, Weber's "Oberon" overture ,Sterndale Bennett's "Nafada," and Rossini's "William Tell," and a election from Meyerbeer's "Robert," arranged by Negri.

MUSICAL CHIT CHAT.

On Monday will be the fourth and last of the Historical Concerts at Exeter Hall; the fourth meeting of the Beethoven Quartet Society, and the 109th Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians, at Freemasons' Hall, Lord Salomon in the chair; a host of vocal talent will be heard on the occasion.

On Wednesday will be the second concert of Ancient Music, under the direction of the Duke of Wellington, and conducted by Sir H. R. Bishop

Made. Viardot Garcia has created an extraordinary sensation in Berlin by singing in German, in one evening, the two parts of Alice and the Princess in Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable." She undertook the task in consequence of the sudden illness of Mille. Tuczek

The Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, has signed a contract with the gifted sister of Malibran, for the ensuing season. In securing Viardot Garcia, the new enterprise has acquired a treasure, for she is equally great in soprano and contralto parts.

Berdias, the new tenor, of the Académie Royale, Paris, has been favourably received, but it is not a startling talent. Meyerbeer quitted Vienna on the 2d for Berlin, and will go from thence to Paris, to superintend the production of his works. He has been offered Monsieur Lind engagement from the French, but his absence has been received enthusiastically in St. Petersburg. A Spanish troop of comedians and dancers have appeared in Paris, and have engaged Drury Lane Theatre at the close of the present season. Mr. and Mdme. Ourry, the violinist and pianist, after a career of immense success in Italy, have returned to London for the season.

THE VELASQUEZ PORTRAIT OF PRINCE CHARLES.

A splendid historical picture is now exhibiting at 21, Old Bond-street; which its fortunate possessor maintains to be the "lost portrait" of Prince Charles (afterwards Charles I.), painted at Madrid, in 1623, by Velasquez. The romantic expedition of Charles and the Duke of Buckingham, to Madrid, to settle the affair of the marriage of the Prince with the Infanta of Spain, will, doubtless, be remembered. During the Prince's stay at Madrid, he sat to Velasquez for his portrait; it has long been considered as the "last picture," and supposed to have followed the fate of Buckingham, its possessor. The owner of the present picture, however, states that documents in his possession prove the identity of the picture with the "lost" treasure.

Be this as it may, the Portrait has the characteristics of the natural style of "the painter of men," as Velasquez has been emphatically called from his comparative weakness in the ideal female beauty. It is decided in its unity, over and above the proofs of drawing, composition, and colouring, and magical effect of its reputed painter.

The Prince wears a brilliant suit of armour; his right arm rests upon a large globe, the hand bearing a baton; the left hangs over the side of the chair, and the face is seen in a three-quarter view; and, above and behind the figure is a rich yellow damask drapery, striped with red, "the national colours of Spain"

The figure—three-quarter is remarkably graceful in the attitude: the head is powerfully painted, and bespeaks the flower and prime of life. The rich auburn hair falls in luxuriant tresses; and the hands display consummate skill The background is a spirited episode of war—a citadel and a fierce conflict of cavalry.

If the signs of Velasquez are rare in England; but the exhibition of this Picture will, in all probability, lead to a decision of its identity, over and above the proofs in the owner's possession. In the meantime, this single Painting, possessing the leading characteristics of one who equalled, if not excelled Titian, is a sterling treat for the lovers of pure Art; it is worth a whole "Exhibition" of yesterday novelties.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE COURT OF COMMON COUNCIL AND THE GOVERNMENT MEASURES.—At a Court of Common Council held on Monday, Deputy Peacock brought up the Report from the Commissioners of Sewers upon the subject of the Health of Towns Bill. The Report alluded to the steps taken by the Commissioners upon the subject. There had been no neglect on their part, but, in the course of the last sixteen years, they had caused new and capacious sewers to be built, at a cost of about £200,000, thereby providing drainage to such an extent, that there were within the area of the City's boundaries about 48 miles lineal of public sewers. The drainage for the adjacent districts had also been well attended to. The Report proceeded to point out what had been done to promote cleanliness, and add to the general salubrity, and called upon the Court to endeavour to procure the exemption of the City from the operation of the bill. The Court has also been occupied with the Government measures of Education. Mr. Francis Bernock submitted a motion for an address to her Majesty, praying that she will be graciously pleased to exercise every legitimate influence vested in the Crown to urge forward in Parliament such measures as shall provide for the general education of the people. During the discussion various statistics were brought forward to show the deficiency of schools, and a general argument arose upon the whole subject of Education. The debate was adjourned.

EAST INDIA HOUSE DIRECTORS.—On Wednesday a ballot was taken at the East India House for the election of six directors in the room of Mr Henry Alexander, Hon. William Henry Leslie Melville, Major James Oliphant, Mr. John Shepherd, Mr. Francis Warden, and Sir William Young, Bart., who go out by rotation. At six o'clock the glasses were closed and delivered to the scrutators, who reported that the election had fallen on Mr. William Henry Haworth Bayley, Mr. Russell Ellice, Major-General Archibald Galloway, C.B., Sir Richard Jenkins, G.C.B., Mr. Ross Donnelly Mangles, M.P., and Mr. John Masterman, M.P.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—On Tuesday there was an election at the Bank of England for members of the Court of Direction, and the following gentlemen were placed on the list for the year ensuing:—Governor, Mr. W. B. Richards; and Deputy-Governor, Mr. James Morris; eighty-eight proprietors having voted for those gentlemen. The usual formalities were entered into upon taking the oaths of office, &c. On Wednesday the proprietors again assembled to elect the twenty four directors, and, upon the announcement of the ballot, it appeared that the house list was adopted. Messrs. Gribble, Cazenove, and two others acted as scrutineers; twenty-three of the directors having of the votes of 765 proprietors, and one director having 104 votes. Mr. J. Cook, who also put up, had but one vote.

SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY EXTENSION.—On Thursday the whole of the houses in the Westminster-bridge-road, and the Lower and Upper Marsh, Lambeth, were entirely demolished, so that the whole line of extension to Waterloo bridge, with the exception of a few houses in York-street, is now entirely cleared, and the viaduct on which the trains will run, complete as far as High-street, Lambeth.

THE GOVERNMENT MEASURE ON EDUCATION.—There have been several demonstrations in the metropolis during the week, for and against the proposals of the Government for the spread of education. On Wednesday there was a very large meeting of influential persons convened to the measure at the Freemasons' Hall. Lord Ashley was in the chair; and the Bishops of Norwich and St. Asaph, Mr. Labouchere, and other eminent individuals, spoke in support of the plan. A strong petition to Parliament in its favour was adopted. On the motion of Mr. Hoare, the banker, a vote of thanks was passed to Lord Ashley. A general conference of the opponents of the measure was held on Tuesday and Wednesday at Crosby Hall, at which many of the leading Dissenters were present. Various resolutions, deprecatory of the proposals of the Government, were agreed to. On Wednesday night, a meeting of the inhabitants of Finsbury took place, to oppose the Government scheme of education. Resolutions to this effect were carried by a majority, though not considerable as was evidently anticipated.

THE NEW STREET FROM BUCKINGHAM PALACE TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—On Wednesday the demolition of the first part of the houses in Tothill-street, Dean-street, and the Almonry, Westminster, in the neighbourhood of the proposed street from the new House of Lords to Buckingham Palace, was commenced.

CHEAP TRAVELLING IN THE METROPOLIS.—On Monday, omnibuses commenced running from Battersea-bridge to Hounslow, a distance of upwards of nine miles, for sixpence. The Ant and Bee steam-vessels, running from London-bridge to the West-end, reduced their fares to one halfpenny; and the Citizen Steam-boat Company have also commenced to ply their vessels to Hammersmith, Wandsworth, and Putney, at reduced fare.

NIGHTLY SHELTER OF HOUSELESS POOR. On Monday, the committee of the above association, for the nightly shelter and asylums for the past season, made a report of the number of unfortunate individuals who, since its opening on the 14th of December last, availed themselves of the shelter thus afforded during the very severe weather. The parish of St. Giles alone, 1,960 men, and children have participated in its benefits, amongst whom upwards of 300,000 ratio [illegible] tributed. The expenses of the past year, from the vast number of applicants, were greater than any preceding year since the establishment.

HEALTH AND MORTALITY IN THE METROPOLIS.—The deaths returned by the registrar-general for the week ending Saturday last were 1081, being an increase of 47 on the preceding week, and 127 in excess of the weekly average of five springs. This result is to a certain extent attributable to the unusual coldness of the weather at the commencement of the present month, and tends in likewise to the ascertained influence of atmospheric circumstances on certain forms of disease. As regards locality, the excess of mortality over the spring average was greatest in the south and west districts, but was shared by all the groups of districts into which the metropolis is divided by the registrar-general

A WOMAN BURNED TO DEATH. On Monday, Mr. Joseph Pay held an inquest at the Blue Lion, Broadway, Blackfriars, on the body of [illegible] Mary Wall, aged forty-four, who se death occurred under the following frightful circumstances:—The evidence proved that the deceased, who was the wife of a respectable sailor, living at No. 4, Brondway, had been very much addicted to drink; in short, so great was her propensity to drinking that she would borrow money from any one that she knew, to purchase gin with, and on Saturday last she obtained 6d. from her landlord in this way, and sent a little girl to fetch some gin. Having been drinking previously, she became quite inebriated, and, as it is presumed, while in the act of removing a sheet from the fireplace, which was hanging to air, fell down, when her dress became ignited from a red-hot cinder, and before assistance came forward she was completely burnt to death; her features being so frightfully distorted, that it was difficult to conceive that the body was the remains of a human creature. A verdict of "Accidental death" was recorded.

FIRE IN THE EDGWARE-ROAD.—On Monday night, at ten o'clock, a fire broke out in the New Small Debts Court, 112, Edgware-road. Although engines soon arrived on the spot, two hours elapsed before the fire could be extinguished. By that period the whole of the upper portion of the building was destroyed, and the lower part nearly burnt out. The books and the records of the houses in Chapel-street are damaged, but fortunately not to any great extent. The premises numbered 111, in the occupancy of Messrs. Howitt and Co.'s silk mercers, have also sustained some damage; and those belonging to Mr. Hedges, harness maker, No. 109. The whole of the parties are insured. It appears that some workmen had been employed during the day, in getting the Court ready for opening on Wednesday, and it is supposed that they must have left the fires improperly extinguished.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"C. P."—Tickets for the Annual Festival of the Yorkshire Chess Association are procurable, we should think, both at Leeds and York. A very powerful muster is anticipated, several players of eminence having signified their intention of being present.

"J. T. L."—Stanley's Magazine is procurable in London: enquire of Wiley and Putnam, the American Booksellers.

"C. H. B."—Yes.—The proposed packet is detained only that it may contain the forthcoming "Hand-book."

"S. B. J. S."—Thanked. Our reason for doing was that we had received a copy of the same position from another source.

"Eboracum"—Similar corrections will be always acceptable

"A World-be Chess-Player."—In all such cases, the moves should be retraced, and the King first checked should be protected by the interposition of one of his men, or he played out of check.

"Cæsus." "N. D."—"K. O. X."—The Enigma No. 142 can be solved in two moves

"K. O. X."—We regret not having space to repeat the beautiful Problem by Mr. Polton to which you allude: it may be found, however, on any of the wrappers of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," during the years 1842—3—and 4

"T. R." Liverpool.—The difficulty appears to consist in the first move. Play the White Q to K 6th, and mate seems to follow as a matter of course.

"P. P."—"L. B. D."—You may now obtain printed diagrams for recording Problems, Ends of Games, &c., of Hastings, on Carey-street, for a mere trifle per hundred: a desideratum long asked for by our numerous contributors, and which we shall enable them to send their Problems in future already prepared for diagrams, and thus avoid all chance of error

"Juvenis."—You must send a Post-office Order for 4*s.* 4*d. to the Publisher of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle," and then you can receive it at breakfast every Thursday or Friday morning. All applications for back Numbers, Volumes, &c., and for the Chess Treatises enumerated, should be made to Hastings, of Carey-street, who has a large collection of Chess works always on sale.*

"Cur."—The position appears to be still defective; but, with the Pawn at Q Kt 3*rd, it is not inelegant; for, then, White would first play Kt to Q Kt* 5*th; 2ndly, R to K B* 8*th; and, finally, mate with R at K B* 8*th. Had you taken the trouble to forward the position in the first instance, the solution, or some explanation, would have been given you immediately, but we have repeatedly stated that we cannot undertake to furnish solutions unless the Problems Diagrams are sent*

"L. B. F."—We have no means of referring to back Numbers: you must have the goodness to send the position.

"——in Canting on the K's side, you play K to Kt 8*q, and R to B* 8*q. On the Q's side, you play K to Q B* 8*q, and R to Q* 4*q.*

"R. G." will find the Problem mentioned on the wrapper of the "Chess-Player's Chronicle."

"Talpa."—You are mistaken both as to 164 and 168. If, in the latter, Black claim a Knight, you can mate with the B at Q Kt 8*q.*

"Philip."—"D. J."—"T. R. B." Manchester; "J. B. W." Exeter, "A. D. A." and "P. W." are wrong.

SOLUTION TO PROBLEM NO. 168.

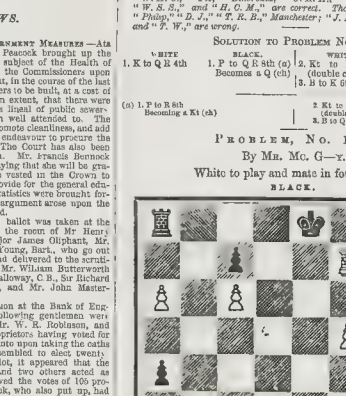
WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE.	BLACK
1. K to Q E 4th	1. P to Q K 8th (a) Becomes a Q (ch)	2. K to R 3rd (double ch)	2. K to R 7th
		3. B to K 6th (ch)
(a) 1. P to R 8th Becoming a Kt (ch)		2. Kt to K 3rd (double ch)	2. K to B 2nd
		3. B to Q Kt 8q	Mate

PROBLEM, NO. 169.

By MR. MC. G—Y.

White to play and mate in four moves.

BLACK.



WHITE.

CHESS IN GERMANY.

The two following Games were recently played at Leipsic between the Count Vitzlum, a leading amateur of the Cercle des Echecs, in Paris, and Herr Hirschlack

BLACK (Count V.)	WHITE (Herr H.)	BLACK (Count V.)	WHITE (Herr H.)
1 K P two	1 P two	16 K to his 5th	K Kt to his 5th
2 K Kt to B 3d	Q Kt to B 3d	17. B takes Q Kt	Q B to K 3d
3 K B to Q B 4th	K B to Q B 4th	18 B takes B	R takes B
4. Q P one	K Kt to B 3d	19 Q Kt to K 4th	B to Q Kt 3d
5. Q Kt P two	K B to Q Kt 3d	20. K R to his 4th	Kt to K B 7th
6. Q P one	Q P one	21. Kt takes Kt (c)	B takes Kt
7. Q P P two	Q B P two	22 K takes B	Q takes K Kt P
8. Q Kt P one	Q Kt to K 2d	23. K R to K 4th (d)	Q to her 7th (ch)
9. Q to her Kt 3d	Castles	24 K to Kt sq	R to K Kt 3d
10. K Kt to his 5th	P to Q 4th (a)	25. K P P two	Q takes Q P
11. P takes P	Q Kt takes P	26. Q to her B 4th	Q to K Kt 6th (ch)
12. Q B to Q Kt 3d	R to K sq		R to B 3d (ch)
13. Q Kt to Q 3d	K P one	27. K to B sq	R to B 7th (ch)
14. K R P two	P takes Kt	28. K to his 2d	Q to R 7th (ch)
15. Q to K 2nd	B takes K B P (b)	29. K to Q sq	Q R to Q sq (ch)
			Black resigned.

(a) This gives an opening for Black's Q B P two.
(b) Properly played.
(c) Instead of taking the Kt, he should have moved Q to her B 4th, having an easy win game with his two Rooks on the K R file.
(d) Q to her B 4th would have been better play

WHITE (Herr H.)	BLACK (Count V.)	WHITE (Herr H.)	BLACK (Count V.)
1. K P two	K P two	10. Q P two	K Kt P two
2 K B P two	P takes P	11. K B to Q 3rd	Castles
3. K B to Q B 4th	Q Kt P two	12. K to Kt sq	K Kt to R 3rd
4. B takes K P	Q B to Kt 2nd	13. K R P two	K Kt P one
5. Q Kt to B 3rd	Q to K R 5th (ch)	14. K to his 5th	B takes Kt
6. K to B 3rd	K Kt to B 3rd	15. P takes B	Q takes P
7. K Kt to B 3rd	Q to K R 4th	16. Kt to K 4th	Q to K Kt 2nd
8. K P one	K Kt to his 5th	17. Kt to B 6th (ch)	K to R sq
9. Q to K 2nd	B to K 2nd	18. Q B takes P, and wins.

CHESS ENIGMAS.

(RETRIEVED UNPUBLISHED.)

No. 143.—By MR. CLARK.

WHITE	BLACK	WHITE	BLACK
K at Q 3rd	K at Q 5th	Pa at K B 3rd,	Q R 7th
K at Q 7th	K at Q B 6th	K 2nd, Q B 5th,
Kt at Q Kt 7th	Pa at Q B 3rd and	and Q Kt 3rd

White to play and mate in four moves.

No. 144.—By MR. [illegible]per

WHITE	BLACK	WHITE	BLACK
K at Q R 5th	K at Q 3rd	P[illegible] Q kt	K at Q Kt sq,
Q at K B 7th	R at K R sq	2nd, and Q R 3rd	and Q Kt 6th
R at Q B 5th	R at K R 7th		P at Q R 4th
Kt at K 6th	B at K 4th

White playing first, to mate in four moves.

No. 145.—By MR. A. L., of Ipswich.

WHITE.	BLACK.	WHITE
K at his 6th.	Pa at Q K 5th, and
B at K Kt 6th	Q 5th
Kts at K B 5th, and Q R 6th	B 2nd	White to play, and mate in three moves.

OUR DOMESTIC COLUMN.

SPRING.

Across the barren mountains,
I'm coming full of glee,
My mantle wand is in my hand,
My step is light and free;
Beneath my feet sweet flowers arise,
And sprinkle all the ground;
The da vy's star, the cowslip's gold,
In plenty spring around.

My voice is heard in every wind,
Or rivulet's murmuring sound;
My footsteps leave a trace behind,
Upon the barren ground;
My breath is the early lark,
Fresh from the dewy dell;
The dog-rose and the eglantine,
Make garlands for my head.

The gentle zephyr is my breath,
With violets perfumed;
My palace is the wide, wide world,
By Nature's sun illumed;
My music is the warbler's song,
Amongst the clothing trees;
My dances are the budding sprays,
Possessing in the breeze.

Away, away, ye biting winds,
And leave me to my toil;
Touch not, thou nipping frost, the vest,
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] M. C. C

SOYER'S FOOD FOR THE POOR.

Nourishing Meagre Food for Lent.—Put two ounces of butter or oil into a two gallon and a half sewpan, peel two ounces of onions, cut thin, put them on the fire till lightly brown (stirring it now and then), and half a pound of vegetables, as turnips, leeks, celery, carrots, &c Do not peel them, or throw away anything, except that part which may be decayed, but wash them well, cut them in a sloping direction, put them in the stewpan, and fry ten minutes longer; put in a pound and a quarter of peas, fill up with two gallons of water; let it simmer for three hours, or till the peas are in a pulp; mix half a pound of oatmeal with a pint of water, make it into a liquid paste, pour it into the stewpan, stirring it with a spoon; add three ounces of salt, half an ounce of brown sugar, boil it ten minutes, and it is ready for use. A little mint, bay leaf, thyme, marjoram, winter savory, in small quantities, is an improvement, and also soaking the peas in soft water. Although this food is entirely deprived of animal substance, yet the farinaceous ingredients will act generously on the digestive organs, parliamenting to a stomach which has suffered from want of food.

Fisherman's Food for the Coast.—Cut four pounds of fresh fish of any kind in large pieces, put it in your pan, with three ounces of salt, half the ounce of sugar, a little pepper, two bay leaves, a little thyme, one quart of water, and let it stew gently; mix one pound of oatmeal with seven quarts of lukewarm water, and rub it over the fish, stir it gently, so as not to break it too much; let it boil two minutes, and it is done. A red herring or drink of cold salt fish, previously soaked, is exceedingly good to make this food; but omit the salt, if all salt fish is used.

Savory Rice Food.—Having saved the bones of the previous day, a very good food may be made as follows: Take six pounds of bones, which break into small pieces, and boil in ten quarts of water, for four hours; having added three ounces of salt, a small bunch of thyme, bay leaf, and savory. Put into a stew-pan two onions cut thin, half a pound of vegetables, as carrots, turnips, celery, &c., cut very thin; half an ounce of sugar; put it on the fire for fifteen minutes, stirring it occasionally; add half pound of oatmeal, and mix well; moisten with two gallons of the stock from the bones; add one and a quarter pounds of rice, previously soaked: boil till tender, and serve.

Curry Fish.—Put into a stew-pan one onion, a small bunch of bay-leaf, thyme, and savory; two apples, if convenient, with a quarter-pound of fat, three ounces of salt, and quarter-ounce of sugar, and fry for fifteen minutes. To one pound and four quarts of water add half pint of flour: add one ounce of curry powder, mixed in a little water. Cut up six pounds of cheap fish into pieces the size of an egg; add to the above, and boil for twenty or thirty minutes, according to the kind of fish. Salt and dried fish, previously soaked, cooked in this way, is excellent, omitting the salt.

SERVANTS' CHARACTERS.

A Correspondent has favoured us with the following decision: "In an action, in the case, before Lord Kenyon, the declaration stated that the plaintiff's wife having been refused by the defendant as a servant, was dismissed from the said service. That, after she was so dismissed, she had applied to a person of the name of S——, for the purpose of being retained and hired as a servant. That Mrs. S—— was ready and willing to have hired and taken her into her service, if the defendant would have given her a character, and such character was satisfactory. That it was the duty of the defendant by law to have given her such a character as he deserved: and then assigned as a breach—that the defendant, not regarding such her duty, wholly refused to give her any character whatever, by reason whereof the said Mrs. S—— refused to hire her into her service. To this the defendant pleaded 'Not Guilty.' On opening the pleadings, Lord Kenyon, addressing himself to the plaintiff's counsel, said, 'Can you make anything of this action? I have read an abstract of the record; it is impossible to support this action.' Upon the plaintiff's counsel replying that he had no case, his Lordship continued to observe—'There is no case; there is no foundation in law for this action. What one's real feeling would dictate, is one thing; but there is a legal obligation on one to give them a character, it is not a character at all? You are, indeed, to take care, if you do give a character, to give a true one; but you are not bound to give a character at all. I am confident that this action cannot be maintained.' The above grave decision has been confirmed by the adjudication of cases of a more modern date. Lord Tenterden, amongst other eminent judges, was, I believe, of the same opinion. You will, I submit, be performing a great boon upon the public generally, by giving publicity to the above in your widely circulated Journal; for, by so doing, Masters and Mistresses will be relieved from all doubt as to the compulsory power of Servants to demand and obtain a character, and servants will see the necessity of conducting themselves so as to deserve the commendation, and secure the good feeling, of those who employ them. The belief generally entertained among Servants, that they can compel their employers to give them a character, is not merely a strongest inducements they have for conducting themselves improperly, that is to an extent not exceeding the limits of patient endurance on the part of those whom it is their duty to serve, and as they may deserve and obtain a good character, according to their deserts." T. A.

RECEIPTS FOR DRESSING INDIAN MEAL.

To Make Corn Bread.—Take as much meal as is wanted, and stir in with a spoon, water, either cold or hot, enough to make a stiff batter; grease a pan, and pour the batter into it, and bake in a quick oven. The blacks in the Southern States make as above, only stiff enough to mix with their hands, and lay it on an iron plate, or common hoe, in front of the fire; they are then called hoe cakes. Salt may be added or not. Or, take corn meal well sifted, stir in boiling water, and make a good, but not too hard, a few eggs well beaten, a little salt and saleratus (?): bake in a quick oven. We use a covered spider, or bake pan, and place plenty of coals over and under. Or, make as above, and add some treacle.

To Make Johnny or Journey Cakes. Take sifted corn meal a sufficient quantity, beat some eggs, stir in with warm milk, a little salt and saleratus, or pearl-ash, to make a batter: bake in small cakes, on a griddle.

To Make Indian an Meal Pudding. Boil one quart of milk, mix in it two-and-a-half gills corn meal very smoothly, seven eggs well beaten, a gill of molasses, and a lump of butter: bake in two hours.

A Boiled Indian Meal Pudding Mix one quart of meal with three quarts of milk very smoothly; add three eggs and a gill of molasses; it must be put on at sunrise, and kept boiling until about three o'clock; the bag must be left loose, as the meal swells very much.

To make Mush, or Hasty Pudding.—Put on one or two quarts of water with a little salt; when it boils sprinkle in some corn meal, stir with a stick until pretty thick: let it boil from a half to an hour; keep stirring to prevent its burning. To be eaten with milk, or butter and molasses.

Hommony and Milk. Take corn, as it comes to mill, to the miller to crack it as coarsely as possible; sift out the meal and blow off the husks: take a sufficient quantity, and put it on to boil with plenty of water and a little salt; with a skimmer take off what husks rise to the top; let it boil till soft. It eats well either cold or warm, with milk.

Hommony Pudding. Take some hommony, and boil as before; when nearly cooked, beat up some eggs and stir in as soon as done enough, with milk, molasses, and spice: be careful not to make it too stiff. Bake it until nicely browned.—(From a Correspondent in Warren County, Illinois.)

FEEDING "THE MILLION."

Mrs. Toosypegs was the widow—poor thing—of a highly-respectable eating-house keeper, who, she assured me, used to do a good deal in the eating line, but he would sometimes have as many as five hundred dinners a day. Unfortunately, however, one evening, "the spirit of progress," as they call it, got into his head, and he would go having an entertainment for the Million, every day, as every half-hour, at only fifteen pence a head. But the Million, drat 'em! had every one of them the appetites of a hundred; and the consequence was, that there was no satisfying them, although he was the greatest cook of soup, and as much fish as they could eat, by way of what he called a damper to their raging appetites: though really it seemed quite thrown away upon them: for, Lord bless you, when the joint was brought up, they seemed to be as fresh as ravenous as ever, and would fall to at the meat as if the Million were a parcel of bea constrictors, and only in the habit of being fed twice a year. And as they declared that, often and often, the waiters had to sit many of the Million, to wake them up and get them to pay; and that, when they swept up the room of a night, she had, over and over again, collected several grass of waistcoat buttons, and the greasy remains of soup, and actually burnt off with the poor husband's food. So that, at last, the blessed Million positively eat Mr. Toosypegs through the Insolvent Court, and left him little or nothing to satisfy his poor creditors with; and the so prepared gravy of the poor mind, that in insane moment of despair, he raised his own bullet-b-f knife against himself, and fell, like another Cook, a victim to the Cannibals who prowled about To-heat-he. The Greatest Plague of Life.

MARTHA'S, CARRIAGE RUG.

Cut some coarse lamb's wool into pieces four inches long, cast twenty-five stitches on moderate sized pins—let row plain knitting. 2nd row knit 1, take one of the pieces of wool, and place it exactly between the pins, so that half shall be in front, and half behind, knit 1: bring the back half in front, knit 1: thus the wool will be secured. Proceed in the same way to the end, which will take twelve pieces of wool. Knit these two rows alternately. Various colours may be prettily introduced in forms of diamonds, vandykes, &c., according to the fancy of the knitter. A very pretty mantle mat may be made in the same way, by substituting pieces of cloth, cut 3 inches long, and a quarter of an inch wide, instead of lamb's wool. A knitter.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SIR DUGALD LITTLE GILMOUR, K.C.B

THIS gallant officer entered the Army in 1794, and rose through every grade to that of Lieutenant-General, the 23rd November, 1841. From the time of his becoming a British soldier to the peace of 1814, Sir Dugald Gilmour was continually in active service, and won laurel after laurel. The Bay of Quiberon, the West Indies, Holland, Zealand, the Peninsula, saw Gilmour sharing in the dangers and the triumph of almost every battle.

Sir Dugald was decorated with the insignia of Knight Commander of the Bath, and wore the Cross of Honour for the engagements of Busaco, Fuentes d'Onor, Nives, and Toulouse.

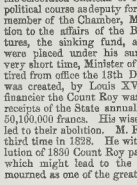
The distinguished General died on the 25th ultimo, at Rome. At the time of his death Sir Dugald was Colonel of the 2nd Battalion of the Rifle Brigade.

COUNT ANTOINE ROY.

COUNT ANTOINE ROY, whose death occurred recently, was born at Chavigny, in Champagne, on the 15th March, 1765. The son of M. Roy, was a distinguishable man. He began by the profession of the law, and, during the period of the Republic, he advocated the cause of many illustrious unfortunate families. In 1794, he relinquished the bar, and, turning his attention to commerce, he created a large manufactory in the archbishopric Château of Navarre, near Evreux. He commenced his political course as deputy for the Department of the Seine, in 1815. As a member of the Chamber, M. Roy distinguished himself by his attention to the affairs of the Bourse, the saltpetre and powder manufactures, the sinking fund, and the depôts and consignations which were placed under his surveillance. In 1818 he was made, for a very short time, Minister of Finance, and was so again in 1819. He retired from office the 13th December, 1822; and, on the following day, was created, by Louis XVIII., a Count and Peer of France. As a financier the Count Roy was unrivalled. During his administration the receipts of the State annually exceeded the expenses to the amount of 50,100,000 francs. His wise hostility to lotteries and gambling houses led to their abolition. M. Roy was created Minister of Finance for the third time in 1828. He withdrew from office in 1829. Since the Revolution of 1830, Count Roy politically lived in every finance debate which might lead to the service of his country. He may be truly mourned as one of the great men of France.

SIR WILLIAM TEMPLER POLE, BART., D.C.L.

THIS respected Baronet, whose death occurred a few days since, represented a family, which Prince, in his "Worthies of Devon," describes as "both ancient and honourable," stating, besides, that "Pole, in the parish of Tiverton, was the seat and possession thereof from the time of the Norman Conquest, for several generations down." The Baronetcy was conferred, in 1628, on John Willing Pole, Esq., of Shute, the M.P. for Devon, the eldest son of Sir William Pole, Knight, of Colcomb, by Mary, his wife, daughter and co-heiress of Sir William Temple, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; and descended, in a direct line, to the gentleman just deceased, who was the seventh inheritor of the title. He was born in 1782, and married twice. By his first wife, Sophia Anne, only daughter of George Templer, Esq., of Shapwick House, county Somerset, he had one son and his second, Charlotte Fraser, niece of John Farquhar, Esq., of Fonthill Abbey, Wilts, he had two sons and two daughters.



Sir William Pole was a Deputy-Lieutenant of the counties of Devon and Somerset, and served as High Sheriff of the former in 1818. He enjoyed the patronage of two livings.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (Friday) Although the arrivals of English wheat for our market since Monday have been moderate, the show of samples up to-day was very small. Owing to a decided herring sprung up for France, the sale for wheat of home produce was active, at an advance in the currencies obtained on Monday of quite 2s per quarter, and which a good clearance was effected. The imports of foreign wheat have been small—viz., 4200 quarters; nearly the whole of which were disposed of at full prices. The supply of flour came to a fair quarter more money Many of the holders refused to sell even at that amount of improvement. Next week's Gazette will see the prices of foreign wheat and flour quoted at which a good clearance was effected. The imports of foreign wheat have been small—viz., 4200 quarters; nearly the whole of which were disposed of at full prices. The supply of flour came to a fair quarter more money Many of the holders refused to sell even at that amount of improvement. Next week's Gazette will see the prices of foreign wheat and flour quoted at which a good clearance was effected.

ARRIVALS. English Wheat, 4148; barley, 740; malt, —; oats, 200. Irish: Wheat, —; barley, —; malt, —; oats, 870. Foreign: Wheat, 4200; barley, 13,830; malt, 3550; oats, 1100; flour, 1100 sacks.

English. Wheat, barley and flour, red, 74s to 82s ditto white, 77s to 84s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 72s to 76s; ditto white 77s to 80s; rye, 52s to 56s; grinding barley, 30s to 32s; distilling, 36s to 40s, malting ditto, 42s to 44s, Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 72s to 74s, brown ditto, 70s to 68s, Kingston and Ware, 74s to 76s; Chevalier ditto, 75s to 78s; Yorkshire and Lincoln feed oats, 20s to 23s; potato ditto 23s to 25s, Youghal and Cork, black, 22s to 23s; ditto white, —s to —s, ship beans, new, 44s to 47s, ditto old, 48s to 50s; tick beans, 42s to 45s; white, 34s to 37s, boilers, 38s to 40s, per quarter. Town-made flour, 60s to 62s; Suffolk, 56s to 58s; Stockton and Yorkshire, 45s to 52s, per 280 lbs. Foreign. Dantzig and Konigsberg red wheat, 74s to 78s; white, 76s to 80s; barley, 30s to 32s; beans, 42s to 46s; and peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 37s to 38s per 196 lbs; Baltic, —s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—The sowing of clover seed being now nearly over, the demand for that article is in a very sluggish state, and prices are with difficulty supported. In all other kinds of seeds very little business is doing. Linseed and rape cakes are dull, but not lower.

Linseed, English, sowing, 48s to 50s; Baltic, crushed, 44s to 46s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 43s to 44s. Hempseed, 32s to 33s per quarter Coriander, 10s to 13s per cwt. Brown Mustard-seed, 9s to 10s, white ditto, 8s to 10s Tares, 2s 6d to 4s 0d per bushel. English Rapeseed, (new) £23 to £25 per last of ten quarters Linseed cakes, English, £13 0s to £13 15s; ditto, foreign, £11 10s to £12 0s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £7 5s to £7 15s per ton. Canary, 70s to 77s per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s, white, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt. Bread.—[illegible] Wheaten bread, the Metropolis are from 9½d to 10½d. Households, 8½d to 9½d per 4lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average Wheat, 74s 5d; barley, 40s 0d; oats, 23s 7d; rye 54s 10d; beans, 45s 10d; peas, 46s 7d.

Tithe Commutation Average Wheat, 74s 6d; barley, 39s 0d; oats, 23s 9d, rye, 56s 0d; beans, 45s 10d; peas, 46s 7d.

Tea The demand for all kinds of tea is still on a very limited scale, but prices are mostly supported.

Sugar.—West India sugar has met a very moderate inquiry, and prices have receded 6d per cwt. All other kinds of raw sugar have moved off slowly, at late rates. Refined goods are a dull sale.

Coffee.—Ceylon qualities are still in fair request, at previous quotations, but West India sorts are a slow inquiry.

Rice.—There is a full average amount of business doing in Bengal, and prices are well supported.

Provisions.—On the whole the demand for Irish butter is steady, at full prices About 1200 firkins have been disposed of for the northern markets. Foreign butter is in fair request, but not dearer. In English butter very little is doing, and prices are low large the trade was firm, and, in some instances, the rates had an upward tendency the best Down Hampshire produce, 64s to 64s per cwt. Cheese moves off freely, but only fair rates; but pigs were quite as easy, with a full average number on offer. Otherwise, however, the trade is heavy, at barely late rates.

Sussex porkers, 43 lbs to 54 4s; Weald of Kent ditto, 54 4s to 57 4 lbs; Mid and East Kent ditto, 61 4s to 63 0s per cwt.

Coals (Friday).—Adairs, 4s; Hollywell Main, 15s 6d; Wylam, 15s; Killingworth, 16s 6d, Stewart's, 16s; and Lambton, 16s 6d per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Notwithstanding the supply of beasts here, to-day, was large—or upwards of 1900 head—we have to report a steady inquiry, though not to any noise, demand for the description of stock. At fully Monday's quotations. There were in the market 310 oxen and cows, 630 sheep, and 75 calves from Holland and Germany. The numbers of sheep were comparatively small. Most beasts moved off freely, but the highest figure for the best cattle was 4s 4d per 8lbs. Lambs, 5s 4d to 6s 4d. Sucking calves, 18s to 28s; and quarter old store pigs, 16s to 18s each. Beasts, 1002, sheep, 1494; calves, 75; pigs, 340.

Newgate and Leadenhall (Friday).—There was a steady business here to-day, at full prices.

Per 8lb by the carcase.—Inferior beef, 3s 10d to 3s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime large ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; large pork, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; inferior mutton, 3s 8d to 3s 10d, middling ditto 4 0 to 4s 2d; prime ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; veal, 4s 0d to 4s 6d; small pork, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; lamb, 5s 4d to 6s 2d.

ROBERT HERBERT.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

In the Money Market, accommodation has been gradually increasing in difficulty during the week; and, towards the close, 5d to 6 per cent for two months' paper, and 5½ to 5¾ per cent for shorter periods, have been the lowest rates. As this is in advance of the minimum Bank rate, it must necessarily follow that further restrictions must be shortly resorted to by the Directors, or the demand for assistance will naturally tend to the Bank of England, as the cheapest market. To prevent this, it is generally understood that all descriptions of accommodation will be limited to thirty days, and should that not prove a sufficient check, then an advance to 6 per cent will be adopted. In the meantime, the Directors must sell a large portion of their securities, for the purpose of lessening the disproportion that at present exists between the Bank notes in the hands of the public, and the amount of bullion remaining in the Bank. Such a step would, under different circumstances, have created the greatest alarm among the trading community, but, in the present case, is not to be viewed with any stronger feeling than that of imparting increased caution. For months past all extensive firms have been shortening their credits, and consolidating their immediate connections to follow the same course. Business, consequently, has been confined to supplying immediate demands, and it may be confidently asserted that less speculation never existed than at present. This leaves the accommodation market open to those whose peculiar necessities always require a certain amount of assistance, while it affords a confident hope that our existing difficulties will, at the worst, be only productive of temporary inconvenience.

The English Market opened on Monday, with Consols quoting 85¼ to ¾. The approaching account day, leading to business, a gradual advance to 85¾ occurred Before closing, however, 85¼ became the current quotation. Consol Scrip opened at 85 discount, but the closing price was ⅜ to ½. An improvement of about ¼ per cent with a steady market on Tuesday, was succeeded by the most remarkable fluctuations on Wednesday. Consols opened at 86¼, whom the Chancellor, Director, and Government broker, both appearing as buyers, gave an impetus to the market. This was increased by an absurd rumour (which answered the intended purpose for a short time) that the Bank had obtained permission from the Government to issue four millions of notes, beyond the amount directed by the Charter. Consols in consequence advanced to 87⅞ for Money. The market was, however, in a state to be easily affected, and some sales were effected at a reaction to the extent of ⅛ per cent. The last price was 86⅞ for Money. Thursday was occupied in settling the account, and very few transactions occurred. Exchequer Bills have been as low as 5s. discount, and Indian Bonds, 5s. discount. Prices at the close were heavy, as the following list will demonstrate: Bank Stock, 193½; Three per Cent Reduced, 85⅝; Three per Cent Consols, 86⅛; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent, 97⅞; Long Annuities, 9⅛; India Bonds, 4s. dis. par; South Sea Stock, 96¾; Consols for May 27, 87⅛; Three per Cent Consols Scrip, 2½ dis.; Exchequer Bills, £1000, 3 dis.; £500, par; Ditto, Small, 2 dis.

Spanish and Portuguese displayed an upward tendency on Monday, the change in the affairs of the former country affording a hope of better times. The five per Cents. were done at 25¾ for the Account, and the Three per Cents. 36¾ for account. Mexicans were 24¾ for the Account. Both Stocks improved on Tuesday, but Spanish was a shade flatter on Wednesday. Although the news from Portugal, on Thursday, was not very favourable to the Queen's cause, no material alteration occurred in the price of the Stock. The fluctuations in the close of the week were busy closing their accounts in all the markets, and business was, therefore, very inactive. Prices at closing were, for Danish Three per Cents., 84; Mexican Bonds, 1846, Five per Cent. 20½; Portuguese Regency Five per Cent., 35; Russian Bonds, 109¾; Spanish Bonds, Five per Cent., for the Account, 25½; Ditto Passive Bonds, 5¾; Ditto Three per Cent. for the Account, 36¾; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cent., 96¾; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 59; Ditto 4 per Cent. Certificates, 90.

The Share Settling on Thursday was the lightest on record, and passed off without difficulty. It is scarcely necessary to add that the present season of the Money Market and English Funds forbid the hope of any activity or improvement for some time to come. The last prices are:—Aubergate, Nottingham, Boston, and Eastern Counties, 12½ ½; Birmingham and Oxford Junction, 18¾; Blackwall, 10; Stamford, and Birmingham, 6¾; Caledonian, 25¾; Ditto, Half Shares, 2¼; Chester and Holyhead, 23¾; Eastern Counties, 18¾; Ditto, York Extension, 1¾; Edinburgh and Glasgow, Quarter Shares, 17½; Great Northern, 24¼; Great North of England, 232; Great Western, 114; Ditto, Fifths, 26¼; Ditto, New, 7¼; Leeds and Bradford, 83; Liverpool, Manchester, and Newcastle Junction, 1; Lon., Bright., and S. Coast, 85¼; Do. Croy. Eighths, 11¾; Lon. and N.-W. 21¾; Ditto, £40 shares, M. and B, 67; Ditto, £10 shares, M. and B, 10¾; London and South Western, 83; Ditto, Tenths (Consolidated), 9½; Ditto, Scrip, 4¼; Lynn and Ely, 20¾; Manchester and Southampton, 11; Midland, New, 39¼; Ditto, New, 4¼; Newcastle and Berwick, 26¼; Ditto, New, 7¼; Norfolk, 130; Northern Counties Union, 4½; North British, 32; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 8; North Staffordshire Junction, 1¼; Ditto, Thirds, 2¼; North Staffordshire, 3¼; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 13¾; Shrewsbury and Birming..am, 3¼; Shropshire Union, 1¾ dis.; South Eastern and Dover, 35¼; Do., New (iss. at £22), 10¾; Do. Croy. Quarters, 5¾; South Wales, 7¾; West Riding Union, 1¼ pm.; York and Newcastle, 34; Do., Preference, 7¼; York and North Midland, 82; Boulogne and Amiens, 1¾; Dutch Rhenish, 4; East Indian, 1; Louvain à la Sambre, 1¼; Northern of France, 19¼; Paris and Rouen, 35; Paris and Strasbourg, —.

SATURDAY MORNING The Consol Market was firmer yesterday, at an advance of about ¼ per cent, the official prices being 87¼ for Money, and 87¼ to ⅜ for Time. In the Foreign Market, although the news from Mexico was considered favourable to the Mexicans, the Stock was flatter, closing at 20¾. Shares remained at about previous quotations

THE LONDON GAZETTE.

TUESDAY, APRIL 13.

FOREIGN OFFICE, APRIL 10.

The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. John Groom, as Consul at Harwich for his Majesty the King of Hanover.

WHITEHALL, MARCH 30.

The Lord Chancellor has appointed Wm. Scott Stewart, Little St. James's-street, tobacconist T. DENMAN, Quadrant, Regent-street, stone mason. E. TIBBEY, Frith-street, Soho, diamond merchant. C. WHITE and W. NEWTON, Jermyn-street, Strand, navy agents M E. BELL, Finch-lane, Cornhill, newsvendor. R SMITH, Kenn, Devonshire, butcher. H. HUCKY, Exeter, baker. J. HOLLOWAY, Exeter, ale and porter merchant. J. KELLOW, Liskeard, baker. J. LONG, Liverpool, merchant. E. ROGERS, Liverpool, licensed victualler. R. DICKINSON, Poulton-in-the-Fylde, Lancashire, maltster.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.

M. BUCHANAN, Glasgow. J. ILLSLEN, Tradesman of Glasgow, wright and joiner.

FRIDAY, APRIL 16.

WAR-OFFICE, APRIL 16.

7th Light Dragoons: Lieut.-Col. the Hon. G. A. Wrottesley to be Lieutenant-Colonel, vice J. J. Whyte Major A. Shirley to be Lieut.-Colonel, vice Wrottesley; Brevet-Major G. P Bushe to be Major, vice Shirley: Lieut. Hon. H. Ward to be Captain, vice Bushe; Cornet C. Bowles to be Captain, vice Helyar, Cornet A. Sarrorie to be Lieutenant, vice Sir W. Russell; Cornet G. Wade to be Lieutenant, vice Bowles; E. Gregg to be Cornet, vice Sarrorie 13th: W. B. Hatfield to be Cornet, vice Dimsdale. 16th: Cornet T. R. O. Dimsdale, to be Cornet, vice Fellowes.

17th Foot: Lieut. T. J. Parker to be Adjutant, vice Windham 13th Quartermaster Serjeant B. Hanrahan to be Quartermaster, vice M. Sheridan. Brig. Capt. G. Warren to be Captain, vice Baker, Lieut. W. P Campbell to be Captain, vice Warren; Second Lieut. L. Agassis to be First Lieutenant, vice Campbell; R. Mitford to be Second Lieutenant, vice Agassis 67th Foot: Lieut. C. Jephson to be Lieutenant, vice Adair; E. L. Hunt to be Ensign, vice Thompson. 3rd West India Regiment: Quartermaster Sergeant R. Horsley to be Quartermaster, vice Nicholson

BREVET -Capt. G. Warren to be Major in the Army; Brev.-Major C. Warren to be Lieut.-Col. in the Army.

MEMORANDUM. The Christian names of Ensign Whitlock, of the 4th Foot, are George Frederick Tod, and not as previously stated

COMMISSION SIGNED BY THE LORD LIEUTENANT

Royal Gloucestershire Regiment of Hussar Yeomanry: W. O. Maclaine to be Cornet, vice [illegible]

BANKRUPTS.

J. DAVIS, Wednesbury, Somersetshire, baker. R. A. STACE, Sandgate, Kent, upholsterer. H. KNIGHT, Reading, Brewer. N. TEMPERLEY, King William-street, City, coal-merchant. J. CLARKE, Bedford, Bedfordshire, draper. C. BESTORD, Guilford, Surrey, linendraper. M. A. SECKELand H. J. BANKEMAN, Duke-street, Adgate, watch manufacturers H. WOOD, Newcastle, Middlesex, innkeeper. J. WOOD, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, surveyor. J. D. SYMES, Axminster, Devonshire, corn-dealer. J. ELLIS, Castle-street, Bristol, linendraper. H. JARDINE, Bristol, ironmonger. J. HOLLOWAY, Exeter, ale and porter merchant. R. HODGKINS, Birmingham, shoemaker. A. W. BATTERSBY, Liverpool, joiner. J. FEARNLEY, Leeds, Yorkshire, cabinet-maker. B. HEARD, sen., Barking, Essex, smack owner. H. HUTCHER, Lamb's Conduit-street, carpenter.

SCOTCH SEQUESTRATIONS.

M. MACLAINE, Lochbury, Argyllshire, deceased. J. M. COMISH, Crieff, maltster, deceased. T. FARQUHAR, Glasgow, shaw, manufacturer.

BIRTHS.

At Lee, the wife of Frederick St. John, Esq., of a daughter.—On the 13th instant, the lady of Seymour Carke, Esq., of a daughter.—At Knowsley-hall, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. and Rev. C. J. Bridgeman, Esq., of a son.—At Holbeach, Mrs. Edward Key, of a daughter.—At Ashley-hall, Mrs. Bayley, of a son.—At Highfield House, Mrs. Ashton, of a son.—At Ashfield House, the lady of Captain W. T. Hall, of a son.—At Norwood, Mrs. John H. Howland, of a son.—At Rome, the Hon. Mrs. Gerard Noel, of a son.—At Bebington, the wife of the Rev. Alexander Bebington Rectory, Suffolk, the wife of the Rev. J. C. Ryle, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

At St. George's, Hanover-square, Charles Whiddon, Esq., to Anne, widow of the late James Mortimer, Esq.—At Thorpe, Notts, Theodore Mollet, Esq., to Louisa Joyce, youngest daughter of the Rev. Charles Townsend.—At Worcester, the Rev. Joseph Moore, M.A., to Sarah, daughter of the late Rev. John Davison, B.D.—At Pimlico, Warner Charles, son of the late Sir Charles Rich, Bart., to Mary Ann, daughter of the late John Carr, Esq.—On the 15th instant, John Sanford, Esq., to Harriet, only daughter of Captain Sir Andrew F. Gregg, R.N.—On Wednesday, the 7th instant, at Egremont, Cumberland, by the Rev. H. Stocl, vicar of St Ippolyts, Herts, William Stanley Harris, Esq., of Liverpool, to Mary, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Colin Campbell, and Whitehaven.—At Bath, Captain Hamilton, Commander Thomas Fisher, R.N., to Anne, eldest daughter of the late Major-General Hamilton, of Dalguise.—At St. George's Church, Hanover-square, Alexander Donovan, Esq., of Mitcham, Surrey, Deputy-Lieutenant of the late John Poulett Thomson, Esq., and sister of the late Lord Sydenham.—At Knightsbridge, the Rev Henry Joseph Maltby, M.A., to Elizabeth Mary, eldest daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Bradford, G.C.—At Bath, Lieutenant-Colonel Lloyd, C.B., to Sarah, eldest daughter of Joseph Delavante, Esq.—At Paddington, Robert Hawkins, Esq., to Mary Ann, youngest daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Hall, Rector of Ashton, and the Rev. George Edward Tate, M.A., to Matilda, eldest daughter of the late Daniel Mayor, Esq., of Middlewood Hall, Yorkshire.

DEATHS.

At Edinburgh, Edward George Gordon, Esq., Commander, R.N., eldest son of Commodore Sir J. J. Gordon Bremer K.C.B., K.C.H., of Woolwich Dockyard, aged 26.—On the 8th inst., Mrs. Elizabeth Baker, aged 84, relict of Charles Baker, Esq.—At Brompton-crescent, Mrs. Elizabeth Hamilton, aged 87.—At Bath, on the 8th inst., in the 87th year of her age, Mrs. Marshall, aged 86, Mrs. Elizabeth Hemsworth.—At Paris, Miss Katharine Wellings.—At Chelmsford, aged 85, Sophia, relict of the late Samuel Lucas, Esq.—At Clapham-Rise, Elizabeth Sharp, Amelia, the wife of Commander Henry Story, R.N.—At Bromley, Kent, Charlotte, widow of the Rev. Alfred Hardy, and the last surviving child of the late Rev. Charles Hardy.—At Chorley, Dorothea Davidson, printer, an old and much respected inhabitant of St. Clement Danes.—Suddenly, of apoplexy, Louisa Fleetwood Buchan, Esq., of Hyde park-gate, Kensington-gore.—On the 9th instant, at Southport, Lancashire, Mary, eldest daughter of Robert Charlwick, Esq., of Prestwich, near Manchester.—At Twickenham-green, John London, Esq., in his 78th year.—At Cheltenham, Frances, youngest daughter of the late Edmund Turner, Esq., aged 82.—At Versailles, the Rev. Edward Jenks.—At Sheerness, Mrs. Mary Falkon, relict of the late Captain C. M. Falkon, R.N.—At Bentworth Factory, Hants, the Rev Thomas Mathews At Hooknorton, Mrs. Hon. John Rodney At Wolverhampton, Mr. [illegible] aged 11th inst., Mrs. Osbaldeston, the wife o William Osbaldeston, Esq. At the residence of Wight, Louisa Edith, wife of Sir Richard Simeon, Bart.—At Putney, Catherine, relict of the late Edward Miller Mundy Esq., of Shipley, formerly M P. for Derbyshire.—On the 13th inst. the Rev. Jesse Wilson.

FINE ARTS.

EGYPT AND NUBIA; from Drawings made on the Spot, by DAVID ROBERTS, R.A. With Historical Descriptions by WILLIAM BROCKEDON, F.R.S. Lithographed by LOUIS HAGHE. Part I. F. G. Moon.

Every lover of art and travel must hail with satisfaction this commencement of the publication of another Section of the results of Mr. David Roberts's late Visit to the East. The portion already issued Holy Land and Palestine has, undoubtedly, realised the high expectations raised by the elaborate richness and vivid beauty of the Artist's Sketches, exhibited a few years since; and, the Part before us will amply maintain this high reputation. The interest of the subject is thus emphatically apostrophised by Mr. Brockedon, in the opening of the Introduction to the work:

"Egypt! How remote—how vast, are the historical associations which this word calls forth! It not only embraces the entire period of sacred history, from Abraham to the Christian dispensation, but Egypt, in her profane history, issues at once from the mists of Time a great and powerful nation To us she has no historical infancy. Evidence remains in the vast structures of the Valley of the Nile of her maturity 4000 years ago; they are the records of her social condition at that period; and the earliest historians, and the latest and most profound inquirers, confirm the claim which her imperishable pyramids and temples offer to ancient greatness."

The first view shows us the Pyramids of Geezeh, across the Nile, from Old Cairo; seen from hence, they appear unimportant specks in the desert; but, if the approach to them be made in an hour, directly through the beaten track in the fields, they enlarge rapidly upon the vision of the observer, and at length fill his mind with an idea of their vastness, which he could never have preconceived

Next is a View towards the Pyramids of Dashour and Saccara, with a Slave-boat on the Nile, showing the vast breadth of the Nile, and the flat character of its banks and its valleys. This is a very finely-executed view, and it receives a picturesque interest from Mr Roberts's introduction of a Slave-boat, as the foremost object: the craft, Mr. Roberts tells us in his journal, was laden with a cargo of female slaves from Kordofan; and it was owned by a hoary villain, a Greek, who had the effrontery to assert that he was a Christian. This view, by the way, is an exquisite specimen of tint-printing; for, it has all the character of a water-colour drawing, of the most delicate execution

Pompey's Pillar, the first object seen, in approaching Alexandria from the sea, on the coast of Egypt, is the subject of the next view: it is to be regretted that the elegant and well-wrought shaft has not a better capital and base

The other views are The Ruins of the Temple of Komombo, in a bay of the Nile, and a ruin of truly magnificent character: its massive lotus and palm-leaved capitals, and its entablature of enormous blocks, are astounding; whilst the vast slabs of its ceiling, each twenty-seven feet long, nearly seven feet wide, and five feet thick, naturally suggest the inquiries—By what power were they transported hither, erected, and have been displaced? This view is beautifully printed, in the natural tints of the stone, the sand, and the sky.

The Colossal Figures in front of the Temple of Aboo-Sembel, the discovery of Burckhardt, fill another of the folios; they are the most beautiful Egyptian colossi yet found. Yet, these two stupendous figures have been mutilated by Cockney tourists and Yankee travellers; and Mr Roberts tells us that these contemptible relic-hunters have also smeared their names on the very foreheads of the Egyptian deities!

The large Vignette is the entrance to the Great Temple of Aboo-Sembel, a very picturesque introduction to the part,

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.—"GIRL WITH POULTRY. &c."—PAINTED BY P. VAN SCHENDEL.

SCOTLAND DELINEATED. Parts I. and II. Hogarth.

This magnificent folio will consist of a Series of Views by Clarkson Stanfield, R.A., David Roberts, R.A.; Cattermole, Leitch, Creswick, Harding, Nash, and Macculloch; drawn in Lithography by J. D. Harding, and accompanied by historical, antiquarian, and descriptive letter-press, by J. D. Lawson, M.A.

The views in Part I. are Edinburgh Castle, from the Grassmarket, by Leitch; West Bow, by Cattermole, very effective; Moray House, by Nash; and Roslin Castle, by Roberts and Harding.

In Part II. we can only particularise Old Leith Pier, by Stanfield; and Linlithgow Palace, by Roberts.

The several views bear the characteristic excellence of their respective artists; and, in picturesqueness of nature and art, these drawings will rarely be equalled. The letter-press commences a minute history of Edinburgh Castle, attested by elaborate notes. The work is splendidly printed by Ballantyne; in parting, we must not omit to commend the wood-cut on the wrapper—the Grand Entrance to the Palace of Holyrood, drawn by Roberts, engraved by Linton, and, therefore, a two-fold masterpiece of art.

SUFFOLK-STREET EXHIBITION.

(CONCLUDED.)

"LAUNCE'S LECTURE," from the "Two Gentlemen of Verona"—engraved in our present number—is one of the most successful efforts of Mr. Dickse's pencil; and, we may add, as well, one of the best pictures in the Exhibition. Launce, the servant of Proteus, one of the "Two Gentlemen of Verona," has a dog named Crab. Now, Launce is extremely fond of his dog, and endures hard words, and still harder blows, to save the life of his ungrateful little cur:—"I think Crab, my dog, be the sourest-natured dog that lives;" and so, indeed, Mr. Dickse has drawn him. "Nay, I'll be sworn," says Launce. "I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed; I have stood in the pillory for geese he hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for't. Thou think'st not of this now!" The subject is extremely excellent, and it is a wonder to us how Mr. Edwin Landseer has missed it.

Our other Illustration, "A Girl with Poultry," is from a small cabinet picture by P. Van Schendel, of Brussels; much in the manner of the Dutch masters, and clever in point of execution, but still a long way off from the excellence attempted. The composition is simple—a candle-light scene, with a girl in a red dress directing attention to some poultry before her. The expression of the girl's face is particularly pleasing, and some of the details of the picture carefully elaborated. The composition of the hare at the side is taken from a well-known picture in the gallery of Mr. Hope, of Duchess-street.

Some of the best pictures in the Exhibition we are glad to see marked sold. This is cheering. Mr. Creswick, the painter, has bought, it is said, Mr. Josi's "Waiting for the Hay-Boat;" a compliment which reminds one of Sir Joshua Reynolds's purchase of a picture by Gainsborough; and of Martin's enthusiastic purchase of a picture by Etty. Mr. Josi will, no doubt, properly appreciate the compliment he has had paid him: Mr. Creswick is a master in art, nor could his commendation have taken a more gratifying shape.

There are pictures of merit in the Exhibition which still remain unsold; and some, of no merit whatever, that have had the good fortune to find purchasers. This must always be the case. It says, however, very little for public patronage and discernment that Mr. Allen's

NEW CHURCH AT HORNCASTLE.

THE parish of Horncastle, at the foot of the Wolds of Lincolnshire, exhibits many handsome specimens of modern improvement. The town consists of respectable, well-built houses; and the Church has been, in great part, rebuilt of late years: part of it is as ancient as the time of Henry VII. Its accommodation is, however, by no means equal to the spiritual wants of the parish. The late Vicar projected the erection of a second Church; but, he did not live to witness the completion of his wishes. His munificence, however, gave impulse to the good work, which has been taken up by his successor, the Rev. J. T. Clark, the present Vicar, who has laboured so successfully in the cause that the new edifice has, ailength, been founded.

The corner-stone of the new Church, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was laid on Tuesday week, in the presence of a large concourse of spectators. The ceremony was very impressive. The Committee, consisting of several of the clergy and leading gentry of the parish and neighbourhood, met, and walked in procession to the churchyard, where they were met by the church singers, who preceded them round the site of the Church, singing the 100th Psalm. Close to the spot where the stone was to be laid, a platform was erected for the accommodation of the ladies and the Committee: and here the procession halted, and the service was commenced by the officiating clergymen.

At the conclusion of the service, Sir Henry Dymock, Bart., presented the Vicar with a silver trowel, requesting him to lay the corner stone of the new Church. The reverend gentleman descended from the platform, and commenced by first placing under the stone a bottle containing a coin of the present reign, and a parchment, on which was written a short account of the Church, the names of the subscribers, &c. The Vicar then spread the mortar under the stone, which was lowered to its place; the builder proved the work with his level and plumb-line; and the Vicar struck the stone three times with the mallet, saying:—"In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, I lay the corner stone of this Church. May the blessing of God Almighty rest upon it, that the building here to be erected may serve to the furtherance of his glory and the salvation of his people."

The reverend gentleman then re-ascended the platform, and addressed the assemblage in a tone of pastoral solemnity, intreating the blessing of God upon the building hereafter to be devoted to his service for ever. After adverting to the munificence of his predecessor in originating the good work, the Vicar proceeded to express his gratification at the strong feeling expressed by the wealthier portion of the community of the district, in behalf of the poor of Christ's flock, in providing for them this additional Church-accommodation: and the reverend gentleman concluded with a powerful exhortation to prayer, in this "place of edification, and of successful preparation for Heaven and its abiding joys."

After the Benediction had been pronounced, Sir Henry Dymock briefly addressed the assembly, and concluded by praying that the work which had been that day so auspiciously commenced might conduce to the spiritual welfare of the inhabitants, and the glory of Almighty God.

NEW CHURCH AT HORNCASTLE.

The National Anthem was then sung, and the procession returned to the Bull Inn, where an elegant cold collation was provided for the parties who had attended the ceremony The bells of the old Church rang merrily at intervals; and, in the afternoon, the workmen, singers, &c., partook of a dinner provided for them at the George Inn, at the expense of the Committee.

The Church, of which we annex a perspective view, is in the Early English style of architecture; and is highly creditable to the skill and taste of Mr. Stephen Lewin, of Boston, who has furnished the design. It is expected to be completed by the commencement of next year.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD. April 14.

In a Congregation holden this morning, being the first day of Easter Term, the following degrees were conferred, viz

M.A.—Rev. Jacob George Mountain, Merton College; William Basil Tickell Jones, Scholar of Queen's College; Alfred Pott, Demy of Magdalen College; Rev. Frederick Thomas Smith, Fellow of Magdalen College; Henry Barnett, Christ Church; Rev. Freeman H. Bishop, Trinity College

Grand Compounder.—Edward Tindal Turner, Fellow of Brasenose College.

B.A. John Stubbs Bushby, Brasenose College; Thomas Huntley Green, Balliol College; Robert James Simpson, Oriel College; William Frank Blandy, Queen's College.

CAMBRIDGE. April 10.

ST. CATHARINE'S HALL.—John Smyth Purton, B.A., has been elected a foundation fellow of this Society. Yeoman Bedel: Mr. John Crouch has been re-appointed Yeoman Bedel of the University

April 13.

James Leigh Joynes hasbeen elected a Fellow of King's College.

MISS BURDETT COUTTS' NEW CHURCH.—The arrangements for proceeding with the erection of Miss Burdett Coutts' new church, in Rochester-row, Westminster, to which an ecclesiastical district has already been assigned, having now been completed, the foundation-stone will be laid in the course of a few days with the customary solemnities. It is expected that the ceremony will be performed by Miss Coutts in person, assisted by the Bishop of London and the Dean and Chapter of Westminster. The site has been gratuitously made over by the Dean and Chapter. Until the completion of the church, divine service is to be performed in the temporary building which has been for some time opened under the ministry of the Rev. William Tennant, M.A., incumbent of the new district.

THE INSTALLATION OF THE CHANCELLOR OF CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY. The installation of his Royal Highness Prince Albert, as Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, will take place some time in July, unless a general election should interfere to prevent this arrangement. The venerable Laureate, William Wordsworth is to write the Installation Ode.

large landscape of "A Valley in Wales," and Mr. Holland's "Herne Bay," are both of them unsold; and that Mr. Stevens's "Dividing the Spoil" one of the largest and least meritorious pictures in the Exhibition—has already found a purchaser.

Landscape and marine subjects form the staple of the Exhibition; yet these, at times, are poor in composition, and meagre in detail. Selection, says Fuseli, is the invention of a landscape painter. But this, we may add, is a rare excellence. Some painters sweep, like a dragnet, great and small; and copy, with tasteless servility, whatever is before them. Others, again, reject too boldly, and throw strange clouds and still stranger colours over the whole of their compositions. It is a dangerous attempt to try and improve Nature, but we may poetize her at times, when we keep within due bounds; and this poetizing it is which makes one painter superior in composition to another. For instance, in the present Exhibition, Mr. Allen is very unlike Mr. Anthony, Mr. Pyne very unlike Mr. Holland, and Mr. Jon very unlike them all. Mr. Allen always succeeds in putting some poetry into a landscape, but then his detail is seldom very good; while others, again, who have no poetry in their souls, have great dexterity in adhering to the minutiæ of Nature. So difficult is it to find one who combines those very varied excellences always required to constitute a great painter.

We cannot close our account of the present Exhibition without a word of approbation in favour of a water-colour drawing inadvertently overlooked in our former notices. We allude to a small circular-shaped drawing (No. 605.)—"Norham Castle, on the Tweed," by Mr. G. Pearson. This, we are glad to see, is "sold;" for it is full of poetry and truth.

EXHIBITION OF THE SOCIETY OF BRITISH ARTISTS.—LAUNCE'S LECTURE.—"TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA, ACT. IV., S. 4."—PAINTED BY T. F. DICKSEE.

The Sale of Corn.—From official statements just published, it appears that the total number of quarters of wheat sold in England and Wales, by the corn-inspectors, amounted in the year 1846 to 3,898,909; and that the average price for the year was 54s. 8d. The total quantity of wheat and wheat-flour imported into Great Britain from foreign countries in the year 1846, was 2,255,705 quarters; from Ireland (produce), 303,462; and from the Isle of Man and Channel Islands (produce), 20,897; making a grand total of 2,570,064 quarters. The quantity exported within the year was—to Ireland, 192,471; to other parts of foreign and colonial produce, 134, 804; and of British and Irish produce, 6241; making a total exportation from Great Britain of 333,516 quarters. The quantity of wheat and wheat-flour entered for home consumption in Great Britain in the year was 2,249,091 quarters; and the quantity remaining in bond at the close of the year, 335,033 quarters.

Loss of the Tweed.—A subscription has been opened at Southampton on behalf of the widows, orphans, and others dependent hitherto on the sufferers who have unhappily perished with the above unfortunate vessel. It is to be hoped that the example will be followed by other places.

The Liverpool Small Debts Court.—The Court for the Recovery of Small Debts opened on Monday, at Liverpool, before Mr. Judge Lowndes. Immediately on the Judge taking his seat, number one was called, and the cases were proceeded with. In the course of the day no less than 105 were disposed of.

THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

The Trustees of this Establishment have just added to our national collection of Greek sculpture, a head of the young Apollo, which we have Engraved. It was purchased of Mr. Buchanan, of Pall Mall, and was recently imported by him from Italy. It is placed on a pedestal standing in the vestibule adjoining the Elgin Room. It is a beautiful relic, and bears a considerable resemblance to the Apollo Belvidere.

HEAD OF APOLLO, AT THE BRITISH MUSEUM.

THE NEW PLANET, NEPTUNE.

Professor Challis, in conformity with the wish of the Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge University, and the Observatory Syndicate, has given a second report of the proceedings in the Observatory, relative to the New Planet, the first report of which was made in Dec. 12, of last year. The report gives an account of subsequent observations, both of its position and physical appearance; with results respecting the orbit, deduced from observations by calculation. On January 12, Professor Challis, for the first time had a distinct impression that the Planet was surrounded by a ring. Subsequent observations made by his assistant, Mr. Morgan, with the striking coincidence of three distinct drawings of the form of the Planet, made by Mr. Lassell, of Liverpool (who was the first to suspect the existence of a ring), the Learned Professor, and Mr. Morgan, appear to substantiate the statement of Mr. Lassell. The ratio of the diameter of the ring to that of the Planet, as measured from the drawings, is about that of three to two. The apparent diameter of the body of the Planet, taken with the Northumberland Telescope, is nearly 3".

In calculating the following second approximations, Mr. Adams has used the mean of the two places obtained on August 4th and 12th, and of the others he has selected nine, which were the best determined, and separated by convenient intervals. All the results are calculated for the epoch of 1846, August 8,0ᵈ mean time at Greenwich.

Heliocentric Longitude of the Planet referred to the mean Equinox of 1847.0	..	..	..	326 . 41 . 13.3
Heliocentric motion in Longitude in 100 days	..	..	..	36 . 5.3
Heliocentric Latitude South	..	..	..	33 . 31.4
Change of Heliocentric Latitude in 100 days	..	..	..	1 . 4.4
Longitude of the Descending Node	..	..	..	313 . 3 . 44.0
Inclination of the Orbit	..	..	..	1 . 46 . 40.1
Distance of the Planet from the Sun	..	..	..	30.208
Half the Latus Rectum of the Orbit	..	..	..	30.238

For the sake of comparison with the above second approximation, the first results are given, from which it will be remarked that the first and second approximations do not differ by any large quantities.

Heliocentric Longitude	..	..	..	326 . 39 Aug. 4, 1846.
Longitude of the Descending Node	..	..	..	309 . 43
Inclination of the Orbit	..	..	..	1 . 49
Distance of the Planet from the Sun	..	..	..	30 . 05

The calculations give [illegible]° for the Planet's heliocentric motion from August 4 to January 15. This is so small an arc that it is not possible to deduce, with any degree of [illegible], those elements, the determination of which depends on change of the heliocentric distance. Mr. Adams has, however, obtained certain limiting results, which, as possessing considerable interest, are here subjoined.

The eccentricity of the orbit cannot exceed 0.1. The most probable value is 0.06.

The most probable longitude of perihelion is 49° 58', and true anomaly, 276° 43'; according to which the Planet is near the extremity of the latus rectum, and is descending towards perihelion. These results are extremely uncertain

The mean distance is 3[illegible], with a [illegible] and the corresponding sidereal period 167 years, with a probable error of two years.

[illegible] the Planet's [illegible] much less, that it [illegible] Bode's law, which holds with reference to the other Planets, fails in this instance.

The apparent diameter of Neptune to that of Uranus being, from the above determination of the distance, in the ratio of 3 to 4, its bulk to that of Uranus is in the ratio of 8 to 9.

The foregoing is the sum of the results derivable from the first series of observations. More exact information cannot be had until the Planet emerges from the solar rays.

Professor Challis concludes his report by referring to the name of the Planet. He states that M. Struve, Professors Gauss and Encke, and Mr. Adams, have thought fit to adhere to the name of Neptune, and that, under all the circumstances, he considers it right to follow their example.

LITERATURE.

Ecclesiastes; or, the Preacher. Illustrated. Published by Dickinson. The Book of Ecclesiastes is characterised by the higher attributes of Hebrew poetry—by ardent feelings, splendid thoughts, a great variety of beautiful images, strength of expression, bold and eccentric metaphors and comparisons, condensation, and elegance; but particularly by its declaration, in the most affecting and pleasing manner of the praises of the Deity; and by its excitement of the people to good works. Hence, this sacred Poem has been chosen by some fair hand for the exercise of her pencil, in a series of illustrations, which at once touch the heart by their picturesque grace and beauty.

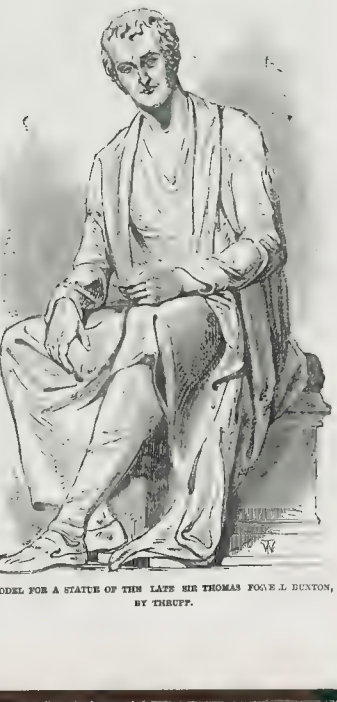
As the plan of illustration is somewhat novel, we shall describe it. The form of the work is an oblong, twelve inches by eight. The leading characteristic of the designs is the free introduction of plants and flowers, in a border of which are set verses of the Poem; the head of each chapter printed upon a tablet of gold; and the entire Book engraved or printed in black letter.

The illustrative fitness, the graphic ingenuity, and charming picturesqueness, of the compositions, it is scarcely possible to describe to the reader: how the crown, the scroll, and the pen, encircled with flowers, form the vignette of the title-page; or how the Holy City is grouped within a luxuriant plant; how the grasshopper is figured as the emblem of "creatures restless in their courses;" and how the several initials are illuminated, and intertwined with the graceful leaf and flower—here emblematic of eternity, and there of short abiding. The 6th and 7th verses of Chap. I. "The sun also ariseth," the circuits of the wind are illustrated by a cleverly-designed wind-vane, a sun dial, with its gnomon as portion of the initial T; and a sunflower, in its most flaunting luxuriance. This is a very effective composition. In Chap. II., giving unto wine, is characterised by grapes and an antique vessel about the initial, and the vanity thereof by a spider's web beneath it; "A time to mourn, and a time to dance," by a ruined city and a field of waste; "Man goeth to his long home," by a funeral procession in the East. Lastly, there is the pitcher broken at the fountain, with the temple and the distant hills, the former overshadowed by a flourishing thistle—in contrast completing the picture of desolation and decay—of "vanity and vexation of spirit." Then, the loosed silver cord drops from the illuminated initial; within it is a fountain, whose waters falling upon frail flowers, unto the earth, typify the spirit returning "unto God who gave it."

These few notes will convey to the reader but a faint idea of the poetic imagery, the allegorical ingenuity, yet impressive reality, with which the pencil of our ladye artist has invested the poetic eloquence of "Ecclesiastes; or, the Preacher." The designs form, as it were, settings for his sacred truths and solemn warnings; whilst they lend a sorrowful charm even to the melody of Hebrew song.

TESTIMONIAL TO SIR T. FOWELL BUXTON.

Mr. Thrupp, the sculptor, has just completed a working model of a statue of the late Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, which it is proposed to place in Westminster Abbey. The cost is to be defrayed by public subscription, to which his Royal Highness Prince Albert has sent a contribution of £20. The Committee of Subscribers are much pleased with Mr. Thrupp's model; and we trust that the fund will now make rapid progress. It is cleverly observed, in the Athenæum, of this monumental commemoration: "Besides supporters of all ranks in this country, it is computed that not fewer than 30,000 Negroes in the West Indies and Africa have contributed their mite towards the monument. This gives a very peculiar feature to the Testimonial, and writes a character far beyond the commemorations of brass and marble on the work itself. A monument of art in our great metropolitan Abbey, chiefly by a nation of immemorial Pariahs, in record of their admission amongst the families of enfranchised and intelligent men, and in gratitude to one of the chiefs who won their freedom, is impressed with meanings which render the language of art at once touching and sublime."



MODEL FOR A STATUE OF THE LATE SIR THOMAS FOWELL BUXTON, BY THRUPP.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE current week was not without matter of movement for the turfite, but it possessed little matter of moment. There was racing at Bath, but it must have been anything but sport for those who were perched on the apex of Sandown last Tuesday.

Ah! well a-day
My tooth begin to chatter, my veins freeze!

Contemporary, also, there was a meeting in the North, at Catterick Bridge; and a capital day—not so far afield yesterday, on Epsom Downs. Burton Constable, too, was on the scene—in short, it was a sporting week. Still its issues are, for the most part, of temporary interest, and, for that reason, we will pass them for events of more general account.

This day fortnight we had occasion to allude to a case then before the Jockey Club, arising out of an alleged false start for the Althorp Stakes at Northampton some short time previous. The previous decision was that the race would have been dealt with as if it had never taken place; we took leave to differ from that way of thinking, and our view was that of the authorities. In the last number of the Sheet Calendar there was the following announcement:—"The Stewards of the Jockey Club are unanimously of opinion that the start for the Althorp Plate Stakes, at Northampton, was a good start, and that The Sheriff is therefore entitled to the stakes. The Stewards avail themselves of this opportunity of stating that the whole principle of starting by signal, and not by word of command, is to secure the certainty of the start; and that, when both flags are dropped, they must be raised again, nor the jockeys be recalled on any plea whatever." This is rather an improvement on the system, which, not many years ago, gave us some thirty-eight false starts for the Clearwell at Newmarket. Thus being reached the metropolis of the Turf, with the reader's leave, we will abide there, while we discuss the approaching festival—the important First Spring Meeting to be celebrated in the next week. Within a very few days the scheme or theme of several of the great three-year old races, have undergone very remarkable changes Coryngham, a colt which has never been out, was first favourite for the Two Thousand Guineas Stakes, and third for the Derby at the close of Monday's business at Tattersall's. The race in the Craven Meeting over the Ditch Mile for which Epirote was so close to Planet—has affected the prestige, not only of the Goodwood champion, but of his companion—the brown Van Tromp. Therefore—upon the principle in the ring—because the pet of the great stable goes down, the pet of another goes up—it is "Danebury to the rescue." Still, either there is a mistake somewhere, or there can scarce be near double the odds against Liberator for the Two Thousand that are taken about Coryngham. The former is vouched for £500—at forfeit, even weights, against Van Tromp—to run in the Houghton Meeting and he was at Planet's scores on the same terms, but the offer was declined. The bond fides of these tactics will probably be shown before the issue be determined. And so will a good deal of the fides supported by the demonstrations in the ring for the last two or three months—before the week is over. It may not, indeed, be so important a First Spring as some of its predecessors, but without doubt it will present many passages of interest—both present and prospective. The character of its racing is sound and legitimate: no handicap refuges for the destitute—but equal main and chance for all that have any pretensions to show on Newmarket Heath. The eccentricities for which the Chester Cup is so distinguished, have begun in earnest—and they will most likely be continued throughout the coming week and up to the day of the event itself. The Lamb has become mischievous: it has has already shown its horns. . . . .

Fœnum habet in cornu tuæ ti, Romane caveto

Which means, that backing an animal so situated is dangerous. . . . . But what steed it may be safe—or even prudent to back, we are not of purpose to prophesy—seeing that confessedly it is just now decidedly "out of luck." At all times it is a practice little deserving of being honoured with observance; at the present, it is a mockery if not a snare.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY.—Business was not so brisk as usual at this season, but it led to several changes, and more particularly in the Derby, for which Coryngham came with a rush, and left off decidedly third favourite: he was equally in demand for the Two Thousand Guineas Stake. Slander made quite as rapid an advance for the Oaks, and may be considered second favourite. Several other horses were in good odour for their respective engagements—amongst them Clermont, Wolfdog, Emerald Isle, Gientili, Mendicant, Deloed, The Lamb, War Eagle, and Wanota.

ST. MEDARD-LE-MARSH STAKES.
5 to 1 on Burlesque | 6 to 1 agst Morocco (1)

METROPOLITAN HANDICAP

4 to 1 agst Clermont (1)	10 to 1 agst Emerald Isle	15 to 1 agst Gannet (1)
10 to 1 ——Jenny Wren	(1 freely)	15 to 1 —— Gwaller (1)
10 to 1 —— Wolfdog (1)	12 to 1 —— Crosier (1)

TWO THOUSAND GUINEAS STAKE.

Even on Kent's lot	7 to 1	7 agst Gientili
5 to 2 agst Coryngham	7 to 1	—— Liberator

CHESTER CUP
15 to 1 agst Mendicant (3)	35 to 1 Agst Courtesy	66 to 1 agst Chatterbox (1)
16 to 1 —— Dulcet (4)	40 to 1 —— Rascals	66 to 1 —— Clumsy (1)
16 to 1 —— The Lamb	40 to 1 —— Amaranthe (1)	1000 to 12 —— Queen of Tyne
20 to 1 —— Newcourt	40 to 1 —— Emerald Isle (1)	(taken)

DERBY

12 to 1 agst Forth's lot	17 to 1 agst Epirote	40 to 1 agst Horn of Chase
7 to 1 —— Planet	16 to 1 —— The Liberator	66 to 1 —— Old Port (1)
7 to 1 —— Van Tromp	20 to 1 —— War Eagle	66 to 1 —— Albertnian (3)
11 to 1 —— Gientili	33 to 1 —— Wanota	66 to 1 —— Black Dwarf
12 to 1 —— Coryngham	33 to 1 —— Martin	1000 to 20 —— Nottingham

OAKS

7 to 1 agst Clementina (1)	8 to 1 agst Slander (1)

THE GREAT STEEPLE-CHASE AT THE CROIX DE BERNY, NEAR PARIS.

The Great Annual Steeple-Chase of France came off last Sunday, at the Croix de Berny. A great many foreigners, especially English, were present; and the country people of the villages for miles around went in great numbers. The gathering altogether could not have been less than thirty thousand persons, and they comprised all ranks, from the very highest to the very lowest. The number of carriages was enormous, and they were of all kinds, from the dashing four-in-hand down to the pedestrian's humble cart. On the whole, the assemblage was the largest ever seen at any sporting event in France. And it is specially worthy of remark, as showing the great enthusiasm of the people for the sport, that, though disappointed in their expectations of fine weather, rain having commenced falling heavily on the opening of the day's business, and continued with ever-increasing violence until the close, not a score individuals, and scarcely a single carriage, quitted the course.

The ground selected this year was somewhat different from that chosen for the last steeple-chase. Instead of running entirely on a flat, the horses on this occasion had to ascend a hill, on heavy ploughed land; they then descended it, and went to some distance beyond the road from Paris to Orleans, and after describing a circle, came round pretty freely on the same line, passing the starting-place to arrive at the winning-stand. The entire length traversed was about four miles. The obstacles to be encountered were not fewer than thirty-two in number, consisting of ditches, hurdles, walls, hedges, a river, and a brook. Some of them were rather more than such as one is accustomed to see in an English steeple-chase. In height none exceeded four feet, or in width ten feet.

His Royal Highness the Duke de Nemours was present. Count D'Hedouville and Baron Lecoulteux duly superintended the proceedings.

The weighing commenced shortly after two, and a few minutes after it was concluded, the grand steeple-chase began. It was a

Handicap for 12,500f, added to a Sweepstakes of 200f, forfeit, 250f, but only 195f, if declared; the second horse to receive 1250f from the entry; and the third to save his stake

Lord Strathmore's b h Sir. Leger, 12st 4lb	(Mason)	1
M. Crémieux's b h Young Lottery, 10st 3lb ..	(M'Donough)	2
Mr. Lambden's Discount, 11st 5lb ..	(Oliver)	3

It was a beautiful affair altogether. Experienced judges declared it the finest ever seen in France, and many said that it was not always equalled in England. Considering the number of obstacles, there were remarkably few accidents—not one fall, and only three horses and their riders came into the river. The winner gained about 30,000 francs, including the forfeits of the horses entered but not running. Loud applause greeted him on his arrival at the goal. The above was followed by a second Steeple-chase, by gentlemen riders, for 2500f, added to 300f., half forfeit. If five horses start, the second to receive his entry.

M. Montel's m Victrea, 187lb	(Mr. Ricardo)	1
Mr. Elmore's Mandolin, 197lb	(Rolt)	2

The incidents in this steeple-chase were more numerous than in the other. Lord Strathmore was thrown, and M. de Perregaux fell three or four times; neither, however, sustained any injury. Deodora went slap into the river, and gave her rider a famous ducking.

BATH AND SOMERSET COUNTY MEETING.—TUESDAY.

The Produce Stakes of 50 sovs each, h ft. Eleven subs

Mr. Griffith's Lady Lift, 8st 5lb	(Marlow)	1
Mr. Herbert's Tantivy, 8st 10lb	(A. Day)	2
The Weston Stakes of 10 sovs each, 10 ft, and 25 added. Ten subs,
Mr. Dixon's Do-it again, 8st 4lb	(A. Day)	1
Mr. Drinkald's Good Boy, 8st 9lb	(Ford)	2

The Somersetshire Stakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 100 added; the second to receive £50, and the third to save his stake.

Mr. Pedley's Miss Burna, aged, 7st	(A. Day)	1
Mr. Parr's Rosin-the-Beau, 4 yrs, 8st 2lb..	(Ryder)	2

The Selling Stakes of 10 sovs each, and 50 added. Heats, once round.

Mr. Wreford's Wit's-end, 4 yrs, 7st 5lb	(A. Day)	1
Mr. W. Sadler's Fugitive, 4 yrs, 7st 5lb	(W. Abdale)	2

WEDNESDAY.

The Dyrham Park Stakes, of 15 sovs each, 10 ft, and 100 added. One mile and a half.

Mr. Mostyn's Archness	(Nat)	1
Mr. Wall's Quicksand	(Wakefield)	2

Won by two lengths.

Sweepstakes of 25 sovs each, 15 ft. Last three quarters of a mile.

Mr. John Day's Angica	(A. Day)	1
Mr. Caffall's Bachanalian	(Vaughan)	2

Won by half a length.

The Bath Handicap of 20 sovs each, 10 ft, and 5 only if declared, with 20 added. One mile-and-a-half and a dis.

Mr. G. Whielden's New Forest Deer, 6 yrs, 8st 4lb	(Pettit)	1
Mr. Waller's Columbus, 5 yrs, 7st 11lb	(Wakefield)	2

Won by a length.

LANCASHIRE PRIZE RINGING.—The Society of Ringers in Ashton-under-Lyne (liberally offered the sum of £30, divided into three prizes, to be contested for on Easter Tuesday, on the musical peal of ten bells in the tower of the parish church. The peal, which is Double-bob royal, comprises 5,000 changes. The Mottram youths, long celebrated as ringers, were the first to ascend the belfry; being only eight in number, they were joined by two out of the twelve ringers from the Sheffield peal, who undertook to assist them in the rest in succession. Their labours terminated about half-past seven in the evening, when each stood thus

1	Mottram	making	828 faults
2	Sheffield	"	877 "
3	Manchester	"	1035 "
4	Halifax	"	835 "
5	Oldham	"	866 "

The peal was rung by the Halifax company (who were awarded the first prize of £15) in 1 hour 3 minutes. Sheffield ditto, whose style of ringing was greatly extolled, accomplished their task in 1 hour 37 min., being the least time of all: consequently they were privileged to be excused from a certain number of faults, according to the regulations, which, by some unexplained means, was not extended to them; Mottram receiving the second, and Oldham the third prize.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF MAJOR-GENERAL CRAWFORD.—This officer, whose name appears so honourably among the records of the Peninsular and late American wars, as an artillery commander, expired on the 1st instant, at Nice, where he had been residing with the Count of his health.

RIFLE BRIGADE.—The Colonelcy of the 2nd battalion of the Rifle Brigade, vacant by the recent demise of Lieuter ant General Sir David Gilmour, will, it is reported, be conferred either on Major General Brown, Deputy Adjutant-General, or upon an officer formerly of the regiment. The 2nd battalion is at present in Canada. We have to record the demise of Major Henry R Capel, also of the corps, who expired on the 13th, at the Vicarage, Watford, in his forty-second year.

THE COAST DEFENCES.—The orders in hand at the Royal Arsenal, in connecting with the coast defences, amount to 23 fifty-six-pounder guns and 228 eight-inch guns, to be mounted on the coast of Great Britain. These guns are to be distributed to Gravesend and T lbury Fort, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Guernsey, Sheerness, Malta, Corfu, Quebec, Hong Kong, &c. In consequence of the immediate demand for these orders, the men in the Royal Carriage Department are now working overtime.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Nobility, Subscribers, and the Public are respectfully informed that there will be a GRAND EXTRA [illegible] 22nd 1847, when will be performed Donizetti's Opera, [illegible]

After the Opera, a favourite DIVERTISSEMENT; in which Mdlle. Cerito and M. St. Leon [illegible]

ASTLEY'S ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE.—Under the [illegible] Patronage of the Queen, and Prince Albert. [illegible] Mr. WILLIAMS. [illegible] o'clock, with its [illegible] and Stage Manager, Mr. W. D. Broadfoot. Box-office open from Eleven till Four. Doors open at Half-past Six to commence at Seven.

ETHIOPIANS, ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.—The celebrated ETHIOPIAN SERENADERS, Pell, Harrington, White, Sharwood, Germon, will, in consequence of the INCREASING SUCCESS and UNPRECEDENTED ATTRACTION of their INIMITABLE ENTERTAINMENT at the above theatre, every TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY EVENINGS next, and every Evening during the Easter Holidays commencing at Half-past Eight; and also give a MORNING PERFORMANCE every WEDNESDAY, commencing at Three. Box Office open daily from Ten till Four. Stalls, Pit, and Upper Boxes, Stalls, and Places, may be engaged at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, also at the Box-office of the Theatre, which is open daily from Eleven till Five o'Clock.

FEMALE AMERICAN SERENADERS.—ST. JAMES'S ASSEMBLY ROOMS (late Crockford's), St. James's-street.—Mesdames CORA JUMBA, WOSKI, MIAH, and ROSINA, the Female Serenaders, from the principal concert rooms in Manchester has been made a theme of eulogy by the Provincial and London Press, will have the honour of their first Concert in London, at the above commodious fashionable and aristocratic Establishment, on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 21st, 1847. It is the intention of these accomplished Ladies to give a Series of First Class Concerts, Morning and Evening; Morning Performances at Half-past Two o'clock, Evening at Half-past Eight o'Clock. Admission, Half-a-Crown.

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF THE QUEEN.—COLOSSEUM. THE WHOLE THROWN OPEN FOR TWO SHILLINGS, by Day or Evening; Children, Half-price; thus rendering this celebrated place of amusement the cheapest and most desirable in the Metropolis. The Proprietors beg to inform the Nobility and Gentry of London, by Day and Evening; Museum of Sculpture, Conservatories, Gorgeous Gothic Aviary, Classic Saloon, Grand Diorama and Mountain Torrent, Splendid Cavern and Alcoves, Fairy Lake, Music from Three till Five, and Seven till Half-past Ten. Open from Ten till Half-past Five, and Seven till Half-past Ten. To which a brilliant Illumination in the evening. The entire Exhibition declared by Mr. W. Bradwell

ZOOLOGICAL GARDENS, REGENT'S PARK.—The Public are informed that Visitors will be admitted to the Gardens of the Zoological Society, WITHOUT ORDERS, from the Fellows, on Mondays and Tuesdays throughout the year; and, during Waltzan Week, every day except Saturday, on the payment of One Shilling for each person. By Order of the Council

D. W MITCHELL, Secretary

LOVE'S ENTERTAINMENTS.—Continuation of Overtly-wing Scenes from Cases of Extraordinary Interest, in the Life of Individuals. Mr. CROSBY HALL, Bishopsgate.—ON WEDNESDAY [illegible] DAY, APRIL 21, MR LOVE will present his Original Entertainment, [illegible] IN ALL SHAPES, on The Gallery of Portraits. After which A ZOOLOGICAL CONCERT. To conclude with the first time this season, the admired Polyphone Sketch, with Imitations, entitled, LOVE IN LARGE & LOVE, in which Mr. Love will represent Eight Different Persons with other Entertainments, particularized in Programmes. Begin at Eight. Tickets, 3s; Gallery, 1s. Norfolk-street, Grand Piccadilly. Mr. H. Love, 26, Newman-street. Mr. H. Love will give an Entertainment at the Eastern Literary Institution, Commercial-road. On Thursday, April 22, at the Manor Rooms, Stoke Newington. On Monday, April 26, at Binfield House, Clapham

A GRAND FULL-DRESS BALL will be given on MONDAY MAY the 3rd, 1847 at the HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS in aid of the funds of the PROVIDENT SOCIETY OF MUSICAL PEASANTS OF DARLING [illegible] Count Nina d'Oche. Admission Band is engaged—Tickets (including refreshments), single 10s.; double 17s.; to admit a Lady and Gentleman, may be had at the Society's Office, 20, Bedford-street, Strand; at the Hanover-square Rooms, at all the principal Music Warehouses and Libraries in and near London; and of the Committee.

WEIPPERT'S SOIREES DANSANTES, PRINCESS'S CONCERT ROOMS.—MONDAY, APRIL 19th, and Every Monday A Subscriber of Two Guineas is entitled to a Double Transferable Ticket for Six Nights and the subscription commences on any Monday. Prince Saxe-Weimar's Quadrilles and Polkas as attend her Majesty's State Balls and Almack's. Conductor, Mr. Weippert; leader, Signor Zerbini: commencing at Eight o'Clock precisely. Tickets, 10s. 6d. each. Doors open at Seven o'Clock. Tickets, Seven Shillings each, at Weippert's Quadrille Office, 21, [illegible]-square.

MR. DISRAELI, in his beautiful work, "Tancred," says:—"The view of Jerusalem is the history of the world: it is more, it is the history of earth and heaven: where not a spot is visible that is not heroic or sacred, consecrated or memorable; not a rock that is not the seat of prophets; not a valley which is not the valley of heaven-anointed kings; not a mountain that is not the mountain of God." For a realization of this beautiful picture, visit MR. BENTLEY'S MODEL OF ANCIENT JERUSALEM, 213, Piccadilly. Eleven till Five, and Seven till Nine.—Admission, 1s.; Children and Schools, 6d.

WALHALLA, late Miss Linwood's Gallery, Leicester-square MADAME WARTON, ever anxious to meet the continuance of the public patronage which has been so liberally bestowed upon this Exhibition since its opening, begs to announce that it is her intention of producing, on MONDAY, APRIL 26, several new groups. The Evening Performance commencing with a Series of White Marble Statues from the most celebrated Masters. The Second Part as usual. In addition, the splendid new Tableau of Neptune and Amphitrite, &c., &c., every Morning and Evening.—A Grand Morning Performance at Three o'Clock; Evening at Half-past Eight. Stalls, 3s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; Promenade, 1s. A Band of first-rate talent, conducted by Herr Rodli. The Appointments by Messrs. Adams, of the Pantheon, Vauxhall.

ROYAL POLYTECHNIC INSTITUTION.—LECTURES in Illustration of ANIMAL MECHANISM by T Rymer Jones, Esq., F.L.S., Professor of Comparative Anatomy at King's College, daily at half-past Three. A LECTURE on CHEMISTRY in its application to the ARTS, by Dr. [illegible], F.R.S., on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday Evenings, at Nine o'Clock. LECTURES on MECHANICS and ELECTRIC MAGNETISM by Mr. Sandeman. NEW WORKING MODELS and NEW CHEMISTRY clearly explained. The varied OPTICAL EFFECTS include [illegible] DISSOLVING VIEWS, the OXY-HYDROGEN MICROSCOPE, &c. EXPERIMENTS with the DIVER and DIVING-BELL, &c. &c. Admission, 1s.; Schools, Half-price

NEW SONG.—"THEY BID ME NEVER SEE HIM MORE." Ballad, Composed by F. ROMER. Price 2s. This is the 2nd of a sentimental character—was recently introduced by Mrs. Alexander Newton, Miss Lucy Escott, and Miss Dolby. On these occasions it has met with such decided success as [illegible]

London: DUFF and HODGSON, 65, Oxford street.

ETHIOPIAN SONGS.—GENUINE EDITION, NO. 77

MARY BLANE, Lucy Neal, Lucy Long, Buffalo Gals, Old Dan Tucker, and Six other of the most favourite Negro Songs, as sung by the Ethiopian Serenaders, are all given (with Words and Pianoforte Accompaniments complete, in THE PIANISTA, No. 77. 2nd Edition, Enlarged Series. Price, for the whole Eleven Songs, with the Ethiopian and Mary Blane Quadrilles, 8s. They were all given as Polkas in No. 76, price 8s. Either Number, p. f. or Pianos. "Pianistes" Office, 81st Door, 67, Paternoster-row.

ILLUSTRATED EDITION—COMPLETE.

THE NEW TESTAMENT;

WITH UPWARDS OF

SIXTY ILLUSTRATIONS BY KENNY MEADOWS,

AND OTHER EMINENT ARTISTS.

A Large Copper-plate View of the Holy Land, and Notes, Historical and Descriptive London: Published at the Office of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS. Sold by all booksellers. PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE ONLY

ORDER THE MAN IN THE MOON, NO 1 OF WHICH WILL BE PUBLISHED ON SATURDAY, APRIL 24, 1847,

Edited by ALBERT SMITH and ANGUS B. REACH

LOLA MONTEZ.—Should this meet the eye of the fortunate dancuse, she is requested to order the MAN IN THE MOON, for APRIL, of our Bavarian Agent

WILLIAM HOWITT is recommended to buy a number of the MAN IN THE MOON, wherein he will find something that concerns him

THE FIRST DAY.—Exclusive particulars of the Fast Festival will appear in the MAN IN THE MOON of to-day.

M. SOYER'S SOUP forms a prominent dish in the bill of fare of the MAN IN THE MOON of APRIL

THE ALPHABET OF THE MONTH is the MAN IN THE MOON for APRIL.

DRAWING-ROOM THEATRICALS.—The first of a series, adapted for private performances, being "Guy Fawkes," a burlesque in one scene, in the MAN IN THE MOON for APRIL

JENNY LIND.—The only admissible portrait of the great singer is in the MAN IN THE MOON OF APRIL

To be had at every Railway Station, Library, and of every Bookseller in the Kingdom. Price 6d. only. Office, 17, Warwick-lane

A NEW PLAN OF LONDON, with all the Latest Improvements for 1847, price 1s plain, 1s. 6d. coloured, in a Case.—Published by C. WILMOTT, 8, Clare and Bookseller, 251, Oxford-street, and sold by all Booksellers and Stationers of superior trade city, at the lowest cash price. A large assortment of Entertaining and Juvenile Books.

COINS of the ANCIENT ROMAN EMPERORS: History of the Succession of the Ancient Roman Emperors, with the Prices of their Coins, bearing Portraits, their Values and Mottoes, in part published by F. WHELAN, Dealer in Ancient Coins, 45, Strand, London, price 1s; by post 1s 2d. Coins sent by post, Bought Catalogued, &c

GUIDE TO GOVERNMENT SITUATIONS, with Salaries and Duties, Compiled from Authentic Sources, Houses of Attendance, Days of Attendance, &c.—"Indispensable to persons seeking appointments."—United Service Gazette. "Now ready, 5,000th Edition, price 2s., cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.—WHITEHALL, Red Lion-court, Fleet-street, London. Post-free to any address, on receipt of 24 Postage Stamps, or of any Bookseller

TWENTY-TWO STEEL ENGRAVINGS, from Designs by Eminent Artists, to Illustrate the new Cheap Edition of PICKWICK, now publishing in Monthly Parts (each one shilling), and in Weekly Parts (each one penny). The whole sets, price one Shilling and Sixpence! forming the cheapest Illustrated Work ever offered to the Public

London: J. A. NOCK, 24, Wellington-street

FINE VIEW of the NEW HOUSE of LORDS.—The BUILDER of SATURDAY, APRIL 17, price 3d., or stamped for the country 4d., will contain a correct Perspective View of the House of Lords (the first of a series of the new House of Parliament, with full particulars of the Decorative Arts); with numerous other articles and illustrations of great interest, and all the News connected with Architecture, Building, and Archæology.—Office, 2, York-street, Covent-garden

MARTIN THE FOUNDLING, COMPLETE.—THE FAMILY HERALD of THIS WEEK contains the conclusion of the above Extraordinary Tale, by EUGENE SUE. Order Nos. 103 to 208; or Part 20 to 48. A New Volume of the Library of Fiction will commence the 1st of May. This is the most interesting, the most original, the most popular, and unquestionably the best periodical ever published for One Penny. All Booksellers sell the Family Herald

Third Edition, price 8s. 6d. with Numerous Cases and Plates,

DR. MADDOCK on Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, and Diseases of the Heart, their Prevention and successful treatment. SIMPKIN and MARSHALL, Paternoster-row; BALLIERE, 219, Regent-street, and can be had through any Bookseller in the country.

The Art of Health, Happiness, and Long Life, in Two Volumes, 1s. each; by post, in stamp 1s. 6d each.

WHAT TO EAT, DRINK, and AVOID; (with Diet Tables for all Complaints.) 2. HOW TO BE HAPPY; on Sickness, Expectancy, and Mortality. By ROBT. JAS. CULVERWELL, M.D. M.R.C.S. L.S.A., &c.—SHERWOOD, Paternoster-row; and the Author, 16, Argyll-place, Regent-street, and all Booksellers

Fourth Edition, price 6s. 6d.

DR. JAMES JOHNSON on HEALTH.—The ECONOMY of HEALTH; or, The Stream of Human Life from the Cradle to the Grave, with Reflections, Moral and Physical, on the Causes affecting Human Existence. Also, by the same

AN ESSAY ON INDIGESTION; or, Morbid Sensibility of the Stomach and Bowels the proximate cause of Dyspepsy, Nervous Irritability, Hypochondriasis, &c. 10th Edition, 8vo., price 8s. 6d

CHANGE of AIR: Illustrating the beneficial influence of Bodily Exercise, Change of Scene, Pure Air, and Sympathetic Excitation, in Sickness and in Health. Fourth Edition, 8vo., 9s.

LIFE of the Late Dr. J. JOHNSON. By Rev. B. St. John. 2s. With Portrait

S. HIGHLEY, 32, Fleet-street

UNCLAIMED DIVIDENDS.—The UNCLAIMED DIVIDEND BOOKS of the BANK of ENGLAND; containing the names, addresses, and descriptions of upwards of 20,000 persons, entitled to various sums of money of all amounts, from the smallest Unclaimed Dividends and Stock in the Public Funds, amounting to many millions of money, which has been standing over since the 18th and 19th centuries, and the whole of which can now be recovered by the next of kin. Carefully arranged under the various letters of the alphabet in each book, price 2s. 6d. extra. Be particular in stating what particular letter you require. The whole bound together in cloth, price 20s.

W. STEADMAN, 31, Leicester-square, and all Booksellers

Just Published, with Frontispiece, price 1s. 6d. cloth,

THE YOUNG JEWESS and her CHRISTIAN SCHOOL-FELLOWS By the Author of "Rhoda." "The story is beautifully conceived, and beautifully told; and pleasantly adapted to impress upon the minds of the young the powerful efficacy of example."—Sun, London Morning Chronicle

RHODA; or, the Destitute Sisters. By the same Author. 2s. cloth.

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard.

NOW AND ELEGANT PRESENT FOR THE YOUNG

INSECT CHANGES; with richly illuminated borders of Flowers and Insects, in the highly-wrought style of the celebrated "Hours of Anne of Brittany," and forming a First Lesson in Entomology. Super-royal, 16mo., price 5s. bound

THE MARGUERITE; or, New nursery Pleasure Book. 4to. 6s. cloth. With WORK TO SEEK; or, The History of Charles Douglas. By M. F. TYTLER. "The work of an observing mind, training the judgment, and cultivating the affections."—Athenæum

THE CHILD'S WORLD. By Mrs LEMAN. 37 Illustrations. 3s. 6d. cloth. "Full of [illegible]"—Literary Gazette

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard

Now ready, a New Edition, with 300 Illustrations, Price One Shilling,

THE PRINCE OF WALES' PRIMER.—Dedicated to HER MAJESTY'S EARLY DAYS OF ENGLISH PRINCES. By Mrs. RUSSELL GRAY. Illustrated by FRANKLIN. Small 4to. Price 4s. tinted; 5s. coloured, gilt edges.

"The leading incidents in the childhood and youth of the most famous of our Princes, are related in a pleasing and simple style. The Plates deserve special mention for their historical spirit and artistic execution."—Spectator

THE SILVER SWAN; a Fairy Tale. By MADAME DE CHATELAIN Illustrated by JOHN LEECH. Small 4to. Price 2s. plain, 3s. 6d. coloured.

The mermaid is in the good, unmistakeable style of the best fairy period."—Athenæum

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard

Just Published, with Frontispiece, fcp 8vo., 6s. cloth,

THE AFRICAN WANDERERS; or, the Adventures of Carlos and Antonio among the Western Tribes. By Mrs. R LEE (formerly Mrs T. E. Bowdich) Uniform and forming advantageous companions to the above volumes of incident, the volume is equal to any relation of travel we ever read. It exhibits marked ability as well as extensive knowledge."—Britannia

THE CRUSADERS; [illegible] and Perils of the Christian Army in the Holy Land, and the Character, Customs, and Manners of the Saracens and Turks. By Mrs. R. LEE [illegible] Naval and Military Achievements. 2 vols. fcp 8vo., 12s. cloth. "Contains a rich fund of interesting amusement for the young."—Literary Gazette

GRANT and GRIFFITH, Successors to J. Harris, Corner of St. Paul's Churchyard

13, Great Marlbro'-street.

MR. COLBURN WILL PUBLISH IMMEDIATELY THE FOLLOWING NEW WORKS:—

I.

NARRATIVE OF A JOURNEY ROUND THE WORLD. By SIR GEORGE SIMPSON, Governor-in-Chief of the Hudson's Bay Territories in North America. 2 vols 8vo., with Maps, &c.

II.

MEMOIRS OF VISCOUNTESS SUNDON, MISTRESS OF THE ROBES TO QUEEN CARLINE, CONSORT OF GEORGE II.; Including the Correspondence of the most Celebrated Persons of her Time, now First Published from the Originals. By Mrs A. T. THOMSON, Author of "The Life of the Duchess of Marlborough." &c. 2 vols., 8vo., with Portrait.

III.

VOLUME X OF LODGE'S PORTRAITS OF LIVES OF THE QUEENS OF ENGLAND.

IV.

EVELYN HARCOURT. A Novel By Mrs. ASCOIGNE, Authoress of "Temptation; or, a Wife's Faults," &c. 3 vols.

THE FOLLOWING ARE ALSO JUST PUBLISHED—

I.

A SECOND EDITION of TANCRED By I. ISRAELI, M.P. 3 vols.

II.

A THIRD EDITION of HOCHELAGA; or, England in the New World By ELIOT WARBURTON, Esq., Author of "The Crescent and the Cross" 3 vols 21s., bound

III.

BURKE'S PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE FOR 1847. New and Revised Edition, corrected throughout to the present time, from the personal communications of the Nobility, &c; and CONTAINING ALL THE NEW CREATIONS, and many Additions (comprising as much matter as twenty ordinary volumes). Illustrated with 1500 Engravings of Arms &c. 2 vols., 8vo., bound.

HENRY COLBURN, Publisher, 13, Great Marlborough-street

READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES

Now Ready, in Small Octavo,

HINTS FOR THE FORMATION OF READING AND BOOK SOCIETIES in every part of the Kingdom, on a New and Improved Plan. This Plan, embracing the families situated by the reduced postage, railroads and steam vessels, will enable the humblest cottage of one of the largest Libraries of the Metropolis to the most distant parts of the kingdom.—Send stamps and post free, to orders enclosing two stamps, a Plan of Messrs. WARDS and OTLEY, Publishers, Cordwain-street.

FOUR FIRES FOR ONE PENNY!!! by EDWARDS'S PATENT FIREWOOD.—It lights instantly, and saves money, time, and trouble. Sold by all respectable Oilmen and grocers. Each packet is supplied with 300, delivered to the carrier, on receipt of a post-office order for 10s., payable to Thomas Stevenson, No 18, Wharf Road, City-road

GOWLAND'S LOTION.—This well-known and highly-appreciated [illegible] is the most [illegible] toilet has, for nearly a century past, maintained its [illegible] rest remedy for all impurities of the Skin, together with the valuable properties of a preserver and sustainer of the Complexion of the most genial nature, removing every trace of sallowness or discolouration, and promoting the transparency and rightness of the Skin, which constitute the peculiar graces of a fine complexion. "ROBERT HAW, London," is in white letters on the Government Stamp, without which none is genuine. Prices, 3s. 9d., 5s. 6d.; quarts, 9s. 6d. Sold by all Perfumers and Chemists.

DOUBLE ACTION MAPLE-WOOD HARP, elegantly decorated with White Enamelled Sconce,-up-board now with in the last six months, to be SOLD for 34 Guineas; including Packing-case, Cover, Tuning Hammer, &c.; the property of a Lady Selling through ill Health.—Address, V.S. 6, London-road, Southwark.

EXTRAORDINARY IMPROVEMENTS in PIANOS, most charming and deal able in every respect. To be seen, only at MOTT'S, 76 Strand, where Licenses and last notions are granted for those new Patent Inventions. N.B. Good Pianos (with do have been taken in exchange) at low prices.

PIANOFORTES.—The cheapest house in London for these first-rate instruments is at H. TOLKIEN'S, manufacturer, 58, King William-street London Bridge. H. T., having completed his extensive premises, begs to announce to the public his splendid stock of PIANOS, which is not to be equalled by any maker, and at about half the price charged by them. H. T.'s much admired Pianos, each price £35. Old Instruments taken in exchange. TOLKIEN, 58, King William-street, London Bridge

